It was held before the verderers of the forest once in every forty days, to view the attachments by the foresters for offences against the vert and the venison. It had cognizance only of small trespasses. Larger ones were enrolled and heard by the Justices in Eyre. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 343.

COURT OF AUDIENCE. An ecclesiastical court, in which the primitives once exercised in person a considerable part of their jurisdiction. Such courts seem to be now obsolete, or at least to be only used on the rare occurrence of the trial of a bishop. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1201, 1204; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 371.

COURT OF AUGMENTATION. An English court created in the time of Henry VIII (27 Hen. VIII, c. 27), with jurisdiction over the property and revenue of certain religious foundations, which had been made over to the king by act of parliament, and over suits relating to the same.

It was called “The Court of the Augmentations of the Revenues of the King's Crown” (from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown derived from the suppression of the monasteries), and was dissolved in the reign of Queen Mary, but the Office of Augmentation remained long after; the records of the court are now at the Public Record Office. Cowell.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY. An English court of record, having original and appellate jurisdiction in matters of bankruptcy, and invested with both legal and equitable powers for that purpose. The Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849. By the Judicature acts, 1873 and 1875, the court of bankruptcy was consolidated into the supreme court of judicature.

In the United States, the Bankruptcy Act, § 1 (8), 11 USCA § 1 (8), as amended May 27, 1926, c. 406, § 1, 44 Stat. 662, provides that “courts of bankruptcy shall include the district courts of the United States and of the Territories and possessions to which this title is or may after July 1, 1898, be applicable, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States Court of Alaska.”

COURT OF BROTHERHOOD. An assembly of the mayors or other chief officers of the principal towns of the Cinque Ports in England, originally administering the chief powers of those ports, now almost extinct. Cent. Dict.

COURT OF CHANCERY. A court having the jurisdiction of a chancellor; a court administering equity and proceeding according to the forms and principles of equity. In England, prior to the judicature acts, the style of the court possessing the largest equitable powers and jurisdiction was the “high court of chancery.” In some of the United States, the title “court of chancery” is applied to a court possessing general equity powers, distinct from the courts of common law. Par- meter v. Bourne, 8 Wash. 45, 33 P. 586; Bull v. International Power Co., 84 N. J. Eq. 299, 93 A. 86, 88.

The terms “equity” and “chancery,” “court of equity” and “court of chancery,” are constantly used as synonymous in the United States. It is presumed that this custom arises from the circumstance that the equity jurisdiction which is exercised by the courts of the various states is assimilated to that possessed by the English courts of chancery. Indeed, in some of the states it is made identical therewith by statute, so far as conformable to our institutions. See Wagner v. Armstrong, 93 Ohio St. 448, 113 N. E. 397, 401.

COURT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE IN EYRE. The highest of the courts of the forest, held every three years, by the chief justice, to inquire of purpursestes or encroachments, assaults, or cultivation of forest land, claims to franchises, parks, warrens, and vineyards in the forest, as well as claims of the hundred, claims to the goods of felons found in the forest, and any other civil questions that might arise within the forest limits. But it had no criminal jurisdiction, except of offenses against the forest laws. It was called also the court of justice seat. Inderwick, King's Peace. Since the Restoration the forest laws have fallen into disuse. The office was abolished in 1817.

COURT OF CHIVALRY. In English law. The name of a court anciently held as a court of honor merely, before the early marshal, and as a criminal court before the lord high constable, jointly with the earl marshal. (But it is also said that this court was held by the constable, and after that office reverted to the crown in the time of Henry VIII., by the earl marshal. Davis, Mill. Law 18.) It had jurisdiction as to contracts and other matters touching deeds of arms or war, as well as pleas of life or member. It also corrected encroachments in matters of coast, armor, arms, and other deficiences of families. It is now grown entirely out of use, on account of the feebleness of its jurisdiction and want of power to enforce its judgments, as it could neither fine nor imprison, not being a court of record. 3 Bl. Comm. 68; 4 Broom & H. Comm. 360, note; 3 Bl. Comm. 103; 3 Steph. Comm. 335, note 7; 7 Mod. 137.

COURTS OF CINQUE PORTS. In English law. Courts of limited local jurisdiction formerly held before the mayor and jurats (aldermen) of the Cinque Ports. Their jurisdiction was not affected by the Judicature Act of 1873. See 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 305; 3 Bla. Comm. 79; 2 Steph. Comm. 499.

COURT OF CLAIMS. One of the courts of the United States, established in 1855. U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 144, 20 L. Ed. 519. It consists of a chief justice and four associates, and holds one annual session. It is located at Washington. Its jurisdiction extends to all claims against the United States arising out of any contract with the government or based on an act of congress or regulation of the executive, and all claims referred to it by either house of congress, as well as to claims for exoneration by a disbursing officer. Its judgments are, in certain cases, reviewable by the United States supreme court. It has no equity powers. Its decisions are reported and published. This name is also given, in some of the states, either to a special court or to the ordinary county court sitting "as a court of claims," having the special duty of auditing and ascertaining the claims against the county and expenses incurred by it, and providing for their payment by appropriations out of the county levy or annual tax. Meriwether v. Muhlenburg County Court, 120 U. S. 284, 7 S. Ct. 563, 30 L. Ed. 653.

COURT OF THE CLERK OF THE MARKET. An English court of inferior jurisdiction held in every fair or market, for the punishment of misdemeanors committed therein. The jurisdiction over weights and measures formerly exercised was taken away by stat. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63; 9 M. & W. 747. 4 Steph. Comm. 323.

COURT OF COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. The name of certain English courts created by commission under the great seal pursuant to the statute of sewers (23 Hen. VIII. c. 5).

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

In English Law

One of the four superior courts at Westminster, which existed up to the passing of the Judicature acts. It was also styled the "Common Bench." It was one of the courts derived from the breaking up of the aula regia, and had exclusive jurisdiction of all real actions and of communia placita, or common pleas, i. e., between subject and subject. It was presided over by a chief justice with four puisne judges (later five, by virtue of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, § 11, subsec. 8). Appeals lay anciently to the king's bench, but afterwards to the exchequer chamber. See 3 Bl. Comm. 37, et seq. Its jurisdiction was altogether confined to civil matters, having no cognizance in criminal cases, and was concurrent with that of the queen's bench and exchequer in personal actions and ejectment. Wharton.

In American Law

The name sometimes given to a court of original and general jurisdiction for the trial of issues of fact and law according to the principles of the common law. See Moore v. Barry, 30 S. C. 530, 9 S. E. 558, 4 L. R. A. 294.

COURT OF COMMON PLEASES FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK. The oldest court in the state of New York, no longer in existence.

COURT OF CONSCIENCE. The same as courts of request (q. e.). This name is also frequently applied to the courts of equity or of chancery, not as a name but as a description. See Harper v. Clayton, 84 Md. 248, 35 A. 1063, 35 L. R. A. 211, 57 Am. St. Rep. 407. And see Conscience.

COURT OF CONVOCATION. In English ecclesiastical law. A court, or assembly, comprising all the high officials of each province and representatives of the minor clergy. It is in the nature of an ecclesiastical parliament; and, so far as its judicial functions extend, it has jurisdiction of cases of heresy, schism, and other purely ecclesiastical matters. An appeal lies to the king in council. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92; Cowell; Bac. Abr. Ecclesiastical Courts, A. 1; 1 Bla. Comm. 279; 2 Steph. Com. 525, 668; 2 Burn. Eccl. Law, 18. Convocation exercises no jurisdiction at the present day. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 378.
COURT OF THE CORONER. In English law. A court of record, to inquire, when any one dies in prison, or comes to a violent or sudden death, by what manner he came to his end. 4 Steph. Comm. 323; 4 Bl. Comm. 274. Now generally known as an inquest. See Coroner.

COURT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS. In some states, a court of record in each county. Thus, in Alabama, it is composed of the judge of probate, as principal judge, and four commissioners, who are elected at the times prescribed by law, and hold office for four years. Code Ala. 1896, § 819 (Code 1923, § 6745).

COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS. The title given by Act Mar. 2, 1929, c. 458, § 1, 45 Stat. 1475 (28 USCA § 301a), to a court of the United States created by Act Aug. 3, 1909, c. 6, § 28, 36 Stat. 91, 105, and then known as the Court of Customs Appeals, consisting of a presiding judge and four associate judges. In patent and trademark cases it has the appellate jurisdiction which prior to April 1, 1929, was vested in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Act Mar. 2, 1929, c. 458, § 2 (a, d), 45 Stat. 1476 (28 USCA § 309a). As to its jurisdiction over appeals from the "Customs Court," see that title.

COURT OF DELEGATES. An English tribunal composed of delegates appointed by royal commission, and formerly the great court of appeal in all ecclesiastical causes. The powers of the court were, by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92, transferred to the privy council. A commission of review was formerly granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise a sentence of the court of delegates, when that court had apparently been led into material error. Brown; 3 Bl. Comm. 96; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 373.

COURT OF THE DUCHESS OF LANCASTER. A court of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands helden of the king in right of the duchy of Lancaster. 3 Bl. Comm. 78.

COURT OF THE EARL MARSHAL. In the reign of William the Conqueror the marshal was next in rank to the constable, in command of the army. When the constable's office ceased, his duties devolved upon the earl marshal. The military Court of the Constable came to be known as the Marshal's Court, or, in its modern form, Court-Martial. Aside from its criminal jurisdiction, it had much to do with questions relating to fiefs and military tenures, though not to property rights involved therein. Davis, Mil. Laws of U. S. 14. See Hale, Hist. C. L. 36; Grose, Mil. Antiq. See Court of Chivalry; Courts-Martial; Constable of England.

COURT OF EQUITY. A court which has jurisdiction in equity, which administers justice and decides controversies in accordance with the rules, principles, and precedents of equity, and which follows the forms and procedure of chancery; as distinguished from a court having the jurisdiction, rules, principles, and practice of the common law. Thomas v. Phillips, 4 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 423.

COURT OF ERROR. An expression applied especially to the court of exchequer chamber and the house of lords, as taking cognizance of error brought. Mozeley & Whitley; 3 Steph. Comm. 333. It is applied in some of the United States to the court of last resort in the state; and in its most general sense denotes any court having power to review the decisions of lower courts on appeal, error, certiorari, or other process. See Court of Appeals.

COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. The court of last resort in the state of New Jersey is so named. Formerly, the same title was given to the highest court of appeal in New York.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER. In English Law

A very ancient court of record, set up by William the Conqueror as a part of the curia regis, and afterwards one of the four superior courts at Westminster. It was, however, inferior in rank to both the king's bench and the common pleas. It was presided over by a chief baron and four puisne barons. It was originally the king's treasury, and was charged with keeping the king's accounts and collecting the royal revenues. But pleas between subject and subject were not heard in this court, until this was forbidden by the Articula super Chartas, (1296,) after which its jurisdiction as a court only extended to revenue cases arising out of the non-payment or withholding of debts to the crown. But the privilege of suing and being sued in this court was extended to the king's accountants, and later, by the use of a convenient fiction to the effect that the plaintiff was the king's debtor or accountant, the court was thrown open to all suitors in personal actions. The exchequer had formerly both an equity side and a common-law side, but its equity jurisdiction was taken away by the statute 5 Vict. c. 5, (1842,) and transferred to the court of chancery. The judgment act (1873) transferred the business and jurisdiction of this court to the "Exchequer Division" of the "High Court of Justice."
In Scotch Law

A court which formerly had jurisdiction of matters of revenue, and a limited jurisdiction over cases between the crown and its vassals where no questions of title were involved.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. The name of a former English court of appeal, intermediate between the superior courts of common law and the house of lords. When sitting as a court of appeal from any one of the three superior courts of common law, it was composed of judges of the other two courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 58, 57; 3 Steph. Comm. 333, 356. By the judicature act (1873) the jurisdiction of this court is transferred to the court of appeal.

COURT OF FACULTIES. A tribunal of the archbishop in England.

It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and other mortuary matters. It had also various other powers under 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21. Co. 4th Inst. 357; 2 Chit. Gen. Pr. 597.

COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE. A court of primary jurisdiction. Courts of this title may be found in the jurisprudence of the Philippine Islands. 15 C. J. 688.

COURTS OF THE FOREST. Courts held for the enforcement of the forest laws. Inverwick, King's Peace. See Forest Courts.

COURTS OF THE FRANCHISES. Jurisdictions in the early Norman period which rested upon royal grants—often assumed. Edward I., in 1274, sent out commissioners to enquire by what warrant different landowners were exercising their jura regalia. There were many varieties of lesser franchises. Some of these franchises were recognized as existing by the County Courts Acts, 1846-1888. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 61.

COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

In American Law

A court of criminal jurisdiction in New Jersey.

In English Law

A court of criminal jurisdiction, in England, held in each county once in every quarter of a year, but in the county of Middlesex twice a month. 4 Steph. Comm. 317-320. When held at other times than quarterly, the sessions are called "general sessions of the peace." See 2 Odgers, C. L. 996.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS. The name given in some states to a court of general original jurisdiction in criminal cases.

COURT OF GREAT SESSIONS IN WALES. A court formerly held in Wales; abolished by 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, and the Welsh Judicature incorporated with that of England. 3 Steph. Comm. 317, note; 3 Bla. Comm. 77.

COURT OF GUESTLING. An assembly of the members of the Court of Brotherhood (sepra) together with other representatives of the corporate members of the Cinque Ports, invited to sit with the mayors of the seven principal towns. Cent. Dict.

COURT OF HIGH COMMISSION. In English law. An ecclesiastical court of formidable jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offenses, contempts, and enormities. 3 Bl. Comm. 67. It was erected by St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, and abolished by 16 Car. I. c. 11. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 375.

COURT OF HONOR. A court having jurisdiction to hear and redress injuries or affronts to a man's honor or personal dignity, of a nature not cognizable by the ordinary courts of law, or encroachments upon his rights in respect to heraldry, coat-armor, right of precedence, and the like. It was one of the functions of the Court of Chivalry (q. v.) in England to sit and act as a court of honor. 3 Bl. Comm. 104. The name is also given in some European countries to a tribunal of army officers (more or less distinctly recognized by law as a "court") convened for the purpose of inquiring into complaints affecting the honor of brother officers and punishing derelictions from the code of honor and deciding on the causes and occasions for fighting duels, in which officers are concerned, and the manner of conducting them.

COURT OF HUSTINGS.

In English Law

The county court of London, held before the mayor, recorder, and sheriff, but of which the recorder, is, in effect, the sole judge. No actions can be brought in this court that are merely personal. 3 Steph. Comm. 293, n.; 440, note l; 3 Bla. Comm. 80, n.; Madox, Hist. Exch. c. 20; Co. 2d Inst. 327. Since the abolition of all real and mixed actions except ejectment, the jurisdiction of this court has fallen into comparative desuetude. Pulling on Cust. Lond.

In American Law

COURT OF INQUIRY.

In English Law

A court sometimes appointed by the crown to ascertain whether it be proper to resort to extreme measures against a person charged before a court-martial. See 2 Steph. Comm. 590; 1 Coier. Bla. Comm. 418, n.; 2 Brod. &
B. 130. Also a court for hearing the complaints of private soldiers. Moz. & W. Dict.; Simmons, Cts. Mart. § 341.

In American Law

Formerly, a court constituted by authority of the articles of war, invested with the power to examine into the nature of any transaction of, or accusation or imputation against, any officer or soldier, when demanded by him. Rev. St. § 1342, arts. 115, 116. Repealed by Act June 4, 1920, c. 227, § 4, 41 Stat. 812.

They were not strict courts, having no power to try and determine guilt or innocence. They were rather agencies created by statute to investigate facts and report thereon. They could not compel the attendance of witnesses nor require them to testify. Davis, MiL LAW 220.

COURT OF JUSTICE SEAT. In English law. The principal of the forest courts. Called also Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre (q. v.).

COURT OF JUSTICIARY. A Scotch court of general criminal jurisdiction of all offenses committed in any part of Scotland, both to try causes and to review decisions of inferior criminal courts. It is composed of five lords of session with the lord president or Justice-clerk as president. It also has appellate jurisdiction in civil causes involving small amounts. An appeal lies to the house of lords.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH. In English law. The supreme court of common law in the kingdom, now merged in the high court of justice under the judicature act of 1873, § 16.

It was one of the successors of the curia regis and received its name, it is said, because the king formerly sat in it in person. During the reign of a queen it was called the Queen's Bench, and during Cromwell's Protectorate it was called the Upper Bench.

COURT OF LAW. In a wide sense, any duly constituted tribunal administering the laws of the state or nation; in a narrower sense, a court proceeding according to the course of the common law and governed by its rules and principles, as contrasted with a "court of equity."

COURT OF LODEMANAGE. An ancient court of the Cinque Ports, having jurisdiction in maritime matters, and particularly over pilots (lodemen).

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH ADMIRAL. In the earlier part of the 14th century, the Admiral possessed a disciplinary jurisdiction over his fleet. After 1340 it is reasonable to suppose that the Admiral could hold an independent court and administer justice in piracy and other maritime cases. There were at first several admirals and several courts. From the early 15th century there was one Lord High Admiral and one Court of Admiralty. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 313.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD. In English law. A court instituted for the trial, during the recess of parliament, of peers indicted for treason or felony, or for misprision of either. This court is not a permanent body, but is created in modern times, when occasion requires, and for the time being, only; and the lord high steward, so constituted, with such of the temporal lords as may take the proper oath, and act, constitute the court.

All peers who have a right to sit and vote in Parliament must be summoned. They are the sole judges of fact; and the majority, which must consist of twelve at least, decides. The Lord High Steward has a vote, and is judge of all matters of law.

COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD OF THE UNIVERSITIES. In English law. A court constituted for the trial of scholars or privileged persons connected with the university at Oxford or Cambridge who are indicted for treason, felony, or mayhem. 3 Bla. Comm. 85; 4 id. 277; 1 Steph. Comm. 67; 3 id. 341; 4 id. 261.

COURT OF MAGISTRATES AND FREEHOLDERS. In American law. The name of a court formerly established in South Carolina for the trial of slaves and free persons of color for criminal offenses.

COURT OF MARSHALSEA. A court which has jurisdiction of all trespasses committed within the verge of the king's court, where one of the parties was of the royal household; and of all debts and contracts, when both parties were of that establishment. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. Mozley & Whitley.

COURT OF NISI PRIUS. In American law. Though this term is frequently used as a general designation of any court exercising general, original jurisdiction in civil cases, (being used interchangeably with "trial-court.") it belonged as a legal title only to a court which formerly existed in the city and county of Philadelphia, and which was presided over by one of the judges of the supreme court of Pennsylvania. This court was abolished by the constitution of 1874. See Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius.

COURT OF THE OFFICIAL PRINCIPAL. This court, the Court of the "Official Principal" of the Archbishop of Canterbury, is more commonly called the Arches Court, or Court of the Arches. See Arches Court.

COURT OF ORDINARY. In some of the United States (e. g., Georgia) the name given to the probate or surrogate's court, or the court having the usual jurisdiction in respect to the proving of wills and the administration of decedents' estates. Veach v. Rice, 151 U. S. 293, 9 S. Ct. 730, 33 L. Ed. 163; Code Ga. 1882, § 318 (Civ. Code, 1910, § 4776). Such a court formerly existed in New Jersey, South Carolina, and Texas. See 2 Kent 409.
COURT OF ORPHANS.

In English Law

The court of the lord mayor and aldermen of London, which has the care of those orphans whose parent died in London and was free of the city. It is now said to be fallen into disuse. 2 Steph. Comm. 318; Pull. Cust. Lond. 198, Orphans' Court.

In American Law

In Pennsylvania (and perhaps some other states) the name "orphans' court" is applied to that species of tribunal which is elsewhere known as the "probate court" or "surrogate's court."

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

In English Law

A court for the trial of cases of treason and felony. The commissioners of assise and nisi prius are judges selected by the king and appointed and authorized under the great seal, including usually two of the Judges at Westminster, and sent out twice a year into most of the counties of England, for the trial (with a jury of the county) of causes then depending at Westminster, both civil and criminal. They sit by virtue of several commissions, each of which, in reality, constitutes them a separate and distinct court. The commission of oyer and terminer gives them authority for the trial of treasons and felonies; that of general gaol delivery empowers them to try every prisoner then in gaol for whatever offense; so that, altogether, they possess full criminal jurisdiction.

In American Law

This name is generally used (sometimes, with additions) as the title, or part of the title, of a state court of criminal jurisdiction, or of the criminal branch of a court of general jurisdiction, being commonly applied to such courts as may try felonies, or the higher grades of crimes. Such courts exist in Delaware and Pennsylvania. They were abolished in New York and New Jersey in 1895.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL (or JAIL) DELIVERY.

In American Law

A court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsylvania. It is held at the same time with the court of quarter sessions, as a general rule, and by the same judges. See Const. Pa. art. 3, § 1; 17 PS §§ 371, 391, 471.

In English Law

A tribunal for the examination and trial of criminals. 3 Steph. Comm. 392.

COURT OF PALACE AT WESTMINSTER.

This court had jurisdiction of personal actions arising within twelve miles of the palace at Whitehall. Abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101. 3 Steph. Comm. 317, note. See Court of the Steward and Marshal.

COURT OF PASSAGE. An inferior court, possessing a very ancient jurisdiction over causes of action arising within the borough of Liverpool. It appears to have been also called the "Borough Court of Liverpool." It has the same jurisdiction in admiralty matters as the Lancashire county court. Rose. Adm. 75.

COURT OF PECULIARS. A spiritual court in England, being a branch of, and annexed to, the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the province of Canterbury, in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions are originally cognizable by this court, from which an appeal lies to the Court of Arches. 3 Steph. Comm. 431; 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 104. Most of such courts have been abolished by legislation. 1 Holdsw. Hist. Eng. Law 352. See also, Arches Court.

COURT OF PIEPOUDRE. (Also spelled Pipowder, Pie Powder, Py-Powder, Piepoundre, etc.) The lowest (and most expedients) of the courts of justice known to the older law of England. It is supposed (by Cowell and Blount) to have been so called from the dusty feet of the suitors. For another conjecture as to the origin of the name, see Co. 4th Inst. 472. It was a court of record incident to every fair and market, was held by the steward, and had jurisdiction to administer justice for all commercial injuries and minor offenses done in that same fair or market, (not a preceding one.) Inderwick, King's Peace 165. An appeal lay to the courts at Westminster. This court long ago fell into disuse. 3 Bl. Comm. 32; Barrington, Stat. 337; 3 Steph. Comm. 317, n.; Skene, de verb. sig. Pede palverosus; Bracton 341; 22 L. Q. R. 244; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 309. See, however, Odgers, C. L. 1021.

COURT OF PLEAS. A court of the county palatine of Durham, having a local common-law jurisdiction. It was abolished by the judicature act, which transferred its jurisdiction to the high court. Jud. Act 1875, § 16; 3 Bl. Comm. 79.

COURT OF POLICIES OF ASSURANCE. A court established by statute 43 Eliz. c. 12, to determine in a summary way all causes between merchants, concerning policies of insurance. Crabb, Eng. Law, 503. The court was formally abolished by stat. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. 3 Bl. Comm. 74; 3 Steph. Comm. 317, n.

COURTS OF PRINCIPALITY OF WALES. A species of private courts of a limited though extensive jurisdiction, which, upon the thorough reduction of that principality and the settling of its polity in the reign of Henry VIII, were erected all over the country. These courts, however, have been abolished by 1 Wm. IV, c. 70; the principality being now divided into two circuits, which the judges visit in the same manner as they do the circuits in England, for the purpose of disposing of those causes which are ready for trial. Brown.

COURT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS. A federal court created by act of Congress in 1891 (26 Stat. 534), to hear and determine claims by private parties to lands within the public domain, where such claims originated under Spanish or Mexican grants, and had not already been confirmed by Congress or otherwise adjudicated. The existence and authority of this court were to cease and determine at the end of the year 1895.

COURT OF PROBATE.

In English Law

The name of a court established in 1557, under the probate act of that year, (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77,) to be held in London, to which court was transferred the testamentary jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts. 2 Steph. Comm. 192. By the judicature acts, this court is merged in the high court of justice.

In American Law

A court having jurisdiction over the probate of wills, the grant of administration, and the supervision of the management and settlement of the estates of decedents, including the collection of assets, the allowance of claims, and the distribution of the estate. In some states the probate courts also have jurisdiction of the estates of minors, including the appointment of guardians and the settlement of their accounts, and of the estates of lunatics, habitual drunkards, and spendthrifts. Pons v. Pons, 132 La. 370, 61 So. 406, 407. And in some states these courts possess a limited jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. They are also called in some jurisdictions "orphans' courts" and "surrogate's courts."

COURT OF PYPOWDER, PY-POWDER, or PYPOWERS. See Court of Pleipoudre.

COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In American law. A court of criminal jurisdiction in the state of Pennsylvania, having power to try misdemeanors, and exercising certain functions of an administrative nature. There is one such court in each county of the state. Its sessions are, in general, held at the same time and by the same judges as the court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery. See Const. Pa. art. 5, § 1: 17 PS §§ 331, 361.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH. See Court of King's Bench.
riot, perjury, misbehavior of sheriffs, and other misdemeanors contrary to the laws of the land; yet it was afterwards transferred to the assenting of all proclamations and orders of state, to the vindicating of illegal commissions and grants of monopolies; holding for honorable that which it pleased, and for just that which it profited, and becoming both a court of law to determine civil rights and a court of revenue to enrich the treasury. It was finally abolished by St. 16 Car. I. c. 10, to the general satisfaction of the whole nation. Brown.

COURT OF THE STEWARD AND MARSHAL. A high court, formerly held in England by the steward and marshal of the king's household, having jurisdiction of all actions against the king's peace within the bounds of the household for twelve miles, which circuit was called the "verge." Crabb, Eng. Law, 183. It had also jurisdiction of actions of debt and covenant, where both the parties were of the household. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 235, 247. This court was created by Charles I., and abolished in 1849. It was held in the borough of Southwark, and was called also the "palace court," having jurisdiction of all personal actions arising within twelve miles of the royal palace of Whitehall, exclusive of London.

COURT OF THE STEWARD OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD. In English law. A court which had jurisdiction of all cases of treason, misprision of treason, murder, manslaughter, bloodshed, and other malicious strikings whereby blood is shed, occurring in or within the limits of any of the palaces or houses of the king, or any other house where the royal person is abiding. It was created by statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12, but long ago fell into disuse. 4 Bl. Comm. 276, 277, and notes.

COURT OF SURVEY. A court for the hearing of appeals by owners or masters of ships, from orders for the detention of unsafe ships, made by the English board of trade, under the merchant shipping act, 1876, § 6.

COURT OF SWEINMOTE (spelled also, Swainmote, Swain-remeote; Saxon, svæng, an attendant, a freeholder, and mote or remote, a meeting). One of the old forest courts, held before the verderers, as judges, by the steward, thrice in every year,—the swines or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. This court had jurisdiction to inquire into grievances and oppressions committed by the officers of the forest, and also to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments, certifying the cause, in turn, under the seals of the jury, in case of conviction, to the court of justice seat for the rendition of judgment. Cowell; 3 Bla. Com. 71, 72; 3 Stepb. Com. 317, n. See Inderwick, King's Peace 150; Forest Laws.

COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES comprise the following: The senate of the United States, sitting as a court of impeachment; the supreme court; the circuit courts of appeals; the district courts; the supreme court and court of appeals of the District of Columbia; the court of claims; the court of customs and patent appeals; the United States court for China; and provisional courts. 25 G. J. 558 et seq. See the several titles.

COURTS OF THE UNIVERSITIES of Oxford and Cambridge have jurisdiction in all personal actions to which any member or servant of the respective university is a party, provided that the cause of action arose within the liberties of the university, and that the member or servant was resident in the university when it arose, and when the action was brought. 3 Stepb. Comm. 299; St. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 26, § 12, St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 17. Each university court also has a criminal jurisdiction in all offenses committed by its members. 4 Stepb. Comm. 325.

COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES. A court of record, established in England in the reign of Henry VIII. For the survey and management of the valuable fruits of tenure, a court of record was created by St. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46, called the "Court of the King's Wards." To this was annexed, by St. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 22, the "Court of Liversies," so that it then became the "Court of Wards and Liversies." 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 258. This court was not only for the management of "wards," properly so called, but also of idiots and natural fools in the king's custody, and for licenses to be granted to the king's widows to marry, and fines to be made for marrying without his license. Id. 259. It was abolished by St. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Crabb, Eng. Law, 408; 4 Reeve, Hist. E. L. 259; Crabb, Hist. E. L. 468; 1 Stepb. Com. 185; 4 id. 40; 2 Bla. Com. 68; 3 id. 258.

COURTS OF WESTMINSTER HALL. The superior courts, both of law and equity, were for centuries fixed at Westminster, an ancient palace of the monarchs of England. Formerly, all the superior courts were held before the king's capital judiciary of England, in the aula regis, or such of his palaces wherein his royal person resided, and removed with his household from one end of the kingdom to another. This was found to occasion great inconvenience to the suitors, to remedy which it was made an article of the great charter of liberties, both of King John and King Henry III., that "common pleas should no longer follow the king's court, but be held in some certain place," in consequence of which they have ever since been held (a few necessary removals in times of the plague excepted) in the palace of Westminster only. The courts of equity also sit at Westminster, nominally, during term time, although, actually, only during the first day of term, for they generally sit in courts provided for the purpose in, or in the neighborhood of, Lincoln’s Inn. Brown.

COURT ROLLS. The rolls of a manor, containing all acts relating thereto. While belonging to the lord of the manor, they are not in the nature of public books for the benefit of the tenant.

COURTYARD. A corrupted form of “court-"age,” signifying a space of land about a dwelling house, which not only might be inclosed, but within which appurtenant buildings and structures might be erected. In re Lafayette Ave. in City of New York, 118 Misc. Rep. 161, 193 N. Y. S. 892, 894.

COURTESY. See Curtesy.

COUSIN. Kindred in the fourth degree, being the issue (male or female) of the brother or sister of one’s father or mother. Harris v. Harris, 97 N. J. Eq. 195, 127 A. 108, 109; Walker v. Chambers, 85 N. J. Eq. 376, 96 A. 350, 360; Bishop v. Russell, 241 Mass. 20, 134 N. E. 223, 19 A. L. R. 1408.

Those who descend from the brother or sister of the father of the person spoken of are called “paternal cousins;” “maternal cousins” are those who are descended from the brothers or sisters of the mother. Cousins-german are first cousins. Sanderson v. Bayley, 4 Myl. & C. 59.

In English writs, commissions, and other formal instruments issued by the crown, the word signifies any peer of the degree of an earl. The appellation is as ancient as the reign of Henry IV., who, being related or allied to every earl then in the kingdom, acknowledged that connection in all his letters and public acts; from which the use has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed. Mozley & Whitley.

First Cousins

Cousins-german; the children of one’s uncle or aunt. Sanderson v. Bayley, 4 Mylne & C. 59.

Second Cousins

Persons who are related to each other by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother. The children of one’s first cousins are his second cousins. These are sometimes called “first cousins once removed.” Slade v. Fooks, 9 Sim. 387; Corporation of Bridgnorth v. Collins, 15 Sim. 541.

Quater Cousin

Properly, a cousin in the fourth degree; but the term has come to express any remote degree of relationship, and even to bear an ironical significance in which it denotes a very trifling degree of intimacy and regard. Often corrupted into “cater” cousin.

COUSINAGE. See Cosinage.

COUSTOM. (Fr. Coutum.) Custom; duty; toll; tribute. 1 Bl. Comm. 314.

COSTOUMIER. (Otherwise spelled “Coustumier” or “Coutumier.”) In old French law. A collection of customs, unwritten laws, and forms of procedure. Two such volumes are of especial importance in juridical history, viz., the Grand Coutumier de Normandie, and the Coutumier de France or Grand Coutumier.

COUTHUTLAUGH. A person who willingly and knowingly received an outlaw, and cherished or concealed him; for which offense he underwent the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. 1285; Speiman.

COUVERTURE, in French law, is the deposit (“margin”) made by the client in the hands of the broker, either of a sum of money or of securities, in order to guaranty the broker for the payment of the securities which he purchases for the client. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 555.

COVENABLE. A French word signifying convenient or suitable; as covenably endowed. Anciently written “convenable.” Terms de la Ley.

COVENANT.

In Practice

The name of a common-law form of action ex contractu, which lies for the recovery of damages for breach of a covenant, or contract under seal. Stickney v. Stickney, 21 N. H. 88.

In the Law of Contracts

An agreement, convention, or promise of two or more parties, by deed in writing, signed, sealed, and delivered, by which either of the parties pledges himself to the other that something is either done or shall be done, or stipulates for the truth of certain facts. Com. v. Robinson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 180; Kent v. Edmondston, 9 N. C. 529; De Graasse v. Vernon Mining Co., 186 Mich. 514, 132 N. W. 242, 245; Sabin v. Hamilton, 2 Ark. 485, 490 (see, however, the later case of Dyer v. Gill, 32 Ark. 410, pointing out that by virtue of statute in Arkansas, the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, with reference to contracts between individuals, has been abolished).

An agreement between two or more parties, reduced to writing and executed by a sealing and delivery thereof, whereby some of the parties named therein engage, or one of them engages, with the other, or others, or some of them, therein also named, that some act hath or hath not already been done, or for the performance or non-performance of some specified duty. De Bois v. Insurance Co., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 71, 23 Am. Dec. 28.

In common parlance, any agreement, whether under seal or not. 15 C. J. 1209; 7 R. C. L. 1064. In effect, this has become the legal meaning in many states, in which private seals have been abolished by statute. For a number of these state statutes, see 68 L. R. A. 656, 657. In those states it is commonly held that the affixing of a seal, when unnecessary to the validity of the instrument, has no effect, and may be disregarded. 24 R. C. L. 659. "Seals are a relic of that period when men, as a rule, could not write," and a covenant may "be created in this state [Georgia] by a writing not under seal." Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. McKinney, 124 Ga. 399, 53 S. E. 701, 703, 110 Am. St. Rep. 215, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 406.

Classification

Covenants may be classified according to several distinct principles of division. According as one or other of these is adopted, they are:

—Express or implied; the former being those which are created by the express words of the parties to the deed declaratory of their intention, while implied covenants are those which are inferred by the law from certain words in a deed which imply (though they do not express) them. Express covenants are also called covenants "in deed," as distinguished from covenants "in law." McDonough v. Martin, 88 Ga. 675, 16 S. E. 59, 18 L. R. A. 343; Conrad v. Morehead, 89 N. C. 81; Garstang v. Davenport, 90 Iowa, 359, 57 N. W. 876.

—Dependent, concurrent, and independent. Covenants are either dependent, concurrent, or mutual and independent. The first depends on the prior performance of some act or condition, and, until the condition is performed, the other party is not liable to an action on his covenant. In the second, mutual acts are to be performed at the same time; and if one party is ready, and offers to perform his part, and the other neglects or refuses to perform his, he is ready and offers has fulfilled his engagement, and may maintain an action for the default of the other, though it is not certain that either is obliged to do the first act. The third sort is where either party may recover damages from the other for the injuries he may have received by a breach of the covenants in his favor; and it is no excuse for the defendant to allege a breach of the covenants on the part of the plaintiff. Bailey v. White, 3 Ala. 339; Tompkins v. Elliot, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 497; Gray v. Smith (C. C.) 76 F. 324; Lowery v. May, 213 Ala. 66, 104 So. 5, 8; Roberts v. Steelman (C. C. A. N. J.) 1 F. (2d) 150, 152. Mutual and independent covenants are such as do not go to the whole consideration on both sides, but only to a part, and where separate actions lie for breaches on either side to recover damages for the injury sustained by breach. Lowery v. May, 213 Ala. 66, 104 So. 5, 8; Big Run Coal Co. v. Employers' Indemnity Co., 163 Ky. 596, 174 S. W. 25, 26.

Covenants are dependent where performance by one party is conditioned on and subject to perform-while the latter are those which are binding on the party himself. 1 Sld. 27; 1 Keb. 337.

—Real and personal. A real covenant is one which binds the heirs of the covenantor and passes to assignees or purchasers; a covenant the obligation of which is so connected with the reality that he who has the latter is either entitled to the benefit of it or is liable to perform it; a covenant which has for its object something annexed to, or inherent in or connected with, land or other real property; and runs with the land, so that the grantee of the land is invested with it and may sue upon it for a breach happening in his time. 4 Kent, Comm. 470; 2 Bl. Comm. 304; Chapman v. Holmes, 10 N. J. Law, 20; Skinner v. Mitchell, 5 Kan. App. 366, 48 P. 450; Oil Co. v. Hinton, 159 Ind. 398, 64 N. E. 224; Davis v. Lyman, 6 Conn. 249. In the old books, a covenant real is also defined to be a covenant by which a man binds himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements. Termes de la Ley; 3 Bl. Comm. 156; Shep. Touch. 161. A personal covenant, on the other hand, is one which, instead of being a charge upon real estate of the covenantor, only binds himself and his personal representatives in respect to assets. 4 Kent, Comm. 470; Carter v. Deman, 25 N. J. Law, 270; Hadley v. Bernero, 97 Mo. App. 314, 71 S. W. 451. The phrase may also mean a covenant which is personal to the covenantor, that is, one which he must perform in person, and cannot procure another person to perform for him. De Sanno v. Earle, 273 Pa. 265, 117 A. 200, 202; Pearson v. Richards, 106 Or. 78, 211 P. 167, 171. “Real covenants” relate to realty and have for their main object some benefit thereto, inuring to benefit of and becoming binding on subsequent grantees, while “personal covenants” do not run with land.

Bank of Hoxie v. Meriwether, 166 Ark. 39, 265 S. W. 642, 645. Very considerable confusion exists among the authorities in the use of the term real covenants. The definition of Blackstone which determines the character of covenants from the insertion or noninsertion of the word “heir” by the covenantor, is pretty generally rejected.

—Transitive or intransitive; the former being those personal covenants the duty of performing which passes over to the representatives of the covenantor; while the latter are those the duty of performing which is limited to the covenantor himself, and does not pass over to his representative. Bac. Abr. Cov.

—Disjunctive covenants. Those which are for the performance of one or more of several things at the election of the covenantor or covenantee, as the case may be. Platt, Cov. 21.

—Absolute or conditional. An absolute covenant is one which is not qualified or limited by any condition.

—Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

—Continuing covenant. One which indicates or necessarily implies the doing of stipulated acts successively or as often as the occasion may require; as, a covenant to pay rent by installments, to keep the premises in repair or insured, to cultivate land, etc. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 395.

—Full covenants. As this term is used in American law, it includes the following: The covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty, this last often taking the place of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and indeed in many states being the only covenant in practical use. Rawle, Cov. for Title, § 21.

—Mutual covenants. A mutual covenant is one where either party may recover damages from the other for the injury he may have received from a breach of the covenants in his favor. Bailey v. White, 3 Ala. 330.

—Separate covenant. A several covenant; one which binds the several covenantors each for himself, but not jointly.

—Usual covenants. An agreement on the part of a seller of real property to give the usual covenants binds him to insert in the grant covenants of “seisin,” “quiet enjoyment,” “further assurance,” “general warranty,” and “against incumbrances.” Civ. Code Cal. former § 1733, repealed by St. 1931, p. 2224. See Wilson v. Wood, 17 N. J. Eq. 216, 88 Am. Dec. 231; Drake v. Barton, 18 Minn. 467 (Gill. 414). The result of the authorities appears to be that in a case where the agreement is silent as to the particular covenants to be inserted in the lease, and provides merely for the lease containing “usual covenants,” or which is the same thing, in an open agreement without any reference to the covenants, and there are no special circumstances justifying the introduction of other covenants, the following are the only ones which either party can insist upon, namely: Covenants by the lessee (1) to pay rent; (2) to pay taxes, except such as are expressly payable by the landlord; (3) to keep and deliver up the premises in repair; and (4) to allow the lessor to enter and view the state of repair; and the usual qualified covenant by the lessee for quiet enjoyment by the lessee. 7 Ch. Div. 581.

Specific Covenants

—Covenants against incumbrances. A covenant that there are no incumbrances on the land conveyed; a stipulation against all rights to or interests in the land which may subsist in third persons to the diminution of the value of the estate granted. Bank v. Parisette, 68 Ohio St. 450, 67 N. E. 896; Shearer v. Ranger, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 447; Sunford v. Wheelan, 12 Or. 301, 7 P. 324; Dooman v. Killilca, 222 N. Y. 399, 118 N. E. 531, 532; Anniston Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Griffis, 198 Ala. 122, 73 So. 418, —Covenant for further assurance. An undertaking, in the form of a covenant, on the part of the vendor of real estate to do such further acts for the purpose of perfecting the purchaser's title as the latter may reasonably require. This covenant is deemed of great importance, since it relates both to the vendor's title and to the instrument of conveyance to the vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts necessary for supplying any defect in the former as to remove all objections to the sufficiency and security of the latter. Platt, Cov.; Rawle, Cov. §§ 98, 99. See Sugd. Vend. 500; Armstrong v. Darby, 26 Mo. 520.

—Covenants for title. Covenants usually inserted in a conveyance of land, on the part of the grantor, and binding him for the completeness, security, and continuance of the title transferred to the grantee. They comprise "covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, or quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty." Rawle, Cov. § 21.

—Covenants in gross. Such as do not run with the land.

—Covenant not to sue. A covenant by one who had a right of action at the time of making it against another person, by which he agrees not to sue to enforce such right of action. Pacific States Lumber Co. v. Bargar (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 335, 337; The Thomas P. Beal (D. C.) 298 F. 121, 122; McDonald v. Goddard Grocery Co., 184 Mo. App. 432, 171 S. W. 690, 691.

—Covenant of non-claim. A covenant sometimes employed, particularly in the New England states, and in deeds of extinguishment of ground rents in Pennsylvania, that neither the vendor, nor his heirs, nor any other person, etc., shall claim any title in the premises conveyed. Rawle, Cov. § 22.

—Covenant of right to convey. An assurance by the covenantor that the grantor has sufficient capacity and title to convey the estate which he by his deed undertakes to convey.

—Covenant of seisin. An assurance to the purchaser that the grantor has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey. 11 East, 641; Rawle, Cov. §§ 65. It is said that the covenant of seisin is not now in use in England, being embraced in that of a right to convey; but it is used in several of the United States. 2 Washb. Real Prop. *648; Pecare v. Chouteau, 13 Mo. 537; Kincaid v. Brittian, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 121; Backus v. McCoy, 3 Ohio, 221, 17 Am. Dec. 835; De Long v. Sea Girt Co., 65 N. J. Law, 1, 47 A. 491; Brown v. Carpenter, 99 Wash. 227, 169 P. 331, 332; Potter v. Miller, 191 N. C. 814, 133 S. E. 193, 195; Frick v. Long, 177 N. C. 189, 98 S. E. 451, 454; Hilliker v. Rueger, 165 App. Div. 189, 151 N. Y. S. 234, 237; Langford v. Newsom (Tex. Com. App.) 220 S. W. 544, 545. Covenants of seisin and good right to convey are synonymous. Rennie v. Gibson, 75 Okl. 282, 183 P. 453, 455.

—Covenant running with land. A covenant which goes with the land, as being annexed to the estate, and which cannot be separated from the land, and transferred without it. 4 Kent, Comm. 472, note. A covenant is said to run with the land, when not only the original parties or their representatives, but each successive owner of the land, will be entitled to its benefit, or be liable (as the case may be) to its obligation. 1 Steph. Comm. 455. Or, in other words, it is so called when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of the land. Tillotson v. Pritchard, 69 Vt. 94, 14 A. 302, 6 Am. St. Rep. 95; Spencer's Case, 3 Coke, 31; Gilmer v. Railway Co., 79 Ala. 572, 58 Am. Rep. 623; Conduit v. Ross, 102 Ind. 166, 26 N. E. 198; Rosson v. Woff, 152 Ga. 578, 110 S. E. 877, 880; Purvis v. Shuman, 273 Ill. 286, 112 N. E. 679, 680, L.R.A. 1917A, 121, Ann. Cas. 1919D, 1175; Iowa Implement Co. v. Aitna Explosives Co., 131 Iowa, 1185, 165 N. W. 406, 409; Reldsvile & S. E. R. Co. v. Baxter, 15 Ga. App. 357, 79 S. E. 157, 159; New York Cent. & H. R. R. R. v. Clarke, 228 Mass. 274, 117 N. E. 322, 323; Louisiana & N. R. Co. v. Dunning, 178 Ky. 365, 198 S. W. 965, 969; Standard Oil Co. v. Slaye, 104 Cal. 453.
—Covenant to convey. A covenant by which the covenantor agrees to convey to the covenantee a certain estate, under certain circumstances.

—Covenant to renew. An executory contract, giving lessee the right to renew on compliance with the terms specified in the renewal clause, if any, or if none, on giving notice, prior to termination of the lease, of his desire to renew, whereupon the contract becomes executed as to him. Freiheit v. Broch, 98 Conn. 168, 118 A. 828, 830.

—Covenant to stand seised. A conveyance adapted to the case where a person seised of land in possession, reversion, or vested remainder, proposes to convey it to his wife, child, or kinsman. In its terms it consists of a covenant by him, in consideration of his natural love and affection, to stand seised of the land to the use of the intended transferee. Before the statute of uses this would merely have raised a use in favor of the covenantee; but by that act this use is converted into the legal estate, and the covenant therefore operates as a conveyance of the land to the covenantee. It is now almost obsolete. 1 Steph. Comm. 532; Williams Cases, 145; French v. French, 3 N. H. 261; Jackson v. Swart, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 85.

COVENANTOR. The party who makes a covenant. Shep. Touch. 160.

COVENANTS PERFORMED. In Pennsylvania practice. This is the name of a plea to the action of covenant whereby the defendant, upon informal notice to the plaintiff, may give anything in evidence which he might have pleaded. With the addition of the words "asque hoc" it amounts to a denial of the allegations of the declaration; and the further addition of "with leave," etc., imports an equitable defense, arising out of special circumstances, which the defendant means to offer in evidence. Zents v. Legnard, 70 Pa. 192; Stewart v. Bedell, 71 Pa. 136; Turnpike Co. v. McCullough, 25 Pa. 303.

COVENT. A contraction, in the old books, of the word "convent."

COVERT. The name given to the act of a tenant-in-chief to enter upon the land of another, or to the act of allodial owners to enter upon the land of tenants-in-feud, or to any act of entry, in which case a right of possession is created.

COVERT BARON, or COVERT DE BARON. Under the protection of a husband; married. 1 Bl. Comm. 442. La femme que est covert de baron, the woman which is covert of a husband. Litt. § 670.

COVERTURE. The condition or state of a married woman. Sometimes used elliptically to describe the legal disability arising from a state of coverture. Osborn v. Horine, 19 Ill. 124; Roberts v. Lund, 45 Vt. 83.

COVIN. A secret conspiracy or agreement between two or more persons to injure or defraud another. Mix v. Muzzy, 28 Conn. 191; Anderson v. Oscamp (Ind. App.) 35 N. E. 707; Hyslop v. Clarke, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 466; Co. Litt. 857; Comyns, Dig. Covin, A; 1 Viner, Abr. 473.

COVINOUS. Deceitful; fraudulent; having the nature of, or tainted by, covin.

COW. Female of bovine genus of animals. Strictly, one that has calved. Often loosely used to include heifer, or young female that has not calved. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 616; 1 Teach 105. See Taylor v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 285. Tombigbee Valley R. Co. v. Wilks, 6 Ala. App. 473, 69 So. 559; Mathis v. State, 70 Ala. 194, 69 So. 697, 608; People v. Phillips, 30 Cal. App. 31, 157 P. 1003, 1004; State v. Haller, 119 Ark. 503, 177 S. W. 1138; Parsons v. Kimmel, 206 Mich. 676, 173 N. W. 539, 540.

COWARDICE. Puissance; fear; misbehavior through fear in relation to some duty to be performed before an enemy. O'Brien Ct. M. 142; Coil v. State, 62 Neb. 35, 86 N. W. 925.

CRACKING. The conversion, by means of heat and usually pressure, of the complex hydrocarbon molecules of heavier oils into the molecular structure of the desired lighter oils. Universal Oil Products Co. v. Skelly Oil Co., (D. C.) 29 F. 2d 985.

CRAFT. A general term, now commonly applied to all kinds of sailing vessels, though formerly restricted to the smaller vessels. The Wenonah, 21 Grat. (Va.) 697; Reed v. Ingham, 3 Ill. & B. 588. A trade or occupation of the sort requiring skill and training, particularly manual skill combined with a knowledge of the principles of the art; also the body of persons pursuing such a calling; a guild. Ganahl v. Shore, 24 Ga. 23.

Guile, artful cunning, trickiness. Not a legal term in this sense, though often used in connection with such terms as "fraud" and "artifice."

CRANAGE. A liberty to use a crane for drawing up goods and wares of burden from ships and vessels, at any creek of the sea, or wharf, unto the land, and to make a profit of doing so. It also signifies the money paid and taken for the service. Tomlins.

CRANK. A term vulgarly applied to a person of eccentric, ill-regulated, and unpractical mental habits; a person half-crazed; a monomaniac; not necessarily equivalent to "insane person," "lunatic," or any other term descriptive of complete mental derangement, and not carrying any implication of homicidal mania. Walker v. Tribune Co. (C. C.) 29 F. 827.

CRASSUS. Large; gross; excessive; extreme. Crassa ignorantia, gross ignorance. Pleta, lib. 5, c. 22, § 18.

CRASTINO. Lat. On the morrow, the day after. The return-day of writs; because the first day of the term was always some saint's day, and writs were returnable on the day after. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 56.

CRATES. An iron gate before a prison. 1 Vent. 304.

CRAVE. To ask or demand; as to crave oyer. See Oyer.

CRAVEN. In old English law. A word of disgrace and obloquy, pronounced on either champion, in the ancient trial by battle, proving recreant, i.e., yielding. Glanville calls it "infestum et inverecundum verbum." His condemnation was anitere liberam legem, i.e., to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber et legalis homo, being supposed by the event to have been proved forsworn, and not fit to be put upon a jury or admitted as a witness. Wharton.

CREAMER. A foreign merchant, but generally taken for one who has a stall in a fair or market. Blount.

CREAMUS. Lat. We create. One of the words by which a corporation in England was formerly created by the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 473.

CREANCE. In French law. A claim; a debt; also belief, credit, faith.

CREANCER. One who trusts or gives credit; a creditor. Brit. cc. 28, 78.

CREANSOR. A creditor. Cowell.

CREATE. To bring into being; to cause to exist; to produce; as, to create a trust in lands, to create a corporation. Edwards v. Bibb, 34 Ala. 481; McClellan v. McClellan, 65 Me. 500; Pickett v. Board of Comrs of Fremont County, 24 Idaho, 200, 133 P. 112, 114; People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 P. 79, 91.

To create a charter or a corporation is to make one which never existed before, while to renew one is to give vitality to one which has been forfeited or has expired; and to extend one is to give an existing charter more time than originally limited. Moers v. Reading, 21 Pa. 159; Railroad Co. v. Orton (C. C.) 32 F. 473; Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 344; Moers v. City of Reading, 21 Pa. 188; People v. Marshall, 1 Gilm. (Ill.) 672; Syracuse City Bank v. Davis, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 188. See McClellan v. McClellan, 65 Me. 500; Palmer v. Preston, 45 Vt. 154, 12 Am. Rep. 101; State v. Powell, 109 Ohio St. 888, 142 N. E. 401, 403; Town of Westernport v. Greer, 144 Md. 86, 124 A. 403.

CREDENTIALS. In international law. The instruments which authorize and establish a public minister in his character with the state or prince to whom they are addressed. If the state or prince receive the minister, he can be received only in the quality attributed to him in his credentials. They are, as it were, his letter of attorney, his mandate patent, mandatum manifestum. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, § 76.

CREDIBLE. Worthy of belief; entitled to credit. See Competency.

—Credible person. One who is trustworthy and entitled to be believed; in law and legal proceedings, one who is entitled to have his oath or affidavit accepted as reliable, not only on account of his good reputation for veracity, but also on account of his intelligence, knowledge of the circumstances, and disinterested relation to the matter in question. Also one —Credibility. Worthiness of belief; that quality in a witness which renders his evidence worthy of belief. After the competence of a witness is allowed, the consideration of his credibility arises, and not before. 3 Bl. Comm. 369; 1 Burrows, 414, 417; Smith v. Jones, 68 Vt. 332, 34 A. 424; State v. Green, 187 N. C. 496, 122 S. E. 178, 179; Taylor v. Taylor (R. I.) 90 A. 746, 750; Leob v. State, 133 Miss. 883, 98 So. 449, 451; Dewen v. State, 120 Ark. 302, 179 S. W. 346, 347. As to the distinction between competency and credibility, see Competency.

—Credibly informed. The statement in a pleading or affidavit, that one is “credibly informed and verily believes” such and such facts, means that, having no direct personal knowledge of the matter in question, he has derived his information in regard to it from authentic sources or from the statements of persons who are not only “credible,” in the sense of being trustworthy, but also informed as to the particular matter or conversant with it.

CREDIT. The ability of a business man to borrow money, or obtain goods on time, in consequence of the favorable opinion held by the community, or by the particular lender, as to his solvency and reliability. People v. Wasservogel, 77 Cal. 173, 19 P. 270; Dry Dock Bank v. Trust Co., 3 N. Y. 356; In re Savarrese, 209 F. 830, 831, 126 C. C. A. 554; In re Ford (D. C.) 14 F. (2d) 848, 849.

Time allowed to the buyer of goods by the seller, in which to make payment for them.

The correlative of a debt; that is, a debt considered from the creditor’s standpoint, or that which is incoming or due to one. Mountain State Motor Car Co. v. Solof, 97 W. Va. 196, 124 S. E. 824, 825.

That which is due to a person, as distinguished from debt, that which is due by him.

That influence connected with certain social positions. 20 Toullier, n. 10.

The credit of an individual is the trust reposed in him by those who deal with him that he is of ability to meet his engagements; and he is trusted because through the tribunals of the country he may be made to pay. The credit of a government is founded on a belief of its ability to comply with its engagements, and a confidence in its honor, that it will do that voluntarily which it cannot be compelled to do. Owen v. Branch Bank, 3 Ala. 258.

Letter of Credit

A letter of credit is an open or sealed letter, from a merchant in one place, directed to another, in another place or country, requiring him, if a person therein named, or the bearer of the letter, shall have occasion to buy commodities, or to want money to any particular or unlimited amount, either to procure the same or to pass his promise, bill, or bond for it, the writer of the letter undertaking to provide him the money for the goods, or to repay him by exchange, or to give him such satisfaction as he shall require, either for himself, or the bearer of the letter. 3 Chit. Com. Law, 336. A letter of credit is a written instrument, addressed by one person to another, requesting the latter to give credit to the person in whose favor it is drawn. Civ. Code Cal. § 2856. Mechanics’ Bank v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 13 N. Y. 630; Pollock v. Helm, 54 Miss. 5, 28 Am. Rep. 342; Lafargue v. Harrison, 70 Cal. 380, 9 P. 261, 50 Am. Rep. 416. A letter of credit is in the nature of a negotiable instrument, and is a letter whereby a person requests another to advance money or give credit to a third person, and promises to repay person making advancement. Second Nat. Bank v. M. Samuel & Sons (C. C. A.) 12 F.(2d) 963, 966; Second Nat. Bank v. Columbia Trust Co. (C. C. A.) 288 F. 17, 20; Border Nat. Bank of Eagle Pass, Tex., v. American Nat. Bank of San Francisco, Cal. (C. C. A.) 282 F. 73, 77; Moss v. Old Colony Trust Co., 246 Mass. 139, 140 N. E. 803, 806. General and special. A general letter of credit is one addressed to any and all persons, without naming any one in particular, while a special letter of credit is addressed to a particular individual, firm, or corporation by name. Birckhead v. Brown, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 642; Civ. Code Mont. 1896, § 3718 (Rev. Codes 1921, § 8213); American Steel Co. v. Irving Nat. Bank (C. C. A.) 296 F. 41, 43. A “confirmed irrevocable letter of credit,” an “irrevocable letter,” or a “confirmed credit” is a contract to pay on compliance with its terms, and needs no formal acknowledgment or acceptance other than is therein stated. Lamborn v. National Park Bank of New York, 240 N. Y. 529, 148 N. E. 694, 695.
CREDIT

Line of Credit

See Line.

Personal Credit

Personal credit is that credit which a person possesses as an individual, and which is founded on the opinion entertained of his character and business standing.

CRÉDIT. Fr. Credit in the English sense of the term, or more particularly, the security for a loan or advancement.

CRÉDIT FONCIER. A company or corporation formed for the purpose of carrying out improvements, by means of loans and advances on real estate security.

CRÉDIT MOBILIER. A company or association formed for carrying on a banking business or for the construction of public works, building of railroads, operations of mines, or other such enterprises, by means of loans or advances on the security of personal property. Barrett v. Savings Inst., 64 N. J. Eq. 425, 54 A. 543.

CREDITOR. A person to whom a debt is owing by another person, called the “debtor.” Mohr v. Elevator Co., 40 Minn. 343, 41 N. W. 1074; Woolverton v. Taylor Co., 43 Ill. App. 424; Insurance Co. v. Meeker, 37 N. J. Law, 390; Walsh v. Miller, 51 Ohio St. 462, 38 N. E. 381. The foregoing is the strict legal sense of the term; but in a wider sense it means one who has a legal right to demand and recover from another a sum of money on any account whatever, and hence may include the owner of any right of action against another, whether arising on contract or for a tort, a penalty, or a forfeiture. Keith v. Hiner, 63 Ark. 244, 38 S. W. 13; Boudard v. Block, 81 Ill. 186, 25 Am. Rep. 276; Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 469, 64 P. 709, 64 Am. St. Rep. 62; Pierstoff v. Jorges, 96 Wisc. 128, 99 N. W. 765, 39 Am. St. Rep. 851.

The term “creditor,” within the common-law rule that conveyances with intent to defraud creditors shall be void, includes every one having right to require the performance of any legal obligation, contract, or guaranty, or a legal right to damages growing out of contract or tort, Hernton v. Short, 121 Ark. 333, 181 S. W. 142, 144; and includes not merely the holder of a fixed and certain present debt, but every one having a right to require the performance of any legal obligation, contract, or guaranty, or a legal right to damages growing out of contract or tort, and includes one entitled to damages for breach of contract to convey real estate, notwithstanding the abandonment of his action for specific performance, Allen v. Kane, 79 Wash. 248, 140 P. 534, 535; In re Littleton’s Estate, 222 N. Y. 340, 347, 129 Misc. Rep. 846; Mackenzie Oil Co. v. Omar Oil & Gas Co., 14 Del. Ch. 26, 120 A. 852, 854.

In its broad sense the word “creditor” means one who has any legal liability upon a contract, express or implied, or in tort; in its narrow sense, the term is limited to one who holds a demand which is certain and liquidated. Superior Plating Works v. Art Metal Crafts Co., 218 Ill. App. 148, 150.

Plaintiff, in action to recover damages for a tort committed against him, is a “creditor” of defendant, within meaning of that term as it is employed in Shannan’s Code, § 3145, denouncing conveyances and transfers of property collusively made with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors. Oliphant v. Moore, 155 Tenn. 539, 283 S. W. 541, 542.

Classification

A creditor is called a “simple contract creditor,” a “specialty creditor,” a “bond creditor,” or otherwise, according to the nature of the obligation giving rise to the debt.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

—Attaching creditor. One who has caused an attachment to be issued and levied on property of his debtor.

—Catholic creditor. In Scotch law, one whose debt is secured on all or on several distinct parts of the debtor’s property. The contracted term (designating one who is not so secured) is “secondary creditor.”

—Confidential creditor. A term sometimes applied to creditors of a failing debtor who furnished him with the means of obtaining credit to which his real circumstances did not entitle him, thus involving loss to other creditors not in his confidence. Gay v. Strickland, 112 Ala. 667, 20 So. 921.

—Creditor at large. One who has not established his debt by the recovery of a judgment or has not otherwise secured a lien on any of the debtor's property. U. S. v. Ingate (C. C.) 48 F. 254; Wolcott v. Ashenfelter, 5 N. M. 442, 23 P. 780, 8 L. R. A. 691.

Domestic creditor. One who resides in the same state or country in which the debtor has his domicile or his property.

Double creditor. See Double.

Execution creditor. One who, having recovered a judgment against the debtor for his debt or claim, has also caused an execution to be issued thereon. Chalmers & Williams v. Surprise, 70 Ind. App. 649, 125 N. E. 541, 544.

Foreign creditor. One who resides in a state or country foreign to that where the debtor has his domicile or his property.

General creditor. A creditor at large (supra), or one who has no lien or security for the payment of his debt or claim. King v. Fraser, 23 S. C. 543; Wolcott v. Ashenfelter, 5 N. M. 442, 23 P. 780, 8 L. R. A. 691.

Joint creditors. Persons jointly entitled to require satisfaction of the same debt or demand.

Junior creditor. One whose claim or demand accrued at a date later than that of a claim or demand held by another creditor, who is called correlativeiy the "senior" creditor.

Lien creditor. See Lien.

Petitioning creditors. As used in Bankruptcy Act, § 64b (11 USC § 104), authorizing one reasonable attorney’s fee. All creditors petitioning for adjudication, or seeking relief consistent with original petition by supplemental or intervening petition, in view of section 59f (11 USC § 95). In re Marcuse & Co. (C. C. A.) 11 F. (2d) 513, 516.

Preferred creditor. See Preferred.

Principal creditor. One whose claim or demand very greatly exceeds the claims of all other creditors in amount is sometimes so called. See In re Sullivan’s Estate, 25 Wash. 430, 65 P. 793.

Secured creditor. See Secured.

Single creditor. See Single.

Subsequent creditor. One whose claim or demand accrued or came into existence after a given fact or transaction, such as the recording of a deed or mortgage or the execution of a voluntary conveyance. McGhee v. Wells, 37 S. C. 256, 35 S. E. 529, 76 Am. St. Rep. 567; Evans v. Lewis, 30 Ohio St. 14.

Warrant creditor. A creditor of a municipal corporation to whom is given a municipal warrant for the amount of his claim, because there are no funds in hand to pay it. Johnson v. New Orleans, 46 La. Ann. 714, 15 So. 100.

CREDITOR'S BILL.

In English Practice

A bill in equity, filed by one or more creditors, for an account of the assets of a decedent, and a legal settlement and distribution of his estate among themselves and such other creditors as may come in under the decree.

In American Practice

A creditors' bill, strictly, is a bill by which a creditor seeks to satisfy his debt out of some equitable estate of the defendant, which is not liable to levy and sale under an execution at law. But there is another sort of a creditors' bill, very nearly allied to the former, by means of which a party seeks to remove a fraudulent conveyance out of the way of his execution. But a naked bill to set aside a fraudulent deed, which seeks no discovery of any property, chose in action, or other thing alleged to belong to the defendant, and which ought to be subjected to the payment of the judgment, is not a creditors' bill. Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 93; Yates v. Council, 137 Miss. 381, 102 So. 178, 177; Barr v. Minto, 65 Or. 522, 133 P. 639, 640.

Creditorum appellatione non hi tantum aequi- plurator qui pecuniam creditorant, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causa debetur. Under the head of "creditors" are included, not alone those who have lent money, but all to whom from any cause a debt is owing. Dig. 59, 16, 11.

CREDITRIX. A female creditor.

CREDITS. A term used in taxation statutes to designate certain forms of personal property. It includes every claim and demand for money and every sum of money receivable at stated periods, due or to become due,

Mutual Credits

In bankrupt law. Credits which must, from their nature, terminate in debts; as where a debt is due from one party, and credit given by him to the other for a sum of money payable at a future day, and which will then become a debt; or where there is a debt on one side, and a delivery of property with directions to turn it into money on the other. 8 Taunt. 499; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 179. By this phrase, in the rule under which courts of equity allow set-off in cases of mutual credit, we are to understand a knowledge on both sides of an existing debt due to one party, and a credit by the other party, founded on and trusting to such debt, as a means of discharging it. King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. 44. Credits given by two persons mutually; i. e., each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than "mutual debts." Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once, that by the other payable to futuro; yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of "mutual debts." 1 Atk. 230; Atkinson v. Elliott, 7 Term. R. 378.

CREEK. In maritime law. Such little inlets of the sea, whether within the precinct or extent of a port or without, as are narrow passages, and crave shore on each side of them. Call. Sew. 56.

The term imports a recess, cove, bay, or inlet in the shore of a river, and not a separate or independent stream; though it is sometimes used in the latter meaning. Shermerhorn v. Railroad Co., 38 N. Y. 103.

CREMATION. The act or practice of reducing a corpse to ashes by means of fire. Act Pa. 1891, June 8; P. L. 212 (35 PS § 1121-1123); L. R. 12 Q. B. D. 247; L. R. 20 Ch. D. 659. See 43 Alb. L. J. 140. See Dead Body.

CREMEMENTUM COMITATUS. The increase of a county. The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the king's rents, above the escomptei rents, under this title.

CREPARE OCULUM. In Saxon law. To put out an eye; which had a peculiar punishment of fifty shillings annexed to it.

CREPUSCULUM. Twilight. In the law of burglary, this term means the presence of sufficient light to discern the face of a man; such light as exists immediately before the rising of the sun or directly after its setting. 4 Bla. Com. 224; Co. 3d Inst. 63; 1 Russell, Cr. 520; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 75.

Crescente malitia crescreo debet et pena. 2 Inst. 479. Vice increasing, punishment ought also to increase.

CREST. A term used in heraldry; it signifies the devices set over a coat of arms.

CRETINISM. In medical jurisprudence. A form of imperfect or arrested mental development, which may amount to idiocy, with physical degeneracy or deformity or lack of development; endemic in Switzerland and some other parts of Europe, but the term is applied to similar states occurring elsewhere.

CRETINUS. In old records. A sudden stream or torrent; a rising or inundation.

CRETIO. Lat. In the civil law. A certain number of days allowed an heir to deliberate whether he would take the inheritance or not. Calvin.

CREW. The aggregate of seamen who man a ship or vessel, including the master and officers; or it may mean the ship's company, exclusive of the master, or exclusive of the master and all other officers. See U. S. v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 209, 28 Fed. Cas. 738; Millaudon v. Martin, 6 Rob. (La.) 540; U. S. v. Huff (C. C.) 13 F. 630; The Buena Ventura (D. C.) 243 F. 797, 799; The Herdys (D. C.) 22 F.(2d) 304, 306.

CREW LIST. In maritime law. A list of the crew of a vessel; one of a ship's papers. This instrument is required by act of congress, and sometimes by treaties. Rev. St. U. S. §§ 4374, 4375 (46 USCA §§ 322, 323). It is necessary for the protection of the crews of every vessel, in the course of the voyage, during a war abroad. Jac. Sea Laws, 96, 98, note.

CRIER. An officer of a court, who makes proclamations. His principal duties are to announce the opening of the court and its adjournment and the fact that certain special matters are about to be transacted, to announce the admission of persons to the bar, to call the names of jurors, witnesses, and parties, to announce that a witness has been sworn, to proclaim silence when so directed, and generally to make such proclamations of a public nature as the judges order.

CRIEZ LA PEEZ. Rehearse the concord, or peace. A phrase used in the ancient proceedings for levying fines. It was the form of words by which the justice before whom the parties appeared directed the serjeant or counter in attendance to recite or read aloud the concord or agreement between the parties, as to the lands intended to be conveyed. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 224, 225.

The term in its general and comprehensive sense, is synonymous with "adultery"; but in its more limited and technical significance it may be defined

Crimes are those wrongs which the government notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a "criminal proceeding," in its own name. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 43.

A crime may be defined to be any act done in violation of those duties which an individual owes to the community, and for the breach of which the law has provided that the offender shall make satisfaction to the public. Bell.

A crime or public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commanding it, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, either of the following punishments: (1) Death; (2) imprisonment; (3) fine; (4) removal from office; or (5) disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in this state. Pen. Code Cal. § 15.

A crime or misdemeanor shall consist in a violation of a public law, in the commission of which there shall be a union or joint operation of act and intention, or criminal negligence. Code Ga. 1852, § 4252 (Pen. Code 1910, § 31).

Synonyms

According to Blackstone, the word "crime" denotes such offenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye, while smaller faults and omissions of less consequence are called "misdemeanors." But the better use appears to be to make crime a term of broad and general import, including both felonies and misdemeanors, and hence covering all infractions of the criminal law. In this sense it is not a technical phrase, strictly speaking, (as "felony" and "misdemeanor" are,) but a convenient general term. In this sense, also, "offense" or "public offense" should be used as synonymous with it.

The distinction between a crime and a tort or civil injury is that the former is a breach and violation of the public right and of duties due to the whole community considered as such, and in its social and aggregate capacity; whereas the latter is an infringement or privation of the civil rights of individuals merely. Brown.

A crime, as opposed to a civil injury, is the violation of a right, considered in reference to the evil tendency of such violation, as regards the community at large. 4 Steph. Comm. 4.

Varieties of Crimes.

—Capital crime. See Capital, adj.

—Common-law crimes. Such crimes as are punishable by the force of the common law, as distinguished from crimes created by statute. Wilkins v. U. S., 96 F. 587, 37 C. C. A. 588; In re Greene (C. C.) 52 F. 111. These decisions (and many others) hold that there are no common-law crimes against the United States.

—Constructive crime. See Constructive.

—Continuous crime. One consisting of a continuous series of acts, which endures after the period of consummation, as, the offense of carrying concealed weapons. In the case of instantaneous crimes, the statute of limitations begins to run with the consummation, while in the case of continuous crimes it only begins with the cessation of the criminal conduct or act. U. S. v. Owen (D. C.) 32 F. 557.

—Crime against the other (husband or wife). As used in Comp. St. Okl. 1921, § 2699, providing that neither husband nor wife shall be a witness against the other except in a prosecution for a "crime committed against the other," the phrase denotes a public offense by husband or wife that is a direct violation of the rights of the other. Hunter v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 119, 134 P. 1134, 1136, L. R. A. 1915A, 564, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 612. It does not make the wife a competent witness in a —High crimes. High crimes and misdemeanors are such immoral and unlawful acts as are nearly allied and equal in guilt to felony, yet, owing to some technical circumstance, do not fall within the definition of "felony." State v. Knapp, 6 Conn. 417, 16 Am. Dec. 68. They are the more serious or aggravated misdemeanors; those more nearly allied and equal in guilt to felony, but which do not fall within its definition. Firmara v. Gardner, 96 Conn. 404, 85 A. 670, 672.

—Infamous crime. A crime which entails infamy upon one who has committed it. Butler v. Wentworth, 84 Me. 25, 24 Atl. 456, 17 La. R. A. 764. The term "infamous"—i. e., without fame or good report—was applied at common law to certain crimes, upon the conviction of which a person became incompetent to testify as a witness, upon the theory that a person would not commit so heinous a crime unless he was so depraved as to be unworthy of credit. These crimes are treason, felony, and the crimen falsi. Abbott. A crime punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor, is an infamous crime, within the provision of the fifth amendment of the constitution that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury." Mackin v. U. S., 117 U. S. 348, 6 Sup. Ct. 777; 29 L. Ed. 909; Brede v. Powers, 269 U. S. 1, 44 S. Ct. 8, 68 L. Ed. 132; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 418, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 59; U. S. v. Petit, 114 U. S. 429 note, 5 Sup. Ct. 1190, 29 L. Ed. 98. It is not the character of the crime but the nature of the punishment which renders the crime "infamous." Weeks v. United States (C. C. A.) 216 F. 299, 298, L. R. A. 1915B, 651, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 524. But see Drazen v. New Haven Taxicab Co., 95 Conn. 500, 111 A. 861, 864; Dutton v. State, 123 Md. 373, 91 A. 417, 419, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 89. Whether an offense is infamous depends on the punishment which may be imposed therefor, not on the punishment which was imposed. United States v. Moreland, 258 U. S. 433, 42 S. Ct. 365, 370, 66 L. Ed. 700; De Jianne v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 282 F. 737, 740; Le Clair v. White, 117 Me. 355, 104 A. 516, 517. Under the constitution of Rhode Island, a crime, to be "infamous," must come within the "crimen falsi," such as forgery, perjury, subornation of perjury, offenses affecting the public administration of justice, or such as would affect civil or political rights, disqualifying or rendering a person incompetent to be a witness or juror. State v. Bussey, 88 R. I. 454, 96 A. 357, 359. By the Revised Statutes of New York the term "infamous crime," when used in any statute, is directed to be construed as including every offense punishable with death or by imprisonment in a state prison, and no other. 2 Rev. St. (p. 702, § 31), p. 587, § 32.

—Quasi crimes. This term embraces all offenses not crimes or misdemeanors, but that in the nature of crimes—a class of offenses against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the general or local public which it is proper should be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties. This would embrace all qui tam actions and forfeitures imposed for the neglect or violation of a public duty. A quasi crime would not embrace an indictable offense, whatever might be its grade, but simply forfeitures for a wrong done to the public, whether voluntary or involuntary, where a penalty is given, whether recoverable by criminal or civil process. Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 375. Also, offenses for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is responsible, the perpetrator being presumed to act by command of the responsible party. Sometimes, injuries which have been unintentionally caused. Torts. McCaleb v. Fox Film Corporation (C. C. A.) 299 F. 48, 50.

—Statutory crimes. Those created by statutes, as distinguished from such as are known to, or cognizable by, the common law.

CRIMEN. Lat. Crime. Also an accusation or charge of crime.

—Crimen furti. The crime or offense of theft.

—Crimen incendii. The crime of burning, which included not only the modern crime of arson, but also the burning of a man, a beast, or other chattel. Britt. c. 9; Crabb, Eng. Law, 308.

—Crimen innominatum. The nameless crime; the crime against nature; sodomy or buggery.

—Crimen raptus. The crime of rape.

—Crimen roberiae. The offense of robbery.

—Flagrans crimen; Locus criminis; Particeps criminis. See those titles.

CRIMEN FALSII.

In the Civil Law

The crime of falsifying; which might be committed either by writing, as by the forgery of a will or other instrument; by words, as by bearing false witness, or perjury; and by acts, as by counterfeiting or adulterating the public money, dealing with false weights and measures, counterfeiting seals, and other fraudulent and deceitful practices. Dig. 48, 10; Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 12, mm. 56-59.

In Scotch Law

It has been defined: "A fraudulent imitation or suppression of truth, to the prejudice of another." Ersk. Inst. 4, 4, 66.
At Common Law

In Modern Law

This phrase is not used as a designation of any specific crime, but as a general designation of a class of offenses, including all such as involve deceit or falsification; e. g., forgery, counterfeiting, using false weights or measures, perjury, etc.

Crimen falsi dictum, cum quis illicitum, eui non fuerit ad heo data autoritas, de sigillo regis, rapto vel invento, brevia, cartasve consignaverit. Flcta, lib. 1, c. 23. The crime of forgery is when any one illicitly, to whom power has not been given for such purposes, has signed writs or charters with the king's seal, either stolen or found.

CRIMEN LAESÆ MAJESTATIS. In criminal law. The crime of lese-majesty, or injuring majesty or royalty; high treason. The term was used by the older English law writers to denote any crime affecting the king's person or dignity.

It is borrowed from the civil law, in which it signified the undertaking of any enterprise against the emperor or the republic. Inst. 4, 18, 3.

Crimen leææ majestatis omnia alia crimin excedit quodam ponam. 3 Inst. 210. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes in its punishment.

Crimen trahit personam. The crime carries the person, (i. e., the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it is committed jurisdiction over the person of the offender.) People v. Adams, 9 Denio (N. Y.) 190, 210, 45 Am. Dec. 468.

Crimina morte extinguatur. Crimes are extinguished by death.

CRIMINAL, n. One who has committed a criminal offense; one who has been legally

BRIEFLAW DICT. (3d Ed.)—31

CRIMINAL, adj. That which pertains to or is connected with the law of crimes, or the administration of penal justice, or which relates to or has the character of crime. Charleston v. Belle, 45 W. Va. 44, 30 S. E. 152; State v. Burton, 113 N. C. 655, 18 S. E. 567.

—Criminal act. A term which is equivalent to crime; or is sometimes used with a slight softening or glossing of the meaning, or as importing a possible question of the legal guilt of the deed.

—Criminal action. The proceeding by which a party charged with a public offense is accused and brought to trial and punishment is known as a "criminal action." Pen. Code Cal. § 633. A criminal action is (1) an action prosecuted by the state as a party, against a person charged with a public offense, for the punishment thereof; (2) an action prosecuted by the state, at the instance of an individual, to prevent an apprehended crime, against his person or property. Code N. C. § 120 (C. S. § 365). State v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 37 F. 497, 3 L. R. A. 554; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 4 S. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482; State v. Costello, 61 Conn. 497, 23 A. 868.

—Criminal conversation. Adultery, considered in its aspect of a civil injury to the husband entitling him to damages; the tort of debauching or seducing of a wife. Often abbreviated to crim. con.

—Criminal information. A criminal suit brought, without interposition of a grand jury, by the proper officer of the king or state. Cole, Cr. Inf.; 4 Bla. Com. 398.

—Criminal intent. The intent to commit a crime; malice, as evidenced by a criminal —Criminal law. That branch or division of law which treats of crimes and their punishments. In the plural—“criminal laws”—the term may denote the laws which define and prohibit the various species of crimes and establish their punishments. U. S. v. Reisinger, 128 U. S. 398, 9 S. Ct. 99, 32 L. Ed. 480; Washington v. Dowling, 92 Fla. 601, 109 So. 588, 591.

—Criminal law amendment act. This act was passed in 1871, (34 & 35 Vict. c. 32), to prevent and punish any violence, threats, or molestation, on the part either of master or workmen, in the various relations arising between them. 4 Steph. Comm. 241.

—Criminal law consolidation acts. The statutes 24 & 25 Vict. cc. 94–100, passed in 1861, for the consolidation of the criminal law of England and Ireland. 4 Steph. Comm. 267. These important statutes amount to a codification of the modern criminal law of England.

—Criminal letters. In Scotch law. A process used as the commencement of a criminal proceeding, in the nature of a summons issued by the lord advocate or his deputy. It resembles a criminal information at common law.

—Criminal procedure. The method pointed out by law for the apprehension, trial, or prosecution, and fixing the punishment, of those persons who have broken or violated, or are supposed to have broken or violated, the laws prescribed for the regulation of the conduct of the people of the community, and who have thereby laid themselves liable to fine or imprisonment or other punishment. 4 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 780.

—Criminal process. Process which issues to compel a person to answer for a crime or misdemeanor. Ward v. Lewis, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 27; Mowlan v. State, 197 Ind. 517, 151 N. E. 416, 417. Also process issued to aid in the detection or suppression of crime, such as search warrants—the primary purpose of the search being to obtain evidence for use in a criminal prosecution. Sugar Valley Land Co. v. Johnson, 17 Ala. App. 409, 86 So. 571, 574.

—Criminal prosecution. An action or proceeding instituted in a proper court on behalf of the public, for the purpose of securing the conviction and punishment of one accused of crime. Harger v. Thomas, 44 Pa. 128, 84 Am. Dec. 422; Ely v. Thompson, 3 A. K. Mareh. (Ky.) 70; Beck v. Forsee (Mo. App.) 199 S. W. 734, 735; Schneider v. Schlang, 159 App. Div. 355, 144 N. Y. S. 543, 544; Ex parte Pepper, 185 Ala. 284, 64 So. 112, 113; State v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Madison County, 53 Mont. 350, 165 P. 294, 296.

As to criminal “Conspiracy,” “Contempt,” “Information,” “Jurisdiction,” “Libel,” “Negligence,” “Operation,” see those titles.

CRIMINAL. Lat. Criminally. This term is used, in distinction or opposition to the word “civiliter,” civilly, to distinguish a criminal liability or prosecution from a civil one.

CRIMINATE. To charge one with crime; to furnish ground for a criminal prosecution; to expose a person to a criminal charge. A witness cannot be compelled to answer any question which has a tendency to criminate him. Stewart v. Johnson, 18 N. J. Law, 87; Kendrick v. Comm., 78 Va. 490.

CRIMINOLOGY. The science which treats of crimes and their prevention and punishment.

CRIMP. One who decoys and plunders sailors under cover of harboring them. Wharton.

CRO. CROO. In old Scotch law. A weregild. A composition, satisfaction, or asystment for the slaughter of a man.

CROCIA. The croiser, or pastoral staff.

CROCARIUS. A cross-bearer, who went before the prelate. Wharton.

CROCKARDS, CROCARDs. A foreign coin of base metal, prohibited by statute 27 Edw. I. St. 3; from being brought into the realm. 4 Bl. Comm. 88; Crabb, Eng. Law, 176.

CROFT. A little close adjoining a dwelling-house, and inclosed for pasture and tillage or any particular use. Jacob. A small place fenced off in which to keep farm-cattle. Spelman. The word is now entirely obsolete.

CROISES. Pilgrims; so called as wearing the sign of the cross on their upper garments. Brit. c. 122. The knights of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defense of the pilgrims. Cowell; Blount.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
CROITEIR. A crofter; one holding a croft.

CROOKED. Deviating from rectitude or uprightness; not straightforward; dishonest; wrong; perverse. A "crook" is a dishonest person; one who is crooked in conduct; a tricky or underhand schemer; a thief or swindler. Villemin v. Brown, 193 App. Div. 777, 184 N. Y. S. 570, 571; Pandolfi v. Bank of Benson (C. C. A.) 273 F. 48, 51.

CROP. The products of the harvest; emblements. Insurance Co. v. Dehaven (Pa.) 5 A. 65; Goodrich v. Stevens, 5 Lams. (N. Y.) 220; Verbeck v. Peters, 170 Iowa, 610, 153 N. W. 215, 216. Such products of the soil as are annually planted, severed, and saved by manual labor, as cereals, vegetables, grass maturing for harvest or harvested, etc., but not grass on lands used for pasturage. Moore v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 76 W. Va. 649, 86 S. E. 595, 597; Ex parte Gray, 204 Ala. 328, 86 So. 96, 97.

In a broader sense, any product of the soil. Ellis, McKinnon & Brown v. Hopps, 20 Ga. App. 453, 118 S. E. 553; Buchanan v. Jencks, 38 R. I. 445, 96 A. 307, 309, 2 A. L. R. 896. The term may therefore apply not only to fructus industriales, otherwise known as emblements, but also to fructus naturales, or crops that are produced by the powers of nature alone. 17 C. J. 380, §§ 2, 3.

CROPPER. One who, having no interest in the land, works it in consideration of receiving a portion of the crop for his labor. Fry v. Jones, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 11; Wood v. Garrison (Ky.) 62 S. W. 725; Maltbie v. Olds, 88 Conn. 633, 92 A. 405, 405; Sayles v. Wilson, 31 Wyo. 55, 222 P. 1020, 1026; Davis v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. R. 232, 206 S. W. 690.

The difference between a tenant and a cropper is: A tenant has an estate in the land for the term, and, consequently, he has a right of property in the crops. Until division, the right of property and of possession in the whole is the tenant's. A cropper has no estate in the land; and, although he has in some sense the possession of the crop, it is the possession of a servant only, and is, in law, that of the landlord, who must divide off to the cropper his share. Harrison v. Ricks, 71 N. C. 7; O'Brien v. Webb, (D. C.) 279 F. 117, 120; Cook-Reynolds Co. v. Wilson, 67 Mont. 147, 214 P. 1194, 1195; Comar Oil Co. v. Richter, 127 Okl. 163, 90 P. 60, 66; Pearson v. Lafferty, 137 Mo. App. 123, 33 S. W. 40, 42; Cry v. J. W. Bass Hardware (Tex. Civ. App.) 273 S. W. 347, 350; Halsell v. First Nat. Bank, 109 Okl. 223, 235 P. 532, 533. But a tenant may pay rent in products of soil. Souter v. Crary, 29 Ga. App. 557, 116 S. E. 231; Kester v. Amon, 81 Mont. 1, 261 P. 288, 292; Harrelson v. Miller & Lux, 182 Cal. 408, 188 P. 800, 801; Dudley v. Lowell, 201 Cal. 376, 257 P. 57, 58.

CROSS. A mark made by persons who are unable to write, to stand instead of a signature.

A mark usually in the form of an X, by which voters are commonly required to express their selection. There are four principal forms of the cross: The St. Andrew's cross, which is made in the form of an X; the Latin cross, †, as used in the crucifixion; St. Anthony's cross, which is made in the form of a T; and the Greek cross, ‡, which is made by the intersection at right angles of lines at their center point. Hunt v. Campbell, 10 Ariz. 254, 169 P. 586, 610.

As an adjective, the word is applied to various demands and proceedings which are connected in subject-matter, but opposite or contradictory in purpose or object.

—Cross-action. An action brought by one who is defendant in a suit against the party who is plaintiff in such suit, upon a cause of action growing out of the same transaction which is there in controversy, whether it be a contract or tort.

—Cross-demand. Where a person against whom a demand is made by another, in his turn makes a demand against that other, these mutual demands are called "cross-demands." A set-off is a familiar example. Musselman v. Gallagher, 32 Iowa, 383.

—Cross-errors. Errors being assigned by the respondent in a writ of error, the errors assigned on both sides are called "cross-errors."

—Cross-lay. The winding of the outer strands of a rope in a reverse direction to the inner strands, the "lay" of a strand of rope being the length of rope within which such strand makes one complete turn. Macomber & Whyte Rope Co. v. Hazard Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 211 P. 976, 977.

—Cross-sale. Where a floor broker, holding orders from different customers to buy and sell on the same terms, cries out the transaction and makes the sale and purchase to himself at the price shown by the last sale shown on the exchange, the transaction is called a "cross-sale or trade," and is illegal under rules of exchange, requiring two brokers to every purchase or sale. Cohen v. Rothschild, 169 N. Y. S. 659, 664, 182 App. Div. 408.

CROSSED CHECK. See Check.

CROSSING. A portion of a street over which pedestrians may lawfully cross from one side to the other. Under Laws N. J. 1915 (P. L. p. 285) § 1, defining crossings to be all duly indicated crossings, marked by pavement or otherwise, at intersection of streets, the most direct route across the street from curb to curb is a "crossing," where no paved crossing is there necessary. Ferris v. McArdle, 92 N. J. Law, 590, 106 A. 460, 461.

With reference to railroads, that portion of the right of way covered by intersection with a highway. International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Mallard (Tex. Civ. App.) 262 S. W. 798, 791. In a broader sense, the term includes embankments constructed as necessary approaches to a railroad track, St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 118 Ark. 72, 175 S. W. 415, 416, and approaches or embankments reasonably necessary to enable crossings or bridges to be used, Payne v. Stockton, 147 Ark. 398, 229 S. W. 44, 47.

CROWD. "Crowd" is indefinite, since difference in time and place may shape its meaning, but there is always implied in the word numbers with reference to the hour and location. People, on Complaint of Liloff, v. Phillips, 245 N. Y. 401, 157 N. E. 508, 509.

CROWN. The sovereign power in a monarchy, especially in relation to the punishment of crimes. "Felony is an offense of the crown." Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 16.

An ornamental badge of regal power worn on the head by sovereign princes. The word is frequently used when speaking of the sovereign himself, or the rights, duties, and prerogatives belonging to him. Also a silver coin of the value of five shillings. Wharton.

The facings and backings made to be sold to dentists to be set by them with appropriate fastenings in the jaws of their patients, when so in place are commonly called "crows" or "artificial crows." S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Dental Co. of America (D. C.) 263 F. 719, 720.

CROWN CASES. In English law. Criminal prosecutions on behalf of the crown, as representing the public; causes in the criminal courts.

CROWN CASES RESERVED. In English law. Questions of law arising in criminal trials at the assizes, (otherwise than by way of demurrer,) and not decided there, but reserved for the consideration of the court of criminal appeal.

CROWN COURT. In English law. The court in which the crown cases, or criminal business, of the assizes is transacted.

CROWN DEBTS. In English law. Debts due to the crown, which are put, by various statutes, upon a different footing from those due to a subject.

CROWN LANDS. The demesne lands of the crown.

CROWN LAW. Criminal law in England is sometimes so termed, the crown being always the prosecutor in criminal proceedings. 4 Bl. Comm. 2.

CROWN OFFICE. The criminal side of the court of king's bench. The king's attorney in this court is called "master of the crown office." 4 Bl. Comm. 308.

CROWN OFFICE IN CHANCERY. One of the offices of the English high court of chancery, now transferred to the high court of justice. The principal official, the clerk of the crown, is an officer of parliament, and of the lord chancellor, in his nonjudicial capacity, rather than an officer of the courts of law.

CROWN PAPER. A paper containing the list of criminal cases, which await the hearing or decision of the court, and particularly of the court of king's bench; and it then includes all cases arising from informations quo warranto, criminal informations, criminal cases brought up from inferior courts by writ of certiorari, and cases from the sessions. Brown.

CROWN SIDE. The criminal department of the court of king's bench; the civil department or branch being called the "plea side." 4 Bl. Comm. 235.

CROWN SOLICITOR. In England, the solicitor to the treasury acts, in state prosecutions, as solicitor for the crown in preparing the prosecution. In Ireland there are officers called "crown solicitors" attached to each circuit, whose duty it is to get up every case for the crown in criminal prosecutions. They are paid by salaries. There is no such system in England, where prosecutions are conducted by solicitors appointed by the parish, or other persons bound over to prosecute by the magistrates on each committal; but in Scotland the still better plan exists of a crown prosecutor (called the "procurator-fiscal," and being a subordinate of the lord-advocate) in every county, who prepares every criminal prosecution. Wharton.

CRUCE SIGNATI. In old English law. Signed or marked with a cross. Pilgrims to the holy land, or crusaders; so called because they wore the sign of the cross upon their garments. Spelman.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT. See Punishment.

CRUELTY. The intentional and malicious infliction of physical suffering upon living creatures, particularly human beings; or, as applied to the latter, the wanton, malicious, and unnecessary infliction of pain upon the body, or the feelings and emotions; abusive treatment; inhumanity; outrage. Jacobs v. Jacobs, 95 Conn. 67, 110 A. 456, 458.

As between husband and wife. Those acts which affect the life, the health, or even the comfort, of the party aggrieved and give a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt, are called "cruelty." What merely wounds the feelings is seldom admitted to be cruelty, unless the act be accompanied with bodily injury, either actual or menaced. Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manners, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, will not amount to legal cruelty; a fortiori, the denial of little indulgences and particular accommodations, which the delicacy of the world is apt to number among its necessaries, is not cruelty. The negative descriptions of cruelty are perhaps the best, under the infinite variety of cases that may occur, by showing what is not cruelty. Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Const. 58; Westminster v. Westminster, 4 Eng. Eng. 233, 311, 332.

Cruelty includes both willfulness and malicious temper of mind with which an act is done, as well as a high degree of pain inflicted. Acts merely accidental, though they inflict great pain, are not "cruel," in the sense of the word as used in statutes against cruelty. Comm. v. McLellan, 161 Mass. 36.

—Cruelty to animals. The infliction of physical pain, suffering, or death upon an animal, when not necessary for purposes of training or discipline or (in the case of death) to procure food or to release the animal from incurable suffering, but done wantonly, for mere sport, for the indulgence of a cruel and vindictive temper, or with reckless indifference to its pain. Com. v. Luffkin, 7 Allen (Mass.) 581; State v. Avery, 44 N. H. 392; Paley v. Bergh, 1 City Ct. R. (N. Y.) 160; State v. Porter, 112 N. C. 887, 18 S. E. 915; State v. Bosworth, 54 Conn. 1, 4 A. 248; McKinnon v. State, 81 Ga. 164, 9 S. E. 1091; Waters v. People, 23 Colo. 33, 46 P. 112, 33 L. R. A. 856, 58 Am. St. Rep. 215.

—Legal cruelty. Such as will warrant the granting of a divorce to the injured party; as distinguished from such kinds or degrees of cruelty as do not, under the statutes and decisions, amount to sufficient cause for a decree. Legal cruelty may be defined to be such conduct on the part of the husband as will endanger the life, limb, or health of the wife, or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt; such acts as render cohabitation unsafe, or are likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the wife; Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286; the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justified the apprehension of danger to life, limb, or health; Skelie v. Skelle, 152 Ga. 707, 111 S. E. 22, 24. If acts of violence are not of frequent repetition, they must endanger life, limb, or health to constitute "cruelty." McKane v. McKane, 152 Md. 515, 137 A. 288, 289. To constitute "cruelty" within the divorce law, where there is no personal violence, the misconduct must be such as will impair the health or create a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm. Humber v. Humber, 109 Miss. 216, 68 So. 161, 163. The term is broad enough to include outrages upon the feelings inflicting mental pain and anguish, where the conduct has been studied, willful, and deliberate. McNabb v. McNabb (Tex. Civ. App.) 207 S. W. 129, 130. See, also, as to "extreme cruelty" as a ground for divorce, Finnell v. Finnell, 113 Okl. 164, 240 P. 62, 63; Morrison v. Morrison, 38 Idaho, 45, 221 P. 166, 168; Kellogg v. Kellogg, 88 Fla. 261, 111 So. 687, 693; Pearson v. Pearson, 230 N. Y. 141, 129 N. E. 349, 350; McCue v. McCue, 191 Mich. 1, 157 N. W. 399, 371; Caviezel v. Caviezel, 94 N. J. Eq. 160, 119 A. 101, 103; Peckham v. Peckham, 111 Neb. 340, 196 N. W. 628, 639; Civ. Code Calif. § 94; Mallof v. Mallof, 175 Calif. 571, 169 P. 330, 331.

CRUISE. A voyage undertaken for a given purpose; a voyage for the purpose of making captures jure belli. The Brutus, 2 Gall. 526, Fed. Cas. No. 2,090.

A voyage or expedition in quest of vessels or fleets of the enemy which may be expected to sail in any particular track at a certain season of the year. The region in which these cruises are performed is usually termed the "rendezvous," or "cruising latitude." Bouvier.

Imports a definite place, as well as a time of commencement and termination, unless such construction is repelled by the context. When not otherwise specially agreed, a cruise begins and ends in the country to which a ship belongs, and from which she derives her commission. The Brutus, 2 Gall. 526, Fed. Cas. No. 2,090.

A report of a timber surveyor showing the character and amount of timber in a stand. Jones v. United States (C. C. A.) 265 F. 255, 289.
CRUSH. To break by means of pressure. Yagunchok v. Rutledge, 219 Mich. 82, 188 N. W. 412, 413.

CRY. To call out aloud; to proclaim; to publish; to sell at auction. "To cry a tract of land." Carr v. Gooch, 1 Wash. (Va.) 335, 260.

A clamor raised in the pursuit of an escaping felon. 4 Bl. Comm. 293. See Hue and Cry.

CRY DE PAIS, or CRI DE PAIS. The hue and cry raised by the people in ancient times, where a felony had been committed and the constable was absent.

CRYER. An auctioneer. Carr v. Gooch, 1 Wash. (Va.) 337, 262. One who calls out aloud; one who publishes or proclaims. See Crier.

CRYPTA. A chapel or oratory underground, or under a church or cathedral. Du Cange.

CUCKING-STOOL. An engine of correction for common scolds, which in the Saxon language is said to signify the scolding-stool, though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking-stool, because the judgment was that, when the woman was placed therein, she should be plunged in the water for her punishment. It was also variously called a "trebuckt," "tumbrel," or "castigatory." 3 Inst. 219; 4 Bl. Comm. 169; Brown. James v. Comm., 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 220.

CUCKOLD. A man whose wife is unfaithful; the husband of an adulteress. It is explained that the word alludes to the habit of the female cuckold, which lays her eggs in the nests of other birds to be hatched by them. To make a cuckold of a man is to seduce his wife. Hall v. Huffman, 159 Ky. 72, 166 S. W. 770.

CUEILLETTRE. A term of French maritime law. See A Cueillette.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui ipsa ante divorciun contra dicere non potuit, whom she before the divorce could not gainsay). A writ which anciently lay in favor of a woman who had been divorced from her husband, to recover lands and tenements which she had in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband had aliened them during marriage, when she could not gainsay it; Fitzh. N. B. 240; 3 Bla. Com. 183, n.; Stearns, Real Act. 113; Booth, Real Act. 188. Abolished in 1833.

CUI BONO. For whose good; for whose use or benefit. "Cui bono is ever of great weight in all agreements." Parker, C. J., 10 Mod. 135. Sometimes translated, for what good, for what useful purpose.

Cuique alius quid concedat concedere vide tur et id, sine que res ipsa esse non potuit. Whoever grants anything to another is supposed to grant that also without which the thing itself would be of no effect. 11 Co. 52; Broom, Max. 479; Hob. 234; Vaughan, 109; 11 Exch. 775; Shep. Touch. 89; Co. Litt. 56 a.

CUI IN VITA (L. Lat. The full phrase was, Cui in vita sua ipsa contradicere non potuit, whom in his lifetime she could not gainsay). A writ of entry which lay for a widow against a person to whom her husband had in his lifetime aliened her lands. Fitzh. N. B. 138. It was a method of establishing the fact of death, being a trial with witnesses, but without a jury. The object of the writ was to avoid a judgment obtained against the husband by confession or default. It is obsolete in England by force of 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, § 6. See 6 Co. 8, 9. As to its use in Pennsylvania, see 3 Bin. Appx.; Rep. Comm. on Penn. Civ. Code, 1835, 90. Abolished in England, 1833. Blackstone is said to have shown little knowledge of its history; Thayer, Evidence.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur, sine quibus jurisdictio expirare non potest. To whomsoever a jurisdiction is given, those things also are supposed to be granted, without which the jurisdiction cannot be exercised. Dig. 2, 1, 2. The grant of jurisdiction implies the grant of all powers necessary to its exercise. 1 Kent, Comm. 339.

Cui jus est donandi, idem et vendendi et concedendi jus est. He who has the right of giving has also the right of selling and granting. Dig. 50, 17, 103.

Cullibet in arte sua perito est erudendum. Any person skilled in his peculiar art or profession is to be believed, [i. e., when he speaks of matters connected with such art.] Co. Litt. 125a. Credence should be given to one skilled in his peculiar profession. Broom. Max. 992; 1 Bla. Com. 75; Phill. Ev. Cowen & H. notes, 738; 1 Hagg. Ecc. 727; 11 Cl. & F. 85.

Cullibet licet juri pro se introducto renunciare. Any one may waive or renounce the benefit of a principle or rule of law that exists only for his protection.

Cui licet quod majus, non debet quod minus est non licere. He who is allowed to do the greater ought not to be prohibited from doing the less. He who has authority to do the more important act ought not to be debarred from doing what is of less importance. 4 Coke, 23.

Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem. He to whom the people is father has not a father. Co. Litt. 123.

Cuique in sua arte erudendum est. Every one is to be believed in his own art. Dickinson v. Barber, 9 Mass. 227, 6 Am. Dec. 58.

Cujus est commodum ejus debet esse incommodum. Whose is the advantage, his also should be the disadvantage.
Cujus est dare, ejus est disponere. Wing. Max. 55. Whose it is to give, his it is to dispose; or, as Broom says, "the bestower of a gift has a right to regulate its disposal." Broom, Max. 459, 461, 463, 464.

Cujus est divisio, alterius est electio. Whichever [of two parties] has the division, [of an estate,] the choice [of the shares] is the other's. Co. Litt. 166b. In partition between co-partners, where the division is made by the eldest, the rule in English law is that she shall choose her share last. Id.; 2 Bl. Comm. 159; 1 Steph. Comm. 323.

Cujus est dominium ejus est periculum. The risk lies upon the owner of the subject. Truy. Lat. Max. 114.

Cujus est instituere, ejus est abrogare. Whose right it is to institute, his right it is to abrogate. Broom, Max. 578, note.

Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad column. Whose is the soil, his is it up to the sky. Co. Litt. 4a. He who owns the soil, or surface of the ground, owns, or has an exclusive right to, everything which is upon or above it to an indefinite height. 9 Coke, 54; Shep. Touch. 90; 2 Bl. Comm. 18; 3 Bl. Comm. 217; Broom, Max. 395.

Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad columna et ad inferos. To whomsoever the soil belongs, he owns also to the sky and to the depths. The owner of a piece of land owns everything above and below it to an indefinite extent. Co. Litt. 4.

Cujus juris (i.e., jurisdictionis) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium. 2 Inst. 493. An accessory matter is subject to the same jurisdiction as its principal.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulto dati donatio est. He who gives a thing by mistake has a right to recover it back; but, if he gives designedly, it is a gift. Dig. 50, 17, 53.

Cujusque rei potissima pars est principium. The chiefest part of everything is the beginning. Dig. 1, 2, 1; 10 Coke, 49a.

CUL DE SAC. (Fr. the bottom of a sack.) A blind alley; a street which is open at one end only. Bartlett v. Bangor, 67 Me. 407; Perrin v. Railroad Co., 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 65; Talbott v. Railroad Co., 31 Grat. (Va.) 691; Hickok v. Plattsburg, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 135.

CULAGIUM. In old records. The laying up a ship in a dock, in order to be repaired. Cowell; Blount.

CULPA. Lat. A term of the civil law, meaning fault, neglect, or negligence. There are three degrees of culpa,—lata culpa, gross fault or neglect; levis culpa, ordinary fault or neglect; levisissima culpa, slight fault or neglect,—and the definitions of these degrees are precisely the same as those in our law. Story, Bailm. § 18. This term is to be distinguished from dolus, which means fraud, guile, or deceit.

Culpa carot qui seit sed prohibere non potest. He is clear of blame who knows, but cannot prevent. Dig. 50, 17, 50.

Culpa est immiscere se ad se non pertinenti. 2 Inst. 208. It is a fault for any one to meddle in a matter not pertaining to him.

Culpa lata dolo equiparatur. Gross negligence is held equivalent to intentional wrong.

Culpa tenet [tenet] suos auxores. Misconduct binds [should bind] its own authors. It is a never-failing axiom that every one is accountable only for his own delicts. Ersk. Inst. 4, 1, 14.

CULPABLE. Blamable; censurable; involving the breach of a legal duty or the commission of a fault. The term is not necessarily equivalent to "criminal," for, in present use, and notwithstanding its derivation, it implies that the act or conduct spoken of is reprehensible or wrong but not that it involves malice or a guilty purpose. "Culpable" in fact connotes fault rather than guilt. Railway Co. v. Clayberg, 107 Ill. 631; Bank v. Wright, 8 Allen (Mass.) 121.

As to culpable "Homicide," "Neglect," and "Negligence," see those titles.

Culpae poena par esto. Poena ad mensuram delicti statuenda est. Let the punishment be proportioned to the crime. Punishment is to be measured by the extent of the offense.

CULPRIT. A person who is indicted for a criminal offense, but not yet convicted. It is not, however, a technical term of the law; and in its vernacular usage it seems to imply only a light degree of censure or moral reprobation.

Blackstone believes it an abbreviation of the old forms of arraignment, whereby, on the prisoner's pleading not guilty, the clerk would respond, "culpabilis, prit." i.e., he is guilty and the crown is ready. It was (he says) the e vis voc replication, by the clerk, on behalf of the crown, to the prisoner's plea of non culpabilis; prit being a technical word, anciently in use in the formula of joining issue. 4 Bl. Comm. 339.

But a more plausible explanation is that given by Donaldson, (cited Whart. Lex.) as follows: The clerk asks the prisoner, "Are you guilty, or not guilty?" Prisoner "Not guilty." Clerk, "Qu'il paroit, [may it prove so.] How will you be tried?" Prisoner, "By God and my country." These words being hurried over, came to sound, "culprit, how will you be tried?" The ordinary derivation is from culpa.

CULRACH. In old Scotch law. A species of pledge or cautioner, (Scottice back borgh,) used in cases of the reprieve of persons from one man's court to another's. Skene.

CULTIVATED. A field on which a crop of wheat is growing is a cultivated field, although not a stroke of labor may have been done in it since the seed was put in the ground, and it is a cultivated field after the crop is removed. It is, strictly, a cultivated piece of ground. State v. Allen, 35 N. C. 36; Combs v. Rockingham County Com'rs, 170 N. C. 87, 86 S. E. 963, 964; Angus Cattle Co. v. McLeod, 98 Neb. 108, 152 N. W. 322, 323; Horsely v. State, 16 Ga. App. 136, 54 S. E. 600, 601.

CULTIVATOR. A cropper, which see. Pearson v. Lafferty, 197 Mo. App. 123, 193 S. W. 40, 41.

CULTURA. A parcel of arable land. Blount.

CULVERTAGE. In old English law. A base kind of slavery. The confiscation or forfeiture which takes place when a lord seizes his tenant's estate. Blount; Du Cange.

Cum actio fuerit mere criminalis, institui poterit ab initio criminaliter vel civiliter. When an action is merely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly. Bract. 102.

Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis? When the proofs of facts are present, what need is there of words? 2 Bulst. 53.

Cum aliquis renunciaverit societati, solvit societas. When any partner renounces the partnership, the partnership is dissolved. Tray. Lat. Max. 118.

Cum confessente sponte millius est agendum. 4 Inst. 66. One confessing willingly should be dealt with more leniently.

CUM COPULA. Lat. With copulation, i. e., sexual intercourse. Used in speaking of the validity of a marriage contracted "per verba de futuro cum copula," that is, with words referring to the future (a future intention to have the marriage solemnized) and consummated by sexual connection.

Cum de lucro duorum queritur, melior est causa possidentis. When the question is as to the gain of two persons, the cause of him who is in possession is the better. Dig. 50, 17, 128.

Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiantur in testamento, ultimum ratum est. Where two things repugnant to each other are found in a will, the last shall stand. Co. Litt. 112 b; Shep. Touch. 451; Broom, Max. 583.

Cum duo jura concurrunt in una persona sequum est ac si essent in duobus. When two rights meet in one person, it is the same as if they were in two persons.

CUM GRANO SALIS. (With a grain of salt.) With allowance for exaggeration.

Cum in corpore dissentitur, apparat nullam esse acceptionem. When there is a disagreement in the substance, it appears that there is no acceptance. Gardner v. Lane, 12 Allen (Mass.) 44.

Cum in testamento ambiguo aut etiam perperam scripsit est beneigne interpretari et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum oredendum est. Dig. 34, 5, 24. Where an ambiguous, or even an erroneous, expression occurs in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator's probable meaning. Broom, Max. 598.

Cum legitima nuptiae facta sunt, patrem liber sequuntur. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.

CUM ONERE. With the burden; subject to an incumbrance or charge. What is taken cum onere subject to an existing burden or charge.

Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur pellitor et melior habetur possessoris causa. Dig. 50, 17, 154. When both parties are in fault the plaintiff must always fail, and the cause of the person in possession be preferred.

CUM PERA ET LOCULO. With satchel and purse. A phrase in old Scotch law.

CUM PERTINENSITIS. With the appurtenances. Bract. fol. 73 b.

CUM PRIVILEGIO. The expression of the monopoly of Oxford, Cambridge, and the royal printers to publish the Bible.

Cum quo d ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. 4 Kent, Comm. 493. When that which I do is of no effect as I do it, it shall have as much effect as it can; i. e., in some other way.

CUM TESTAMENTO ANNEXO. L. Lat. With the will annexed. A term applied to administration granted where a testator makes an incomplete will, without naming any executor, or where he names incapable persons, or where the executors named refuse to act. If the executor has died, an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo (of the goods not [already] administered upon with the will annexed) is appointed. Often abbreviated d. b. n. c. t. a. 2 Bl. Comm. 503, 504.

CUMULATIVE. Additional; heaping up; increasing; forming an aggregate. The word signifies that two things are to be added to-getter, instead of one being a repetition or in substitution of the other. People v. Superior Court, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 288; Regina v. Eastern Archipelago Co., 18 Eng. Law & Eq. 183.

Cumulative dividend. See Stock.

Cumulative offense. One which can be committed only by a repetition of acts of the same kind but committed on different days. The offense of being a "common seller" of intoxicating liquors is an example. Wells v. Com., 12 Gray (Mass.) 325.

Cumulative punishment. An increased punishment inflicted for a second or third conviction of the same offense, under the statutes relating to habitual criminals. State v. Hambly, 126 N. C. 1066, 35 S. E. 614. To be distinguished from a "cumulative sentence," as to which see Sentence.

Cumulative voting. A system of voting, by which the elector, having a number of votes equal to the number of officers to be chosen, is allowed to concentrate the whole number of his votes upon one person, or to distribute them as he may see fit. For example, if ten directors of a corporation are to be elected, then, under this system, the voter may cast ten votes for one person, or five votes for each of two persons, etc. It is intended to secure representation of a minority. State v. Stockley, 45 Ohio St. 304, 13 N. E. 279; Bridgers v. Staton, 150 N. C. 218, 63 S. E. 892; Chicago Macaroni Mfg. Co. v. Boggiano, 202 Ill. 312, 67 N. E. 17; Attorney General v. McVicke, 138 Mich. 387, 101 N. W. 552.

As to cumulative "Evidence," "Legacies," and "Sentences," see those titles.

Cunades. In Spanish law. Affinity; alliance; relation by marriage. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 6, 1, 5.

Cuney-Cuney. In old English law. A kind of trial, as appears from Bract. lib. 4, tract 3, ca. 18, and tract 4, ca. 2, where it seems to mean, one by the ordinary jury.

Cur. A common abbreviation of curia.

Cura. Lat. Care; charge; oversight; guardianship.

In the Civil Law

A species of guardianship which commenced at the age of puberty (when the guardianship called "tutela" expired,) and continued to the completion of the twenty-fifth year. Inst. 1, 23, pr.; Id. 1, 25, pr.; Hallifax, Civil Law, b. 1, c. 9.

Curagulos. One who takes care of a thing.

Curate. In ecclesiastical law. Properly, an incumbent who has the cure of souls, but now generally restricted to signify the spiritual assistant of a rector or vicar in his cure. An officiating temporary minister in the English church, who represents the proper incumbent; being regularly employed either to serve in his absence or as his assistant, as the case may be. 1 Bl. Comm. 303; 2 Steph. Comm. 88; Brande.

Perpetual Curacy

The office of a curate in a parish where there is no spiritual rector or vicar, but where a clerk (curate) is appointed to officiate there by the impropiator. 2 Burn. Ecc. Law, 55. The church or benefice filled by a curate under these circumstances is also so called.

Curateur. In French law. A person charged with supervising the administration of the affairs of an emancipated minor, of giving him advice, and assisting him in the important acts of such administration. Duverger.

Curatio. In the civil law. The power or duty of managing the property of him who, either on account of infancy or some defect of mind or body, cannot manage his own affairs. The duty of a curator or guardian. Calvin.

Curative. Intended to cure (that is, to obviate the ordinary legal effects or consequences of) defects, errors, omissions, or irregularities. Applied particularly to statutes, a "curative act" being a retrospective law passed in order to validate legal proceedings, the acts of public officers, or private deeds or contracts, which would otherwise be void for defects or irregularities or for want of conformity to existing legal requirements. Meigs v. Roberts, 162 N. Y. 371, 66 N. E. 883, 76 Am. St. Rep. 322.

Curator. In The Civil Law

A person who is appointed to take care of anything for another. A guardian. One appointed to take care of the estate of a minor above a certain age, a lunatic, a spendthrift, or other person not regarded by the law as competent to administer it for himself. The title was also applied to a variety of public officers in Roman administrative law. Sproule v. Davies, 69 App. Div. 502, 75 N. Y. S. 229; Le Blanc v. Jackson (Tex. Clv. App.), 161 S. W. 60, 66.
In Scotch Law

The term means a guardian.

In Louisiana

A person appointed to take care of the estate of an absentee. Civil Code La. art. 50.

In Missouri

The term "curator" has been adopted from the civil law, and it is applied to the guardian of the estate of the ward as distinguished from the guardian of his person. Duncan v. Crook, 49 Mo. 117.

In General

—Curator ad hoc. In the civil law. A guardian for this purpose; a special guardian.

—Curator ad litem. Guardian for the suit. In English law, the corresponding phrase is "guardian ad litem."

—Curator bonis. In the civil law. A guardian or trustee appointed to take care of property in certain cases; as for the benefit of creditors. Dig. 42, 7. In Scotch law. The term is applied to guardians for minors, lunatics, etc.

—Curatores viarum. Surveyors of the highways.

CURATORSHIP. The office of a curator. Curatorship differs from tutorship, (q. v.) in this; that the latter is instituted for the protection of property in the first place, and, secondly, of the person; while the former is intended to protect, first, the person, and secondly, the property. 1 Lec. El. Dr. Civ. Rom. 241.

CURATRIX. A woman who has been appointed to the office of curator; a female guardian. Cross v. Curatrix v. Cross' Legatees, 4 Grat. (Va.) 237.

Curatus non habet titulum. A curate has no title, [to tithes.] 3 Bulst. 310.

CURE. The act of healing; restoration to health from disease, or to soundness after injury. State v. Gibson, 189 Iowa, 177, 201 N. W. 590; Fort Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wininger (Tex. Civ. App.) 159 S. W. 851, 855. Within the rule that a seaman is entitled to maintenance and "cure" at expense of vessel or owner if he falls sick or is wounded in the service of the ship, the term means proper care and ordinary medical assistance and treatment in case of injury or acute disease, for a reasonable time, and not a positive cure nor extraordinary treatment. The Bouker No. 2 (C. C. A.) 241 F. 831, 835; The Poche set (C. C. A.) 295 F. 6, 9.

CURE BY VERDICT. The rectification or rendering nugatory of a defect in the pleadings by the rendition of a verdict; the court will presume, after a verdict, that the particular thing omitted or defectively stated in the pleadings was duly proved at the trial. State v. Keena, 69 Conn. 329, 28 A. 522; Alford v. Baker, 53 Ind. 270; Treanor v. Houghton, 103 Cal. 53, 66 P. 1081.

CURE OF SOULS. In ecclesiastical law. The ecclesiastical or spiritual charge of a parish, including the usual and regular duties of a minister in charge. State v. Bray, 35 N. C. 290.

CURFEW. An institution supposed to have been introduced into England by order of William the Conqueror, which consisted in the ringing of a bell or bells at eight o'clock at night, at which signal the people were required to extinguish all lights in their dwellings, and to put out or ruke up their fires, and retire to rest, and all companies to disperse. The word is probably derived from the French couvre feu, to cover the fire. The curfew is spoken of in 1 Social England 373, as having been ordained by William I. in order to prevent nightly gatherings of the people of England. But the custom is evidently older than the Norman; for we find an order of King Alfred that the inhabitants of Oxford should at the ringing of that bell cover up their fires and go to bed. And there is evidence that the same practice prevailed at this period in France, Normandy, Spain, and probably in most of the other countries of Europe. Henry, Hist. of Britain, vol. 3, 507. It was doubtless intended as a precaution against fires, which were very frequent and destructive when most houses were built of wood. It appears to have met with so much opposition that in 1106 we find Henry I. repealing the enactment of his father on the subject; and Blackstone says that, though it is mentioned a century afterwards, it is rather spoken of as a time of night than as a still subsisting custom. Shakespeare frequently refers to it in the same sense.

CURIA. In Old European Law

A court. The palace, household, or retinue of a sovereign. A judicial tribunal or court held in the sovereign's palace. A court of justice. The civil power, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical. A manor; a nobleman's house; the hall of a manor. A piece of ground attached to a house; a yard or court-yard. Spelman. A lord's court held in his manor. The tenants who did suit and service at the lord's court. A manse. Cowell.

In Roman Law

A division of the Roman people, said to have been made by Romulus. They were divided into three tribes, and each tribe into ten curiae, making thirty curiae in all. Spelman.

The place or building in which each curia assembled to offer sacred rites.

The place of meeting of the Roman senate; the senate house.
The senate house of a province; the place where the decuriones assembled. Cod. 10, 31, 2. See Decurie.

In General
-Curia admirabilitatis. The court of admiralty.
-Curia Christianitatis. The ecclesiastical court.
-Curia comitatus. The county court (q. v.).
-Curia cursus aqua. A court held by the lord of the manor of Gravesend for the better management of barges and boats plying on the river Thames between Gravesend and Windsor, and also at Gravesend bridge, etc. 2 Geo. II. c. 26.
-Curia domini. In old English law. The lord's court, house, or hall, where all the tenants met at the time of keeping court. Cowell.
-Curia legitime affirmata. A phrase used in old Scotch records to show that the court was opened in due and lawful manner.
-Curia magna. In old English law. The great court; one of the ancient names of parliament.
-Curia millium. A court so called, anciently held at Carisbrooke Castle, in the Isle of Wight. Cowell.
-Curia palatii. The palace court. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101.
-Curia pedis pulverizati. In old English law. The court of piedpoudre or piepounders. 3 Bl. Comm. 32. See Court of Pleipoudre.
-Curia penticiarum. A court held by the sheriff of Chester, in a place there called the "Pendice" or "Pentice;" probably it was so called from being originally held under a pent-house, or open shed covered with boards. Blount.
-Curia regia. The king's court. A form applied to the aula regis, the bancon, or communis bancon, and the hier or eyre, as being courts of the king, but especially to the aula regis, (which title see.)

CURIA ADVISARI VULT. L. Lat. The court will advise; the court will consider. A phrase frequently found in the reports, signifying the resolution of the court to suspend judgment in a cause, after the argument, until they have deliberated upon the question, as where there is a new or difficult point involved. It is commonly abbreviated to cur. adv. vult, or c. a. v.

Curia cancellaria officina justitiae. 2 Inst. 552. The court of chancery is the workshop of justice.

CURIA CLAUDENDA. The name of a writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he was bound to make, between his land and the plaintiff's. Reg. Orig. 153. Now obsolete.

Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit. 4 Inst. 50. The court of parliament is governed by its own laws.

CURIALITY. In Scotch law. Curtesy. Also the privileges, prerogatives, or, perhaps, retinue, of a court.

Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. A curious [vernace or subtice] and captious interpretation is reproved in law. 1 Balst. 6.

CURNOCK. In old English law. A measure containing four bushels or half a quarter of corn. Cowell; Blount.

CURRENT. Running; now in transit; whatever is at present in course of passage; as "the current month." When applied to money, it means "lawful;" current money is equivalent to lawful money. Wharton v. Morris, 1 Dall. 124, 1 L. Ed. 65; Miller v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 254 S. W. 176, 178; Richardson v. Board of Education of City of *Asland, 268 Ky. 464, 271 S. W. 549, 550; Empire Petroleum Co. v. Southern Pipe Line Co., 174 Ark. 33, 294 S. W. 5, 6. See Current Money.

A continuous movement in the same direction, as a fluid or stream. Buckeye Incubator Co. v. Blum (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 458, 458.

CURRENT ACCOUNT. An open, running, or unsettled account between two parties. Tucker v. Quimby, 37 Iowa, 19; Franklin v. Camp, 1 N. J. Law, 196; Wilson v. Calvert, 18 Ala. 274.

CURRENT CATALOGUES. Under contract to sell automobiles as shown in current catalogues, "current catalogues" means such catalogues as should from time to time be issued, and not merely the catalogues in existence on execution of the contract. Imperial Motorcar Co. v. Skinner, 16 Ala. App. 443, 73 So. 641, 642.

CURRENT EXPENSES. Ordinary, regular, and continuing expenditures for the maintenance of property, the carrying on of an office, municipal government, etc. Sheldon v. Purdy, 17 Wash. 135, 49 P. 228; State v. Board of Education, 68 N. J. Law, 498, 53 A. 236; Babcock v. Goodrich, 47 Cal. 510; St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. v. Forbes, 111 Okl. 48, 237 P. 596, 597.

CURRENT MONEY. The currency of the country; whatever is intended to and does actually circulate as currency; every species of coin or currency. Miller v. McKinney, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 96. In this phrase the adjective "current" is not synonymous with "convertible." It is employed to describe money which passes from hand to hand, from person to person, and circulates through the community, and is generally received. Money is current which is received as money in the common business transactions, and is the common medium in barter and trade. Stalworth v. Blum, 41 Ala. 321; Ferrell v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. R. 487, 152 S. W. 901, 905; Wharton v. Morris, 1 Dal. (U. S.) 125, 1 L. Ed. 65; Pierson v. Wallace, 7 Ark. 282; Fry v. Dudley, 20 La. Ann. 398; Kupfer v. Marc, 28 Ill. 388; Conwell v. Pumphrey, 9 Ind. 135, 68 Am. Dec. 611; McChord v. Ford, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 166; Warren v. Brown, 64 N. C. 381.

CURRENT PRICE. This term means the same as "market value," "market price," "going price," the price that runs or flows with the market. Hoff v. Lodi Canning Co., 51 Cal. App. 299, 196 P. 779, 780; Ford v. Norton, 32 N. M. 518, 290 P. 411, 414, 55 A. L. R. 261; Cases of Champagne, 23 Fed. Cas. 1168.

CURRENT RATE OF WAGES. Minimum, maximum, and intermediate amounts, indeterminately varying from time to time and dependent on the class and kind of work done, the efficiency of the workman, etc. Connally v. General Const. Co., 269 U. S. 385, 46 S. Ct. 126, 128, 70 L. Ed. 322.

CURRENT VALUE. The current value of imported commodities is their common market price at the place of exportation, without reference to the price actually paid by the importer. Tappan v. U. S., 23 Fed. Cas. 660.

CURRENT WAGES. Such as are paid periodically, or from time to time as the services are rendered or the work is performed; more particularly, wages for the current period, hence not including such as are past-due. Sydnor v. Galveston (Tex. App.) 15 S. W. 292; Bank v. Graham (Tex. App.) 22 S. W. 1101; Bell v. Live Stock Co. (Tex.) 11 S. W. 346, 3 L. R. A. 642.

CURRENT YEAR. The year now running. Doe v. Dobell, 1 Atl. & El. 506; Clark v. Lancaster County, 69 Neb. 717, 96 N. W. 593. Ordinarily, a calendar year in which the event under discussion took place; Buffalo County v. Bowker, 197 N. W. 620, 622, 111 Neb. 762; Empire Petroleum Co. v. Southern Pipe Line Co., 174 Ark. 33, 294 S. W. 5, 6; unless the context shows a different intention; Miller v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 294 S. W. 176, 178; People v. Central Illinois Public Service Co., 324 Ill. 85, 154 N. E. 438, 439.

CURRICULUM. The year; of the course of a year; the set of studies for a particular period, appointed by a university.

CURIIT QUATUOR PEDIIBUS. L. Lat. It runs upon four feet; or, as sometimes expressed, it runs upon all fours. A phrase used in arguments to signify the entire and exact application of a case quoted. "It does not follow that they run quattuor pedibus." 1 W. Bl. 145.

Curtit tempus contra desidet et sui juris contempitores. Time runs against the slouchful and those who neglect their rights. Bract. fol. 109b, 101.

CURSING. Malediction; imprecation; execration; profane words intended to convey hate and to invoke harm; swearing. Johnson v. State, 15 Ala. App. 194, 72 So. 766.

CURSITOR BARON. An officer of the court of exchequer, who is appointed by patent under the great seal to be one of the barons of the exchequer. The office was abolished by St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 88.

CURSITORS. Clerks in the chancery office, whose duties consisted in drawing up those writs which were of course, de curia, whence their name. They were abolished by St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 82. Spence, Eq. Jur. 238; 4 Inst. 82.

CURSOR. An inferior officer of the papal court.

Cursus curia est lex curiae. 3 Bulst. 53. The practice of the court is the law of the court.

CURTESY. The estate to which by common law a man is entitled, on the death of his wife, in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession in fee-simple or in tail during her coverture, provided they have had lawful issue born alive which might have been capable of inheriting the estate. It is a freehold estate for the term of its natural life. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 127; 2 Bl. Comm. 128; Co. 32d Ed. 30a; Dozier v. Toohill, 150 Mo. 546; 79 S. W. 429; 103 Am. St. Rep. 556; Templeton v. Twitty, 88 Tenn. 255, 14 S. W. 483; Jackson v. Johnson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 74, 15 Am. Dec. 493; Ryan v. Freeman, 36 Miss. 175; Whiteman v. Taher, 205 Ala. 496, 88 So. 595, 596; Decker v. Decker, 205 Ky. 69, 265 S. W. 483, 485; In re Charbonneau, 120 Misc. Rep. 356, 221 N. Y. S. 449, 450.

Initiate and Consume

Curtesy initiate is the interest which a husband has in his wife's estate after the birth of issue capable of inheriting, and before the death of the wife; after her death, it becomes an estate "by the curtesy consumey." Wait v. Walt, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 205; Churchill v. Hudson (C. C.) 34 F. 14; Turner v. Heinberg, 30 Ind. App. 615, 65 N. E. 294; Sadler v. Campbell, 150 Ark. 594, 236 S. W. 588, 592; Pattison v. Baker, 148 Tenn. 389, 235 S. W. 710, 29 A. L. R. 1534; Childers v. Kennedy, 189 Ky. 179, 224 S. W. 651; Bucci v. Popovich, 83 N. J. Eq. 121, 115 A. 95, 98; Day v. Burgess, 130 Tenn. 599, 202 S. W. 311, L.R.A. 1915E, 602.

CURTEYN. The name of King Edward the Confessor's sword. It is said that the point of it was broken, as an emblem of mercy. (Mat. Par. in Hen. III.) Wharton.

CURTILAGE. The inclosed space of ground and buildings immediately surrounding a dwelling-house.

In its most comprehensive and proper legal signification, it includes all that space of ground and buildings thereon which is usually inclosed within the general fence immediately surrounding a principal messuage and outbuildings, and yard closely adjoining to a dwelling-house, but it may be large enough for cattle to be levant and couchant therein. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 175.

The curtilage is the court-yard in the front or rear of a house, or at its side, or any piece of ground lying near, inclosed and used with, the house, and necessary for the convenient occupation of the house. People v. Gedney, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 154.

In Michigan the meaning of curtilage has been extended to include more than an inclosure near the house. People v. Taylor, 2 Mich. 250.

CURTIUM. A curtilage; the area or space within the inclosure of a dwelling-house. Spelman.

CURTIS. A garden; a space about a house; a house, or manor; a court, or palace; a court of justice; a nobleman's residence. Spelman.

CUSTODIUM LEASE. In English law. A grant from the crown under the exchequer seal, by which the custody of lands, etc., select in the king's hands, is demised or committed to some person as custodes or lessee therefor. Wharton.

CUSTODY. The care and keeping of anything; as when an article is said to be "in the custody of the court." People v. Burr, 41 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 296; Emmerson v.
CUSTODY OF THE LAW

State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 86, 25 S. W. 290; Roe v. Irwin, 52 Ga. 39. Also the detainer of a man's person by virtue of lawful process or authority; actual imprisonment. In a sentence that the defendant "be in custody until," etc., this term imports actual imprisonment. The duty of the sheriff under such a sentence is not performed by allowing the defendant to go at large under his general watch and control, but so doing renders him liable for an escape. Smith v. Com., 59 Pa. 320; Wilkes v. Slaughter, 10 N. C. 216; Turner v. Wilson, 49 Ind. 581; Ex parte Powers (D. C.) 129 F. 985. Detention; charge; control; possession. The term is very elastic and may mean actual imprisonment or physical detention or mere power, legal or physical, of imprisoning or of taking manual possession. Jones v. State, 26 Ga. App. 635, 107 S. E. 106; J. O. Neesen Lumber Co. v. Ray H. Bennett Lumber Co., 223 Mich. 349, 193 N. W. 758, 790; State v. Evans (Mo. Sup.) 270 S. W. 684, 687; Willoughby v. State, 87 Tex. 39; 14 S. W. 495, 499; U. S. v. Tod (D. C.) 291 F. 653, 656; Carpenter v. Lord, 88 Or. 128, 171 P. 577, 579, L. R. A. 1918D, 674; Whorton v. State, 69 Tex. Cr. 1, 152 S. W. 1082, 1085; Little v. State, 100 Tex. Cr. R. 167, 272 S. W. 456, 457; Randazzo v. U. S. (C. A.) 300 F. 794, 797; Barney v. Barney, 192 Mich. 45, 158 N. W. 101; State v. Freauff, 117 Or. 214, 243 P. 87, 88; Ex parte Marchi (D. C.) 207 F. 800, 812.

CUSTODY OF THE LAW. Property is in the custody of the law when it has been lawfully taken by authority of legal process, and remains in the possession of a public officer (as, a sheriff) or an officer of a court (as, a receiver) empowered by law to hold it. Gilman v. Williams, 7 Wis. 334, 76 Am. Dec. 219; Weaver v. Duncan (Tenn. Ch. App.) 56 S. W. 41; Carrigie Co. v. Solanes (C. C.) 106 F. 552; Stockwell v. Robinson, 9 Houst. (Del.) 318, 32 A. 529; In re Receivership, 109 La. 875, 33 So. 903.

A law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. Teraens de la Ley; Cowell; Bract. fol. 2. If it be universal, it is common law. If particular to this or that place, it is then properly custom. 3 Stait. 112.

Customs result from a long series of actions constantly repeated, which have, by such repetition, and by uninterrupted acquiescence, acquired the force of a tacit and common consent. Civil Code La. art. 3.

It differs from prescription, which is personal and is annexed to the person of the owner of a particular estate; while the other is local, and relates to a particular district. An instance of the latter occurs where the question is upon the manner of conducting a particular branch of trade at a certain place; of the former, where a certain person and his ancestors, or those whose estates he has, have been entitled to a certain advantage or privilege, as to have common of pasture in a certain close, or the like. The distinction has been thus expressed: "While prescription is the making of a right, custom is the making of a law." Lawson, Usages & Cust. 16, note 2.

Classification

Customs are general, local or particular. General customs are such as prevail throughout a country and become the law of that country, and their existence is to be determined by the court. Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. 90; 30 Am. Dec. 611. Or as applied to usages of trade and business, a general custom is one that is followed in all cases by all persons in the same business in the same territory, and which has been so long established that persons sought to be charged thereby, and all others living in the vicinity, may be presumed to have known of it and to have acted upon it as they had occasion. Sturgess v. Buckley, 32 Conn. 267; Railroad Co. v. Harrison, 192 Ill. 9, 61 N. E. 622; Bonham v. Railroad Co., 13 S. C. 267. Local customs are such as prevail only in some particular district or locality, or in some city, county, or town. Bodfish v. Fox, 23 Me. 90, 30 Am. Dec. 611; Clough v. Wing, 2 Ariz. 371, 17 P. 457. Particular customs are nearly the same, being such as affect only the inhabitants of some particular district. 1 Bl. Comm. 74.

In General

-Customs of London. Certain particular customs, peculiar to that city, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans and a variety of other matters; contrary to the general law of the land, but confirmed by act of parliament. 1 Bl. Comm. 75.

—Custom of merchants. A system of customs or rules relative to bills of exchange, partnership, and other mercantile matters, and which, under the name of the "lex mercatoria," or "law merchant," has been ingrained into and made a part of, the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 75; 1 Steph. Comm. 54; 2 Burrows, 1226, 1228.

—Custom of York. A custom of intestacy in the province of York similar to that of London. Abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94.

—Customs and services annexed to the tenure of lands are those which the tenants thereof owe unto their lords, and which, if withheld, the lord might anciently have resorted to a writ of customs and services to compel them. Cowell. But at the present day he would merely proceed to eject the tenant as upon a forfeiture, or claim damages for the subtraction. Brown.

—Special custom. A particular or local custom; one which, in respect to the sphere of its observance, does not extend throughout the entire state or country, but is confined to some particular district or locality. 1 Bl. Comm. 67; Bodish v. Fox, 23 Me. 95, 39 Am. Dec. 611.

CUSTOM DUTIES. Taxes on the importation and exportation of commodities; the tariff or tax assessed upon merchandise, imported from, or exported to a foreign country. United States v. Siscoho (D. C.) 262 F. 1001, 1005.

CUSTOM-HOUSE. In administrative law. The house or office where commodities are entered for importation or exportation; where the duties, bounties, or drawbacks are payable or receivable upon such importation or exportation are paid or received; and where ships are cleared out, etc.

CUSTOM-HOUSE BROKER. One whose occupation it is, as an agent, to arrange entries and other custom-house papers, or transact business, at any port of entry, relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise. 14 St. at Large, 117 (see 20 USCA § 216 note). A person authorized by the commissioners of customs to act for parties, at their option, in the entry or clearance of ships and the transaction of general business. Wharton.

Custom is the best interpreter of the law. 4 Inst. 75; 2 Eden, 74; McKeen v. Delancy, 5 Cranch, 32, 3 L. Ed. 25; McFerran v. Powers, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 103.

CUSTOMARY COURT—BARON. See Court-Baron.

CUSTOMARY ESTATES. Estates which owe their origin and existence to the custom of the manor in which they are held. 2 Bl. Comm. 149.

CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD. In English law. A variety of copyhold estate, the evidences of the title to which are to be found upon the court rolls; the entries declaring the holding to be according to the custom of the manor, but it is not said to be at the will of the lord. The incidents are similar to those of common or pure copyhold. 1 Steph. Comm. 212, 213, and note.

CUSTOMARY INTERPRETATION. See Interpretation.

CUSTOMARY SERVICES. Such as are due by ancient custom or prescription only.

CUSTOMARY TENANTS. Tenants holding by custom of the manor.

Custome serra prise striote. Custom shall be taken [is to be construed] strictly. Jenk. Cent. 83.

CUSTOMS. This term is usually applied to those taxes which are payable upon goods and merchandise imported or exported. Story, Const. § 949; Pollock v. Trust Co., 158 U. S. 691, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108; Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. 632, 13 L. Ed. 252. The duties, toll, tribute, or tariff payable upon merchandise exported or imported, these are called "customs" from having been paid from time immemorial. Expressed in law Latin by custuma, as distinguished from consuetudines, which are usages merely. 1 Bl. Comm. 314.

CUSTOMS CONSOLIDATION ACT. The statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, which has been frequently amended. See 2 Steph. Comm. 563.

CUSTOMS COURT. By virtue of Act May 28, 1926, c. 411, § 1, 44 Stat. 669 (19 USCA § 465a), the "United States Customs Court" became the title of what had theretofore been known as the “Board of General Appraisers.” Ex parte Bakelite Corporation (1929) 49 S. Ct. 411, 279 U. S. 438, 73 L. Ed. 789. Its decisions are appealable to the “Court of Customs and Patent Appeals” (q. v.) in all cases as to the construction of the law and facts respecting the classification of merchandise and the rate of duty imposed thereon, and the fees and charges connected therewith, and all appealable questions as to the court’s jurisdiction, and as to the laws and regulations governing the collection of the customs revenues. Judicial Code, § 195, as amended (28 USCA § 308).

CUSTOS. Lat. A custodian, guard, keeper, or warden; a magistrate.

CUSTOS BREVIIUM. The keeper of the writes. A principal clerk belonging to the courts of queen’s bench and common pleas, whose office it was to keep the writes returnable into those courts. The office was abolished by 1 Wm. IV. c. 5.

CUSTOS FERARUM. A gamekeeper. Townsh. Pl. 265.

CUSTOS HORREI REGII. Protector of the royal granary. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

CUSTOS MARIS. In old English law. Warden of the sea. The title of a high naval officer among the Saxons and after the Conquest, corresponding with admiral.

CUSTOS MORUM. The guardian of morals. The court of the queen’s bench has been so styled. 4 Steph. Comm. 377.

CUSTOS PLACITORUM CORONÆ. In old English law. Keeper of the pleas of the crown. Bract. fol. 14b. Cowell supposes this office to have been the same with the custos rotulorum. But it seems rather to have been another name for “coroner.” Crabbe, Eng. Law. 150; Bract. fol. 136b.

CUSTOS ROTULORUM. Keeper of the rolls. An officer in England who has the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He is always a justice of the quorum in the county where appointed and is the principal civil officer in the county. 1 Bl. Comm. 340; 4 Bl. Comm. 272.

CUSTOS SPIRITUALIUM. In English ecclesiastical law. Keeper of the spiritualities. He who exercises the spiritual jurisdiction of a diocese during the vacancy of the see. Cowell.

Custos statum hæreditis in custodia existentis mortuem, non deteriorem, facere potest. 7 Coke, 7. A guardian can make the estate of an existing heir under his guardianship better, not worse.

CUSTOS TEMPORALIUM. In English ecclesiastical law. The person to whom a vacant see or abbey was given by the king, as supreme lord. His office was, as steward of the goods and profits, to give an account to the eschewor, who did the like to the exchequer.

CUSTOS TERRÆ. In old English law. Guardian, warden, or keeper of the land.

CUSTUMA ANTIQUA SIVE MAGNA. (Lat. Ancient or great duties.) The duties on wool, sheep-skin, or wool-pelts and leather exported were so called, and were payable by every merchant, stranger as well as native, with the exception that merchant strangers paid one-half as much again as natives. 1 Bl. Comm. 314.

CUSTUMA PARVA ET NOVA. (Small and new customs.) Imposts of 3d. in the pound, due formerly in England from merchant strangers only, for all commodities, as well imported as exported. This was usually called the “allsens duty,” and was first granted in 31 Edw. I. 1 Bl. Comm. 314; 4 Inst. 29.

In Mining

A surface opening in the ground intersecting a vein. McLaughlin v. Bardson, 50 Mont. 177, 145 P. 954, 955.

CUT-OVER LAND. Land which has been logged; from which desired timber has been removed. Carlisle-Pennell Lumber Co. v. Joe Creek Shingle Co., 131 Wash. 501, 230 P. 425; Tennessee Mining & Mfg. Co. v. New River Lumber Co. (C. C. A.) 5 F.(2d) 559, 560.

CUT SHELL. One in which the part containing the shot is nearly severed from the part containing powder, so as to be projected in a unit, and inflict a more dangerous wound than if the shot were scattered. White v. State, 195 Ala. 651, 71 So. 452, 454.

CUTCHERRY. In Hindu law. Corrupted from Kachari. A court; a hall; an office; the place where any public business is transacted.

CUTHRED. A knowing or skillful counsellor.

CUTLER. Either a man who makes edged tools or one who grinds them. American Stainless Steel Co. v. Ludium Steel Co. (C. C. A.) 290 F. 103, 106.

CUTPURSE. One who steals by the method of cutting purses; a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. Wharton.

CUTTER OF THE TALLIES. In old English law. An officer in the exchequer, to whom it belonged to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, etc.

CUTWAL, KATWAL. The chief officer of police or superintendent of markets in a large town or city in India.

CWT. A hundred-weight; one hundred and twelve pounds. Helm v. Bryant, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 64.

CY. In law French. Here. (Cy-apres, hereafter; cy-devant, heretofore.) Also as, so.

CYCLE. A measure of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time. Enc. Lond.

CYCLONE. "A violent storm, often of vast extent, characterized by high winds rotating about a calm center of low atmospheric pressure. Popularly, any violent and destructive windstorm." Tupper v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co., 156 Minn. 63, 194 N. W. 69, 100; Cedergren v. Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Co. (C. C. A.) 292 F. 5, 8.

CYNE-BOT, or CYNE-GILD. The portion belonging to the nation of the mulct for slaying the king, the other portion or were being due to his family. Blount.

CYNEBOTE. A mulct anciently paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelman.

CYPHONISM. That kind of punishment used by the ancients, and still used by the Chinese, called by Staunton the "wooden collar," by which the neck of the malefactor is bent or weighed down. Enc. Lond.

CY-PRES. As near as [possible]. The rule of cy-pres is a rule for the construction of instruments in equity, by which the intention of the party is carried out as near as may be, when it would be impossible or illegal to give it literal effect. Thus, where a testator attempts to create a perpetuity, the court will endeavor, instead of making the devise entirely void, to explain the will in such a way as to carry out the testator's general intention as far as the rule against perpetuities will allow. So in the case of bequests to charitable uses; and particularly where the language used is so vague or uncertain that the testator's design must be sought by construction. See 6 Cruise, Dig. 165; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 532; Taylor v. Keep, 2 Ill. App. 383; Beck v. Bonsor, 23 N. Y. 308, 80 Am. Dec. 269; Doyle v. Whalen, 87 Me. 414, 32 A. 1022, 31 L. R. A. 118; Philadelphia v. Girard, 43 Pa. 28, 84 Am. Dec. 470; Mott v. Morris, 249 Mo. 137, 155 S. W. 434, 438; Peter E. Leddy Post No. 19 of American Legion v. Roberts, 90 N. J. Eq. 217, 129 A. 148, 150; People v. Braucher, 258 Ill. 604, 101 N. E. 944, 946, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015; Trustees of Sailors' Snug Harbor v. Carmody, 158 App. Div. 738, 144 N. Y. S. 24, 30; Hodge v. Wellman, 161 Iowa, 577, 179 N. W. 534, 539; Timcher v. Arnold (C. C. A.) 147 F. 665.

BL. LAW DIET. (3d Ed.)—52

CYRCE. In Saxon law. A church.

—Cyrlosceat. (From cyrie, church, and sceat, a tribute.) In Saxon law. A tribute or payment due to the church. Cowell.

CYROGRAPHARIUS. In old English law. A cyrographer; an officer of the bancus, or court of common bench. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 36.

CYROGRAPHUM. A chirograph. (which see.)

CZAR. (Also written zar, tsar, tszar, etc.) The title of the former emperors of Russia, derived from the old Slavonic cesar, king or emperor, which, although long held to be derived from the Roman title Caesar, is almost certainly of Tartar origin. 8 Encyc. Americana, 378. The Slavonic word ultimately represents the Latin Caesar, but came, according to Mäkloch, through the medium of a Germanic language in which the word had the general sense "emperor." 2 New English Diet. (Oxford, 1808), page 1368.

In the beginning of the 10th century the Bulgarian prince Symeon assumed this title, which remained attached to the Bulgarian crown. In 1348 it was adopted by Stephen Dushan, king of Serbia. Among the Russians the Byzantine emperors were so called, as were also the khans of the Mongols that ruled in Russia. Ivan III, grand prince of Moscow, held the title, and Ivan IV, the Terrible, in 1547, caused himself to be crowned as czar. In 1721 the Senate and clergy conferred on Peter I, in the name of the nation, the title Emperor of Russia, for which in Russia the Latin word imperator is used. 8 Encyc. Americana, 378. Peter the Great introduced the title imperator, "emperor," and the official style then became "Emperor of all the Russians, Tsar of Poland, and Grand Duke of Finland"; but the Russian popular appellation continued to be tsar (the preferred modern spelling). 2 New English Diet. 1396. The last tsar was Nicholas II, who abdicated on March 15, 1917, and was later executed.

CZAREVITCH. (Also spelled czarewich, tsarevitch, and, after the Polish, czarouits, czarowits, etc.) 2 New English Diet. 1396. A son of the Russian czar and czarina. Originally a title. Webster, Diet. The word was used as a title during the time of Peter I and his son, Alexis, after whose death imperial princes were called grand dukes. 6 New Internatl. Encyc. 420.

CZAREVNA, TSAREVNA. A daughter of the Russian czar. Originally a title. Webster, Diet. As a title, however, the word has been superseded, since the time of Paul I (1754–1801), by that of grand duchess. 6 New Internatl. Encyc. 420; 2 New English Diet. 1396. See Czarevitch; Cesarevna.

CZARINA. The title of former empresses of Russia.

CZARITZA, TSARITSA. The Russian title for which czarina is in ordinary English use. 2 New English Diet. 1398.
D. The fourth letter of the English alphabet. It is used as an abbreviation for a number of words, the more important and usual of which are as follows:
1. Digestum, or Digesta, that is, the Digest or Pandects in the Justinian collections of the civil law. Citations to this work are sometimes indicated by this abbreviation, but more commonly by "Dig."
2. Dictum. A remark or observation, as in the phrase "obiter dictum." (q. v.)
3. Demissione. "On the demise." An action of ejectment is entitled "Doe d. Stiles v. Roe;" that is, "Doe, on the demise of Stiles, against Roe."
6. "Dialogue." Used only in citations to the work called "Doctor and Student."
D. In the Roman system of notation, this letter stands for five hundred; and, when a horizontal dash or stroke is placed above it, it denotes five thousand.
D. B. E. An abbreviation for de bene esse, (q. v.).
D. B. N. An abbreviation for de bonis non; descriptive of a species of administration.
D. C. An abbreviation standing either for "District Court;" or "District of Columbia."
D. E. R. C. An abbreviation used for De ea re ita consuerit, (concerning that matter have so decreed,) in recording the decrees of the Roman senate. Tull. Civil Law, 564, 566.
D. J. An abbreviation for "District Judge."
D. P. An abbreviation for Domus Procerum, the house of lords.
D. S. B. An abbreviation for debito sine breviti, or debit sans breve.
Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tune tua non sunt. 3 Bulst. 18. Give the things which are yours whilst they are yours; after death they are not yours.
DABIS? DABO. Lat. (Will you give? I will give.) In the Roman law. One of the forms of making a verbal stipulation. Inst. 8, 15, 1; Bract. fol. 15b.
DACION. In Spanish law. The real and effective delivery of an object in the execution of a contract.
DAGGE. A kind of gun. 1 How. State Tr. 1124, 1125.
DAGUS, or DAIS. The raised floor at the upper end of a hall.
DAILY. Every day; every day in the week; every day in the week except one. A newspaper which is published six days in each week is a "daily" newspaper. Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30; Tribune Pub. Co. v. Duluth, 45 Minn. 27, 47 N. W. 309; Kingman v. Waugh, 139 Mo. 360, 40 S. W. 584; First Nat. Bank of Parsons v. Kennedy, 98 Kan. 51, 157 P. 417; State ex rel. Item Co. v. Commissioner of Public Finances of City of New Orleans, 161 La. 915, 109 So. 675, 676; Alley v. City of Muskogee, 53 Okl. 236, 156 P. 315, 318; City of Bellingham v. Bellingham Pub. Co., 216 Wash. 198 P. 309; State ex rel. Item Co. v. Commissioner of Public Finances of City of New Orleans, 161 La. 915, 109 So. 675, 676; City of Richmond v. Miller, 58 Ind. App. 20, 107 N. E. 550, 552.
DAILY BALANCES, AVERAGE DAILY BALANCE. In school depository law. "Daily balances" means the various balances for the different days in the period for which interest is to be paid, and the "average daily balance" for the interest period means the sum of these daily balances divided by the number of days in the interest period. Jones v. Marrs, 114 Tex. 282, 283 S. W. 670, 674.
DAKER, or DIKER. Ten hides. Blount.
DALE and SALE. Fictitious names of places, used in the English books, as examples. "The manor of Dale and the manor of Sale, lying both in Yale."
DALUS, DAILUS, DAILIA. A certain measure of land; such narrow slips of pasture as are left between the plowed furrows in arable land. Cowell.
DAM. A construction of wood, stone, reinforced concrete or other materials, made across a stream for the purpose of penning back the waters.
This word is used in two different senses. It properly means the work or structure, raised to obstruct the flow of the water in a river; but, by a well-settled usage, it is often applied to designate the pond of water created by this obstruction. Burnham v. Kempston, 44 N. H. 89; Colwell v. Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 248; Mining Co. v. Hancock, 101 Cal. 42, 31 P. 112.
DAMAGE. Loss, injury, or deterioration, caused by the negligence, design, or accident.
of one person to another, in respect of the latter’s person or property. The word is to be distinguished from its plural,—"damage,"—which means a compensation in money for a loss or damage.

An injury produces a right in them who have suffered any damage by it to demand reparation of such damage from the authors of the injury. By damage, we understand every loss or diminution of what is a man’s own, occasioned by the fault of another. 1 Ruth. Inst. 390.

DAMAGE-CLEER. A fee assessed of the tenth part in the common pleas, and the twentieth part in the queen’s bench and exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, etc., where in the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary or the officer of the court wherein he recovered, before he could have execution for the damages. This was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it was taken away by statute, since which, if any officer in these courts took any money in the name of damage-cleer, or anything in lieu thereof, he forfeited treble the value. Wharton.

DAMAGE FEASANT or FAISANT. Doing damage. A term applied to a person’s cattle or beasts found upon another’s land, doing damage by treading down the grass, grain, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 7, 211; Tomlin. This phrase seems to have been introduced in the reign of Edward III., in place of the older expression "en son damage," (in damno suo) Crabb, Eng. Law, 292.

DAMAGE TO PERSON. Bodily or physical injury directly resulting from wrongful act, whether lying in trespass or trespass on the case, and does not include torts directly affecting the person but affecting only the feelings and reputation. Young v. Aylesworth, 35 R. I. 239, 86 A. 555, 556; Texas Employers’ Ins. Ass'n v. Jimenez (Tex. Civ. App.) 267 S. W. 752, 758; Howard v. Lunaburg, 192 Wis. 507, 213 N. W. 301, 303; Putnam v. Savage, 244 Mass. 85, 138 N. E. 809, 809.

Rev. Code 1915, § 2377 (Comp. Laws, 1926, § 2379), entitling the plaintiff to bring action for conversion of personal property or for the recovery of "damages to persons or property" in the county where the damages were inflicted or the cause of action arose, is not applicable to all injuries suffered by a person, whether ex contractu or ex delicto, but can be invoked by the plaintiff only where the person has suffered a physical injury, and hence action for alienation of wife’s affections was not included. Kayser v. Nelson, 44 S. D. 533, 184 N. W. 361.

DAMAGE TO TWO PERSONS. In bond for payment of damages that limited amount payable for any one accident. Where widow sued to recover damages to deceased and his estate and also her pecuniary loss, there was "damage to two persons" within the bond. Ehlers v. Gold, 169 Wis. 494, 173 N. W. 325, 327.

DAMAGED GOODS. Goods, subject to duties, which have received some injury either in the voyage home or while bonded in warehouse.

A sum of money assessed by a jury, on finding for the plaintiff or successful party in an action, as a compensation for the injury done him by the opposite party. 2 Bl. Comm. 453; Co. Litt. 257a; 2 Tidd, Pr. 869, 870.

Every person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another may recover from the person in fault a compensation therefor in money, which is called "damages." Civ. Code Cal. § 2321; Civ. Code Dak. § 1940 (Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 7139; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 1959).

In the ancient usage, the word "damages" was employed in two significations. According to Coke, its proper and general sense included the costs of suit, while its strict or relative sense was exclusive of costs. 10 Coke, 116, 117; Co. Litt. 257a; 2 East, 293. The latter meaning has alone survived.

Classification

Damages are either general or special. General damages are such as the law itself implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of, for the reason that they are its immediate, direct, and proximate result, or such as necessarily result from the injury, or such as did in fact result from the wrong, directly and proximately, and without reference to the special character, condition, or circumstances of the plaintiff. Mood v. Telegraph Co., 40 S. C. 324, 19 S. E. 67; Irrigation Co. v. Canal Co., 23 Utah, 199, 63 P.
Direct and Consequential

Liquidated and Unliquidated

The former term is applicable when the amount of the damages has been ascertained by the judgment in the action, or when a specific sum of money has been expressly stipulated by the parties to a bond or other contract as the amount of damages to be recovered by either party for a breach of the agreement by the other. Watts v. Sheppard, 2 Ala. 445; Smith v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 470; Keeble v. Keeble, 85 Ala. 522, 5 So. 149; Eakin v. Scott, 70 Tex. 442, 7 S. W. 777. Unliquidated damages are such as are not yet reduced to a certainty in respect of amount, nothing more being established than the plaintiff's right to recover; or such as cannot be fixed by a mere mathematical calculation from ascertained data in the case. Cox v. McLain, 76 Cal. 60, 18 P. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Cook Pottery Co. v. Parker, 86 W. Va. 580, 104 S. E. 51, 53; United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Brown, 119 Va. 813, 59 S. E. 505, 855, L. R. A. 1917A, 1190; Simons v. Douglas Ex'r, 189 Ky. 644, 225 S. W. 721, 723. The purpose of a penalty is to secure performance, while the purpose of stipulating damages is to fix the amount to be paid in lieu of performance. Christianson v. Hauqland, 163 Minn. 235, 209 N. W. 493, 494; Davidov v. Wadsworth Mfg. Co., 211 Mich. 90, 118 W. N. 776, 777, 12 A. L. R. 605; Kuter v. State Bank of Holton, 96 Kan. 485, 152 P. 602, 604. The essence of a penalty is a stipulation as to penal damages while the essence of liquidated damages is a genuine covenanted pre-estimate of such damages. Shields v. Early, 132 Miss. 282, 95 So. 393, 840. For other cases pertaining to the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages, see Fiscal Court of Franklin County v. Kentucky Public Service Co., 181 Ky. 245, 204 S. W. 77, 79; City Nat. Bank v. Kelly, 51 Okl. 445, 151 P. 1172, 1175; Elsey v. City of Winterset, 172 Iowa, 454, 154 N. W. 901, 904; In re Liberty Doll Co. (D. C.) 242 F. 665,
Nominal and Substantial

Nominal damages are a trifling sum awarded to a plaintiff in an action, where there is no substantial loss or injury to be compensated, but still the law recognizes a technical invasion of his rights or a breach of the defendant's duty, or in cases where, although there has been a real injury, the plaintiff's evidence entirely fails to show its amount. Blake v. Atlas Supply Co., 51 Okl. 426, 152 P. 51, 82; Hutton & Bourbonnais v. Cook, 173 N. C. 496, 92 S. E. 355, 356; Seeling v. Missouri K. & T. Ry. Co., 287 Mo. 343, 230 S. W. 94, 102; Calumet & Arizona Mining Co. v. Gardner, 21 Ariz. 206, 157 P. 563, 565; City of Rainier v. Masters, 79 Or. 534, 155 P. 1197, 1198, L. R. A. 1916E, 1175; Maher v. Wilson, 139 Cal. 514, 73 P. 418; Stanton v. Railroad Co., 59 Conn. 272, 22 A. 300, 21 Am. St. Rep. 110; Springer v. Fuel Co., 196 Pa. 156, 46 A. 370; Telegraph Co. v. Lawson, 66 Kan. 660, 72 P. 283; Railroad Co. v. Watson, 37 Kan. 773, 15 P. 577. Substantial (actual or compensatory) damages are considerable in amount, and intended as a real compensation for a real injury.

Compensatory and Exemplary

Compensatory damages are such as will compensate the injured party for the injury sustained, and nothing more; such as will simply make good or replace the loss caused by the wrong or injury. McKnight v. Denny, 138 Pa. 233, 47 A. 970; Reid v. Terwilliger, 110 N. Y. 530, 22 N. E. 1091; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. U. S., 145 U. S. 312, 15 S. Ct. 622, 37 L. Ed. 463; Wade v. Power Co., 51 S. C. 296, 29 S. E. 233, 64 Am. St. Rep. 676; Gatzow v. Ewing, 106 Wis. 1, 81 N. W. 1003, 49 L. R. A. 475, 80 Am. St. Rep. 1; Hodges v. Hall, 172 N. C. 29, 59 S. E. 892; Waters v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 194 N. C. 158, 138 S. E. 608, 612; Silver King of Arizona Mining Co. v. Kendall, 23 Ariz. 39, 201 P. 102, 103; Yates v. Crozer Coal & Coke Co., 76 W. Va. 50, 84 S. E. 626, 628. Exemplary damages are damages on an increased scale, awarded to the plaintiff over and above what will merely compensate him for his property loss, where the wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud, or wanton and wicked conduct on the part of the defendant, and are intended to solace the plaintiff for mental anguish, laceration of his feelings, shame, degradation, or other aggravations of the original wrong, or else to punish the defendant for his evil behavior or to make an example of him, for which reason they are also called "punitive" or "punitory" damages or "vindicative" damages, and (vulgarily) "smart-money." Reid v. Terwilliger, 110 N. Y. 530, 22 N. E. 1091; Springer v. Fuel Co., 196 Pa. St. 156, 46 A. 370; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 68, 17 S. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 622; Gillingham v. Railroad Co., 35 W. Va. 588, 14 S. E. 243, 14 L. R. A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827; Boyd v. Habertumpf, 129 Mich. 337, 88 N. W. 386; Oliver v. Railroad Co., 65 S. C. 1, 43 S. E. 307; Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Colo. 541, 5 P. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 389; Cotton v. Fisheries Products Co., 181 N. C. 151, 108 S. E. 487, 490; Yates v. Crozer Coal & Coke Co., 76 W. Va. 50, 84 S. E. 626, 628; Prizell Grain & Supply Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (Mo. Sup.) 201 S. W. 78, 79; Gila Water Co. v. Gila Land & Cattle Co., 30 Ariz. 569, 249 P. 731, 733. In an Iowa case, it is said that the idea of punishment does not enter into the definition of "exemplary damages"; the term being employed to mean an increased award in view of supposed aggravation of the injury to the feelings of plaintiff by the wanton or reckless act of defendant. Brause v. Brause, 190 Iowa, 329, 177 N. W. 65, 70.

Proximate and Remote

Proximate damages are the immediate and direct damages and natural results of the act complained of, and such as are usual and might have been expected. Remote damages are those attributable immediately to an intervening cause, though it forms a link in an unbroken chain of causation, so that the remote damage would not have occurred if its elements had not been set in motion by the original act or event. Henry v. Railroad Co., 50 Cal. 183; Kuhn v. Jewett, 52 N. J. Eq. 649; Pietsch v. Railroad Co., 5 Dak. 444, 41 N. W. 669; Chambers v. Everdings & Farrell, 71 Or. 521, 143 P. 616, 619; General Motors Truck Co. v. Shepard Co., 47 R. I. 153, 130 A. 593, 594; Albion Lumber Co. v. Lowell, 20 Cal. App. 782, 130 P. 858, 863; Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Huncovsky, 52 N. D. 112, 202 N. W. 280, 283. The terms "remote damages" and "consequential damages" are not synonymous nor to be used interchangeably; all remote damage is consequential, but it is by no means true that all consequential damage is remote. Eaton v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 511, 12 Am. Rep. 147; Chambers v. Everdings & Farrell, 71 Or. 521, 143 P. 616, 620.

Other Compound and Descriptive Terms

Actual damages are real, substantial and just damages, or the amount awarded to a plaintiff in compensation for his actual and real loss or injury, as opposed on the one hand to "nominal" damages, and on the other to "exemplary" or "punitive" damages. Ross v. Leggett, 61 Mich. 446, 28 N. W. 903, 1 Am. St. Rep. 608; Lord v. Wood, 120 Iowa, 308, 94
-Affirmative damages. In admiralty law, affirmative damages are damages which a respondent in a libel for injuries to a vessel may recover, which may be in excess of any amount which the libellant would be entitled to claim. Ebert v. The Reuben Doud (D. C.) 3 F. 520.

-Civil damages. Those awarded against a liquor-seller to the relative, guardian, or employer of the person to whom the sales were made, on a showing that the plaintiff has been thereby injured in person, property, or means of support. Headington v. Smith, 113 Iowa, 107, 84 N. W. 382.

-Contingent damages. Where a demurrer has been filed to one or more counts in a declaration, and its consideration is postponed, and meanwhile other counts in the same declaration, not demurred to, are taken as issues, and tried, and damages awarded upon them, such damages are called "contingent damages."

-Continuing damages are such as accrue from the same injury, or from the repetition of similar acts, between two specified periods of time.

-Damages ultra. Additional damages claimed by a plaintiff not satisfied with those paid into court by the defendant.

-Double damages. Twice the amount of actual damages as found by the verdict of a jury allowed by statute in some cases of injuries by negligence, fraud, or trespass. Cross v. United States, 6 Fed. Cas. 582; Daniel v. Vaccaro, 41 Ark. 329.

-Excessive damages. Damages awarded by a jury which are grossly in excess of the amount warranted by law, on the facts and circumstances of the case; unreasonable or outrageous damages. A verdict giving excessive damages is ground for a new trial. Taylor v. Giger, Hardin (Ky.) 587; Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Gray, 114 Ind. 340, 16 N. E. 787.

-Fee damages. Damages sustained by and awarded to an abutting owner of real property occasioned by the construction and operation of an elevated railroad in a city street, are so called, because compensation is made to the owner for the injury to, or deprivation of, his easements of light, air, and access, and these are parts of the fee. Dode v. Rail-

-Inadequate damages. Damages are called "inadequate," within the rule that an injunction will not be granted where adequate damages at law could be recovered for the injury sought to be prevented, when such a recovery at law would not compensate the parties and place them in the position in which they formerly stood. Insurance Co. v. Bonner, 7 Colo. App. 87, 42 P. 681.

-Imaginary damages. This term is sometimes used as equivalent to "exemplary," "vindicative," or "punitive" damages. Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Colo. 541, 5 P. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 366.

-Intervening damages. Such damages to an appellee as result from the delay caused by the appeal. McGregor v. Balch, 47 Wis. 568; Peseny v. Buckminster, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 267; Roberts v. Warner, 17 Vt. 46, 42 Am. Dec. 473.

-Necessary damages. A term said to be of much wider scope in the law of damages than "pecuniary." It embraces all those consequences of an injury usually denominated "general" damages, as distinguished from special damages; whereas the phrase "pecuniary damages" covers a smaller class of damages within the larger class of "general" damages. Browning v. Wabash Western R. Co. (Mo.) 24 S. W. 749.

-Pecuniary damages. Such as can be estimated in and compensated by money; not merely the loss of money or salable property or rights, but all such loss, deprivation, or injury as can be made the subject of calculation and of recompense in money. Walker v. McNeill, 17 Wash. 582, 50 P. 518; Searle v. Railroad Co., 32 W. Va. 370, 9 S. E. 248; McIntyre v. Railroad Co., 37 N. Y. 207; Davidson Benedict Co. v. Severson, 100 Tenn. 672, 72 S. W. 967.
Permanent damages. Damages awarded under theory that cause of injury is fixed and that the property will always remain subject to it. Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co., 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192, 194.

Presumptive damages. A term occasionally used as the equivalent of "exemplary" or "punitive" damages. Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Colo. 541, 5 P. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 396.

Prospective damages. Damages which are expected to follow from the act or state of facts made the basis of a plaintiff's suit; damages which have not yet accrued, at the time of the trial, but which, in the nature of things, must necessarily, or most probably, result from the acts or facts complained of.

Speculative damages. Prospective or anticipated damages from the same acts or facts constituting the present cause of action, but which depend upon future developments which are contingent, conjectural, or improbable.

Temporary damages. Damages allowed for intermittent and occasional wrongs, such as injuries to real estate, where cause thereof is removable or abatable. Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co., 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192, 194.

DAMAIOUSE. In old English law. Causing damage or loss, as distinguished from torcenouse, wrongful. Britt. c. 61.

DAME. In English law. The legal designation of the wife of a knight or baronet.

DAMN. n. To invoke condemnation, curse, swear, condemn to eternal punishment, or consign to perdition. Orf v. State, 147 Miss. 160, 113 So. 202.

DAMNA. Damages, both inclusive and exclusive of costs.

DAMNATUS. In old English law. Condemned; prohibited by law; unlawful. Damnatus coitus, an unlawful sexual connection.

DAMI INJURIE ACTIO. An action given by the civil law for the damage done by one who intentionally injured the slave or beast of another. Calvin.

DAMNIFICATION. That which causes damage or loss.

DAMNFY. To cause damage or injurious loss to a person or put him in a position where he must sustain it. A surety is "damnfied" when a judgment has been obtained against him. McLean v. Bank, 16 Fed. Cas. 278.

DAMNOSA HÆREDITAS. In the civil law. A losing inheritance; an inheritance that was a charge, instead of a benefit. Dig. 50, 16, 119.

The term has also been metaphorically applied to that species of property of a bankrupt which, so far from being valuable, would be a charge to the creditors; for example, a term of years where the rent would exceed the revenue. 7 East, 342; 3 Camp. 340; 1 Esp. N. P. 234; Provident L. & Trust Co. v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 203 Pa. 52, 52 A. 34.

DAMNUM. Lat.

In the Civil Law

Damage; the loss or diminution of what is a man's own, either by fraud, carelessness, or accident.

In Pleading and Old English Law

Damage; loss.

In General

-Damnum fatale. Fatal damage; damage from fate; loss happening from a cause beyond human control, (quod ex fato contingit,) or an act of God, for which bailies are not liable; such as shipwreck, lightning, and the like. Dig. 4, 9, 3; 1 Story, Bailm. § 465. The civilians included in the phrase "damnum fatale" all those accidents which are summed up in the common-law expression, "act of God or public enemies;" though, perhaps, it embraced some which would not now be admitted as occurring from an irresistible force. Thickeston v. Howard, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 535.

-Damnum infectum. In Roman law. Damage not yet committed, but threatened or impending. A preventive interdict might be obtained to prevent such damage from happening; and it was treated as a quasi-delict, because of the imminence of the danger.

Damnum sine injuriÆ esse potest. Lofft, 112. There may be damage or injury inflicted without any act of injustice.
DAN. Anciently the better sort of men in England had this title; so the Spanish Don. The old term of honor for men, as we now say Master or Mister. Wharton.

DANCEHALL. A place maintained for promiscuous and public dancing, the rules for admission to which are not based upon personal selection or invitation. State v. Loomis, 75 Mont. 88, 243 P. 341, 347; People v. Dever, 237 Ill. App. 65, 69.

DANEGELT, DANEGELD. A tribute originally of 1s. and afterwards of 2s., which came to be imposed upon every hide of land through the realm, levied by the Anglo-Saxons, for maintaining (it is supposed) such a number of forces as were thought sufficient to clear the British seas of Danish pirates, who greatly annoyed their coasts, or to buy off the ravages of Danish invaders. It continued a tax until the time of Stephen, and was one of the rights of the crown. Wharton; Webster, Dict. The Danegeld was levied as a land-tax by the Norman kings; it disappears under that name after 1163, but in fact continued under the name of tailage. 3 New Eng. Dict. 26.

DANELAGE. A system of laws, introduced by the Danes on their invasion and conquest of England, which was principally maintained in some of the midland counties, and also on the eastern coast. 1 Bl. Comm. 65; 4 Bl. Comm. 411; 1 Steph. Comm. 42.

DANGER. Jeopardy; exposure to loss or injury; peril. U. S. v. Mays, 1 Idaho, 770.

—Dangers of navigation. The same as "dangers of the sea" or "perils of the sea." See Dangers of the sea, infra.

—Dangers of the river. This phrase, as used in bills of lading, means only the natural accidents incident to river navigation, and does not embrace such as may be avoided by the exercise of that skill, judgment, or foresight which are demanded from persons in a particular occupation. Hill v. Sturgeon, 35 Mo. 213, 86 Am. Dec. 149. It includes dangers arising from unknown reefs which have since formed in the channels, and are not discoverable by care and skill. Hill v. Sturgeon, 35 Mo. 213, 86 Am. Dec. 149; Garrison v. Insurance Co., 19 How. 312, 15 L. Ed. 636; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Transp. Co., 120 U. S. 105, 7 S. Ct. 550, 30 L. Ed. 621; Johnson v. Fyiar, 4 Yerg. 48, 26 Am. Dec. 215.

—Dangers of the road. This phrase, in a bill of lading, when it refers to inland transportation, means such dangers as are immediately caused by roads, as the overturning of carriages in rough and precipitous places. 7 Exch. 743.

DANGERIA. In old English law. A money payment made by forest-tenants, that they might have liberty to plow and sow in time of pannage, or mast feeding.

DANGEROUS PER SE. A thing that may inflict injury without the immediate application of human aid or instrumentality. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Anderson, 60 Fla. 441, 86 So. 629, 632, 16 A. L. R. 255.

DANGEROUS WEAPON. One dangerous to life; one by the use of which a fatal wound may probably or possibly be given. As the manner of use enters into the consideration as well as other circumstances, the question is often one of fact for the jury, but not infrequently one of law for the court. U. S. v. Reeves (C. C.) 38 F. 404; State v. Hammond, 14 S. D. 548, 56 N. W. 627; State v. Lynch, 88 Me. 195, 33 A. 978; State v. Scott, 39 La. Ann. 943, 3 So. 33; Parman v. Lemon, 119 Kan. 323, 244 P. 227, 229, 44 A. L. R. 1500; State v. Bloom, 91 Kan. 156, 136 P. 951, 952; State v. Abrams, 115 Kan. 520, 223 P. 301, 303; Wilcox v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 598, 196 P. 74, 75; People v. Shaffer, 81 Cal. App. 752, 254 P. 686, 687; People v. Freeman, 86 Cal. App. 374, 260 P. 826, 827; State v. Fletcher (Mo. Sup.) 190 S. W. 317, 321; Fabry v. State, 23 Okl. Cr. 215, 213 P. 910, 912; Coghlan v. Miller, 106 Or. 46, 211 P. 165, 164; State v. Benton, 167 La. 68, 102 So. 14, 15.

DANISM. The act of lending money on usury.
DATE CERTAINE. In French law. A deed is said to have a date certain (fixed date) when it has been subjected to the formalities. After this formalities have been complied with, the parties to the deed cannot by mutual consent change the date thereof. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 556.
DATIO. In the civil law. A giving, or act of giving. Datium in solutum; a giving in payment; a species of accord and satisfaction. Called, in modern law, "dation."

DATION. In the civil law. A gift; a giving of something. It is not exactly synonymous with "donation," for the latter implies generosity or liberality in making a gift, while dation may mean the giving of something to which the recipient is already entitled.

DATION EN PAIEMENT. In French law. A giving by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of something in payment of a debt, instead of a sum of money. It is somewhat like the accord and satisfaction of the common law.

16 Toullier, no. 45; Poth. Vente, no. 601.

DATIVE. A word derived from the Roman law, signifying "appointed by public authority." Thus, in Scotland, an executor is an executor appointed by a court of justice, corresponding to an English administrator. Mozley & Whitley. In old English law, in one's gift: that may be given and disposed of at will and pleasure.

DATUR DIGNIORI. It is given to the more worthy. 2 Vent. 268.

DAUGHTER-IN-LAW. The wife of one's son.

DAUPHIN. In French law. The title of the eldest sons of the kings of France. Disused since 1830.

DAY. 1. A period of time consisting of twenty-four hours and including the solar day and the night. Co. Litt. 138a; Fox v. Abel, 2 Comm. 541.

3. That portion of time during which the sun is above the horizon, and, in addition, that part of the morning and evening during which there is sufficient light for the features of a man to be reasonably discerned. 3 Inst. 69; Nicholls v. State, 68 Wis. 416, 32 N. W. 543, 60 Am. Rep. 870; Trull v. Wilson, 9 Mass. 154; State v. McKnight, 111 N. C. 690, 16 S. E. 319.

4. An artificial period of time, computed from one fixed point to another twenty-four hours later, without any reference to the prevalence of light or darkness. Fuller v. Schroeder, 29 Neb. 631, 31 N. W. 109.

5. The period of time, within the limits of a natural day, set apart either by law or by common usage for the transaction of particular business or the performance of labor; as in banking, in laws regulating the hours of labor, in contracts for so many "days work," and the like, the word "day" may signify six, eight, ten, or any number of hours. Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 430; Fay v. Brown, 96 Wis. 434, 71 N. W. 895; McCulsky v. Klos- terman, 20 Or. 105, 25 P. 386, 10 L. R. A. 785; P. Franz & Co. v. Larney (Sup.) 176 N. Y. S. 26, 27.

6. In practice and pleading. A particular time assigned or given for the appearance of parties in court, the return of writs, etc.

In General

-Astronomical day. The period of twenty-four hours beginning and ending at noon.

-Artificial day. The time between the rising and setting of the sun; that is, day or daytime as distinguished from night.

-Civil day. The solar day, measured by the diurnal revolution of the earth, and denoting the interval of time which elapses between the successive transits of the sun over the same circle, so that the "civil day" commences and ends at midnight. Pedersen v. Bugster, 14 F. 422.

-Calendar days. See Calendar.

-Clear days. See Clear.
—Common day. In old English practice. An ordinary day in court. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

—Day certain. A fixed or appointed day; a specified particular day; a day in term. Regina v. Couyers, 8 Q. B. 391.

—Days in bank. (L. Lat. dies in banco.) In practice. Certain stated days in term appointed for the appearance of parties, the return of process, etc., originally peculiar to the court of common pleas, or bench, (bank.) as it was ancienly called. 3 Bl. Comm. 277.

By the common law, the defendant is allowed three full days in which to make his appearance in court, exclusive of the day of appearance or return-day named in the writ; 3 Bl. Comm. 278. Upon his appearance, time is usually granted him for pleading; and this is called giving him day, or, as it is more familiarly expressed, a continuance. 3 Bl. Comm. 316. When the suit is ended by discontinuance or by judgment for the defendant, he is discharged from further attendance, and is said to go thereof sine die, without day. See Continuance.

—Day in court. The time appointed for one whose rights are called judicially in question, or liable to be affected by judicial action, to appear in court and be heard in his own behalf. This phrase, as generally used, means not so much the time appointed for a hearing as the opportunity to present one’s claims or rights in a proper forensic hearing before a competent tribunal. See Ferry v. Car Wheel Co., 71 Vt. 457, 45 A. 1035, 76 Am. St. Rep. 782.

—Days of grace. A number of days allowed, as a matter of favor or grace, to a person who has to perform some act, or make some payment, after the time originally limited for the purpose has elapsed. In old practice. Three days allowed to persons summoned in the English courts, beyond the day named in the writ, to make their appearance; the last day being called the “quarto die post.” 3 Bl. Comm. 278. In mercantile law. A certain number of days (generally three) allowed to the maker or acceptor of a bill, draft, or note, in which to make payment, after the expiration of the time expressed in the paper itself. Originally these days were granted only as a matter of grace or favor, but the allowance of them became an established custom of merchants, and was sanctioned by the courts, (and in some cases prescribed by statute,) so that they are now demandable as of right. Perkins v. Bank, 21 Pick. (Mass) 483; Bell v. Bank, 115 U. S. 375, 6 S. Ct. 105, 29 L. Ed. 409; Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 182; Renner v. Bank, 9 Wheat. 581, 6 L. Ed. 106.

—Daytime. The time during which there is the light of day, as distinguished from night or nighttime. That portion of the twenty-four hours during which a man’s person and countenance are distinguishable. Trull v. Wilson, 9 Mass. 154; Rex v. Tandy, 1 Car. & P. 297; Linnen v. Banfield, 114 Mich. 95, 72 N. W. 1; U. S. v. Syrek (D. C.) 290 F. 820, 821. In law, this term is chiefly used in the definition of certain crimes, as to which it is material whether the act was committed by day or by night.

—Juridical day. A day proper for the transaction of business in court; one on which the court may lawfully sit, excluding Sundays and some holidays.

—Law day. The day prescribed in a bond, mortgage, or defeasible deed for payment of the debt secured thereby, or, in default of payment, the forfeiture of the property mortgaged. But this does not now occur until foreclosure. Ward v. Lord, 100 Ga. 407, 28 S. E. 446; Moore v. Norman, 48 Minn. 428, 45 N. W. 357, 9 L. R. A. 55, 19 Am. St. Rep. 247; Kortright v. Cady, 21 N. Y. 345, 75 Am. Rep. 145.

—Natural day. Properly the period of twenty-four hours from midnight to midnight. Co. Litt. 135; Fox v. Abel, 2 Conn. 541; People v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 137. Though sometimes taken to mean the daytime or time between sunrise and sunset. In re Ten Hour Law, 24 R. I. 603, 54 A. 602, 61 L. R. A. 612.

—Non-judicial day. One on which process cannot ordinarily issue or be served or returned and on which the courts do not ordinarily sit. Whitney v. Blackburn, 17 Or. 564, 21 P. 874, 11 Am. St. Rep. 557; More properly “non-juridical day.”

—Solar day. A term sometimes used as meaning that portion of the day when the sun is above the horizon, but properly it is the time between two complete (apparent) revolutions of the sun, or between two consecutive positions of the sun over any given terrestrial meridian, and hence, according to the usual method of reckoning, from noon to noon at any given place.

DAY-BOOK. A tradesman’s account book; a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down. It is usually a book of original entries.

DAY-RULE, or DAY-WRIT. In English law. A permission granted to a prisoner to go out of prison, for the purpose of transacting his business, as to bear a case in which he is concerned at the assizes, etc. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, § 12.
DAYERIA. A dairy. Cowell.

DAYLIGHT. That portion of time before sunrise, and after sunset, which is accounted part of the day, (as distinguished from night,) in defining the offense of burglary. 4 Bl. Comm. 224; Cro. Jac. 106.

DAYSMAN. An arbitrator, umpire, or elected judge. Cowell.

DAYWERE. In old English law. A term applied to land, and signifying as much arable ground as could be plowed up in one day's work. Cowell.

DE ALTO ET BASSO. Of high and low. A phrase anciently used to denote the absolute submission of all differences to arbitration. Cowell.

DE AMBITU. Lat. Concerning bribery. A phrase descriptive of the subject-matter of several of the Roman laws; as the Lex Au- fidia, the Lex Pompeia, the Lex Tullia, and others. See Ambitus.

DE AMPLIORI GRATIA. Of more abundant or especial grace. Townsh. Pl. 18.

DE ANNO BISSEXTILI. Of the bisextile or leap year. The title of a statute passed in the twenty-first year of Henry III., which in fact, however, is nothing more than a sort of writ or direction to the justices of the bench, instructing them how the extraordinary day in the leap year was to be reckoned in cases where persons had a day to appear at the distance of a year, as on the occasion de manto lecti, and the like. It was thereby directed that the additional day should, together with that which went before, be reckoned only as one, and so, of course, within the preceding year. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 296.

DE ANNUA PENSIONE, Breve. Writ of annual pension. An ancient writ by which the king, having a yearly pension due him out of an abbey or priory for any of his chaplains, demanded the same of the abbot or prior, for the person named in the writ. Reg. Orig. 205b, 307; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 231 G.

DE ANNUO REDITU. For a yearly rent. A writ to recover an annuity, no matter how payable, in goods or money. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 258.

DE APOSTATA CAPIENDO, Breve. Writ for taking an apostate. A writ which anciently lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, left it and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order, commanding the sheriff to apprehend him and deliver him again to his abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71b, 267; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 233, 234.

DE ARBITRATIONE FACTA. (Lat. Of arbitration had.) A writ formerly used when an action was brought for a cause which had been settled by arbitration. Wats. Arb. 256.

DE ARREstandis Bonis NE DIssipenTur. An old writ which lay to seize goods in the hands of a party during the pendency of a suit, to prevent their being made away with. Reg. Orig. 126b.

DE ARREstando IPSum QUI PECuniAM RECEpt. A writ which lay for the arrest of one who had taken the king's money to serve in the war, and hid himself to escape going. Reg. Orig. 24b.

DE ARTE ET PARTE. Of art and part. A phrase in old Scotch law. See Art and Part.

DE ATTORNATO RECIPIENDO. A writ which lays to the judges of a court, requiring them to receive and admit an attorney for a party. Reg. Orig. 172; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 155.

DE AUDIENDO ET TERMINANDO. For hearing and determining; to hear and determine. The name of a writ, or rather commission granted to certain justices to hear and determine cases of heinous misdemeanors, trespass, riotous breach of the peace, etc. Reg. Orig. 123, et seq.; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 110 B. See Oyer and Terminer.

DE AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAMIUM. Writ for taking cattle in withernam. A writ which lay where the sheriff returned to a plurica writ of replevin that the cattle or goods, etc., were cloined, etc.; by which he was commanded to take the cattle of the defendant in withernam, (or reprisal,) and detain them until he could reaply the other cattle. Reg. Orig. 82; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 73, E. F. See Withernam.

DE AVERIIS REPELSEIANDIS. A writ to reaply beasts. 3 Bl. Comm. 140.

DE AVERIIS RETORNANDIS. For returning the cattle. A term applied to pledges given in the old action of replevin. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 177.

DE BANCO. Of the bench. A term formerly applied in England to the justices of the court of common pleas, or "bench," as it was originally styled.

DE BENE ESSE. Conditionally; provisionally; in anticipation of future need. A phrase, an application to proceedings which are taken ex parte or provisionally, and are allowed to stand as well done for the present, but which may be subject to future exception or challenge, and must then stand or fall according to their intrinsic merit and regularity.

Thus, "in certain cases, the courts will allow evidence to be taken out of the regular course, in order to prevent the evidence being lost by the death or the absence of the witness. This is called 'taking evidence de bene esse,' and is looked upon as a temporary and conditional examination, to be used only in case the witness cannot afterwards be examined in the suit in the regular way." Hunt, Eq. 75; Haynes, Eq. 153; Mttf. Eq. Pl. 52, 140; Willis v. Bank of Hardinsburg & Trust Co., 158 Ky. 808, 170 S. W. 188, 180.

DE BONE MEMORIE. L. Fr. Of good memory; of sound mind. 2 Inst. 510.

DE BONIS ASPORTATIS. For goods taken away; for taking away goods. The action of trespass for taking personal property is technically called "trespass de bonis asportatis." 1 Tidg. Pr. 5.

DE BONIS NON. An abbreviation of De bonis non administratis. (q. v.) 1 Strange, 34.

DE BONIS NON ADMINISTRATIS. Of the goods not administered. When an administrator is appointed to succeed another, who has left the estate partially unsettled, he is said to be granted "administration de bonis non:" that is, of the goods not already administered. McNafr v. Howie, 123 S. C. 252, 116 S. E. 279, 285.

DE BONIS NON AMOVENDIS. Writ for not removing goods. A writ anecdotically directed to the sheriffs of London, commanding them, in cases where a writ of error was brought by a defendant against whom a Judgment was recovered, to see that his goods and chattels were safely kept without being removed, while the error remained undetermined, so that execution might be had of them, etc. Reg. Orig. 131b; Terms de la Ley.

DE BONIS PROPRIIS. Of his own goods. The technical name of a judgment against an administrator or executor to be satisfied from his own property, and not from the estate of the deceased, as in cases where he has been guilty of a devastament or of a false plea of plene administravit.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS, or INTESTATI. Of the goods of the testator, or intestate. A term applied to a judgment awarding execution against the property of a testator or intestate, as distinguished from the individual property of his executor or administrator. 2 Archib. Pr. K. B. 148, 149.

DE BONIS TESTATORIS AC SI. (Lat. From the goods of the testator, if he has any, and, if not, from those of the executor.) A judgment rendered where an executor falsely pleads any matter as a release, or, generally, in any case where he is to be charged in case his testator's estate is insufficient. 1 Williams' Saund. 33b; Bac. Abr. "Executor," B. 3; 2 Archib. Pr. K. B. 148.

DE BONO ET MALO. "For good and ill." The Latin form of the law French phrase
"De bien et de mal." In ancient criminal pleading, this was the expression with which the prisoner put himself upon a jury, indicating his absolute submission to their verdict. This was also the name of the special writ of jail delivery formerly in use in England, which issued for each particular prisoner, of course. It was superseded by the general commission of jail delivery.

DE BONO GESTU. For good behavior; for good abeance.

DE CAETERO. Henceforth.

DE CALCETO REPARANDO. Writ for repairing a causeway. An old writ by which the sheriff was commanded to distrain the inhabitants of a place to repair and maintain a causeway, etc. Reg. Orig. 154.

3 Bl. Comm. 141.

DE DEBITO. A writ of debt. Reg. Orig.

DE DEBITORE IN PARTES SECANDO. In
Roman law. "Of cutting a debtor in pieces." This was the name of a law contained in the Twelve Tables, the meaning of which has occasioned much controversy. Some commentators have concluded that it was literally the privilege of the creditors of an insolvent debtor (all other means failing) to cut his body into pieces and distribute it among them. Others contend that the language of this law must be taken figuratively, denoting a cutting up and apportionment of the debtor's estate.

The latter view has been adopted by Montesquieu, Bynkershoek, Heineccius, and Taylor. (Esprit des Lois, liv. 29, c. 2; Bynk. Obs. Jur. Rom. l. 1, c.
1; Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 3, tit. 50, § 4; Tayl.
Comm. in Leg. Deemv.) The literal meaning, on the other hand, is advocated by Aulus Gellius and other writers of antiquity, and receives support from an expression (semoto omni cruciata) in 20, c. 1; Code, 7, 7, 8.) This is also the opinion of Gibbon, Gravina, Pothier, Hugo, and Niebuhr.

DE DECEPTIONE. A writ of deceit which lay against one who acted in the name of another whereby the latter was damned and deceived. Reg. Orig. 112.

DE DEONERANDA PRO RATA PORTIONIS.
A writ that lay where one was distrained for rent that ought to be paid by others propor-Termes de la Ley.

DE DIE IN DIEM. From day to day. Bract.
fol. 205b.
DE DIVERSIS REGULIS JURIS ANTIQUI. Of divers rules of the ancient law. A celebrated title of the Digests, and the last in that collection. It consists of two hundred and eleven rules or maxims. Dig. 50, 17.

DE DOLO MALO. Of or founded upon fraud. Dig. 4, 3. See Actio de Dolo Malo.

DE DOMO REPARANDA. A writ which lay for one tenant in common to compel his co-tenant to contribute towards the repair of the common property.

DE DONIS. Concerning gifts, (or more fully, de donis conditionabilibus, concerning conditional gifts.) The name of a celebrated English statute, passed in the thirteenth year of Edw. L, and constituting the first chapter of the statute of Westm. 2, by virtue of which estates in fee-simple conditional (formerly known as "dona conditionalia") were converted into estates in fee-tail and rendered inalienable, thereby strengthening the power of the nobles. See 2 Bl. Comm. 112.

DE DOTE ASSIGNANDA. Writ for assigning dower. A writ which lay for the widow of a tenant in capite, commanding the king's escheator to cause her dower to be assigned to her. Reg. Orig. 297; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 263, C.

DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of dower which lay for a widow where no part of her dower had been assigned to her. It is not much used; but a form closely resembling it is sometimes used in the United States. 4 Kent, Comm. 63; Stearns, Real Act. 302; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 299.

DE EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. A writ which lay for a guardian who had been forcibly ejected from his wardship. Reg. Orig. 162.

DE EJECTIONE FIRMAE. A writ which lay at the suit of the tenant for years against the lessor, reversioner, remainderman, or stranger who had himself deprived the tenant of the occupation of the land during his term. 3 Bl. Comm. 199. By a gradual extension of the scope of this form of action its object was made to include not only damages for the unlawful detainer, but also the possession for the remainder of the term, and eventually the possession of land generally. And, as it turned on the right of possession, this involved a determination of the right of property, or the title, and thus arose the modern action of ejectment.

DE ESCÆTA. Writ of escheat. A writ which a lord had, where his tenant died without heir, to recover the land. Reg. Orig. 164b; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 143, 144, E.

DE ESCAMBO MONETÆ. A writ of exchange of money. An ancient writ to authorize a merchant to make a bill of exchange, (literas combitatorias facere,) Reg. Orig. 194.

DE ESSE IN PEREGRINATIONE. Of being on a journey. A species of essoin. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 119.

DE ESSENDO QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ which lay for those who were by privilege free from the payment of toll, on their being molested therein. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 228; Reg. Orig. 2589.

DE ESSONIO DE MALO LECTI. A writ which issued upon an essoin of malum lecti being cast, to examine whether the party was in fact sick or not. Reg. Orig. 58.

DE ESTOVERII HABENDIS. Writ for having estovers. A writ which lay for a wife divorced a mensa et thoro, to recover her alimony or estovers. 1 Bl. Comm. 441; 1 Lev. 6.

DE ESTREPAMENTO. A writ which lay to prevent or stay waste by a tenant, during the pendency of a suit against him to recover the lands. Reg. Orig. 769. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 60.

DE EU ET TRENE. L. Fr. Of water and whip of three cords. A term applied to a neffe, that is, a bond woman or female villain, as employed in servile work, and subject to corporal punishment. Co. Litt. 256.

DE EVE ET DE TREVE. A law French phrase, equivalent to the Latin de avo et de tritavo, descriptive of the ancestral rights of lords in their villains. Literally, "from grandfather and from great-grandfather's great-grandfather." It occurs in the Year Books.

DE EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO. A writ commanding the sheriff to arrest one who was excommunicated, and imprison him till he should become reconciled to the church. 3 Bl. Comm. 102. Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

DE EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO. A writ to deliver an excommunicated person, who has made satisfaction to the church, from prison. 3 Bl. Comm. 102.

DE EXCOMMUNICATO RECAPIENDO. Writ for retaking an excommunicated person, where he had been liberated from prison without making satisfaction to the church, or giving security for that purpose. Reg. Orig. 67.·

DE EXCUSATIONIBUS. "Concerning excuses." This is the title of book 27 of the Pandects, (in the Corpus Juris Civilis.) It treats of the circumstances which excuse one from filling the office of tutor or curator. The bulk of the extracts are from Modestinus.

DE EXECUTIONE JUDICI. A writ directed to a sheriff or bailiff, commanding him to do execution upon a judgment. Reg. Orig. 18; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 20.

DE EXONERATIONE SECTÆ. Writ for exonerarion of suit. A writ that lay for the king's ward to be discharged of all suit to the county court, hundred, leet, or court-baron, during the time of his wardship. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 158; New Nat. Brev. 352.

DE EXPENSIS CIVIUM ET BURGESSIUM. An obsolete writ addressed to the sheriff to levy the expenses of every citizen and burgess of parliament. 4 Inst. 46.

DE EXPENSIS MILITUM LEVANDIS. Writ for levying the expenses of knights. A writ directed to the sheriff for levying the allowance for knights of the shire in parliament. Reg. Orig. 191b, 192.

DE FACTO. In fact, in deed, actually. This phrase is used to characterize an officer, a government, a past action, or a state of affairs which must be accepted for all practical purposes, but is illegal or illegitimate. In this sense it is the contrary of de jure, which means rightful, legitimate, just, or constitutional. Thus, an officer, king, or government de facto is one who is in actual possession of the office or supreme power, but by usurpation, or without lawful title; while an officer, king, or governor de jure is one who has just claim and rightful title to the office or power, but has never had plenary possession of it, or is not in actual possession. 4 Bl. Comm. 77, 78. MacLeod v. United States, 229 U. S. 416, 33 S. Ct. 955, 959, 57 L. Ed. 1260; Wheatley v. Consolidated Lumber Co., 187 Cal. 441, 190 P. 1067, 1069. So a wife de facto is one whose marriage is voidable by decree, as distinguished from a wife de jure, or lawful wife. 4 Kent, Comm. 36.

But the term is also frequently used independently of any distinction from de jure; thus a blockade de facto is a blockade which is actually maintained, as distinguished from a mere paper blockade. 1 Kent, 44.

As to de facto "Corporation," "Court," "Domelie," "Government," and "Officer," see those titles.

In Old English Law

De facto means respecting or concerning the principal act of a murder, which was technically denominatred factum. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 27, § 18.

DE FACTO CONTRACT. One which has purported to pass the property from the owner to another. Bank v. Logan, 74 N. Y. 575; Edmunds v. Transp. Co., 135 Mass. 293.

Bl.Law Dict. 3d Ed. 38

DE FAIRE ÉCHELLE. In French law. A clause commonly inserted in policies of marine insurance, equivalent to a license to touch and trade at intermediate ports. American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 491.

DE FALSO MONETA. Of false money. The title of the statute 27 Edw. I. ordaining that persons importing certain coins, called "poldars," and "crockards," should forfeit their lives and goods, and everything they could forfeit. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 228, 229.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quaestio, sed de scientia, sive sit error juris, sive facti. Concerning the fidelity and official conduct of a judge, no question is [will be] entertained; but [only] concerning his knowledge, whether the error [committed] be of law or of fact. Bac. Max. 68, reg. 17. The bona fides and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or fact. Broom. Max. 85. The law doth so much respect the certainty of judgments, and the credit and authority of judges, that it will not permit any error to be assigned which impeacheth them in their trust and office, and in willful abuse of the same; but only in ignorance and mistaking either of the law, or of the case and matter of fact. Bac. Max. ubi supra. Thus, it cannot be assigned for error that a judge did that which he ought not to do; as that he entered a verdict for the plaintiff, where the jury gave it for the defendant. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 20, 21; Bac. Max. ubi supra; Hard. 127, arg.

DE FIDEI LÆSIONE. Of breach of faith or fidelity. 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 99.

DE FINE FORCE. I. Fr. Of necessity; of pure necessity. See Fine Force.

DE FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRÆ PLACITANDO. A writ prohibiting the taking of fines for beau pleasur. Reg. Orig. 179.

DE FINE PRO REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO. A writ which lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redissaisin, on payment of a reasonable fine. Reg. Orig. 222b.

DE FINIBUS LEVATIS. Concerning fines levied. The title of the statute 27 Edw. I. requiring fines thereafter to be levied, to be read openly and solemnly in court. 2 Inst. 521.

DE FRANGENTIBUS PRISONAM. Concerning those that break prison. The title of the statute 1 Edw. II. ordaining that none from thenceforth who broke prison should have judgment of life or limb for breaking prison only, unless the cause for which he was taken and imprisoned required such a judgment if he was lawfully convicted thereof. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 290; 2 Inst. 589.

DE GESTU ET FAMA. Of behavior and reputation. An old writ which lay in cases where a person's conduct and reputation were impeached.

DE GRATIA. Of grace or favor, by favor. De speciali gratia, of special grace or favor.

De gratia speciali certa scientia et mere motu, talis clausula non valet in his in quibus prassumitur principem esse ignorantem. 1 Coke, 53.

The clause "of our special grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion," is of no avail in those things in which it is presumed that the prince was ignorant.

De grossis arboribus decime non dabuntur sed de sylvia cadua decime dabuntur. 2 Rolle, 123. Of whole trees, tithes are not given; but of wood cut to be used, tithes are given.

DE HÆREDE DELIBERANDO ILLI QUI HABET CUSTODIAM TERRE. Writ for delivering an heir to him who has wardship of the land. A writ directed to the sheriff, to require one that had the body of him that was ward to another to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

DE HÆREDE RAPTO ET ABDUCTO. Writ concerning an heir ravished and carried away. A writ which anciently lay for a lord who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age could not obtain his body, the same being carried away by another person. Reg. Orig. 163; Old Nat. Brev. 93.

DE HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. (Lat. For burning a heretic.) A writ which formerly issued from the secular courts for the execution, by burning, of a heretic, who had been convicted in the ecclesiastical courts of heresy, had abjured, and had relapsed into heresy. It is said to be very ancient. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 269; 4 Bl. Comm. 40. See Hæretico Comburendo.

DE HOMAGIO RESPECTUANUM. A writ for respite or postponing homage. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 269, A.

DE HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAM. (Lat. For taking a man in withernam.) A writ to take a man who had carried away a bondman or bondwoman into another country beyond the reach of a writ of replevin.

DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. (Lat. For replying a man.) A writ which lies to reply a man out of prison, or out of the custody of a private person, upon giving security to the sheriff that the man shall be forthcom-

DE IDENTITATE NOMINIS. A writ which lay for one arrested in a personal action and committed to prison under a mistake as to his identity, the proper defendant bearing the same name. Reg. Orig. 184.

DE IDIOTA INQUIRENDI. An old common-law writ, long obsolete, to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. 2 Steph. Comm. 509.

DE IIS QUI PONENDI SUNT IN ASSISIS. Of those who are to be put on assises. The title of a statute passed 21 Edw. I. defining the qualifications of jurors. Crabb, Eng. Law, 167, 189; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 184.

DE INCREMENTO. Of increase; in addition. Costs de incremento, or costs of increase, are the costs adjudged by the court in civil actions, in addition to the damages and nominal costs found by the Jury. Glib. Com. Pl. 209.

DE INFIRMITATE. Of infirmity. The principal essoin in the time of Gianville; afterwards called "de malo." 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 115. See De Malo; Essoin.

DE INJURIA. Of his own wrong. In the technical language of pleading, a replication de injuria is one that may be made in an action of tort where the defendant has admitted the acts complained of, but alleges, in his plea, certain new matter by way of justification or excuse; by this replication the plaintiff avers that the defendant committed the grievances in question "of his own wrong, and without any such cause," or motive or excuse, as that alleged in the plea, (de injuria sua propria abaque tali causa;) or, admitting part of the matter pleaded, "without the rest of the cause" alleged, (abaque residuo causa.) In form it is a species of traverse, and it is frequently used when the pleading of the defendant, in answer to which it is directed, consists merely of matter of excuse of the alleged trespass, grievance, breach of contract, or other cause of action. Its comprehensive character in putting in issue all the material facts of the defendant's plea has also obtained for it the title of the general replication. Holtthouse.

DE INOFFICIOSO TESTAMENTO. Concerning an infidious or undutiful will. A title of the civil law. Inst. 2, 18.

DE INTEGRUM. Anew; a second time. As it was before.
DE INTRUSIONE. A writ of intrusion; where a stranger entered after the death of the tenant, to the injury of the reversioner. Reg. Orig. 2538.

DE JUDICIO SISTI. For appearing in court. A term applied in the Scotch and admirality law, to bail for a defendant’s appearance.

DE JURE. Of right; legitimate; lawful; by right and just title. In this sense it is the contrary of de facto, (which see.) It may also be contrasted with de gratia, in which case it means “as a matter of right,” as de gratia means “by grace or favor.” Again it may be contrasted with de aequitate; here meaning “by law,” as the latter means “by equity.” See Government.

De jure decimarem, originem duces de jure patronatus, tunc cognitio spectat at legem civilem, i. e., communem. Godb. 63. With regard to the right of tithes, deducing its origin from the right of the patron, then the cognizance of them belongs to the civil law; that is, the common law.

De jure judicis, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges find the law, the jury the facts. See Co. Litt. 285; Broom, Max. 99.

DE LA PLUS BEALE, or BELLE. L. Fr. Of the most fair. A term applied to a species of dower, which was assigned out of the fairest of the husband’s tenements. Litt. § 48. See Dower de la Plus Belle.

DE MANUCTIONE. Writ of manuption, or mainprise. A writ which lay for one who, being taken and imprisoned on a charge of felony, had offered bail, which had been refused; requiring the sheriff to discharge him on his finding sufficient mainprors or bail. Reg. Orig. 298; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 249, G.

DE MANUTENENDO. Writ of maintenance. A writ which lay against a person for the offense of maintenance. Reg. Orig. 189, 1829.
DE MEDIATE LINGUÆ. Of the half tongue; half of one tongue and half of another. This phrase describes that species of jury which, at common law, was allowed in both civil and criminal cases where one of the parties was an alien, not speaking or understanding English. It was composed of six English denizens or natives and six of the alien's own countrymen.

DE MEDIC. A writ in the nature of a writ of right, which lay where upon a subinfeudation the mesne (or middle) lord suffered his under-tenant or tenant paravail to be disquieted upon by the lord paramount for the rent due him from the mesne lord. Booth, Real Act, 136.

DE MELIORIBUS DAMNIS. Of or for the better damages. A term used in practice to denote the election by a plaintiff against which several defendants (where the damages have been assessed separately) he will take judgment. 1 Arch. Pr. K. B. 219; Knollierbacker v. Colver, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 111.

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not care for, or take notice of, very small or trifling matters. The law does not concern itself about trifles. Cro. Eliz. 353. Thus, error in calculation of a fractional part of a penny will not be regarded. Hob. 85. So, the law will not, in general, notice the fraction of a day. Broom, Max. 142.

DE MINIS. Writ of threats. A writ which lay where a person was threatened with personal violence, or the destruction of his property, to compel the offender to keep the peace. Reg. Orig. 889, 89; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 79, G. 80.

DE MITTENDO TENOREM RECORDI. A writ to send the tenant of a record, or to exemplify it under the great seal. Reg. Orig. 2208.

DE MODERATA MISERICORDIA CAPIENDA. Writ for taking a moderate amercement. A writ, founded on Magna Charta, (c. 14.) which lay for one who was excessively amerced in a court not of record, directed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the party. Reg. Orig. 869; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 75, 76.

DE MODO DECIMANDI. Of a modus of tithing. A term applied in English ecclesiastical law to a prescription to have a special manner of tithing. 2 Bl. Comm. 20; 3 Steph. Comm. 180.

DE QUARANTINA HABENDA. At common law, a writ which a widow entitled to quarantine might sue out in case the heir or other persons ejected her. It seems to have been a summary process, and required the sheriff, if no just cause were shown against it, speedily to put her into possession. Alken v. Alken, 12 Or. 203, 6 P. 682.

DE QUIBUS SUR DISSESIN. An ancient writ of entry.

DE QUO, and DE QUIBUS. Of which. Formal words in the simple writ of entry, from which it was called a writ of entry "in the quo," or "in the quibus." 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 33.

DE QUOTA LITIS. In the civil law. A contract by which one who has a claim difficult to recover agrees with another to give a part, for the purpose of obtaining his services to recover the rest. 1 Duval, note 201.

DE RAPTU VIRGINUM. Of the ravishment of maids. The name of an appeal formerly in use in England in cases of rape. Bract. fol. 147; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 89.

DE RATIONABILI PARTE BONORUM. A writ which lay for the widow (and children) of a deceased person against his executors, to recover a third part of the deceased's personality, after payment of his debts, or to recover their reasonable part or share of his goods. 2 Bl. Comm. 492; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 122, 1; Hopkins v. Wright, 17 Tex. 36.

DE REBUS. Of things. The title of the third part of the Digests or Pandects, comprising books 12-19, inclusive.

DE REBUS DUBIIS. Of doubtful things or matters. Dig. 34, 5.

DE RECORDO ET PROCESSU MITTENDIS. Writ to send the record and process of a cause to a superior court; a species of writ of error. Reg. Orig. 209.

DE RECTO. Writ of right. Reg. Orig. 1, 2; Bract. fol. 327b. See Writ of Right.

DE RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE. Writ of right of advowson. Reg. Orig. 296. A writ which lay for one who had an estate in an advowson to him and his heirs in fee-simple, if he were disturbed to present. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 30, B. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

DE RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE. Writ of right, of reasonable part. A writ which lay between privies in blood, as between brothers in gavelkind, or between sisters or other coparceners for lands in fee-simple, where one was deprived of his or her share by another. Reg. Orig. 3b; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 9, B. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

DE REDISSEISINA. Writ of redisseisin. A writ which lay where a man recovered by assise of novel disseisin land, rent, or common, and the like, and was put in possession thereof by verdict, and afterward was dispossessed of the same land, rent, or common, by him by whom he was dispossessed before. Reg. Orig. 206b; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 188, B.

DE REPARATIONE FACIENDA. A writ by which one tenant in common seeks to compel another to aid in repairing the property held in common. 8 Barn. & C. 269.

DE RESCUSSU. Writ of rescue or rescous. A writ which lay where cattle distrained, or persons arrested, were rescued from those taking them. Reg. Orig. 117, 118; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 101, C, G.

DE RETORNO HABENDO. For having a return; to have a return. A term applied to the judgment for the defendant in an action of replevin, awarding him a return of the goods relieved; and to the writ or execution issued thereon. 2 Tidd, Pr. 993, 1038; 3 Bl. Comm. 149. Applied also to the sureties given by the plaintiff on commencing the action. Id. 147.

DE RIEN CULPABLE. L. Fr. Guilty of nothing; not guilty.

DE SA VIE. L. Fr. Of his or her life; of his own life; as distinguished from pur autre vie, for another's life. Litt. §§ 35, 36.

DE SALVA GARDIA. A writ of safeguard allowed to strangers seeking their rights in English courts, and apprehending violence or injury to their persons or property. Reg. Orig. 29.

DE SCACCARIO. Of or concerning the exchequer. The title of a statute passed in the DE SCUTAGIO HABENDO. Writ for having (or to have) escue or scutage. A writ which anciently lay against tenants by knight-service, to compel them to serve in the king's wars or send substitutes or to pay escue; that is a sum of money. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 83, C. The same writ lay for one who had already served in the king's army, or paid a fine instead, against those who held of him by knight-service, to recover his escue or scutage. Reg. Orig. 88; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 83, D, F.

DE SE BENE GERENDO. For behaving himself well; for his good behavior. Yelv. 90, 154.

DE SECTA AD MOLENDINUM. Of suit to a mill. A writ which lay to compel one to continue his custom (of grinding) at a mill. 8 Bl. Comm. 235; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 122, M.

De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est. From like things to like things we are to proceed by the same rule or reason, [i. e., we are allowed to argue from the analogy of cases.] Branch, Prine.

De similibus idem est judicandum. Of respecting like things, [in like cases,] the judgment is to be the same. 7 Coke, 18.

DE SON TORT. L. Fr. Of his own wrong. A stranger who takes upon him to act as an executor without any just authority is called an "executor of his own wrong." (de son tort.) 2 Bl. Comm. 507; 2 Steph. Comm. 244.

DE SON TORT DEMESNE. Of his own wrong. The law French equivalent of the Latin phrase de injuria (q. v.).

DE STATUTO MERCATORIO. The writ of statute merchant. Reg. Orig. 1469.

DE STATUTO STAPULÆ. The writ of statute staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

DE SUPERONERATIONE PASTURÆ. Writ of surcharge of pasture. A judicial writ which lay for him who was impleaded in the county court, for surcharging a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the courts at Westminster. Reg. Jud. 366.

DE TABULIS EXHIRENDIS. Of showing the tablets of a will. Dig. 43, 5.

DE TEMPORE IN TEMPUS ET AD OMNIA TEMPORA. From time to time, and at all times. Townsh. Pl. 17.

DE TEMPS DONT MEMORIE NE COURT. L. Fr. From time whereof memory runneth not; time out of memory of man. Litt. §§ 143, 145, 170.

DE TESTAMENTIS. Of testaments. The title of the fifth part of the Digests or Pandects; comprising the twenty-eighth to the thirty-sixth books, both inclusive.

DE THEOLONIO. A writ which lay for a person who was prevented from taking toll. Reg. Orig. 163.

DE TRANSERSIONE, AD AUDIENDUM ET TERMINANDUM. A writ or commission for the hearing and determining any outrage or misdemeanor.

DE UNA PARTE. A deed de una parte is one where only one party grants, gives, or binds himself to do a thing to another. It differs from a deed inter partes, (q. v.) 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 2001.

DE UXORE RAPTA ET ABDUCTA. A writ which lay where a man's wife had been ravished and carried away. A species of writ of trespass. Reg. Orig. 97; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 89, O; 3 Bl. Comm. 139.

DE VASTO. Writ of waste. A writ which might be brought by him who had the immediate estate of inheritance in reversion or remainder, against the tenant for life, in dower, by curtesy, or for years, where the latter had committed waste in lands; calling upon the tenant to appear and show cause why he committed waste and destruction in the place named, to the disinherited (ad exhorationem) of the plaintiff. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 55, C; 3 Bl. Comm. 227, 228. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. 3 Steph. Comm. 506.

DE VENTRE INSPIICIENDO. A writ to inspect the body, where a woman feigns to be pregnant, to see whether she is with child. It lies for the heir presumptive to examine a widow suspected to be feigning pregnancy in order to enable a suppositious heir to obtain the estate. 1 Bl. Comm. 456; 2 Steph. Comm. 257. It lay also where a woman sentenced to death pleaded pregnancy. 4 Bl. Comm. 495. This writ has been recognized in America. 2 Chand. Crim. Tr. 351.

DE VERBO IN VERBUM. Word for word. Bract. fol. 1389. Literally, from word to word.
DE VERBORUM SIGNIFICATIONE. Of the signification of words. An important title of the Digests or Pandects, (Dig. 50, 18,) consisting entirely of definitions of words and phrases used in the Roman law.

DE VI LAICA AMOVENDA. Writ of (or for) removing lay force. A writ which lay where two persons contended for a church, and one of them desired it with a great number of laymen, and held out the other vi et armis; then he that held out had this writ directed to the sheriff, that he remove the force. Reg. Orig. 50; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 54, D.

DE VICINETO. From the neighborhood, or vicinage. 3 Bl. Comm. 360. A term applied to a jury.

DE WARRANTIA CHARTA. Writ of warranty of charter. A writ which lay for him who was enfeoffed, with clause of warranty, [in the charter of feoffment,] and was afterwards implied in an assise or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty; in which case he might have this writ against the feoffor, or his heir, to compel him to warrant the land unto him. Reg. Orig. 137; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 134, D. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

DE WARRANTIA DIEI. A writ that lay where a man had a day in any action to appear in proper person, and the king at that day, or before, employed him in some service, so that he could not appear at the day in court. It was directed to the justices, that they should not record him to be in default for his not appearing. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 17, A; Termes de la Ley.

DEACON. In ecclesiastical law. A minister or servant in the church, whose office is to assist the priest in divine service and the distribution of the sacrament. It is the lowest degree of holy orders in the Church of England. 2 Steph. Comm. 669.

DEAD-BORN. A dead-born child is to be considered as if it had never been conceived or born; in other words, it is presumed it never had life, it being a maxim of the common law that mortuus exitus non est exitus (a dead birth is no birth). Co. Litt. 29 b. See Marseilles v. Thalheimer, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 55; 21 Am. Dec. 69; 4 Ves. 334. This is also the doctrine of the civil law, Dig. 50, 16, 229; La. Civ. Code, art. 28; Domat, liv. prél. t. 2, a. 1, nn. 4, 6.

DEAD FREIGHT. The amount paid by a charterer for that part of the vessel's capacity which he does not occupy although he has contracted for it. Gray v. Carr, L. R. 6 Q. B. 528; Phillips v. Rodle, 35 East 547.

When the charterer of a vessel has shipped part of the goods on board, and is not ready to ship the remainder, the master, unless restrained by his special contract, may take other goods on board, and the amount which is not supplied, required to complete the cargo, is considered dead freight. The dead freight is to be calculated according to the actual capacity of the vessel. 3 Chit. Com. Law 389; 2 Stark. 456; McCull. Com. Dig.

"Dead freight" is the compensation payable to the shipowner when the charterer has failed to ship a full cargo, and "freight" is recompense the shipowner is to receive for carrying the cargo into its port of discharge. Kish v. Taylor (1929) A. C. 694, 613, citing Carrier's Carriage By Sea, par. 666.

DEAD LETTER. A term sometimes applied to an act that has become obsolete by long disuse.

DEAD LETTERS. Letters which the postal department has not been able to deliver to the persons for whom they were intended. They are sent to the "dead-letter office," where they are opened, and returned to the writer if his address can be ascertained.

DEAD MAN'S PART. In English law. That portion of the effects of a deceased person which, by the custom of London and York, is allowed to the administrator; being, where the deceased leaves a widow and children, one-third; where he leaves only a widow or only children, one-half; and, where he leaves neither, the whole. This portion the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, till the statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17, declared that the same should be subject to the statute of distributions. 2 Bl. Comm. 518; 2 Steph. Comm. 254; 4 Reeve, Eng. Law, 83. A similar portion in Scotch law is called "dead's part," (q. v.)

DEAD-PLEDGE. A mortgage, mortuam vadium.

DEAD RENT. In English law. A rent payable on a mining lease in addition to a royalty, so called because it is payable although the mine may not be worked.

DEAD STORAGE. The storage, especially of automobiles in public garages, where automobiles not in use are to remain uninterrupted for a time, sometimes for the season. Hogan v. O'Brien, 203 N. Y. S. 831, 123 Misc. 865.

DEAD USE. A future use.

DEAD WIRE. One which never carries electricity, or which, at some particular time, is not charged with an electric current. City of Shawnee v. Sears, 39 Okl. 789, 137 P. 107, 110, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585.

DEAD'S PART. In Scotch law. The part remaining over beyond the shares secured to the widow and children by law. Of this the testator had the unqualified disposal. Bell; Stair, Inst. lib. III. tit. 4, § 24; Paterson, Comp. §§ 674, 943, 902.
DEADHEAD. A term applied to persons other than the officers, agents, or employees of a railroad company who are permitted by the company to travel on the road without paying any fare therefor. Gardner v. Hall, 61 N. C. 21.

DEADLY FEUD. In old European law. A profession of irreconcilable hatred till a person is revenged even by the death of his enemy.

DEADLY WEAPON. Such weapons or instruments as are made and designed for offensive or defensive purposes, or for the destruction of life or the infliction of injury. Com. v. Branham, 8 Bush (Ky.) 387.

One likely to produce death or great bodily harm. People v. Fuqua, 58 Cal. 245; State v. Hedrick, 99 W. Va. 529, 130 S. E. 295, 288.

One which from the manner used, is calculated or likely to produce death or serious bodily injury. Harris v. State, 72 Tex. Cr. R. 491, 162 S. W. 1159, 1151; McReynolds v. State, 4 Tex. App. 327; Burgess v. Commonwealth, 176 Ky. 326, 195 S. W. 445.

Any weapon dangerous to life, or with which death may be easily and readily produced. Parman v. Lemmon, 110 Kan. 323, 244 F. 227, 229, 44 A. L. R. 1500; People v. Dwyer, 224 Ill. 393, 155 N. E. 316, 317.

The term may denote any instrument so used as to be likely to produce death or great bodily harm, and hence may include an automobile, especially within the meaning of statutes pertaining to assault. Williamson v. State, 52 Fia. 290, 111 So. 124, 125, 53 A. L. R. 250. But an automobile, when used innocently or negligently so as to be likely to produce death or bodily injury, or to actually produce them without criminal liability, has been held not to be a deadly weapon within the meaning of the criminal law. People v. Cahh, 388 Ill. 194, 157 N. E. 78, 79; State v. Clark, 196 Iowa, 1134, 196 N. W. 82, 84.

DÉADMAN. As applied to a lifting appliance, a piece of timber placed across an opening in the ground to which a snatch hook is attached. The Teddy (D. C.) 228 F. 408, 500.

DEAF AND DUMB. A man that is born deaf, dumb, and blind is looked upon by the law as in the same state with an idiot, he being supposed incapable of any understanding. 1 Bl. Comm. 304. See, however, Alexier v. Matzke, 151 Mich. 36, 115 N. W. 251, 123 Am. St. Rep. 255, 14 Ann. Cas. 52. Nevertheless, a deaf and dumb person may be tried for felony if the prisoner can be made to understand by means of signs. 1 Leach, C. L. 102; 1 Chit. Cr. L. § 396; Com. v. Hill, 14 Mass. 207; State v. Harris, 55 N. C. 136, 75 Am. Dec. 272; 1 Houst. Cr. Rep. 291; Folts v. Murphy, 201 U. S. 123, 26 S. Ct. 396, 50 L. Ed. 889.

DEAFFOREST. See Disafforest.

DEAL, n. An arrangement to attain a desired result by a combination of interested parties; Gaut v. Dunlap (Tex. Civ. App.) 188 S. W. 1020, 1021; Ball v. Davenport, 170 Iowa, 33, 152 N. W. 69, 71: the prime object being usually the purchase, sale, or exchange of property for a profit; Chambers v. Johnston, 180 Ky. 73, 201 S. W. 488, 489. Also, an act of buying and selling; a bargain. Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 94 Or. 349, 184 P. 487, 493.

A "deal" between two parties includes any transaction of any kind between them, and when applied to a transaction concerning a house or block, the term does not necessarily imply an agreement to sell or convey, for the agreement might be to rent or lease the property. Osborne v. Moore, 112 Tex. 361, 247 S. W. 498, 499.

DEAL, v. To traffic; to transact business; to trade. See Borg v. International Silver Co. (C. C. A.) 11 F.(2d) 147, 150. Also, to act between two persons, to intervene, or to have to do with. State v. Morro, 313 Mo. 114, 290 S. W. 697, 699.

To "deal" in a commodity, however, such as automobiles, within the meaning of a privilege tax statute, means something more than the making of an occasional sale in a municipality where the seller has no place of business, and no stock of automobiles on hand. City of Pascagoula v. Carter, 136 Miss. 750, 101 So. 687, 688.

As to dealing in futures, see Futures.

The term includes one who carries on the business of selling goods, wares, and merchandises, manufactured by him at a factory, or manufactured by him from his own shop, or manufactured. Atlantic Refining Co. v. Van Valkenburg, 255 Pa. 465, 109 A. 308, 299.

A "dealer," as in narcotics, is one who sells promiscuously,—one who is ready and willing to sell to anyone applying to purchase, if unaware that they are officers or undercover men. Taylor v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 19 F.(2d) 518, 519.

Makers of an accommodation note are deemed dealers with whoever discounts it. Vernon v. Manhattan Co., 17 Weed. (N. Y.) 324.
DEALERS’ TALK. That picturesque and laudatory style affected by nearly every trader in setting forth the attractive qualities of the goods he offers for sale. Prince v. Brackett, Shaw & Lunt Co., 125 Me. 31, 130 A. 509, 511. The puffing of goods to induce the sale thereof; not regarded in law as fraudulent unless accompanied by some artifice to deceive the purchaser and throw him off his guard or some concealment of intrinsic defects not easily discoverable. Kimball v. Bangs, 144 Mass. 321, 11 N. E. 113; Reynolds v. Palmer (C. C.) 21 F. 433; Williams v. Fouche, 164 Ga. 311, 138 S. E. 559, 561.

REAL ESTATE DEALER. One who, on his own account and as a business independent of that of another real estate agent, engages for a consideration to aid others, whether the owners of the property or their agents, in selling real estate which is offered for sale. Horsley v. Woodley, 12 Ga. App. 456, 78 S. E. 260, 261.

DEALINGS. Transactions in the course of trade or business;—held to include payments to a bankrupt. Moody & M. 137; 3 Car. & P. 85.

DEAN. In English ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical dignitary who presides over the chapter of a cathedral, and is next in rank to the bishop. So called from having been originally appointed to superintend ten canons or prebendaries. 1 Bl. Comm. 382; Co. Litt. 95; Spelman.

There are several kinds of deans, namely: Deans of chapters; deans of peculiar; rural deans; deans in the colleges; honorary deans; deans of provinces.

DEAN AND CHAPTER. In ecclesiastical law. The council of a bishop, to assist him with their advice in the religious and also in the temporal affairs of the see. 3 Co. 75; 1 Bla. Comm. 382; Co. Litt. 103, 300; Termes de la Ley; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 120.

DEAN OF THE ARCHES. The presiding judge of the Court of Arches. He is also an assistant judge in the court of admiralty. 1 Kent, Comm. 371; 3 Steph. Comm. 727.

DEATH. The cessation of life; the ceasing to exist; defined by physicians as a total stoppage of the circulation of the blood, and a cessation of the animal and vital functions consequent thereon, such as respiration, pulsation, etc.

This is "natural death," in contradistinction to "civil death," and, also, to "violent death." See those titles, infra.

CIVIL DEATH. The state of a person who, though possessing natural life, has lost all his civil rights, and as to them, is considered as dead. Quick v. Western Ry. of Alabama, 207 Ala. 376, 92 So. 605, 606. At common law, the extinction of civil rights and relations, so that the property of a person declared civilly dead passes to his heirs as if dead in fact. Holmes v. King, 216 Ala. 412, 113 So. 274, 276.

The "civil death" spoken of in the books is of two kinds: (1) Where there is a total extinction of the civil rights and relations of the party, so that he can neither take nor hold property, and his heirs succeed to his estate in the same manner as if he were really dead, or the estate is forfeited to the crown. (2) Where there is an incapacity to hold property, or to sue in the king's courts, attended with forfeiture of the estate to the crown. Of the first kind, are the cases of monks professed, and abjuration of the realm; all the other cases are of the second kind. Strictly speaking, there are but two cases of civil death; those of a monk professed, and an abjuration of the realm. In re Erskine (C. C. A.) 1 F. (2d) 149, 152. See, generally, Chit. Crim. Law 722; Co. Litt. §§ 133, 195, note; Littleton § 209; 1 Bl. Comm. 332; Baltimore v. Chester, 53 Vt. 319, 38 Am. Rep. 677; Avery v. Everett, 119 N. Y. 217, 18 N. E. 148, 1 L. R. A. 294, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368; In re Denny's Estate, 125 Cal. 417, 58 P. 61, 73 Am. St. Rep. 62; Troup v. Wood, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 218; Coffee v. Haynes, 124 Cal. 561, 57 P. 482, 73 Am. St. Rep. 99.

DEATH-BED DEED. In Scotch law. A deed made by a person while laboring under a distemper of which he afterwards died. Ersk. Inst. 3, 8, 96. A deeds is understood to be in death-bed, if, before signing and delivery thereof, the grantor was sick, and never convalesced therefrom. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, b. 2, c. 4, tit. 1, § 1. But it is not necessary that he should be actually confined to his bed at the time of making the deed. Bell.

DEATH DUTY. A charge or toll which the state makes upon the right to transmit or to receive property on the death of the owner. In re Heck's Estate, 120 Or. 89, 250 P. 725, 736. The usual name in England for an inheritance tax.

DEATH WARRANT. A warrant from the proper executive authority appointing the time and place for the execution of the sentence of death upon a convict judicially condemned to suffer that penalty.

DEATH WATCH. A special guard set to watch a prisoner condemned to death, for some days before the time for the execution, the special purpose being to prevent any escape or any attempt to anticipate the sentence.

NATURAL DEATH. A death which occurs by the unassisted operation of natural causes, as distinguished not only from "civil death," but also from "violent death" (q. e.)

heard from and unexplained. The general rule, as now understood, is that the presumption of the duration of life ceases at the expiration of seven years from the time when the person was last known to be living; and after the lapse of that period there is a presumption of death. Smith v. Knowlton, 11 N. H. 197; Chamb. Best Ev. 304, note, collecting the cases; Francis v. Francis, 180 Pa. 644, 37 A. 120, 57 Am. St. Rep. 668; 4 U. C. C. R. 510; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 41; 5 B. & Ad. 86; Maley v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 258 Pa. 73, 101 A. 911, L. R. A. 1915A, 563. In most of the states the subject is regulated by statute.

The better opinion is that there is no presumption as to the time of death. Davie v. Briggs, 97 U. S. 628, 24 L. Ed. 1088; Chamb. Best Ev. 305; 2 Brett, Com. 941; 2 M. & W. 894. But it has been held that death is presumed to take place at the end of the seven years' absence: Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers v. Nash, 114 Md. 623, 125 A. 441; Apitz v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 274 Ill. 186, 113 N. E. 83, L. R. A. 1917A, 183, affirming 186 Ill. App. 278; or at a time of peril; Conner v. New York Life Ins. Co., 166 N. Y. S. 945, 179 App. Div. 586.

—Violent death. One caused or accelerated by the interference of human agency;—distinguished from "natural death."

DEATH'S PART. See Dead's Part; Dead Man's Part.

DEATHSMAN. The executioner; hangman; he that executes the extreme penalty of the law.

DEBASING. This word, in a statute making it slander to charge another with being guilty of some 'debasing act which may exclude him from society,' has reference to those repulsive actions which would cause him to be shunned or avoided, in the same way as would a contagious disease. Morris v. Evans, 22 Ga. App. 11, 95 S. E. 385, 386.

DEBAUCH. To corrupt one's manners; to make lewd; to mar or spoil; to entice; and, when used of a woman, to seduce, or corrupt with lewdness. Litton v. Woliver, 126 Va. 32, 100 S. E. 827, 828; State v. Howard, 264 Mo. 580, 175 S. W. 58, 59. Originally, the term had a limited significance, meaning to entice or draw one away from his work, employment, or duty; and from this sense its application has enlarged to include the corruption of manners and violation of the person. In its modern legal sense, the word carries with it the idea of "carnal knowledge," aggravated by assault, violent seduction, ravishment. Koenig v. Nott, 2 Hilt. (N. J.) 323. And see Wood v. Mathews, 47 Iowa, 410; State v. Curran, 51 Iowa, 112, 49 N. W. 1006. See also, Debauchery.

DEBAUCHERY. In general, excessive indulgence in sensual pleasures; in a narrower sense, sexual immorality or excesses, or the unlawful indulgence of lust. Sushak v. United States (C. C. A.) 213 F. 913, 917; Gillette v. United States (C. C. A.) 236 F. 215, 217.

In the White Slave Act (Act June 25, 1910, c. 335, 36 Stat. 532 [18 USCA §§ 307-307b]), making it an offense to procure the interstate transportation of a girl for the purpose of prostitution and debauchery, "debauchery" is not limited to the meaning of seduction, but includes a purpose to expose her to such influence as will naturally and inevitably so corrupt her character as to lead her to acts of sexual immorality, or, if she is already a sexually corrupt woman, a purpose that she shall engage or continue more or less habitually in sexually immoral practices. Van Pelt v. United States (C. C. A.) 240 F. 346, 348, L. R. A. 1917E, 1135.

DEBENTURE. A certificate given by the collector of a port, under the United States customs laws, to the effect that an importer of merchandise therein named is entitled to a drawback, (q. e.), specifying the amount and time when payable. See Act Cong. March 2, 1799, § 80; U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3037-30.

An instrument in use in some government departments, particularly in England, by which the government is charged to pay to a creditor or his assign the sum found due on auditing his accounts. Brande; Blount.

A security for a loan of money issued by a public company, usually creating a charge on the whole or a part of the company's stock and property, though not necessarily in the form of a mortgage. They are subject to certain regulations as to the mode of transfer, and ordinary shares have coupons attached to facilitate the payment of interest. They are generally issued in a series, with provision that they shall rank pari passu in proportion to their amounts. See Bank v. Atkins, 72 Vt. St. 33, 47 A. 176; Cavanagh, Mon. Sec. 267; 56 L. J. R. Ch. D. 515; Price, Ultra Vires (2d Ed.) 279.

A charge in writing on certain property, with the repayment at a time fixed, of money lent by a person therein named at a given interest.

Any instrument (other than a covering or trust deed) which either creates or agrees to create a debt in favor of one person or corporation, or several persons or corporations, or acknowledges such debt. Simonsen, Debentures, 5.

An English writer says: "No one ought to know exactly what debenture means. Buckley, Companies Act 185; and Chitty, J., said: "So far as I am aware, the term debenture has never received any precise legal definition. It is, comparatively speaking, a new term." 56 L. J. Ch. 817.

A debenture is distinguished (1) from a mortgage which is an actual transfer of property, (2) from a bond which does not directly affect property, and (3) from a mere charge on property which is individualized and does not form part of a series of similar charges; Cav. Mon. Sec. 267, citing L. 10 Ch. D. 330, 681; 15 Ch. D. 465; 21 Ch. D. 762; L. R. 7 App. Cas. 978; Jones, Corp. B. & M. § 32; 10 H. L. C. 191; L. R. 2 Ch. D. 257.

DEBENTURE STOCK. A stock or fund representing money borrowed by a company or public body, in England, and charged on the whole or part of its property. An issue of stock usually irredeemable and transferable in any amount, not including a fraction of a pound.

The terminability and fixity in amount of debentures being inconvenient to lenders has led to their being in many cases superseded by debenture stock. Whart. Lex.

The issue of debenture stock is not borrowing at all; it is the sale, in consideration of a sum of money, of the right to receive a perpetual annuity; 9 Ch. D. 327; Buckley, Companies Acts 172; and none the less so if redeemable at the option of the company; id.

Debet esse nullis litium. There ought to be an end of suits; there should be some period put to litigation. Jenk. Cent. 61.

DEBET ET DETINET. (Lat. He owes and detains.) Words anciently used in the original writ, (and now, in English, in the plaintiff's declaration,) in an action of debt, where it was brought by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they were bound to the payment; as by the obligee against the obligor, by the landlord against the tenant, etc. The declaration, in such cases, states that the defendant “owes to,” as well as detains from,” the plaintiff the debt or thing in question; and hence the action is said to be “in the debet et detinet.” Where the declaration merely states that the defendant detains the debt, (as in actions by and against an executor for a debt due to or from the testator,) the action is said to be “in the detinet” alone. Fitzh. Nat. Br. 119, G.; 3 Bl. Comm. 155.

DEBET ET SOLET. (Lat. He owes and is used to.) Where a man sui in a writ of right or to recover any right of which he is for the first time in possession, and of which he is in actual possession, he brings his writ in the debet et solut. Reg. Orig. 144a; Fitzh. Nat. Br. 122, M.

Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinguit. One [every one] ought to be subject to the law [of the place] where he offends. 3 Inst. 54. This maxim is taken from Bracton. Bract. fol. 154b. Finch, Law, 14, 36; Wing. Max. 113; 3 Co. 231; 8 Scott N. R. 567.

DEBET SINE BREVE. (Lat. He owes without declaration filed.) Used in relation to a confession of judgment.

Debet sua culque domus esse perfugium tutissimum. Every man's house should be a perfectly safe refuge. Chasen v. Shotwell, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 31, 54.

Debile fundamentum fallit opus. A weak foundation frustrates [or renders vain] the work [built upon it.] Shep. Touch. 60; Noy. Max. 5, max. 12; Finch, Law. b. 1, ch. 3. When the foundation fails, all goes to the ground; as, where the cause of action fails, the acci-

DEBIT. A sum charged as due or owing. The term is used in book-keeping to denote the left page of the ledger, or the charging of a person or an account with all that is supplied to or paid out for him or for the subject of the account. Also, the balance of an account where it is shown that something remains due to the party keeping the account.

In industrial insurance nomenclature, a certain identified territory in which a solicitor operates by soliciting new business and taking care, as through collection of the debt accounts, of the company's patrons for insurance theretofore written; such insurance being usually written in small amounts on the weekly payment plan. Jones v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 173 Mo. App. 1, 156 S. W. 1106, 1107.

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor; that is, they have no locality, and may be collected wherever the debtor can be found. 2 Kent, Comm. 422; Story, Confl. Laws, § 382; Halkers, Max. 13.

DEBITOR. In the civil and old English law. A debtor.

Debitor non praejudicium donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. Whatever disposition he makes of his property is supposed to be in satisfaction of his debts. 1 Kames, Eq. 212. Where a debtor gives money or goods, or grants land to his creditor, the natural presumption is that he means to get free from his obligation, and not to make a present, unless donation be expressed. Ersk. Inst. 3, 3, 93; Dig. 50, 16, 105; 1 P. Wms. 239; Wh. & Tud. L. Cas. Eq. 378.

Debitorum pactiolibus creditoris potest nunc nullius liberi nec potest po nec pollini nec minuti potest. 1 Poth. Obl. 108; Broom, Max. 697, Bart. Max. 115. The rights of creditors can neither be taken away nor diminished by agreements among (or of) the debtors.

DEBITRIX. A female debtor.

DEBITUM. Something due, or owing; a debt.

Debitum et contractus sunt nullus loci. Debt and contract are of [belong to] no place; have no particular locality. 7 Co. 61. The obligation in these cases is purely personal, and actions to enforce it may be brought anywhere. 2 Inst. 231; Story, Confl. Laws, § 382; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 340, 363; 7 M. & G. 1019, n.
DEBITUM IN PRÆSENTI SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO. A debt or obligation complete when contracted, but of which the performance cannot be required till some future period.

DEBITUM SINE BREVI. L. Lat. Debt without writ; debt without a declaration. In old practice, this term denoted an action begun by original bill, instead of by writ. In modern usage, it is sometimes applied to a debt evidenced by confession of judgment without suit. The equivalent Norman-French phrase was "debt sans breve." Both are abbreviated to d. a. b.

DEBT. A sum of money due by certain and express agreement; as by bond for a determinate sum, a bill or note, a special bargain, or a rent reserved on a lease, where the amount is fixed and specific, and does not depend upon any subsequent valuation to settle it. 3 Bl. Comm. 154; Cameron v. Allen, 26 N. J. Law, 395; Appeal of City of Erie, 91 Pa. 395; Dickey v. Leonard, 77 Ga. 151; Hagar v. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 701, 4 S. Ct. 906, 25 L. Ed. 569; Appeal Tax Court v. Rice, 50 Md. 302; Fisher v. Consequa, 2 Wash. C. 328, Fed. Cas. No. 4516; State v. Board of Loan Commissioners of State of New Mexico, 19 N. M. 263, 142 P. 152, 155; Nelson v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 101 Or. 282, 199 P. 948, 951; Shultz v. Ritterbusch, 38 Ohio, 478, 134 P. 961, 968; W. S. Tyler Co. v. Deutsche Dampfschiffahrts Gesellschaft Hansa, Bremen, Germany (D. C.) 276 F. 134, 136.

An unconditional promise to pay a fixed sum at a specified time. Lowery v. Fuller, 221 Mo. App. 485, 231 S. W. 968, 972.

The word "debt" carries with it the requirement of certainty, the foundation of promise by express contract, and necessarily implies legality. Clinton Mining & Mineral Co. v. Beacon (C. C. A.) 256 F. 621, 622, 14 A. L. R. 263.

The word "debt," in the definition of a mortgage as a hypothecation or pledge of property as security for a debt means a duty or obligation to pay, for the enforcement of which an action lies. Stollenwerk v. Marks & Gayle, 188 Ala. 587, 65 So. 1024, 1027, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 881; Gibson v. Hopkins, 80 W. Va. 706, 95 S. E. 823, 827.

Standing alone, the word "debt" is as applicable to a sum of money which has been promised at a future day, as to a sum of money now due and payable. To distinguish between the two, it may be said of the former that it is a debt owing, and of the latter that it is a debt due. A sum of money which is certain and in all events payable is a debt, without regard to the fact whether it be payable now or at a future time. A sum payable upon a contingency, however, is not a debt, or does not become a debt until the contingency has happened. People v. Arguello, 37 Cal. 524.

A "debt" is a specified sum of money owing to one person from another, including not only the obligation of the debtor to pay, but the right of the creditor to receive payment. Martin v. Wise, 185 Ind. 539, 109 N. E. 745, 747; State v. Sayre, 91 Ohio St. 55, 109 N. E. 658; Angola Brick & Tile Co. v. Millgrove School Tp., Steuben County, 73 Ind. App. 557, 127 N. E. 655, 656; Dewey v. Denson, 31 Ga. App. 353, 129 S. E. 896, 897.

A fixed and certain obligation to pay money or some other valuable thing or things, either in the present or in the future. Plymouth Tp. v. Borough of Larksville, 268 Pa. 45, 110 A. 801, 802; Burke v. Boulder Milling & Elevator Co., 77 Colo. 230, 235 P. 574, 575.

In a still more general sense, that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services. Phillips v. Phillips' Ex'r, 188 Ky. 245, 221 S. W. 557, 558; Holman v. Hollis, 94 Fla. 614, 114 So. 254, 265; State v. State Board of Examiners, 74 Mont. 1, 238 P. 516, 523.

A "debt" is an obligation arising otherwise than by sentence by a court for a breach of the public peace or for crime. Ruggles v. State, 129 Md. 555, 87 A. 1089, 1084.

In a broad sense, any duty to respond to another in money, labor, or service; it may even mean a moral or honorary obligation, unenforceable by legal action. Pierce v. United States (C. C. A.) 257 F. 514, 518; U. S. Sugar Equilization Board v. P. De Ronde & Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 981, 984.

Also, sometimes, an aggregate of separate debts, or the total sum of the existing claims against a person or company. Thus we speak of the "national debt," the "bonded debt" of a corporation, etc.

The word "debt" has no fixed legal meaning; Electric Reduction Co. v. Lewellyn (C. C. A.) 11 F. (2d) 496, 494; but takes shades of meaning from the occasion of its use and color from accompanying words; Morrow v. Hayes, 526 Mich. 301, 307 N. W. 554, 555.

The word is of large import, including not only debts by specialty, and debts of record, or judgments (Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Johnson Shipyards Corporation (C. C. A.) 6 F.(2d) 755, 755, affirming (D. C.) 300 F. 952; Schooley v. Schooley, 184 Iowa,.
The term "debt" is of much broader import than "obligation," and embraces rights of action belonging to the debtor beyond those which could appropriately be called "debts." In this respect the term "demand" is one of very extensive import. In re Denny, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 223.

The word dues is equivalent to "debts," or that which is owing and has a contractual significance. State v. Mortgage Security Co., 124 Minn. 555, 192 N. W. 345, 366.

"Debt" is not exactly synonymous with "duty." A debt is a legal liability to pay a specific sum of money; a duty is a legal obligation to perform some act. Allen v. Dickson, Minor (Ala.) 120.

The words "debt" and "liability" are not necessarily synonymous. As applied to the pecuniary relations of parties, liability is a term of broader significance than debt. Couler Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 133 P. 399, 400; Clinton Mining & Mineral Co. v. Beacon (C. C. A.) 256 F. 621, 14 A. L. R. 263. Liability is responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed. McElfresh v. Kirkendale, 39 Iowa, 226.

In Practice

The name of a common-law action, which lies to recover a certain specific sum of money, or a suit that can readily be reduced to a certain sum. 3 Bl. Comm. 154; 3 Steph. Comm. 461; 1 Tidd, Pr. 3; Drennen Motor Car Co. v. Evans, 192 Ala. 150, 68 So. 303; Crockett v. Moore, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 145; Lee v. Gardner, 26 Miss. 521; Home v. Semple, 3 McLean, 150, Fed. Cas. No. 6,058; Bullard v. Bell, 1 Mass. 243, Fed. Cas. No. 2,121; U. S. v. Claffin, 97 U. S. 516, 24 L. Ed. 1062; Baum v. Tonkin, 110 Pa. 569, 1 A. 533.

It is thus distinguished from assumptio, which lies as well where the sum due is uncertain as where it is certain, and from covenant, which lies only upon contracts evidenced in a certain manner.

It is said to lie in the debt and detinet, (when it is stated that the defendant owes and detains,) or in the detinet, (when it is stated merely that he detains.) Debt in the detinet for goods differs from detinutum, because it is not essential in this action, as in detinutum, that the specific property in the goods should have been vested in the plaintiff at the time the action is brought. Dyer, 24b.

In General

- Active debt. One due to a person. Used in the civil law.

- Debt by simple contract. A debt or demand founded upon a verbal or implied contract, or upon any written agreement that is not under seal.

- Debt by specialty or special contract. A debt due, or acknowledged to be due, by some deed or instrument under seal; as a deed of covenant or sale, a lease reserving rent, or a bond or obligation. 2 Bl. Comm. 465; In re Harris (N. J.) 137 A. 215, 216; Kerr v. Lydecker, 51 Ohio St. 240, 37 N. E. 267, 23 L. R. A. 842; Marriott v. Thompson, Willes, 159.

- Debt ex mutuo. A species of debt or obligation mentioned by Gianoville and Bracton, and which arose ex mutuo, out of a certain kind of loan. Glan. 1, b. 10, c. 3; Bract. fol. 99. See Mutuum; Ex Mutuo.

- Debt of record. A debt which appears to be due by the evidence of a court of record, as by a judgment or recognizance. 2 Bl. Comm. 465.

- Doubtful debt. One of which the payment is uncertain. Clef des Lois Romaines.

- Fraudulent debt. A debt created by fraud. Such a debt implies confidence and deception. It implies that it arose out of a contract, express or implied, and that fraudulent practices were employed by the debtor, by which the creditor was defrauded. Howland v. Carson, 28 Ohio St. 628.

- Hypothecary debt. One which is a lien upon an estate.

- Judgment debt. One which is evidenced by matter of record.

- Legal debts. Those that are recoverable in a court of common law, as debt on a bill of exchange, a bond, or a simple contract.
Liquid debt. One which is immediately and unconditionally due.

Mutual debts. Money due on both sides between two persons. Such debts must be due to and from same persons in same capacity. Dolo v. Chattabriga, 82 N. H. 396, 134 A. 347, 348. Cross debts in the same capacity and right, and of the same kind and quality. Lippitt v. Thames Loan & Trust Co., 88 Conn. 185, 90 A. 369, 374.

Passive debt. A debt upon which, by agreement between the debtor and creditor, no interest is payable, as distinguished from active debt; i.e., a debt upon which interest is payable. In this sense, the terms "active" and "passive" are applied to certain debts due from the Spanish government to Great Britain. Wharton. In another sense of the words, a debt is "active" or "passive" according as the person of the creditor or debtor is regarded; a passive debt being that which a man owes; an active debt that which is owing to him. In this meaning every debt is both active and passive,—active as regards the creditor, passive as regards the debtor.

Privileged debt. One which is to be paid before others in case a debtor is insolvent.

Public debt. That which is due or owing by the government of a state or nation. The terms "public debt" and "public securities," used in legislation, are terms generally applied to national or state obligations and dues, and would rarely, if ever, be construed to include town debts or obligations; nor would the term "public revenue" ordinarily be applied to funds arising from the town taxes. Morgan v. Cree, 46 Vt. 775, 14 Am. Rep. 940.

Pure debt. In Scotch law. A debt due now and unconditionally is so called. It is thus distinguished from a future debt,—payable at a fixed day in the future,—and a contingent debt, which will only become due upon the happening of a certain contingency.

Simple contract debt. One where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence the most simple of any, or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and therefore only better than a verbal promise. 2 Bl. Comm. 466.

Solvent debts. In Pennsylvania, the "solvent debts" which a city may deduct from its gross indebtedness pursuant to Act April 20, 1874 (P. L. 65; 53 P. S. § 1874 et seq.), in ascertaining its borrowing capacity, are debts due it directly, payment of which it can enforce as one of its quick assets for the liquidation of any of its obligations. McGuire v. City of Philadelphia, 245 Pa. 287, 91 A. 622, 623.

Specialty debt. See Debt by specialty or special contract, supra.

Debtor. A person to whom a debt is due; a creditor. 3 Bl. Comm. 18; Plowd. 543. Not used.

Debtor. One who owes a debt; he who may be compelled to pay a claim or demand. Anyone liable on a claim, whether due or to become due. Cozart v. Barnes (C. C. A.) 240 F. 935, 938.

The term may be used synonymously with "obligor," "mortgagor," and the like. Dallo v. Borden, 153 La. 85, 92 So. 744, 745; McDuffie v. Faulk, 214 Ala. 221, 117 So. 61, 62.

Common Debtor

In Scotch law. A debtor whose effects have been arrested by several creditors. In regard to these creditors, he is their common debtor, and by this term is distinguished in the proceedings that take place in the competition. Bell.

Debtor's Act 1869

Debtor's Summons

In English law. A summons issuing from a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, upon the creditor proving a liquidated debt of not less than £50, which he has failed to collect after reasonable effort, stating that if the debtor fail, within one week if a trader, and within three weeks if a non-trader, to pay or compound for the sum specified, a petition may be presented against him praying that he may be adjudged a bankrupt. Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 7; Robs. Bankr.; Mozley & Whitely.

Decalogue. The ten commandments which, according to Exodus XX, 1-18, were given by God to Moses. The Jews called them the "Ten Words," hence the name.

Also (and in this sense sometimes spelled Decania, or Decana), a town or tithing, consisting originally of ten families of freetholders. Ten tithings compose a hundred. 1 Bla. Comm. 114; Medley, Orig. Illus. Eng. Coast. Hist.

Decania. The office, jurisdiction, territory, or command of a decanus, or dean. Spelman.
DECANUS.

In Ecclesiastical and Old European Law

An officer having supervision over ten; a dean. A term applied not only to ecclesiastical, but to civil and military, officers. Decanus monasticus; a monastic dean, or dean of a monastery; an officer over ten monks. Decanus in majori ecclesia; dean of a cathedral church, presiding over ten prebendaries. Decanus episcopi; a bishop's or rural dean, presiding over ten clerks or parishes. Decanus friborgi; dean of a frieborg. An officer among the Saxons who presided over a frieborg, tithing, decennary, or association of ten inhabitants; otherwise called a "tithe man," or "boreholder," his duties being those of an inferior judicial officer. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinius, Lex. Decanus militaris; a military officer having command of ten soldiers. Spelman.

In Roman Law

An officer having the command of a company or "mess" of ten soldiers. Also an officer at Constantinople having charge of the burial of the dead. Nov. Jus. 43, 50; Du Cange.

DECAPITATION. The act of beheading. A mode of capital punishment by cutting off the head.

DECESS, n. Death; not including civil death, (see Death.) In re Zeph's Estate, 50 Hun. 323, 3 N. Y. S. 460.

DECEASE, v. To die; to depart life, or from life. This has always been a common term in Scotch law. "Gif ane man decasis," Skene.

DECEDENT. A deceased person, especially one who has lately died. Etymologically the word denotes a person who is dying, but it has come to be used in law as signifying any deceased person, testate or intestate. In re Zeph's Estate, 50 Hun. 523, 3 N. Y. S. 460.

A fraudulent misrepresentation or contrivance, by which one man deceives another, who has no means of detecting the fraud, to the injury and damage of the latter.

A subtle trick or device, whereunto may be referred all manner of craft and collusion used to deceive and defraud another by any means whatsoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to distinguish the offense. (West Symb. § 68); Jacob.

A "deceit" is either: (1) The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true; (2) the assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true; (3) the suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact; or (4) a promise, made without any intention of performing it. Civ. Code Cal. § 1720; Civ. Code S. D. § 1253 (Comp. Laws 3629, § 737).

To constitute "deceit," the statement must be untrue, made with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless and conscious ignorance thereof, especially if parties are not on equal terms, made with intent that plaintiff act thereon or in a manner apparently fitted to induce him to act thereon, and plaintiff must act in reliance on the statement in the manner contemplated, or manifestly probable, to his injury. Corley Co. v. Griggs, 192 N. C. 171, 134 S. E. 406, 407; Pain v. Kiel (C. C. A.) 288 F. 527, 528. See, also, Crossman v. Bacon & Robinson Co., 138 Me. 168, 203 A. 457, 458; Alpine v. Friend Bros., 244 Mass. 154, 158 N. E. 553, 554; Gittings v. Von Dorn, 136 Md. 10, 109 A. 553, 554; Hood v. Wood, 61 Okl. 294, 161 P. 210, 213.

In Old English Law

The name of an original writ, and the action founded on it, which lay to recover damages for any injury committed deceitfully, either in the name of another, (as by bringing an action in another's name, and then suffering a nonsuit, whereby the plaintiff became liable to costs,) or by a fraudulent warranty of goods, or other personal injury committed contrary to good faith and honesty, Reg. Orig. 112–116; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 96, E, 98.

Also the name of a judicial writ which formerly lay to recover lands which had been lost by default by the tenant in a real action, in consequence of his not having been summoned by the sheriff, or by the collusion of his attorney. Rose. Real Act. 136; 3 Bl. Comm. 106.

In General

—Deceitful plea. A sham plea; one alleging as facts things which are obviously false on the face of the plea. Gray v. Gildere, 4 Strob. (S. C.) 445.

DECEM TALES. (Ten such; or ten tales, jurors.) In practice. The name of a writ which issues in England, where, on a trial at bar, ten jurors are necessary to make up a full panel, commanding the sheriff to summon the requisite number. 3 Bl. Comm. 364; Reg. Jud. 309; 3 Steph. Comm. 602.

DECEMVIRI LITIBUS JUDICANDIS. Lat. In the Roman law. Ten persons (five senators and five equites) who acted as the council or assistants of the prætor, when he decided on matters of law. Halifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 8. According to others, they were themselves judges, appointed by Augustus to act in certain cases. Calvinus, Lex.; Anthon, Rom. Ant.

DEGENCY. Propriety of action, speech, dress, etc. Universal Film Mfg. Co. v. Bell, 100 Misc. 281, 167 N. Y. S. 124, 128.

DECENNA. In old English law. A tithing or decennary; the precinct of a frank-pledge; consisting of ten freeholders with their families. Spelman.

DECENNARIUS. Lat. One who held one-half a virgate of land. Du Cange. One of the ten freeholders in a decennary. Id.; Calvin. Decennier. One of the decennarii, or ten freeholders making up a tithing. Spelman; Du Cange, Decenna; 1 Bla. Comm. 114.

King Alfred, for the better preservation of the peace, divided England into counties, the counties into hundreds, and the hundreds into tithings or decennaries: the inhabitants whereof, living together, were sureties or pledges for each other's good behavior.

DECEPTION. The act of deceiving; intentional misleading by falsehood spoken or acted. Smith v. State, 13 Ala. App. 399, 69 So. 402, 403.

DECEPTIONE. A writ that lieth properly against him that deceitfully doth anything in the name of another, for one that receiveth damage or hurt thereby. It is either original or judicial. Fitzh. N. B.

Deceptis non decipientibus, iura subveniant. The laws help persons who are deceived, not those deceiving. Tray. Lat. Max. 149.

DECESSUS. In the civil and old English law. Death; departure.

Decet tamen principem servare leges quibus ipsa servatus est. It behoves, indeed, the prince to keep the laws by which he himself is preserved.

DECIDE. To "decide" includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the reasons for and against, to see which preponderate, and to be governed by that preponderance. Darden v. Lines, 2 Fla. 571; Com. v. Anthes, S Gray (Mass.) 253; In re Milford & M. R. Co., 68 N. H. 370, 36 A. 545.

DECIES TANTUM. (Ten times as much.) The name of an ancient writ that was used against a juror who had taken a bribe in money for his verdict. The injured party could thus recover ten times the amount of the bribe.

DECIMÆ. In ecclesiastical law. Tithens, or tithes. The tenth part of the annual profit of each living, payable formerly to the pope. There were several valuations made of these livings at different times. The decima (tithes) were appropriated to the crown, and a new valuation established, by 26 Hen. VIII., c. 3. 1 Bl. Comm. 284. See Tithe.

Decima debentur parocho. Tithes are due to the parish priest.

Decima de decimâ solvi non debent. Tithes are not to be paid from that which is given for tithes.

Decima de jure divino et canonice institutio pertinent ad personam. Dal. 50. Tithes belong to the parson by divine right and canonical institution.

Decima non debent solvi, ubi non est annua renovatio; et ex annuatâ renovantibus simul semel. Cro. Jac. 42. Tithes ought not to be paid where there is not an annual renovation, and from annual renovations once only.

DECIMATION. The punishing of every tenth soldier by lot, for mutiny or other failure of duty. This was termed "decimatio legionis" by the Romans. Sometimes only the twentieth man was punished, (vicecimatio,) or the hundredth, (centesimatio.)

DECIME. A French coin of the value of the tenth part of a franc, or nearly two cents.

DECINERS. Those that had the oversight and check of ten friburs for the maintenance of the king's peace. Cunningham.

Decipì quam fallìre est tutius. It is safer to be deceived than to deceive. Loft, 395.

A judgment given by a competent tribunal. Eastman Kodak Co. v. Richards, 123 Misc. 83, 204 N. Y. S. 246, 248.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law which must be in writing and filed with the clerk. Stewart Mining Co. v. Ontario Mining Co., 23 Idaho, 724, 132 P. 787, 791.

A determination of a judicial or quasi judicial nature. Coddington County v. Board of Com'rs of Coddington County, 51 S. D. 131, 212 N. W. 626, 628.

The term is broad enough to cover both final judgments and interlocutory orders. Stout v. Stout, 68 Ind. App. 278, 131 N. E. 248, 246. And though sometimes limited to the sense of Judgment: Industrial Commission of Ohio v. Mussehl, 102 Ohio St. 10, 130 N. E. 33, 35; Studebaker Bros. Co. v. Utah v. Wytcher, 45 Nev. 376, 294 P. 592, 593; the term is at other times understood as meaning simply the first step leading to a judgment; Dorney v. Ives, 36 R. I. 276, 90 A. 164, 165; or as an order for judgment; Schofield v. Baker (D. C.) 242 F. 657, 658; Collins v. Belland, 57 Cal. App. 129, 173 P. 604, 605. The word may also include various rulings, as well as orders. U. S. v. Thompson, 49 S. Ct. 289, 291, 251 U. S. 407, 64 L. Ed. 333; Marr v. Marr, 194 Cal. 332, 228 P. 534, 535; State Public Utilities Commission v. Thedens, 219 Ill. 184, 125 N. E. 766, 766; Young v. Washington Water Power Co., 23 Idaho, 450, 229 P. 322, 325.

"Decision" is not necessarily synonymous with "opinion." A decision of the court is its judgment; the opinion is the reasons given for that judgment, or the expression of the views of the judge. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 215, 23 Am. Dec. 555; Craft v. Bennett, 178 Ind. 9, 92 N. E. 273; In re Estate of Winslow, 34 N. Y. S. 637, 15 Misc. 254; McAllister v. Harvey (Tex. Civ. App.) 286 S. W. 548, 549. But the two words are sometimes used interchangeably. Pierce v. State, 103 Ind. 365, 19 N. E. 302; Estes v. Sheckler, 36 W. Va. 434; Board of Education of City of Emporia v. State, 7 Kan. App. 662, 53 P. 486; Keller v. Summers, 281 Mo. 324, 171 S. W. 335, 337.

The French lawyers call the opinions which they give on questions propounded to them, decisions. See Inst. 1, 2, 8; Dig. 1, 2, 2.

DECISIVE, or DECISORY, OATH. See Oath.

DECLARANT. A person who makes a declaration.

DECLARATION.

In Pleading

The first of the pleadings on the part of the plaintiff in an action at law, being a formal and methodical specification of the facts and circumstances constituting his cause of action. It commonly comprises several sections or divisions, called "counts," and its formal parts follow each other in this order: Title, venue, commencement, cause of action, counts, conclusion. The declaration, at common law, answers to the "libel" in ecclesiastical and admiralty law, the "bill" in equity, the "petition" in civil law, the "complaint" in code pleading, and the "count" in real actions. U. S. v. Ambrose, 105 U. S. 336, 2 S. Ct. 882, 27 L. Ed. 746; Buckingham v. Murray, 7 Houst. (Del.) 176, 30 A. 779; Smith v. Fowlie, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 10; Railway Co. v. Augsburger, 30 Mo. 340, 38 A. 779, 39 L. R. A. 161; Dixon v. Surgeon. 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 28; 1 Chit. Pl. 248; Co. Litt. 17 s, 929 a; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (B); Comyns, Dig. Plead, C. 7; Lawes, Pl. 35; Steph. Pl. 36.

It may be general or special: for example, in debt on a bond, a declaration counting on the penal part only is general; one which sets out both the bond and the condition and assigns the breach is special; Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 59.

In Evidence

An unworn statement or narration of facts made by a party to the transaction, or by one who has an interest in the existence of the facts recounted. Also, similar statements made by a person since deceased, which are admissible in evidence in some cases, contrary to the general rule, e. g., "dying declarations" (see that subtitle, infra).

In Practice

The declaration or declaratory part of a judgment, decree, or order is that part which gives the decision or opinion of the court on the question of law in the case. Thus, in an action raising a question as to the construction of a will, the judgment or order declares that, according to the true construction of the will, the plaintiff has become entitled to the residue of the testator's estate, or the like. Sweet.

In Scots Practice

The statement of a criminal or prisoner, taken before a magistrate. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 555; 2 Hume 128; Arkl. Just. 70; Paterson, Comp. §§ 862, 970.

In General

—Declaration against interest. Such declarations are evidence of the fact declared, and are therefore distinct from admissions, which amount to a waiver of proof. Jelser v. White, 183 N. C. 126, 110 S. E. 849, 550.

—Declaration in chief. See Chief.

—Declaration of Independence. A formal declaration or announcement, promulgated July 4, 1776, by the congress of the United States of America, in the name and behalf of the people of the colonies, asserting and proclaiming their independence of the British crown, vindicating their pretensions to political autonomy, and announcing themselves to the world as a free and independent nation.

—Declaration of intention. A declaration made by an alien, as a preliminary to naturalization, before a court of record, to the effect that it is bona fide his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentiare, state, or sovereignty whereof at the time he may be a citizen or subject. Rev. St. § 2165.

—Declaration of London. A declaration concerning the laws of naval war, agreed upon February 26, 1909, by the powers assembled at the London Naval Conference.

The preamble states that the Declaration was made in view of the desirability of an agreement upon the rules to be applied by the International Prize Court established by the Second Hague Conference. A preliminary provision states that it is agreed that the rules adopted "correspond in substance with the generally recognized principles of international law." The subjects dealt with by the Declaration include: Blockade, Contraband, Unneutral Service, Destruction of Neutral Prizes, Transfer to Neutral Flag, Enemy Character, Convoy, Search, and Compensation. Higgins, 538-613.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)

Declaratory Statute

Declaration of Paris. The name given to an agreement announcing four important rules of international law effective between the principal European powers at the Congress of Paris in 1856. These rules are: (1) Privateering is and remains abolished; (2) the neutral flag covers enemy's goods, except contraband of war; (3) neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to confiscation under a hostile flag; (4) blockades, to be binding, must be effective.

Declaration of Right. See Bill of Rights.

Declaration of St. Petersburg. A declaration made at St. Petersburg in 1868 on behalf of certain of the powers in relation to the prohibition of the use of explosive bullets in time of war.

Declaration of Trust. The act by which the person who holds the legal title to property or an estate acknowledges and declares that he holds the same in trust to the use of another person for certain specified purposes. The name is also used to designate the deed or other writing embodying such a declaration. Griffith v. Maxfield, 66 Ark. 513, 51 S. W. 832. See Drovers Deposit Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Newgrass, 161 App. Div. 769, 147 N. Y. 8, 8; Baker v. Baker, 123 Md. 32, 90 A. 776, 779.

Declaration of War. A public and formal proclamation by a nation, through its executive or legislative department, that a state of war exists between itself and another nation, and forbidding all persons to aid or assist the enemy.

Dying declarations. Statements made by a person who is lying at the point of death, and is conscious of his approaching dissolution, in reference to the manner in which he received the injuries of which he is dying, or other immediate cause of his death, and in reference to the person who inflicted such injuries or the connection with such injuries of a person who is charged or suspected of having committed them; which statements are admissible in evidence in a trial for homicide (and occasionally, at least in some jurisdictions, in other cases) where the killing of the declarant is the crime charged to the defendant. Simons v. People, 150 Ill. 69, 30 N. E. 1010; State v. Trusty, 1 Pennewill (Del.) 319, 40 A. 769; State v. Jones, 47 La. Ann. 1524, 18 So. 315; Bell v. State, 72 Miss. 507, 17 So. 232; People v. Fuhrig, 127 Cal. 412, 99 P. 693; State v. Parham, 48 La. Ann. 1308, 20 So. 727; Ratliff v. State, 19 Ala. App. 505, 98 So. 493, 494; Frier v. State, 92 Fla. 241, 109 So. 334, 335; McKee v. State, 198 Ind. 590, 154 N. E. 372, 376; Lucas v. Commonwealth, 153 Ky. 424, 155 S. W. 721, 722; Rex v. Woodcock, 1 Leach (Eng.) 500. Edwards v. State, 113 Neb. 698, 204 N. W. 780, 783; People v. Selknes, 309 Ill. 113, 140 N. E. 852, 854.

Self-servings declaration. One made by a party in his own interest at some time and place out of court—not including testimony which he gives as witness at the trial. Brosnan v. Boggs, 101 Or. 472, 198 P. 890, 892.

Declarator. In Scotch law. An action whereby it is sought to have some right of property, or of status, or other right judicially ascertained and declared. Bell.

Declarator of Trust. An action resorted to against a trustee who holds property upon titles ex facie for his own benefit. Bell.

Declaratory. Explanatory; designed to fix or elucidate what before was uncertain or doubtful.

Declaratory Action. In Scotch law. An action in which the right of the pursuer (or plaintiff) is craved to be declared, but nothing claimed to be done by the defender (defendant). Ersk. Inst. 5, 1, 46. Otherwise called an "action of declarator."

Declaratory Decree. In practice. A binding declaration of right in equity without consequential relief.

Declaratory Judgment. One which simply declares the rights of the parties or expresses the opinion of the court on a question of law, without ordering anything to be done. Its distinctive characteristics are that no executory process follows as of course, nor is it necessary that an actual wrong, giving rise to action for damages, should have been done, or be immediately threatened. Petition of Kariher, 284 Pa. 455, 131 A. 265, 268.

Declaratory Part of a Law. That which clearly defines rights to be observed and wrongs to be eschewed.

Declaratory Statute. One enacted for the purpose of removing doubts or putting an end to conflicting decisions in regard to what the law is in relation to a particular matter. It may either be expressive of the common law (1 Bl. Comm. 86; Gray v. Bennett, 5 Metc. [Mass.] 527; In re Ungaro's Will, 102 A. 244, 246, 88 N. J. Eq. 25) or may declare what shall be taken to be the true meaning and intention of a previous statute, though in the latter case such enactments are more commonly called "expository statutes." McMahon v. Maddox (Tex. Civ. App.) 297 S. W. 310, 312.
DECLARE. To make known, manifest, or clear. Lessier v. Wright, 304 Ill. 130, 136 N. E. 545, 552, 28 A. L. R. 674. To signify, to show in any manner either by words or acts. Edwardson v. Gerwlen, 41 N. D. 506, 171 N. W. 101, 102. To publish; to utter; to announce clearly some opinion or resolution. Knecht v. Ins. Co., 90 Pa. 121, 55 Am. Rep. 641. To allege or affirm. State v. Hostetler (Mo. Sup.) 222 S. W. 750, 754. To solemnly assert a fact before witnesses, e. g., where a testator declaims a paper signed by him to be his last will and testament. Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 498.

This also is one of the words customarily used in the promise given by a person who is affirmed as a witness,—"sincerely and truly declare and affirm." Hence, to make a positive and solemn assurance. Bassett v. Donn, 17 N. J. Law, 432.

With reference to pleadings, it means to draw up, serve, and file a declaration; e. g., a "rule to declare." Also to allege in a declaration as a ground or cause of action; as "he declares upon a promissory note."

DECLINATION. In Scotch law. A plea to the jurisdiction, on the ground that the judge is interested in the suit.

DÉCLINAIRE. In French law. Pleas to the jurisdiction of the court; also of lia pendens, and of connecté, (q. v.)

DECLINATORY PLEA. In English practice. The plea of sanctuary, or of benefit of clergy, before trial or conviction. 2 Hale, P. C. 236; 4 Bl. Comm. 333. Now abolished. 6 & 7 Geo. IV, c. 28, § 6; Mozl. & W. Dict.; 4 Steph. Comm. 400, note; Id. 436, note.

DECLINATORE. In Scotch practice. An objection to the jurisdiction of a Judge. Bell.

DECOCTION. The act of boiling a substance in water, for extracting its virtues. The operation of boiling certain ingredients in a fluid for the purpose of extracting the parts soluble at that temperature. Also the liquor in which a substance has been boiled; water impregnated with the principles of any animal or vegetable substance boiled in it. Webster; Sykes v. Magone (C. C.) 38 F. 497.

In an indictment "decoction" and "infusion" are ejusdem generis; and if one is alleged to have been administered, instead of the other, the variance is immaterial. 3 Camp. 17.

DECOCTOR. In the Roman law. A bankrupt; a spendthrift; a squanderer of public funds. Calvin.

DECOLLATIO. In old English and Scotch law. Decollation; the punishment of beheading. Fleta lib. I, c. 21, § 6.

DECOMPOSED. This word, as used in the Food and Drugs Act June 30, 1906 (21 USCA § 8), means more than the beginning of decomposition; it refers to a state of decomposi-

DÉCONFES. In French law. A name formerly given to those persons who died without confession, whether they refused to confess or whether they were criminals to whom the sacrament was refused. Droit de Canon, par M. l'Abbé André; Dupin, Gloss. to Lescal's Institutes.

DECORATE. To beautify. To do something, as to a house as such, to improve the condition of the house, or of a room. Grasell v. Brodhead, 175 App. Div. 874, 162 N. Y. S. 421, 423.

DECOY. To inveigle, entice, tempt, or lure; as, to decoy a person within the jurisdiction of a court so that he may be served with process, or to decoy a fugitive criminal to a place where he may be arrested without extradition papers, or to decoy one away from his place of residence for the purpose of kidnapping him and as a part of that act. In all these uses, the word implies enticement or luring by means of some fraud, trick, or temptation, but excludes the idea of force. Eberling v. State, 136 Ind. 117, 35 N. E. 1023; John v. State, 6 Wyo. 203, 44 P. 51; Campbell v. Hudson, 106 Mich. 523, 64 N. W. 483.

Also, a "decoy pond." See that title, infra.

DECOY LETTER. A letter prepared and mailed for the purpose of detecting a criminal, particularly one who is perpetrating frauds upon the postal or revenue laws. U. S. v. Whittier, 5 Dill. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 16,688.

DECOY POND. A pond used for the breeding and maintenance of water-fowl. Keeble v. Hickeringshall, 3 Salk. 10; 11 Mod. 74, 130; Holt 14; 11 East 571.

DECREE. In Practice

The judgment of a court of equity or admiralty, answering for most purposes to the judgment of a court of common law. A decree in equity is a sentence or order of the court, pronounced on hearing and understanding all the points in issue, and determining the rights of all the parties to the suit, according to equity and good conscience. 2 Daniell, Oh. Pr. 896; Wooster v. Handy (C. C.) 23 F. 95; Rowley v. Van Benthuysen, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 383; Vance v. Rockwell, 3 Colo. 243; Halbert v. Alford (Tex. Sup.) 16 S. W. 814; Haney v. Neace-Stark Co., 109 Or. 219 P. 190, 191; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co. (D. C.) 232 F. 263, 265; Bull v. International Power Co., 84 N. J. Eq. 209, 93 A. 85, 88; Alford v. Leonard, 88 Fla. 532, 102 So. 885, 890. It is a declaration of the court.

As used in a statute establishing a minimum wage commission, the term “decrees” may be simply the equivalent of a counsel of the commission, succinctly stated. Holcombe v. Creamer, 281 Mass. 29, 129 N. E. 354, 355.

A decree, as distinguished from an order, is final, and is made at the hearing of the cause, whereas an order is interlocutory, and is made on motion or petition. Wherever an order may, in a certain event resulting from the direction contained in the order, lead to the termination of the suit in like manner as a decree made at the hearing, it is called a “decretal order.” Brown.

A judgment at law, as distinguished from a decree in equity, was either simply for the plaintiff or for the defendant. There could be no qualifications or modifications. But such a judgment does not always touch the true justice of the cause or put the parties in the position they ought to occupy. This result was attained by the decree of a court of equity which could be so moulded, or the execution of which could be so controlled and suspended, that the relative duties and rights of the parties could be secured and enforced. Biiph. Eq. § 7.

The words “judgment” and “decree,” however, are often used synonymously; Flinnell v. Flinnell, 113 Okl. 265, 230 P. 112, 113; especially now that the Codes have abolished the distinction between law and equity. Henderson v. Arkansas, 71 Okl. 285, 176 P. 781, 783. But of the two terms, “judgment” is the more comprehensive, and includes “decree.” Coleman v. Los Angeles County, 189 Cal. 714, 182 P. 440, 441.

Classification

Decrees in equity are either final or interlocutory. A final decree is one which fully and finally disposes of the whole litigation, determining all questions raised by the case, and leaving nothing that requires further judicial action. Sawyer v. White, 125 Me. 206, 132 A. 421, 422; Draper Corporation v. Stafford Co. (C. C. A.) 255 F. 554, 555; Johnson v. Merritt, 125 Va. 162, 109 S. E. 755, 759; Kline v. Murray, 79 Mont. 330, 257 P. 465, 467; Burgin v. Sugg, 210 Ala. 412, 97 So. 216, 217; Travis v. Waters, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 508; Mills v. Hoag, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 19, 31 Am. Dec. 271; Core v. Strickler, 24 W. Va. 689; Ex parte Crittenden, 10 Ark. 339; 1 Kent, 316. An interlocutory decree is a provisional or preliminary decree, which is not final and does not determine the suit, but directs some further proceedings preparatory to the final decree. It is a decree pronounced for the purpose of ascertaining matter of law or fact preparatory to a final decree. 1 Barc. Civ. Pr. 326, 327; Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 529, 530 Am. Dec. 634; Wooster v. Handy (C. C.) 23 F. 56; Beebe v. Russell, 19 How. 283, 15 L. Ed. 608; Jenkins v. Wild, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 543; Roeker v. Fidelity Trust Co., 196 Ind. 207, 151 N. E. 610, 613; Cornehy v. Markward, 131 U. S. 150, 9 S. Ct. 1714, 33 L. Ed. 117; Richmond v. Atwood, 32 F. 10, 2 C. C. A. 607, 17 L. R. A. 615; 2 Madd. 462; 1 Ch. Ca. 27; 2 Vern. 89; 4 Brown, P. C. 287. Where something more than the ministerial execution of the decree as rendered is left to be done, the decree is interlocutory, and not final, even though it settles the equities of the bill. Lodge v. Twell, 135 U. S. 232, 10 S. Ct. 745, 84 L. Ed. 133. The difficulty of exact definition is mentioned in McGourkey v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 538, 13 S. Ct. 170, 36 L. Ed. 1079. See, also, Keystone Manganese & Iron Co. v. Martin, 132 U. S. 91, 10 S. Ct. 32, 33 L. Ed. 276; Leyhe v. McNamara (Tex. Com. App.) 243 S. W. 1074, 1076.

In French Law

Certain acts of the Legislature or of the sovereign which have the force of law are called “decrees” as the Berlin and Milan decrees.

In Scotch Law

A final judgment or sentence of court by which the question at issue between the parties is decided.

In General

—Consent decree. One entered by consent of the parties; it is not properly a judicial sentence, but is in the nature of a solemn contract or agreement of the parties, made under the sanction of the court, and in effect an admission by them that the decree is a just determination of their rights upon the real facts of the case, if such facts had been proved. Allen v. Richardson, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 53; Kelly v. Milan (C. C.) 21 F. 482; Schmidt v. Mining Co., 28 Or. 9, 40 P. 1014, 52 Am. St. Rep. 759; Hodgson v. Vroom (C. C. A.) 266 F. 267, 268; Barnes v. American Fertilizer Co., 144 Va. 692, 130 S. E. 902, 911. It binds only the consenting parties; Myllius v. Smith, 53 W. Va. 173, 44 S. E. 542; and is not binding upon the court; Ex parte Lounge Jone (D. C.) 190 F. 261, 269.

—Decree nisi. A provisional decree, which will be made absolute on motion unless cause be shown against it. In English practice, it is the order made by the court for divorce, on satisfactory proof being given in support of a petition for dissolution of marriage; it remains imperfect for at least six months, (which period may be shortened by the court down to three,) and then, unless sufficient cause be shown, it is made absolute on motion, and the dissolution takes effect, subject to appeal. Wharton. It effects a conditional divorce, becoming absolute only upon the happening of a prescribed contingency. Grant v. Grant, 84 N. J. Eq. 81, 92 A. 791, 793.

—Decree of constitution. In Scotch practice. A decree by which a debt is ascertained. Bell. In technical language, a decree which is requisite to found a title in the person of the creditor, whether that necessity arises from the death of the debtor or of the creditor. Id.
---Decree of distribution. An instrument by which heirs receive property of a deceased; it is a final determination of the parties to a proceeding. Fischer v. Dolwig, 29 N. D. 561, 151 N. W. 431, 432.

---Decree of forthoming. In Scotch law. A decree made after an arrestment (q. v.) ordering the debt to be paid or the effects of the debtor to be delivered to the arresting creditor. Bell.

---Decree of insolvency. One entered in a probate court, declaring the estate in question to be insolvent, that is, that the assets are not sufficient to pay the debts in full. Bush v. Coleman, 121 Ala. 548, 25 So. 569; Walker v. Newton, 83 Me. 458, 27 A. 347.

---Decree of locality. In Scotch law. The decree of a teind court allocating stipend upon different heritors. It is equivalent to the apportionment of a tithe rent-charge.

---Decree of modification. In Scotch law. A decree of the teind court modifying or fixing a stipend.

---Decree of nullity. One entered in a suit for the annulment of a marriage, and adjudging the marriage to have been null and void ab initio. See Nullity.

---Decree of registration. In Scotch law. A proceeding giving immediate execution to the creditor; similar to a warrant of attorney to confess judgment.

---Decree pro confesso. One entered in a court of equity in favor of the complainant where the defendant has made no answer to the bill and its allegations are consequently taken "as confessed." Ohio Cent. R. Co. v. Central Trust Co., 133 U. S. 85, 10 S. Ct. 235, 33 L. Ed. 561; Equity Rules 16, 17, of the United States courts (28 USCA § 723); Freem. Judg. § 11; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 5th Am. ed. 517, n. It is merely an admission of the allegations of the bill well pleaded. Remington v. Barney, 35 R. I. 267, 86 A. 891, 892.

---Deficiency decree. In a mortgage foreclosure suit, a decree for the balance of the indebtedness after applying the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property to such indebtedness. Commercial Bank of Ocala v. First Nat. Bank, 80 Fla. 685, 87 So. 315, 316.

---DECRETAL ORDER. See Decree; Order.

---DECRETALES BONIFACII OCTAVI. A supplemental collection of the canon law, published by Boniface VIII. in 1238, called, also, "Libro Septimus Decretalium," (Sixth Book of the Decretals.)

---DECRETALES GREGORII NONI. The decrets of Gregory the Ninth. A collection of the laws of the church, published by order of Gregory IX. in 1227. It is composed of five books, subdivided into titles, and each title is divided into chapters. They are cited by using an X, (or extra;) thus "Cap. 8 X de Regulis Juris," etc.

---DECRETALS. In ecclesiastical law. Letters of the pope, written at the suit or instance of one or more persons, determining some point or question in ecclesiastical law, and possessing the force of law, within the Roman Catholic Church. The decreals form the second part of the body of canon law. This is also the title of the second of the two great divisions of the canon law, the first being called the "De cree," (decretum.)

---DECRETO. In Spanish colonial law. An order emanating from some superior tribunal, promulgated in the name and by the authority of the sovereign, in relation to ecclesiastical matters. Schm. Civil Law, 98, note.
DECRETUM.

In the Civil Law

A species of imperial constitution, being a judgment or sentence given by the emperor upon hearing of a cause (quo imperator cognoscens decrevit). Inst. 1, 2, 6.

In Canon Law

An ecclesiastical law, in contradistinction to a secular law, (lex.) 1 Mackeld. Civil Law, p. 81, § 93, (Kaufmann's note.)

DECRETUM GRATIANI. Gratian's decree, or decretum. A collection of ecclesiastical law in three books or parts, made in the year 1161, by Gratian, a Benedictine monk of Bologna, being the oldest as well as the first in order of the collections which together form the body of the Roman canon law. 1 Bl. Comm. 82; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 67.

DECROWNING. The act of depriving of a crown.

DECRY. To cry down; to deprive of credit.

"The king may at any time decry or cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current." 1 Bl. Comm. 278.

DECURIO. Lat. A decurion. In the provincial administration of the Roman empire, the decurions were the chief men or official personages of the large towns. Taken as a body, the decurions of a city were charged with the entire control and administration of its internal affairs; having powers both magisterial and legislative. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 54.

DEDANNA. In Saxon law. An actual homicide or manslaughter.

DEDI. (Lat. I have given.) A word used in deeds and other instruments of conveyance when such instruments were made in Latin, and anciently held to imply a warranty of title. Deakins v. Hollis, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 315.

DEDI ET CONCEII. I have given and granted. The operative words of conveyance in ancient charters of feoffment, and deeds of gift and grant; the English "given and granted" being still the most proper, though not the essential, words by which such conveyances are made. 2 Bl. Comm. 53, 316, 317; 1 Steph. Comm. 164, 177, 473, 474.

DEDICATE. To appropriate and set apart one's private property to some public use; as to make a private way public by acts evincing an intention to do so.

Express or Implied

A dedication may be express, as where the intention to dedicate is expressly manifested by a deed or an explicit oral or written declaration of the owner, or some other explicit manifestation of his purpose to devote the land to the public use. An implied dedication may be shown by some act or course of conduct on the part of the owner from which a reasonable inference of intent may be drawn, or which is inconsistent with any other theory than that he intended a dedication. Culver v. Salt Lake City, 27 Utah, 252, 75 P. 629; San Antonio v. Sullivan, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 57 S. W. 42; Kent v. Pratt, 73 Conn. 573, 48 A. 418; Hurley v. West St. Paul, 83 Minn. 401, 86 N. W. 427; People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. 223, 37 P. 208, 26 L. R. A. 659; Schmidt v. Town of Battle Creek, 188 Iowa, 360, 175 N. W. 517, 519; Porter v. City of Stuttgart, 135 Ark. 48, 204 S. W. 607, 608; H. A. Hiller Co. v. Behr, 264 Ill. 508, 106 N. E. 451, 459; Christianson v. Caldwell, 152 Wis. 135, 139 N. W. 751, 752; Bennington County v. Town of Manchester, 87 Vt. 555, 90 A. 502, 503; Hedge v. Cavender, 217 Ky. 524, 290 S. W. 342, 343; Village of Bend v. Dorsey, 311 Ill. 192, 142 N. E. 563, 565; Burk v. Diers, 102 Neb. 721, 109 N. W. 263, 264; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bennett (C. C. A.) 296 F. 436, 437.

Common-Law or Statutory

A common-law dedication is one made as above described, and may be either express

In Copyright Law

The first publication of a work, without having secured a copyright, is a dedication of it to the public; that having been done, any one may republish it. Bartlett v. Crittenden, 5 McLean, 32, Fed. Cas. No. 1,076.

DEDICATION-DAY. The feast of dedication of churches, or rather the feast day of the saint and patron of a church, which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by those of all the neighboring villages, who usually came thither; and such assemblies were allowed as lawful. It was usual for the people to feast and to drink on these days. Cowell.

DEDIMUS ET CONCESSIONIS (Lat. We have given and granted.) Words used by the king, or where there were more grantors than one, instead of dedi et concedi.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM. (We have given power.) In English practice. A writ or commission issuing out of chancery, empowering the persons named therein to perform certain acts, as to administer oaths to defendants in chancery and take their answers, to administer oaths of office to justices of the peace, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 447. It was anciently allowed for many purposes not now in use, as to make an attorney, to take the acknowledgment of a fine, etc.

In the United States, a commission to take testimony is sometimes termed a "dedimus potestatem." Buddleman v. Kirk, 3 Cranch, 265, 2 L. Ed. 444; Sergeant's Lessee v. Biddle, 4 Wheat. 508, 4 L. Ed. 627.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNO FACIENDO. In old English practice. A writ, issued by royal authority, empowering an attorney to appear for a defendant. Prior to the statute of Westminster 2, a party could not appear in court by attorney without this writ.

DEDITION. The act of yielding up anything; surrender.

DEDITITII. In Roman law. Criminals who had been marked in the face or on the body with fire or an iron, so that the mark could not be erased, and subsequently manumitted. Calvin.

DEDUCTION. By "deduction" is understood a portion or thing which an heir has a right to take from the mass of the succession before any partition takes place. Civil Code La. art. 1398.

DEDUCTION FOR NEW. In marine insurance. An allowance or drawback credited to the insurers on the cost of repairing a vessel for damage arising from the perils of the sea insured against. This allowance is usually one-third, and is made on the theory that the parts restored with new materials are better, in that proportion than they were before the damage.

DEED. At common law, a sealed instrument, containing a contract or covenant, delivered by the party to be bound thereby, and accepted by the party to whom the contract or covenant runs. Co. Litt. 171; 2 Bl. Comm. 295; Shepp. Touchst. 50.

In a more restricted sense, a written instrument, signed, sealed, and delivered, by which one person conveys land, tenements, or herdements to another. This is its ordinary modern meaning, at least in those jurisdictions which adhere to the common-law rule making a seal essential to the validity and operative effect of a deed of conveyance. 18 C. J. 191; Sanders v. Riedinger, 30 App. Div. 277, 51 N. Y. S. 937; Reed v. Hazleton, 37 Kan. 321, 15 P. 177; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 470; Fisher v. Pender, 32 N. C. 455; McMee v. Henry, 163 Ky. 729, 174 S. W. 746, 747; Dunham v. Marsh, 52 N. J. Eq. 296, 30 A. 473, 474; Hood v. Fletcher, 31 Ariz. 450, 254 P. 222, 224; Wilson v. Beck (Tex. Civ. App.) 296 S. W. 315, 320.

A writing under seal by which lands, tenements, or herdements are conveyed for an estate not less than a freehold. 2 Bl. Comm. 294.

The term may include a mortgage of real estate. Lockridge v. McCommon, 59 Tex. 324, 38 S. W. 33, 34 (citing Hellman v. Howard, 44 Cal. 110); Parsons v. Denis (C. C.) 7 F. 337; Daily v. Minnesota Loan & Investment Co., 43 Minn. 517, 45 N. W. 1190, 1191; People v. Caton, 25 Mich. 388, 391; Pfaff v. Jones, 50 Md. 283, 271; Morgan v. Wickiff, 115 Ky. 296, 72 S. W. 1182. But, contra, see Eaton v. White, 28 Wis. 517, 519; National Bank of Columbus v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co., 62 Ohio St. 564, 57 N. E. 450; Bucklin v. Bucklin, 40 N. Y. (1 Keyes) 141, 145. Similarly a lease for years under seal may be a deed. Hutchinson v. Brabham, 42 N. J. Eq. 372, 7 A. 973, 976. And a lease exceeding twenty-one years is held to be within the same statutes as a fee simple estate. Congregational Church of Southbridge v. Congregation of Plymouth v. Kingston Coal Co., 221 Pa. 349, 70 A. 829, 839. But a stipulation for a deed prohibiting drilling for oil or gas was held not to include a lease. Test Oil Co. v. La Tourrette, 15 Okl. 214, 91 P. 1025, 1029.

The essential difference between a "deed" and a "will" is that the former passes a present interest and the latter passes no interest until after the death of the maker. Willis v. Fivesh (Tex. Civ. App.) 297 S. W. 368, 510; Taylor v. Purdy, 151 Ky. 82, 151 S. W. 45, 46; Harber v. Harber, 152 Ga. 98, 105 S. E. 529; Henderson v. Henderson, 210 Ala. 47, 77 So. 593, 596, 372; Pifer v. Stoddill, 157 N. C. 465, 63 S. E. 583, 584; Bowdoin College v. Merrill (C. C.) 75 F. 480, 483; Ellis v. Pearson, 104 Tenn. 591, 58 S. W. 318; Mc Daniels v. Jones, 45 Miss. 822, 841; Harleston v. Reed, 45 Kan. 73, 28 P. 450, 451, 25 Am. St. Rep. 86. A will is "an instrument by which a person makes the disposition of his property to take effect after his decease, which is in its own nature ambulatory and revocable during his life. It is this ambulatory quality which forms the characteristic of wille; for, though a disposition by deed may postpone the possession or enjoyment, or even the vesting, until the death of the disposing party, yet the postponement is in such case produced by the express terms, and does not result from the nature of the instrument." In re Hall's Estate, 149 Cal. 145, 84 P. 839, 840; Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 155 N. Y. 465, 57 N. E. 338, 341 (quoting and adopting definition in Jarmann, p. 35). The main thing, however, whether a writing is a will or deed, is the animus testandi. Belgrade v. Carter (Tex. Civ. App.) 146 S. W. 964, 965; McLain v. Garrison, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 88 S. W. 484, 88 S. W. 244 (citing Gilham v. Moxon, 42 Ala. 366; Trawick v. Davis, 85 Ala. 345, 5 So. 83); Cribs v. Walker, 74 Ark. 104, 88 S. W. 244, 246; Eklar's Adm'r v. Robinson (Ky.) 96 S. W. 845, 846; Harber v. Harber, 152 Ga. 98, 108 S. E. 200. "Deeds" are irrevocable and take effect by delivery, while "wills" are always revocable during testamentary capacity and take effect only after parties' death. Self v. Self, 213 Ala. 812, 108 So. 524, 524. If a document cannot be revoked or impaired by the grantor, it is a "deed," but if the grantor revokes an unqualified power of revocation, it is a "will." Craft v. Moon, 201 Ala. 11, 75 So. 302, 303. An instrument purporting to convey title to lands on its delivery is a deed and not a will, though possession be deferred until the grantor's death. Loveless v. Case (Tex. Civ. App.) 196 S. W. 632, 633.

The term is also used as synonymous with "fact," "actuality," or "act of parties." Thus a thing "in deed" is one that has been really or expressly done; as opposed to "in law," which means that it is merely implied or presumed to have been done.

—Deed indented, or indenture. In conveyancing. A deed executed or purporting to be executed in parts, between two or more parties, and distinguished by having the edge of the paper or parchment on which it is written indented or cut at the top in a particular manner. This was formerly done at the top or side, in a line resembling the teeth of a saw; a formality derived from the ancient practice of dividing chirographs; but the cutting is now made either in a waving line, or more commonly by notching or nicking the paper at the edge. 2 Bl. Comm. 295, 296; Litt. § 370; Smith, Cont. 12.

—Deed of covenant. Covenants are sometimes entered into by a separate deed, for title, or for the indemnity of a purchaser or mortgagee, or for the production of title-deeds. A covenant with a penalty is sometimes taken for the payment of a debt, instead of a bond with a condition, but the legal remedy is the same in either case.

—Deed of release. One releasing property from the incumbence of a mortgage or similar pledge upon payment or performance of the conditions; more specifically, where a deed of trust to one or more trustees has been executed, pledging real property for the payment of a debt or the performance of other conditions, substantially as in the case of a mortgage, a deed of release is the conveyance executed by the trustees, after payment or performance, for the purpose of divesting themselves of the legal title and revesting it in the original owner. See Swain v. McMillan, 30 Mont. 483, 76 Pac. 943.

—Deed of separation. An instrument by which, through the medium of some third person acting as trustee, provision is made by a husband for separation from his wife and for her separate maintenance. Whitney v. Whitney, 15 Misc. 72, 36 N. Y. S. 891, 892.

—Deed of settlement. A deed formerly used in England for the formation of joint stock companies constituting certain persons trustees of the partnership property and containing regulations for the management of its private affairs. They are now regulated by articles of association.

—Deed of trust. An instrument in use in many states, taking the place and serving the uses of a common-law mortgage, by which the legal title to real property is placed in one or more trustees, to secure the repayment of a sum of money or the performance of other conditions. Bank v. Pierce, 144 Cal. 434, 77 Pac. 1012. See Trust Deed.

—Deed poll. A deed which is made by one party only. See Hawkins v. Corbit, 83 Okl. 275, 201 P. 640, 653. A deed in which only the party making it executes it or binds himself by it as a deed. 3 Washb. R. P. 311. It was originally so called because the edge of the paper or parchment was polled or cut in a straight line, wherein it was distinguished from a deed indented or indenture. As to a special use of this term in Pennsylvania in colonial times, see Herron v. Dater, 120 U. S. 464, 7 S. Ct. 620, 624, 30 L. Ed. 748 (citing Evans v. Patterson, 71 U. S. [4 Wall.] 224, 18 L. Ed. 893).

—Deed to lead uses. A deed made before a fine or common recovery, to show the object thereof.

—Gratuitous deed. One made without consideration. 2 Steph. Comm. 47.

As to “Quitclaim” deed, “Tax” deed, “Trust” deed, and “Warranty” deed, see those titles.

DEEMSTERS. Judges in the Isle of Man, who decide all controversies without process, writings, or any charges. These judges are chosen by the people, and are said by Spelman to be two in number. Spelman.

DEER—FALD. A park or fold for deer.

DEER—HAYES. Engines or great nets made of cord to catch deer. 19 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

DEFACE. To mar or destroy the face (that is, the physical appearance of written or inscribed characters as expressive of a definite meaning) of a written instrument, signature, inscription, etc., by obliteration, erasure, cancellation, or superinscription, so as to render it illegible or unrecognizable. Linney v. State, 6 Tex. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 756. See Cancel. In re Parsons’ Will, 135 N. Y. S. 742, 745, 119 Misc. 26. Also used in respect of injury to monument, buildings and other structures. Saffell v. State, 113 Ark. 27, 167 S. W. 453.

DEFACTION. The act of a defaulter; misappropriation of trust funds or money held in any fiduciary capacity; failure to properly account for such funds. Usually spoken of officers of corporations or public officials. In re Butts (D. C.) 120 F. 970; Crawford v. Burke, 201 Ill. 581, 66 N. E. 833.

Also set-off. The diminution of a debt or claim by deducting from it a smaller claim held by the debtor or payor. Iron Works v. Cuppy, 41 Iowa, 104; Hook v. Foley, 2 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 250; McDonald v. Lee, 12 La. 455.

DEFALK. To set off one claim against another; to deduct a debt due from one to a debt which one owes. Johnson v. Signal Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 79, 40 A. 193; Pepper v. Warren, 2 Marv. (Del.) 225, 43 A. 91; Burris v. Boone, 4 Boyce (Del.) 148, 86 A. 730. This verb corresponds only to the second meaning of “defalcation” as given above; a public officer or trustee who misappropriates or embezzles funds in his hands is not said to “defalk.”

DEFAMATORY PER QUOD. In respect of words: Those which require an allegation of facts, aside from the words contained in the article, by way of innuendo, to show wherein the words used libel the plaintiff, in order to state a cause of action in a complaint. Rowan v. Gazette Printing Co., 74 Mont. 326, 229 P. 1035, 1037.

DEFACTO. In respect of words: Those which by themselves, and as such, without reference to extrinsic proof, injure the reputation of the person to whom they are applied. Manley v. Harer, 73 Mont. 235, 235 P. 737, 738.

DEFAMATION PER SE. In respect of words: Those which by themselves, and as such, without reference to extrinsic proof, injure the reputation of the person to whom they are applied. Manley v. Harer, 73 Mont. 235, 235 P. 737, 738.

DEFAMES. L. Fr. Infamous. Brit. c. 15.

In Practice
Omission; neglect or failure of any party to take step required of him in progress of cause. When a defendant in an action at law omits to plead within the time allowed him for that purpose, or fails to appear on the trial, he is said to make default, and the judgment entered in the former case is technically called a "judgment by default." 3 Bl. Comm. 306; 1 Tidd, Pr. 562; Page v. Sutton, 29 Ark. 306; Gregson v. Superior Court, 46 R. I. 362, 128 A. 221, 222.

In General
—Default of issue. Failure to have living children or descendants at a given time or fixed point. George v. Morgan, 16 Pa. 106; In re Van Cleef, 167 N. Y. S. 549, 551, 92 Misc. 689.
—Defaultor. One who makes default. One who misappropriates money held by him in an official or fiduciary character, or fails to account for such money.
—Judgment by default. One entered upon the failure of a party to appear or plead at the time appointed. See Judgment.

DEFEASANCE. An instrument which defeats the force or operation of some other deed or estate. That which is in the same deed is called a "condition"; and that which is in another deed is a "defeasance." Com. Dig. "Defeasance." Belendorf v. Thorpe, 90 Okl. 191, 203 P. 475, 477; In re Sachs (D. C.) 21 P. (2d) 984, 986; Mason v. Finley, 129 S. C. 367, 124 S. E. 780, 782; McCremon v. National Bank of Savannah, 25 Ga. App. 825, 105 S. E. 44, 45; Kinney v. Heatherington, 38 Okl. 74, 533 P. 1078, 1082.

In Conveyancing
A collateral deed made at the same time with a foemment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. 2 Bl. Comm. 327; Co. Litt. 236, 237.

DEFEASIBLE. Subject to be defeated, annulled, revoked, or undone upon the happening of a future event or the performance of a condition subsequent, or by a conditional limitation. Usually spoken of estates and interests in land. For instance, a mortgagee's estate is defeasible (liable to be defeated) by the mortgagor's equity of redemption. Penick v. Atkinson, 139 Ga. 649, 77 S. E. 1055, 1057, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 841; Elkins v. Thompson, 155 Ky. 91, 159 S. W. 617, 618; Robb's Guardian v. Orms's Ex'r, 164 Ky. 752, 176 S. W. 221, 223; Cooper's Adm'r v. Clarke, 192 Ky. 404, 233 S. W. 881, 882; Murphy v. Murphy, 182 Ky. 731, 207 S. W. 491, 493.

DEFEASIBLE FEE. An estate in fee that is liable to be defeated by some future contingency; e.g., a vested remainder which might be defeated by the death of the remainderman before the time fixed for the taking effect of the devise. Forsythe v. Lansing, 109 Ky. 518, 50 S. W. 504; Wills v. Willis, 85 Ky. 486, 3 S. W. 900.

DEFEASIBLE TITLE. One that is liable to be annulled or made void, but not one that is already void or an absolute nullity. Elder v. Schumacher, 18 Colo. 433, 33 P. 175.

DEFEAT. To prevent, frustrate, or circumvent; as in the phrase "hinder, delay, or defeat creditors." Coleman v. Walker, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 65, 77 Am. Dec. 163; Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 581; Reiff-Griffin Decorating Co. v. Wilkes, 191 S. W. 443, 446, 173 Ky. 566. To overcome or prevail against in any contest; as in speaking of the "defeated party" in an action at law. Wood v. Bailey, 21 Wall. 612, 22 L. Ed. 689; Goff v. Wilburn (Ky.) 79 S. W. 233.

To annul, undo, or terminate; as, a title or estate. See Defeasible.

DEFECT. The want or absence of some legal requisite; deficiency; imperfection; insufficiency. Haney-Campbell Co. v. Creamery
DEFFECT IN HIGHWAY OR STREET

DEFFECT IN MACHINERY. Under Code 1907, § 3910, subd. 1, making the master liable for injury from defects in the condition of works or machinery, it is essential that there be inherent condition of a permanent nature which unites machines for its use, some weakness of construction with reference to the proposed uses, some misplacement of parts, or the absence of some part, some innate abnormal quality rendering its use dangerous, or some obstacle to the use or the way of use which is part of the condition of the machinery itself. Caldwell-Watson Foundry & Machine Co. v. Watson, 183 Ala. 326, 62 So. 839, 862.

DEFFECT OF FORM. An imperfection in the style, manner, arrangement, or non-essential parts of a legal instrument, plea, Indictment, etc., as distinguished from a "defect of substance." See infra.

DEFFECT OF PARTIES. In pleading and practice. Insufficiency of the parties before a court in any given proceeding to give it jurisdiction and authority to decide the controversy, arising from the omission or failure to join plaintiffs or defendants who should have been brought in; never applied to a superfluity of parties or the improper addition of plaintiffs or defendants. Mader v. Plano Mfg. Co., 17 S. D. 533, 97 N. W. 843; Railroad Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 603; Palmer v. Davis, 28 N. Y. 245; Beach v. Water Co., 23 Mont. 579, 55 P. 111; Weatherby v. Melkildejohn, 61 Wis. 97, 20 N. W. 574; Stinchcomb v. Patterson, 96 Okl. 80, 197 P. 619, 629; Bald v. Meyer, 55 N. D. 539, 215 N. W. 542, 544, 56 A. L. R. 178; Fisher v. Colliver, 121 Or. 172, 254 P. 815, 816; Harris v. Cheatham (Sup.) 180 N. Y. S. 106, 108; Rich v. Fry, 196 Ind. 305, 146 N. E. 393, 396; Gagle v. Besser, 162 Iowa, 227, 144 N. W. 3, 4; Wolf v. Eppenstein, 71 Or. 1, 140 P. 751, 754; Aaron v. Security Inv. Co., 51 S. D. 53, 211 N. W. 965, 967; Ramsey v. Hughes, 212 Ky. 715, 280 S. W. 99, 100; Kirton v. Howard, 137 S. C. 11, 134 S. E. 859, 869.

DEFFECT OF SUBSTANCE. An imperfection in the body or substantive part of a legal instrument, plea, indictment, etc., consisting in the omission of something which is essential to be set forth. State v. Startup, 39 N. J. L. 432; Flexner v. Dickerson, 65 Ala. 132.

DEFFECTIVE. Lacking in some particular which is essential to the completeness, legal sufficiency, or security of the object spoken of; as a "defective" highway or bridge (Munson v. Derby, 37 Conn. 310, 9 Am. Rep. 332; Whitney v. Ticonderoga, 53 Hun, 214, 6 N. Y. S. 844); machinery (Machinery Co. v. Brady, 60 Ill. App. 379; Riede v. Town of Plainville, 106 Conn. 61, 136 A. 872, 873; Horton v. Macdonald, 105 Conn. 356, 135 A. 412, 444; Cheney v. Village of Riverton, 104 Neb. 159, 177 N. W. 845, 846, 10 A. L. R. 214; Pasold v. Town of Dewitt, 198 Iowa, 966, 200 N. W. 395; Bryan v. City of West Palm Beach, 75 Fla. 19, 77 So. 527; Detroit Automatic Scale Co. v. G. B. R. Smith Milling Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 327 S. W. 967; writ or recognizance (State v. Lavalle, 9 Mo. 536; McArthur v. Boynton, 19 Colo. App. 234, 74 P. 542); or title (Copertini v. Oppermann, 76 Cal. 181, 15 P. 256).

DEFFECTIVE OR INSUFFICIENT SPECIFICATIONS BY PATENTEE. Any failure either to describe or to claim the complete invention upon which the application for patent is founded. Robert v. Kremencz (C. C. A.) 243 F. 877, 881.

DEFFECTUS. Lat. Defect; default; want; imperfection; disqualification.
Challenge Propter Defectum

A challenge to a juror on account of some legal disqualification, such as infancy, etc. See Challenge.

Defectus Sanguinis

Failure of the blood, i.e., failure or want of issue.

DEFEND. To prohibit or forbid. To deny. To contest and endeavor to defeat a claim or demand made against one in a court of justice. Boehmer v. Irrigation Dist. 117 Cal. 19, 48 P. 508. To oppose, repel, or resist.

In covenants of warranty in deeds, it means to protect, to maintain or keep secure, to guaranty, to agree to indemnify.

In common usage, this term is applied to the party put upon his defense, or summoned to answer a charge or complaint, in any species of action, civil or criminal, at law or in equity. Strictly, however, it does not apply to the person against whom a real action is brought, for in that proceeding the technical usage is to call the parties respectively the "defendant" and the "plaintiff."

Defendant in error. The distinctive term appropriate to the party against whom a writ of error is sued out.

Principal defendant. One who has an interest in the controversy presented by the bill, and whose presence is requisite to the complete and partial adjudication of the controversy. Bird v. Sleppy, 265 Pa. 295, 105 A. 618, 619.

DEFENDARE. To answer for; to be responsible for. Medley.

DEFENSEMUS. Lat. A word used in grants and donations, which binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Bract. 1. 2, c. 16.

DEFENDER. (Fr.) To deny; to defend; to conduct a suit for a defendant; to forbid; to prevent; to protect.

DEFENDER. In Scotch and canon law. A defendant.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH. A peculiar title belonging to the sovereign of England, as that of "Catholic" to the king of Spain, and that of "Most Christian" to the king of France. These titles were originally given by the popes of Rome; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo X. on King Henry VIII., as a reward for writing against Martin Luther; and the bull for it bears date quinto Idus Octobr., 1521. Enc. Lond.

DEFENDERE SE PER CORPUS SUUM. To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Abolished by 59 Geo. III. § 46. See Battel.

DEFENDERE UNICAM MANU. To wage law; a denial of an accusation upon oath. See Wager of Law.

DEFENDIT VIM ET INJURIAM. He defends the force and injury. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 39, § 1.

DEFENDOUR. L. Fr. A defender or defendant; the party accused in an appeal. Brit. c. 22.

DEFENGERATION. The act of lending money on usury.

DEFESA. In old English law. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property and peculiar for that use and service. Cowell.

DEFENSE. That which is offered and alleged by the party proceeded against in an action or suit, as a reason in law or fact why the plaintiff should not recover or establish what he seeks; what is put forward to defeat an action. More properly what is sufficient when offered for this purpose. In either of these senses it may be either a denial, justification, or confession and avoidance of the facts averred as a ground of action, or an exception to their sufficiency in point of law. Whitfield v. Insurance Co. (C.C.) 125 F. 270; Miller v. Martin, 8 N. J. Law, 204; Baier v. Humphall, 16 Neb. 127, 20 N. W. 108; Railroad Co. v. Hinchcliffe, 34 Misc. 49, 68 N. Y. S. 556; Brower v. Nellis, 6 Ind. App. 323, 33 N. E. 672; Waterford Lumber Co. v. Jacobs, 132 Miss. 638, 97 So. 187, 189; State v. Norman, 103 Ohio St. 541, 134 N. E. 474; First State Bank of Hazen v. Radke, 51 N. D. 246, 199 N. W. 690, 697, 55 A. L. R. 1355.

In a stricter sense, defense is used to denote the answer made by the defendant to the plaintiff's action, by demurrer or plea at law or answer in equity. This is the meaning of the term in Scotch law. Ersk. Inst. 4, 1, 66.

Half defense was that which was made by the term "defends the force and injury, and says," (defendit vim et injuriam, et dicit.)

Full defense was that which was made by the form "defends the force and the injuries when and where it shall behave him, and the damages, and whatever else he ought to defend," (defendit eum et injuriis quando et ubi curia consideravit, et damnum et quicquid quod ipsae defendere debet, et dicere,) commonly shortened into "defends the force and injury when," etc. Glib. Com. Pl. 188; 2 Term. 632; 3 Bos. & P. 9, note; Co. Litt. 127a.

In matrimonial suits, in England, defenses are divided into absolute, 4 e., such as, being established to the satisfaction of the court, are a complete answer to the petition, so that the court can exercise no discretion, but is bound to dismiss the petition; and discretionary, or such as, being established, leave to the court a discretion whether it will pronounce a decree or dismiss the petition. Thus, in a suit for dissolution, condonation is an absolute, adultery by the petitioner a discretionary, defense. Brown, Div. 30.

Defense also means the forcible repelling of an attack made unlawfully with force and violence.

In old statutes and records, the term means prohibition; denial or refusal. Encontre le defense et le commandement de roy; against the prohibition and commandment of the king. St. Westm. 1, c. 1. Also a state of severity, or of several or exclusive occupancy; a state of inclosure.

Affidavit of Defense
See Affidavit.

Affirmative Defense
See that title.

Equitable Defense
In English practice, a defense to an action on grounds which, prior to the passage of the common-law procedure act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), would have been cognizable only in a court of equity. In American practice, a defense which is cognizable in a court of equity, but which is available there only, and not in an action at law, except under the reformed codes of practice. Kelly v. Hurt, 74 Mo. 570; New York v. Holmes, 44 Misc. 509, 90 N. Y. S. 69.

Frivolous Defense
One which at first glance can be seen to be merely pretensive, setting up some ground which cannot be sustained by argument. Dominion Nat. Bank v. Olympia Cotton Mills (C. C.) 128 F. 152.

Legal Defense
(1) A defense which is complete and adequate in point of law. (2) A defense which may be set up in a court of law; as distinguished from an "equitable defense," which is cognizable only in a court of equity or court possessing equitable powers.

Meritorious Defense
One going to the merits, substance, or essentials of the case, as distinguished from dilatory or technical objections. Cooper v. Lumber Co., 61 Ark. 36, 31 S. W. 981.

Partial Defense
One which goes only to a part of the cause of action, or which only tends to mitigate the damages to be awarded. Carter v. Bank, 33 Misc. 128, 67 N. Y. S. 300.

Peremptory Defense
A defense which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined. 4 Bouv. Inst. No. 4296.

Pretermitted Defense
One which was available to a party and of which he might have had the benefit if he had pleaded it in due season, but which cannot afterwards be heard as a basis for affirmative relief. Swennes v. Sprain, 120 Wis. 68, 97 N. W. 511.

Sham Defense
A false or fictitious defense, interposed in bad faith, and manifestly untrue, insufficient, or irrelevant on its face.

Self-defense
See that title.

DÉFENSE AU FOND EN DROIT (called, also, défense en droit). A demurrer. 2 Low. C. 278. See, also, 1 Low. C. 216.

DÉFENSE AU FOND EN FAIT. The general issue. 3 Low. C. 421.

DEFENSIVA. In old English law. A lord or earl of the marches, who was the warden and defender of his country. Cowell.

DEFENSIVE ALLEGATION. In English ecclesiastical law. A species of pleading, where the defendant, instead of denying the plaintiff's charge upon oath, has any circumstances to offer in his defense. This entitles him, in his turn, to the plaintiff's answer upon oath, upon which he may proceed to proofs as well as his antagonist. 3 Bl. Comm. 100; 3 Steph. Comm. 720.

DEFENSIVE WAR. A war in defense of, or for the protection of, national rights. It may be defensive in its principles, though offensive in its operations. 1 Kent, Comm. 69, note.

DEFENSO. That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn or hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was ancetly said to be in defense; so of any meadow ground that was laid in for hay only. The same term was applied to a wood where part was inclosed or fenced, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Cowell.
DEFENSOR.

In the Civil Law
A defender; one who assumed the defense of another's case in court. Also an advocate. A tutor or curator.

In Canon Law
The advocate or patron of a church. An officer who had charge of the temporalities of the church.

In Old English Law
A guardian, defender, or protector. The defendant in an action. A person vouched in to warranty.

In General
—Defensor civitatis. Defender or protector of a city or munipendency. An officer under the Roman empire, whose duty it was to protect the people against the injustice of the magistrates, the insolence of the subaltern officers, and the rapacity of the money-lenders. Schm. Civil Law, Introd. 16; Cod. 1, 55, 4. He had the powers of a judge, with jurisdiction of pecuniary causes to a limited amount, and the lighter species of offenses. Cod. 1, 55, 1; Nov. 15, c. 2, § 2; Id. c. 6, § 1; He had also the care of the public records, and powers similar to those of a notary in regard to the execution of wills and conveyances.

—Defensor fidei. Defender of the faith. See Defender.

DEFERRED. Delayed; put off; remanded; postponed to a future time.

DEFERRED LIFE ANNUITIES. In English law. Annuities for the life of the purchaser, but not commencing until a date subsequent to the date of buying them, so that, if the purchaser die before that date, the purchase money is lost. Granted by the commissioners for reduction of the national debt. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, § 2. Wharton.

DEFERRED STOCK. See Stock.

DEFICIENCY. A lack, shortage, or insufficiency. The difference between the total amount of the debt or payment meant to be secured by a mortgage and that realized on foreclosure and sale when less than the total. A judgment or decree for the amount of such deficiency is called a "deficiency judgment" or "decree." Goldsmith v. Brown, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 492.

Technically speaking, there is no such thing under our law as a "deficiency judgment" in the sense that a formal judgment of that description is rendered by the court, or entered by the clerk for the amount not made by the sale of the mortgaged property. There is only the original judgment for the full amount of the indebtedness, upon which a deficiency may exist after the issuance and return of the special execution, or even perhaps of one or more general executions in addition. It has nevertheless been customary in ordinary parlance to refer to the amount still due after the return of the special execution as a "deficiency judgment." Bank of Douglas v. Neel, 30 Ariz. 276, 247 P. 132, 134.

DEFICIENCY BILL. In parliamentary practice, an appropriation bill covering items of expense omitted from the general appropriation bill or bills, or for which insufficient appropriations were made. If intended to cover a variety of such items, it is commonly called a "general deficiency bill." If intended to make provision for expenses which must be met immediately, or which cannot wait the ordinary course of the general appropriation bills, it is called an "urgent deficiency bill."

Deficiente uno sanguine non potest esse heres. 3 Coke, 41. One blood being wanting, he cannot be heir. But see 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 9, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, § 1.

DEFICIT. Something wanting, generally in the accounts of one intrusted with money, or in the money received by him. Mutual L. & B. Ass'n v. Price, 19 Fla. 135.

DEFILE. To debauch, deflower, or corrupt the chastity of a woman. The term does not necessarily imply force or ravishment, nor does it connote previous immanuteness. State v. Montgomery, 79 Iowa, 737, 45 N. W. 292; State v. Fernald, 88 Iowa, 633, 55 N. W. 594.

DEFILEMENT. Uncleanliness; impurity; corruption of morals or conduct. Young v. State, 194 Ind. 221, 141 N. E. 309, 311.

DEFINE. To explain or state the exact meaning of words and phrases; to settle, to establish or prescribe authoritatively, to make clear, to establish boundaries. U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. 186; 5 L. Ed. 57; Walters v. Richards, 98 Ky. 374, 20 S. W. 270; Miller v. Improvement Co., 99 Va. 747, 40 S. E. 27, 86 Am. St. Rep. 924; Gould v. Hutchins, 10 Me. 145. To declare that a certain act shall constitute an offense is defining that offense; U. S. v. Arjona, 120 U. S. 488, 7 S. Ct. 628, 30 L. Ed. 725; Guy L. Wallace & Co. v. Ferguson, 70 Or. 306, 141 P. 542; State v. Gardner, 151 La. 874, 92 So. 368, 370; Morrison v. Farmers' & Traders' State Bank, 70 Mont. 146, 225 P. 123, 125.

"An examination of our Session Laws will show that acts have frequently been passed, the constitutionality of which has never been questioned, where the powers and duties conferred could not be considered as merely explaining or making more clear those previously conferred or attempted to be, although the word 'define' was used in the title. In legislation it is frequently used in the creation, enlarging, and extending the powers and duties of boards and officers, in defining certain offenses and providing punishment for the same, and thus enlarging and extending the scope of the criminal law. And it is properly used in the title where the object of the act is to determine or fix boundaries, more especially where a dispute has arisen concerning them. It is used between different governments, as to define the extent of a kingdom or country. People v. Bradley, 36 Mich. 462.

A definite failure of issue occurs when a precise time is fixed by a will for a failure of issue. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue of the first taker shall become extinct and when there shall no longer be any issue of the grantee, but without reference to a particular time or event; Buxford v. Milligan, 50 Ind. 546; Mc-Williams v. Havel, 234 Ky. 329, 283 S. W. 103, 105.

DEFINITIO. Lat. Definition, or, more strictly, limiting or bounding; as in the maxim of the civil law: Omnia definitio periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit, (Dig. 50, 17, 202;) i. e., the attempt to bring the law within the boundaries of precise definitions is hazardous, as there are but few cases in which such a limitation cannot be subverted.

DEFINITION. A description of a thing by its properties; an explanation of the meaning of a word or term. Webster. The process of stating the exact meaning of a word by means of other words. Worcester. See War-ner v. Beers, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 155; Marvin v. State, 19 Ind. 151; Mickle v. Miles, 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 328. Such a description of the thing defined, including all essential elements and excluding all nonessential, as to distinguish it from all other things and classes. Porter v. Mapleton Electric Light, 191 Iowa, 1031, 183 N. W. 803, 805; Wilson v. Else, 204 Iowa, 857, 216 N. W. 33, 37.

DEFINITIVE. That which finally and completely ends and settles a controversy. A definitive sentence or judgment is put in opposition to an interlocutory judgment. Thompson v. Graham, 246 Pa. 202, 92 A. 118, 119.

A distinction may be taken between a final and a definitive judgment. The former term is applicable when the judgment exhausts the powers of the particular court in which it is rendered; while the latter word designates a judgment that is above any review or contingency of reversal. U. S. v. The Peggy, 1 Cranch, 103, 2 L. Ed. 49.

DEFINITIVE SENTENCE. The final judgment, decree, or sentence of an ecclesiastical court. 3 Bl. Comm. 101.

DEFLATION. Seduction or debauching. The act by which a woman is deprived of her virginity.

DEFORCE. In English Law

To withhold wrongfully; to withhold the possession of lands from one who is lawfully entitled to them. 3 Bl. Comm. 172; Phelps v. Baldwin, 17 Conn. 212.

In Scotch Law

To resist the execution of the law; to oppose by force a public officer in the execution of his duty. Bell.

DEFORCEMENT. Deformance is where a man wrongfully holds lands to which another person is entitled. It therefore includes dis- seizure, abatement, discontinuance, and intru- sion. Co. Litt. 277b, 331b; Foxworth v. White, 5 Strob. (S. C.) 115; Woodruff v. Brown, 17 N. J. Law, 269; Hopper v. Hopper, 21 N. J. Law, 543. But it is applied especial- ly to cases, not falling under those heads, where the person entitled to the frehold has never had possession; thus, where a lord has a seignory, and lands escheat to him proper defectum sanguinis, but the seisin is withheld from him, this is a deformance, and the person who withholds the seisin is called a “defor- ceor.” 3 Bl. Comm. 172.

In Scotch Law

The opposition or resistance made to messengers or other public officers while they are actually engaged in the exercise of their offices. Ersk. Inst. 4, 4, 32.

DEFORCIANT. One who wrongfully keeps the owner of lands and tenements out of the possession of them. 2 Bl. Comm. 359.

DEFCIARE. L. Lat. To withhold lands or tenements from the rightful owner. This is a word of art which cannot be supplied by any other word. Co. Litt. 331b.

DEFOCIATIO. L. Lat. In old English law. A distress, distraint, or seizure of goods for satisfaction of a lawful debt. Cowell.

DEFORMITY. In life insurance. Representations in application for insurance that applicant never had any “infirmitv” or “deformity” must be construed as meaning deformity or infirmity of substantial character apparently materially impairing applicant’s health and increasing chance of death, which, if known, probably would have deterred company from issuing policy. Travelers’ Ins. Co. v. Pomerantz, 207 N. Y. S. St., 83, 124 Misc. 250; Id., 246 N. Y. 63, 158 N. E. 21, 22; Eastern Dist. Piece Dye Works v. Travelers’ Ins. Co., 234 N. Y. 441, 138 N. E. 401, 404, 405, 26 A. L. R. 1505.

DEFOSSION. The punishment of being buried alive.

DEFRAUD. To practice fraud; to cheat or trick; to deprive a person of property or any interest, estate, or right by fraud, deceit, or artifice. People v. Wilman, 148 N. Y. 29, 42 N. E. 408; Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 424, 69 Am. Dec. 321; U. S. v. Curley (C. C.) 122 F. 740; Weber v. Mick, 133 Ill. 520, 23 N. E. 646; Edgell v. Smith, 59 W. Va. 349, 40 S.

DETRACTION. In Spanish law. The crime committed by a person who fraudulently avoids the payment of some public tax.

DEFRAUDATION. Privation by fraud.

DEFUNCTION. Deceased; a deceased person. A common term in Scotch law.

DEGASTER. L. Fr. To waste.

DEGRADATION. A deprivation of dignity; a censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders. There are two sorts by the canon law—one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his degree. Graduation is otherwise called "deposition," but the canonists have distinguished between these two terms, deeming the former as the greater punishment of the two. There is likewise a degradation of a lord or knight at common law, and also by act of parliament. Wharton.

DEGRADATIONS. A term for waste in the French law.

DEGRADING. Reviling; holding one up to public obloquy; lowering a person in the estimation of the public.

DEGREE.

In the Law of Descent and Family Relations

A step or grade, i.e., the distance, or number of removes, which separates two persons who are related by consanguinity. Thus we speak of cousins in the "second degree."

In Criminal Law

The term "degree" denotes a division or classification of one specific crime into several grades or stadia of guilt, according to the circumstances attending its commission. Thus, in some states, there may be "murder in the second degree."

In General

The state or civil condition of a person.

State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 122.

An honorable state or condition to which a student is advanced in testimony of proficiency in arts and sciences. Commonwealth v. New England College of Chiropractic, 221 Mass. 190, 106 N. E. 895, 896.

They are of pontifical origin. See 1 Schmidt, Thesaurus, 141: Voci, Doctoris; Minshaw, Dict. Bachelet: Merlino, Répertoire Unan.; Van Espen, pt. 1, tit. 10; Giannone, Istoria di Napoli, lib. xi. c. 2, for a full account of this matter.

DEHORS. L. Fr. Out of; without; beyond; foreign to; unconnected with. Dehors the record; foreign to the record. 3 Bl. Comm. 387.

DEI GRATIA. Lat. By the grace of God. A phrase used in the formal title of a king or queen, importing a claim of sovereignty by the favor or commission of God. In ancient times it was incorporated in the titles of inferior officers, (especially ecclesiastical), but in later use was reserved as an assertion of "the divine right of kings."

DEI JUDICUM. The judgment of God. The old Saxon trial by ordeal, so called because it was thought to be an appeal to God for the justice of a cause, and it was believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. Wharton.

DEJACION. In Spanish law. Surrender; release; abandonment; c. q., the act of an insolvent in surrendering his property for the benefit of his creditors, of an heir in renouncing the succession, the abandonment of insured property to the underwriters.

DEJERATION. A taking of a solemn oath.

DEL CREDERE. In mercantile law. A phrase borrowed from the Italians, equivalent to our word "guaranty" or "warranty," or the Scotch term "warrandice," an agreement by which a factor, when he sells goods on credit, for an additional commission, (called a "del credere commission"), guarantees the solvency of the purchaser and his performance of the contract. Such a factor is called a "del credere agent." He is a mere surety, liable to his principal only in case the purchaser makes default. Story, Ag. 28; Loeb v. Hillman, 88 N. Y. 603; Lewis v. Brehme, 33 Md. 424, 3 Am. Rep. 190; Leverick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 663; Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 604; Commercial Credit Co. v. Girard Nat. Bank, 246 Pa. 88, 92 A. 44, 46; Lemnos Broad Silk Works v. Spiegelberg, 217 N. Y. S. 596, 597, 127 Misc. 855; Commercial Investment Trust v. Stewart, 235 Mich. 502, 209 N. W. 660, 661; Commercial Credit Co. v. Girard Nat. Bank, 246 Pa. 88, 92 A. 44, 46; Commonwealth v. Thorne, Neale & Co., 264 Pa. 408, 107 A. 814, 815; State v. Tuffs, 54 Mont. 20, 146 P. 1107, 1108.
DÉLAISSEMENT

DELAISSEMENT. In French marine law. Abandonment. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. ch. 17.

DELATE. In Scotch law. To accuse. Delated, accused. Delaturê off arte and parte, accused of being accessory to. 3 How. St. Tr. 425, 440.

DELATIO. In the civil law. An accusation or information.

DELATOR. An accuser; an informer; a sycomphant.

DELATURA. In old English law. The reward of an informer. Whishaw.

DELAY. To retard; obstruct; put off; postpone; defer; hinder; interpose obstacles; as, when it is said that a conveyance was made to “hinder and delay creditors.” Mercantile Co. v. Arnold, 108 Ga. 449, 34 S. E. 176; Ellis v. Valentine, 65 Tex. 352; Blair v. Blair, 122 Me. 500, 120 A. 902, 905.

DELECTUS PERSONÆ. Lat. Choice of the person. By this term is understood the right of a partner to exercise his choice and preference as to the admission of any new members to the firm, and as to the persons to be so admitted, if any.

In Scotch Law

The personal preference which is supposed to have been exercised by a landlord in selecting his tenant, by the members of a firm in making choice of partners, in the appointment of persons to office, and other cases. Nearly equivalent to personal trust, as a doctrine in law. Bell.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. 2 Inst. 597. A delegated power cannot be delegated.

DELEGATE. A person who is delegated or commissioned to act in the stead of another; a person to whom affairs are committed by another; an attorney.

A person elected or appointed to be a member of a representative assembly. Usually spoken of one sent to a special or occasional assembly or convention. Manston v. McIntosh, 58 Minn. 525, 60 N. W. 672, 28 L. R. A. 605.

The representative in congress of one of the organized territories of the United States.

DELEGATES, THE HIGH COURT OF. In English law. Formerly the court of appeal from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts. Abolished upon the Judicial committee of the privy council being constituted the court of appeal in such cases.

DELEGATION. A sending away; a putting into commission; the assignment of a debt to another; the intrusting another with a general power to act for the good of those who depute him.

At Common Law

The transfer of authority by one person to another; the act of making or commissioning a delegate.

The whole body of delegates or representatives sent to a convention or assembly from one district, place, or political unit are collectively spoken of as a “delegation.”

In the Civil Law

A species of novation which consists in the change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substitutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor, or to the person appointed by him so that the first debtor is acquitted and his obligation extinguished, and the creditor contents himself with the obligation of the second debtor. Delegation is essentially distinguished from any other species of novation, in this: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt. 1 Domat, § 2518; Adams v. Power, 48 Miss. 454.

Delegation is novation effected by the intervention of another person whom the debtor, in order to be liberated from his creditor, gives to such creditor, or to him whom the creditor appoints; and such person so given becomes obliged to the creditor in the place of the original debtor. Burge, Sur. 173.

Perfect delegation exists when the debtor who makes the obligation is discharged by the creditor. Imperfect delegation exists when the creditor retains his rights against the original debtor. 2 Duvergny, n. 189.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate cannot delegate; an agent cannot delegate his functions to a subagent without the knowledge or consent of the principal; the person to whom an office or duty is delegated cannot lawfully devolve the duty on another, unless he be expressly authorized so to do. 9 Coke, 77; Broom, Max. 840; 2 Kent, Comm. 633; 2 Steph. Comm. 119.

DÉLESTAGE. In French marine law. A discharging of ballest (test) from a vessel.

DELETE. In Scotch law. To erase; to strike out.

DELF. A quarry or mine. 31 Eliz. c. 7.

Deliberandum est diu quod statuumendum est semel. 12 Coke, 74. That which is to be resolved once for all should be long deliberated upon.

DELIBERATE, adj. By the use of this word, in describing a crime, the idea is conveyed that the perpetrator weighs the motives for the act and its consequences, the nature of the crime, or other things connected with his intentions, with a view to a decision thereon; that he carefully considers all these; and that the act is not suddenly committed. It implies that the perpetrator must be capable of the exercise of such mental powers as are called into use by deliberation and the consideration and weighing of motives and consequences. State v. Boyle, 28 Iowa, 324. Commonwealth v. Webb, 232 Pa. 187, 97 A. 130, 101; In re Nunns, 185 App. Div. 424, 176 N. Y. S. 585, 862; Jenkins v. Carman Mfg. Co., 79 Or. 445, 153 P. 706, 705.

"Deliberation" and "premeditation" are of the same character of mental operations, differing only in degree. Deliberation is but prolonged premeditation. In other words, in law, deliberation is premeditation in a cool state of the blood, or, where there has been heat of passion, it is premeditation continued beyond the period within which there has been time for the blood to cool, in the given case. Deliberation is not only to think of beforehand, which may be but for an instant, but the inclination to do the act is considered, weighed, pondered upon, for such a length of time after a provocation is given as the jury may find was sufficient for the blood to cool. One in a heat of passion may premeditate without deliberating. Deliberation is only exercised in a cool state of the blood, while premeditation may be either in that state of the blood or in the heat of passion. State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 249; State v. Lindgrind, 23 Wash. 440, 74 P. 565; State v. Dodds, 54 W. Va. 289, 46 S. E. 228; State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 157, 25 S. W. 880; Milton v. State, 6 Neb. 138; State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 44 A. 28; State v. Fiske, 62 Conn. 333, 25 A. 872; Craft v. State, 3 KAn. 481; Cannon v. State, 60 Ark. 564, 31 S. W. 150; State v. Smith, 26 N. M. 432, 194 P. 883, 872; State v. Benson, 133 N. C. 796, 111 S. E. 859, 871.

DELIBERATION. The act or process of deliberating. The act of weighing and examining the reasons for and against a contemplated act or course of conduct or a choice of acts or means. See Deliberate.

Delicatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A luxurious debtor is odious in law. 2 Bulst. 148. Imprisonment for debt has now, however, been generally abolished.

DELICTION. In the Roman and civil law. A wrong or injury; an offense; a violation of public or private duty.

It will be observed that this word, taken in its most general sense, is wider in both directions than our English term "tort." On the one hand, it includes those wrongful acts which, while directly affecting some individual or his property, yet extend in their injurious consequences to the peace or security of the community at large, and hence rise to the grade of crimes or misdemeanors. These acts were termed in the Roman law "public delicts:" while those for which the only penalty exacted was compensation to the person primarily injured were denounced "private delicts." On the other hand, the term appears to have included injurious actions which expired without any malicious intention on the part of the doer. Thus Pothier gives the name "quasi delicts" to the acts of a person who, without malice, but by an inexcusable imprudence, causes an injury to another. Poth. Obl. 116. But the term is used in modern jurisprudence as a convenient synonym of "tort:" that is, a wrongful and injurious violation of a jus in rem or right available against all the world. This appears in the two contrasted phrases, "actions ex contractui" and "actions ex delicto."

Quasi Delict

An act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, causes injury to another. They were four in number, viz.: (1) Qui judex litem suam fecit, being the offense of partiality or excess in the judex, (juryman;) e. g., in assessing the damages at a figure in excess of the extreme limit permitted by the formula. (2) Dejectum effusum a liquidi, being the tort committed by one's servant in emptying or throwing something out of an attic or upper story upon a person passing beneath; (3) Damnum infectum, being the offense of hanging dangerous articles over the heads of persons passing along the king's highway. (4) Torts committed by one's agents (e. g., stable-boys, shop-managers, etc.) in the course of their employment. Brown.

DELIQUENT. Lat. A delict, tort, wrong, injury, or offense. Actions ex delicto are such as are founded on a tort, as distinguished from action ex contractui.

Culpabiliy, blameworthiness, or legal delinquency. The word occurs in this sense in the maxim, "In pari delicto melior est conditionem defendendi" (which see). A challenge of a juror propter delictum is for some crime or misdemeanor that affects his credit and renders him infamous. 3 Bl. Comm. 363; 2 Kent, Comm. 241.

DELIMIT. To mark or lay out the limits or boundary line of a territory or country.

DELIMITATION. The act of fixing, marking off, or describing the limits or boundary line of a territory or country.

Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri debetmit. 3 Inst. 55. A delinquent provoked by anger ought to be punished more mildly.
DELIQUENT, n. In the civil law. He who has been guilty of some crime, offense, or failure of duty.

DELIQUENT, adj. As applied to a debt or claim, it means simply due and unpaid at the time appointed by law or fixed by contract; as, a delinquent tax. Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 1, 30 N. W. 826; Gallup v. Schmidt, 154 Ind. 196, 56 N. E. 450. As applied to a person, it commonly means that he is grossly negligent or in willful default in regard to his pecuniary obligations, or even that he is dishonest and unworthy of credit. Boyce v. Ewart, Rice (S. C.) 140; Ferguson v. Pittsburgh, 159 Pa. 435, 28 Atl. 118; Grocers’ Ass’n v. Exton, 18 Ohio C. L. 321.

DELIQUENT TAXES. Past due and unpaid taxes. Ryan v. Roach Drug Co., 113 Okt. 130, 239 P. 912, 918; Cornwell v. Maverick Loan & Trust Co., 95 Neb. 9, 144 N. W. 1072, 1074.

DELIRIUM. In medical jurisprudence. Delirium is that state of the mind in which it acts without being directed by the power of volition, which is wholly or partially suspended. This happens most perfectly in dreams. But what is commonly called “delirium” is always preceded or attended by a feverish and highly diseased state of the body. The patient in delirium is wholly unconscious of surrounding objects; or conceives them to be different from what they really are. His thoughts seem to drift about, wildering and tossing amidst distracted dreams. And his observations, when he makes any, as often happens, are wild and incoherent; or, from excess of pain, he sinks into a low muttering, or silent and death-like stupor. The law contemplates this species of mental derangement as an intellectual eclipse; as a darkness occasioned by a cloud of disease passing over the mind; and which must soon terminate in health or in death. Owing’s Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 396, 17 Am. Dec. 311; Supreme Lodge v. Lapp, 74 S. W. 656, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 74; Clark v. Ellis, 9 Or. 152; Brogden v. Brown, 2 Add. 441; Soumerville v. Greenwood, 65 Mont. 101, 210 P. 1048, 1054; Grand Lodge, O. O. U. W. of Arkansas, v. Mode, 157 Ark. 62, 247 S. W. 386, 388.

DELIRIUM FEBRILE. In medical jurisprudence. A form of mental aberration incident to fevers, and sometimes to the last stages of chronic diseases.

DELIRIUM TREMENS. A disorder of the nervous system, involving the brain and setting up an attack of temporary delusional insanity, sometimes attended with violent excitement or mania, caused by excessive and long continued indulgence in alcoholic liquors, or by the abrupt cessation of such use after a protracted debauch. See Insanity.

DELIVERANCE. In practice. The verdict rendered by a jury.

Second Deliverance

In practice. A writ allowed a plaintiff in reprieve, where the defendant has obtained judgment for return of the goods, by default or nonsuit, in order to have the same distress again delivered to him, on giving the same security as before. 3 Bl. Comm. 150; 3 Steph. Comm. 668.

DELIVERY.

In Conveyancing

In the Law of Sales

In Medical Jurisprudence

The act of a woman giving birth to her offspring. Blake v. Junkins, 35 Me. 433.
In General

—Absolute and conditional delivery. An absolute delivery of a deed, as distinguished from conditional delivery or delivery in escrow, is one which is complete upon the actual transfer of the instrument from the possession of the grantor. Dyer v. Skadan, 128 Mich. 348, 87 N. W. 277, 278, 92 Am. St. Rep. 461. A conditional delivery of a deed is one which passes the deed from the possession of the grantor, but is not be completed by possession of the grantee, or a third person as his agent, until the happening of a specified event. Dyer v. Skadan, 128 Mich. 348, 87 N. W. 277, 278, 92 Am. St. Rep. 461; Schmidt v. Deegan, 68 Wis. 300, 34 N. W. 88; Stillman v. Dobner, 165 Minn. 87, 203 N. W. 606, 607.

—Actual and constructive. In the law of sales, actual delivery consists in the giving real possession of the thing sold to the vendee or his servants or special agents who are identified with him in law and represent him. Reeb v. Bronson, 196 Ill. App. 518; Carr v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. (Mo. App.) 254 S. W. 184, 185. It is a formal and immediate transfer of the property to the vendee. Bridgman v. Hinds, 120 Me. 444, 115 A. 197, 199, 21 A. L. R. 1624.

Constructive delivery is a general term, comprehending all those acts which, although not truly conferring a real possession of the thing sold on the vendee, have been, held by construction of law, equivalent to acts of real delivery. In this sense constructive delivery includes symbolic or substituted delivery and all those traditions that have been admitted into the law as sufficient to vest the absolute property in the vendee and bar the rights of lien and stoppage in transitus, such as marking and setting apart the goods as belonging to the vendee, charging them with warehouse rent, etc. Bolin v. Huffnagle, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 19. Also see In re Nesto (C. C. A.) 270 F. 366. A constructive delivery of personalty takes place when the goods are set apart and notice given to the person to whom they are to be delivered (The Titania, 131 F. 229, 65 C. C. A. 215), or when, without actual transfer of the goods or their symbol, the conduct of the parties is such as to be inconsistent with any other supposition than that there has been a change in the nature of the holding. Swafford v. Spratt, 82 Mo. App. 621, 67 S. W. 701; Holliday v. White, 33 Tex. 459; Hastings v. Lincoln Trust Co., 115 Wash. 492, 197 P. 827, 829, 18 A. L. R. 583; Culpepper v. Culpepper, 18 Ga. App. 332, 89 S. E. 161; In re Fenton's Estate, 182 Iowa, 346, 165 N. W. 462, 463; Richards v. Wilson, 185 Ind. 525, 112 N. E. 780, 785; Kelley-Koets Mfg. Co. v. Goldenberg, 207 Ky. 695, 270 S. W. 15, 18; Bond v. Bond, 22 Ga. App. 366, 95 S. E. 1005; Baxter v. Chapman, 147 Ga. 438, 94 S. E. 544, 546.

—Delivery bond. A bond given upon the seizure of goods (as under the revenue laws) conditioned for their restoration to the defendant, or the payment of their value, if so adjudged.

—Delivery order. An order addressed, in England, by the owner of goods to a person holding them on his behalf, requesting him to deliver them to a person named in the order. Delivery orders are chiefly used in the case of goods held by dock companies, wharfgers, etc. National Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Mann, 251 Mass. 293, 146 N. E. 791, 793.

—Symbolical delivery. The constructive delivery of the subject-matter of a sale, where it is cumbersome or inaccessible, by the actual delivery of some article which is conventionally accepted as the symbol or representative of it, or which renders access to it possible, or which is the evidence of the purchaser's title to it; as the key of a warehouse, or a bill of lading of goods on shipboard. Winlow v. Fletcher, 53 Conn. 390, 4 A. 250; Miller v. Lacey, 7 How. (Del.) 8, 30 A. 640; In re P. J. Sullivan Co. (D. C.) 247 F. 139, 154; Hall v. Kansas City Terra Cotta Co., 97 Kan. 108, 154 P. 210, 212, L. R. A. 1916D, 361, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 605.

DELUSION. In medical jurisprudence. An insane delusion is an unreasonable and incorrigible belief in the existence of facts which are either impossible absolutely, or, at least, impossible under the circumstances of the individual. It is never the result of reasoning and reflection; it is not generated by them, and it cannot be dispelled by them; and hence it is not to be confounded with an opinion, however fantastic the latter may be. Guiteau's Case (D. C.) 10 Fed. 170. See Insanity; Dyar v. Dyar, 161 Ga. 615, 131 S. E. 535, 541; Phillips v. Flagler, 82 Misc. 500, 143 N. Y. S. 798, 900; Bensberg v. Washington University, 251 Mo. 641, 158 S. W. 330, 333; In re Russell's Estate, 159 Cal. 759, 210 P. 249, 254; In re Diggins' Estate, 76 Or. 314, 149 P. 73, 75; In re Sturtevant's Estate, 92 Or. 269, 180 P. 595, 596; Pretties v. Illinois Life Ins. Co. (Mo. Sup.) 225 S. W. 695, 701; In re Doster's Estate, 271 Pa. 65, 113 A. 831; Ryan v. People, 60 Colo. 425, 153 P. 756, 757, L. R. A. 1917F, 646, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 605.

Systematized Delusion

One based on a false premise, pursued by a logical process of reasoning to an insane conclusion; there being one central delusion around which other aberrations of the mind converge; Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405. See Insanity.

DEM. An abbreviation for "demise;" e. g., Doe dem. Smith. Doe, on the demise of Smith.

DEMAIN. See Desmesne.

DEMAND, v. In practice. To claim as one's due; to require; to ask relief. To summon; to call in court. "Although solemnly demanded, comes not, but makes default." Fossett v. State, 34 Okl. Cr. 106, 245 P. 685, 686.

Demand embraces all sorts of actions, rights, and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, etc. A release of all demands to date bars an action for damages accruing after the date from a nuisance previously erected. Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 257.

Demand is more comprehensive in import than "debt" or "duty." Sanda v. Codwise, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 536, 4 Am. Dec. 305.

Demand, or claim, is properly used in reference to a cause of action. Saddiesene v. Arms, 32 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 289.

—Compulsory demand. "Compulsory demand" by the true owner of an article, justifying surrender and recovery by the one who surrenders it as against his vendor, means when the true owner presents his claim and establishes his paramount title. Jordan v. Van Duzee, 139 Minn. 103, 165 N. W. 877, 879, L. R. A. 1918B, 1136.

—Cross-demand. A demand that is preferred by one party to an action in opposition to a demand already preferred against him by his adversary. Drovers' State Bank v. Elliott, 97 Kan. 94, 154 P. 255, 256.

—Demand note. A note that is due at once; one on which suit may be brought without any formal demand. Wilson v. Stark, 146 Miss. 498, 112 So. 390, 392.

—Legal demand. A demand properly made, as to form, time, and place, by a person lawfully authorized. Foss v. Norris, 70 Me. 118.

—On demand. A promissory note payable "on demand" is a present debt, and is payable without any actual demand, or, if a demand is necessary, the bringing of a suit is enough. Appeal of Andress, 99 Pa. 424.

—Personal demand. A demand for payment of a bill or note, made upon the drawer, acceptor, or maker, in person. See 1 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 556.

—Reasonable public demand for a bank. Such a desire upon the part of the community for the bank as will make its coming welcome and insure an amount of business sufficient to promote its success. It may come from the natural desire of the community and upon its own initiative, or it may be the result of propaganda. State v. State Securities Commission, 145 Minn. 221, 176 N. W. 759, 760.

DEMANDA. In Spanish law. The petition of a plaintiff, setting forth his demand. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 10, l. 3.

DEMANDANT. The plaintiff or party suing in a real action. Co. Litt. 127.

DEMANDRESS. A female demandant.

DEMEASE. In old English law. Death.

DEMEMBRATION. In Scotch law. Malignantly cutting off or otherwise separating one limb from another. 1 Hume, 323; Bell.

DEMENS. One whose mental faculties are enfeebled; one who has lost his mind; distinguished from amens, one totally insane, 4 Coke, 128.

DEMENTED. Of unsound mind.

DEMENTIENANT EN AVANT. L Fr. From this time forward. Kelham.

DEMENTIA. See Insanity.

DEMESNE. Domain; dominical; held in one's own right, and not of a superior; not allotted to tenants.

In the language of pleading, own; proper; original. Thus, son autoil demesne, his own assault, his assault originally or in the first place.

Ancient Demesne

See Ancient.

Demesne as of Fee

A man is said to be seised in his demesne as of fee of a corporeal inheritance, because he has a property, dominium or demesne, in the thing itself. But when he has no dominion in the thing itself, as in the case of an incorporeal Herbertament, he is said to be seised as of fee, and not in his demesne as of fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 106; Littleton, § 10; Barnett v. Ibrle, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 196.

Demesne Lands

In English law. Those lands of a manor not granted out in tenancy, but reserved by the lord for his own use and occupation. Lands set apart and appropriated by the lord for his own private use, as for the supply of his table, and the maintenance of his family; the opposite of tenemental lands. Tenancy and demesne, however, were not in every sense the opposites of each other; lands held for years or at will being included among demesne lands, as well as those in the lord's actual possession. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

Demesne Lands of the Crown

That share of lands reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or which came to it afterwards by forfeiture or otherwise. 1 Bl. Comm. 288; 2 Steph. Comm. 550.

Demesnal

Pertaining to a demesne.

DEMI. French. Half; the half. Used chiefly in composition.

As to demi “Mark,” “Official,” “Vili,” see those titles.

DEMI-SANGUE, or DEMY-SANGUE. Half-blood.

DEMIDIEAS. In old records. A half or moiety.

DEMIES. In some universities and colleges this term is synonymous with “scholars”

DEMINUTIO. In the civil law. A taking away; loss or deprivation. See Capitis Deminutio.

DEMISE, n. In conveyancing. To convey or create an estate for years or life; to lease. The usual and operative word in leases: “Have granted, demised, and to farm let, and by these presents do grant, demised, and to farm let.” 2 Bl. Comm. 317; 1 Steph. Comm. 476; Co. Litt. 45a; Carr v. King, 142 P. 131, 133, 24 Cal. App. 713.

Originally a posthumous grant; commonly a lease or conveyance for a term of years; sometimes applied to any conveyance, in fee, for life, or for years. Pub. St. Mass. 1852, p. 1289.

“Demise” is synonymous with “lease” or “let,” except that demise or at term implies a covenant for title, and also a covenant for quiet enjoyment, whereas lease or let implies neither of these covenants. Brown.

The word is also used as a synonym for “decease” or “death.” In England it is especially employed to denote the death of the sovereign.

Demise and redemise. In conveyancing. Mutual leases made from one party to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it; as when A. grants a lease to B. at a nominal rent (as of a pepper corn), and B. redemises the same property to A. for a shorter time at a real, substantial rent. Jacob; Whishaw.

Demise of the crown. The natural dissolution of the king is generally so called; an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property. By demise of the crown we mean only that, in consequence of the disunion of the king's natural body from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor, and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. 1 Bl. Comm. 249; Plowd. 234.

Several demises. In English practice. In the action of ejectment, it was formerly customary, in case there were any doubt as to the legal estate being in the plaintiff, to insert in the declaration several demises from as many different persons; but this was rendered unnecessary by the provisions of the common-law procedure acts.

Single demise. A declaration in ejectment might contain either one demise or several. When it contained only one, it was called a “declaration with a single demise.”

DEMISI. Lat. I have demised or leased. Demisi, concedi, et ad firmam tradidi; have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual operative words in ancient leases, as the corresponding English words are in the modern forms. 2 Bl. Comm. 317, 318; Koch v. Hustis, 113 Wis. 596, 57 N. W. 894; Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 40.

DEMISSIO. L. Lat. A demise or letting. Chiefly used in the phrase ex demissione (on the demise), which formed part of the title of the cause in the old actions of ejectment, where it signified that the nominal plaintiff (a fictitious person) held the estate "on the demise" of, that is, by a lease from, the real plaintiff.

DEMOBILIZATION. In military law. The dismissal of an army or body of troops from active service.

DEMOCRACY. That form of government in which the sovereign power resides in and is exercised by the whole body of free citizens, as distinguished from a monarchy, aristocracy, or oligarchy. According to the theory of a pure democracy, every citizen should participate directly in the business of governing, and the legislative assembly should comprise the whole people. But the ultimate lodgment of the sovereignty being the distinguishing feature, the introduction of the representative system does not remove a government from this type. However, a government of the latter kind is sometimes specifically described as a "representative democracy."

Democracy is loosely used of governments in which the sovereign powers are exercised by all the people or a large number of them, or specifically, in modern use, of a representative government where there is equality of rights without hereditary or arbitrary differences in rank or privilege; and is distinguished from aristocracy. * * * In modern representative democracies, as the United States and France, though the governing body, that is, the electorate, is a minority of the total population, the principle on which the government is based is popular sovereignty, which distinguishes them from aristocracies. Webster's New Int. Dict.

DEMOCRATIC. Of or pertaining to democracy, or to a political party called "democratic," particularly, in the United States, the Democratic party, which succeeded the Anti-federalist, or Republican, party.

DEMOLISH. To destroy totally or to commence the work of total destruction with the purpose of completing the same. 50 L. J. M. C. 111. It is not synonymous with "remove." Durrett v. Woods, 155 La. 533, 99 So. 430, 451.

DEMONETIZATION. The disuse of a particular metal for purposes of coinage. The withdrawal of the value of a metal as money.

DEMONSTRATE. To teach by exhibition of samples; to derive from admitted premises by steps of reasoning which admits of no doubt; to prove indubitably. Espenbain v. Barker, 121 Or. 621, 256 P. 768, 768.

DEMONSTRATION. Lat. Description; addition; denomination. Occurring often in the phrase, "Falsa demonstratio non nocet," (a false description does not harm.) 2 Bla. Comm. 382, n.; 2 P. Wms. 140; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 291; Wigg. Wills 208, 223.

DEMONSTRATION. Description; pointing out. That which is said or written to designate a thing or person.

In Evidence

Demonstrative evidence of negligence has been applied to that kind of negligence which is usually expressed by res ipsa loquitur.

DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACY. See Legacy.

DEMPTER. In Scotch law. A doomsman. One who pronounced the sentence of court. 1 How. State Tr. 937.

DEMUR. To present a demurrer; to take an exception to the sufficiency in point of law of a pleading or state of facts alleged. See Demurrer.

DEMURRABLE. Subject to a demurrer. A pleading, petition, or the like, is said to be demurrable when it does not state such facts as support the claim, prayer, or defense put forward. 5 Ch. Div. 979.

The sum agreed to be paid to the ship for delay caused without her fault, and which ordinarily does not begin to run until the lay days have been used up. Earn Line S. S. Co. v. Manati Sugar Co. (C. C. A.) 289 F. 774, 776. The amount agreed upon or allowed by law for unreasonable detention. Clyde v. Wood, 173 N. Y. S. 232, 255, 189 App. Div. 777; W. R. Grace & Co. v. Hansen (C. C. A.) 273 F. 498, 499.

"Demurrage" is only an extended freight or reward to the vessel, in compensation for the earnings she is improperly caused to lose. Every improper detention of a vessel may be considered a demurrage, and compensation under that name be obtained for it. Donaldson v. McDowell, Holmes, 250, Fed. Cas. No. 2,356.
"Demurrage" is a claim for damages for failure of the consignee to accept delivery of the goods. Little v. One Cargo of Lumber (D. C.) 2 F. (2d) 608, 609.

DEMRURANT. One who demurs; the party who, in pleading, interposes a demurrer.

DEMRURER. In Pleading

The formal mode of disputing the sufficiency in law of the pleading of the other side. In effect it is an allegation that, even if the facts as stated in the pleading to which objection is taken be true, yet their legal consequences are not such as to put the demurring party to the necessity of answering them or proceeding further with the cause. Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 26, 1 S. E. 395; Goodman v. Ford, 23 Miss. 595; Hostetter Co. v. Lyons Co. (C. C.) 99 F. 735; Conrad v. Board of Education of Granville County, 190 N. C. 389, 150 S. E. 53, 55.

An objection made by one party to his opponent's pleading, alleging that he ought not to answer it, for some defect in law in the pleading. It admits the facts, and refers the law arising thereon to the court. Tyler v. Hard, 7 How. 831, 12 L. Ed. 324; Pagg v. Rose Mfg. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 259 S. W. 362, 364; R. L. Davies & Co. v. Blumberg, 185 N. C. 496, 117 S. E. 497.

It imports that the objecting party will not proceed, but will wait the judgment of the court whether he is bound so to do. Co. Litt. 718; Steph. Pl. 61; Kramer v. Barth, 189 N. Y. S. 341, 344, 78 Misc. 89.

In Equity

An allegation of a defendant, which, admitting the matters of fact alleged by the bill to be true, shows that as they are there set forth they are insufficient for the plaintiff to proceed upon or to obligate the defendant to answer; or that, for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or on account of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, the defendant ought not to be compelled to answer to the whole bill, or to some certain part thereof. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 107.

By Federal Equity Rule 29 (28 USCA § 729), in effect February 1, 1913, demurrers (and pleas) are abolished; every defense in law shall be made by motion to dismiss or in the answer; every such point of law going to the whole or a material part of the cause of action may be disposed of before final hearing at the discretion of the court.

Classification and Varieties

A general demurrer is a demurrer framed in general terms, without showing specifically the nature of the objection, and which is usually resorted to where the objection is to matter of substance. Steph. Pl. 140-142; 1 Chit. Pl. 603. See Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 26, 1 S. E. 395; U. S. v. National Bank (C. C.) 73 F. 581; McGuire v. Van Pelt, 55 Ala. 344; Taylor v. Taylor, 67 Mich. 64, 49 N. W. 519.

A special demurrer is one which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection, and the particular ground of the exception. 3 Bov. Inst. 3022. Dairy Region Land Corporation v. Harding (Tex. Civ. App.) 266 S. W. 181, 182; Darcey v. Lake, 46 Miss. 117; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 363, 18 L. Ed. 475; Shaw v. Chase, 77 Mich. 436, 43 N. W. 883. In equity, general demurrers are used to point out defects of substance; special, to point out defects in form. "The terms have a different meaning [in equity] from what they have at common law." Langd. Eq. Pl. 58. A speaking demurrer is one which, in order to sustain itself, requires the aid of a fact not appearing on the face of the pleading objected to, or, in other words, which alleges or assumes the existence of a fact not already pleaded, and which constitutes the ground of objection. Wright v. Weber, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 457; Walker v. Conant, 65 Mich. 194, 31 N. W. 765; Brooks v. Gibbons, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 375; Clarke v. Land Co., 113 Ga. 21, 38 S. E. 323. A speaking demurrer is one which alleges some new matter, not disclosed by the pleading against which the demurrer is aimed and not judicially known or legally presumed to be true. Miller v. Southern Ry. Co., 21 Ga. App. 367, 94 S. E. 619. See, also, Mortensen v. Frederickson Bros., 190 Iowa, 832, 180 N. W. 977, 980; Cheronoing v. Knight, 77 So. 969, 970, 16 Ala. App. 357; U. S. v. Forbes (D. C.) 259 F. 585, 598; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 203 S. W. 854, 856; Steel v. Levy, 282 Pa. 338, 127 A. 763, 767; Ideal Brick Co. v. Gentry, 191 N. C. 496, 132 S. E. 806, 804. A parol demurrer (not properly a demurrer at all) was a stating of the pleading; a suspension of the proceedings in an action during the nonsuit of an infant, especially in a real action. Now abolished. 3 Bl. Comm. 300.

In General

—Demurrer or tenus. This name is sometimes given to a ruling on an objection to evidence, but is not properly a demurrer at all. Mandelert v. Land Co., 104 Wis. 428, 80 N. W. 728; Cleveland v. Bateman, 21 N. M. 675, 158 P. 648, 832, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1011. It should be considered as a general demurrer only. Dawkins v. People’s Bank & Trust Co., 117 Okl. 181, 245 P. 594, 596.

—Demurrer to evidence. This proceeding (now practically obsolete) was analogous to a demurrer to a pleading. It was an objection or exception by one of the parties in an action at law, to the effect that the evidence which his adversary had produced was insufficient in point of law (whether true or not) to make out his case or sustain the issue. Upon joinder in demurrer, the jury was discharged, and the case was argued to the court in banc, who gave judgment upon the facts as shown in evidence. See 3 Bl. Comm. 372; Bass v. Rublee, 76 Vt. 385, 57 A. 969; Patterson v. Ford, 2 Grat. (Va.) 18; Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 433, 15 L. Ed. 978; Railroad Co. v. McArthur, 43 Miss. 180; Shaw v. White, 29 Ala. 637. A motion to nonsuit is a "demurrer to the evidence." Herrick v. Barnes, 96 Or. 337, 180 P. 141, 145. A defendant's motion for a directed verdict, made at close of the evidence, is equivalent to a "demurrer to the evidence" for insufficiency to sustain a verdict for plaintiff. Mills v. Richardson, 126 Me. 244; 137 A. 689, 690. A motion to exclude evidence has the effect of a demurrer to the evidence, the chief points of difference being the stage of the proceeding at which each is available and the consequences resulting from deferring the motion to exclude. Potts v. Union Traction Co., 75 W. Va. 212, 83 S. E. 918. For a discussion of the subject see Hopkins v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. R., 96 Tenn. 409, 34 S. W. 1029, 32 L. R. A. 354.

--Demurrer to interrogatories. Where a witness objects to a question propounded (particularly on the taking of a deposition) and states his reason for objecting or refusing to answer, it is called a "demurrer to the interrogatory," though the term cannot here be understood as used in its technical sense. 2 Swanst. 194; Gresl. Eq. Ev. 61; 2 Atk. 524; 1 Y. & J. 132.

DEMY SANKE, DEMY SANGUE. Half-blood. A corruption of demi-sang.

DEN AND STROND. In old English law. Liberty for ships or vessels to run aground, or come ashore (strand themselves). Cowell.

DENARIATE. In old English law. As much land as is worth one penny per annum.

DENARI. An ancient general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. The French use the word "denier" in the same sense,—payer de ses propres deniers.

DENARII DE CARITATE. In English law. Customary oblations made to a cathedral church at Pentecost.

DENARII S. PETRI. (Commonly called "Peter's Pence.") An annual payment on St. Peter's feast of a penny from every family to the pope, during the time that the Roman Catholic religion was established in England.

DENARIUS. The chief silver coin among the Romans, worth 8d.; it was the seventh part of a Roman ounce. Also an English penny. The denarius was first coined five years before the first Punic war, B. C. 269. In later times a copper coin was called "denarius." Smith, Dict. Antiq.

DENARIUS DEI. (Lat. "God's penny.") Earnest money; money given as a token of the completion of a bargain. It differs from arvha in this: that arvha is a part of the consideration, while the denarius Dei is no part of it. The latter was given away in charity; whence the name. 1 Duvergny, n. 132; 3 Duvergny, n. 49; Répert. de Jur., Denier à Dieu.

DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS. In old English law. A third part or penny of the county paid to its earl, the other two parts being reserved to the crown.

DENIAL. A traverse in the pleading of one party of an allegation of fact set up by the other; a defense. See Black v. O'Brien, 43 N. Y. S. 854, 19 Misc. 369; Mott v. Baxter, 29 Colo. 418, 68 P. 220.

General and Specific

In code pleading, a general denial is one which puts in issue all the material averments of the complaint or petition, and permits the defendant to prove any and all facts tending to negative those averments or any of them. Mauldin v. Ball, 5 Mont. 96, 1 P. 469; Goode v. Elwood Lodge, 100 Ind. 251, 66 N. E. 742. A specific denial is a separate denial applicable to one particular allegation of the complaint. Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 470; Sands v. Maclay, 2 Mont. 38; Seward v. Miller, 6 Haw. Prac. (N. Y.) 322. An answer by way of a general denial is the equivalent of, and substitute for, the general issue under the common-law system of pleading. It gives to the defendant the same right to require the plaintiff to establish by proof all the material facts necessary to show his right to a recovery as was given by that plea. Kilne v. Harris, 30 N. D. 421, 152 N. W. 687, 688, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1176; Smith v. Continental Supply Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 283 S. W. 1082, 1084.

DENIER. L. Fr. In old English law. Denial; refusal. Denier is when the rent (being demanded upon the land) is not paid. Finch, Law, b. 3, c. 5.

DENIER À DIEU. In French law. Earnest money; a sum of money given in token of the completion of a bargain. The phrase is a translation of the Latin Denarius Dei, (q. v.)

DENIZATION. The act of making one a denizen; the conferring of the privileges of citizenship upon an alien born. Creo. Jac. 540. See Denizen.
DENIZE. To make a man a denizen or citizen.

DENIZEN. In English law. A person who, being an alien born, has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject,—a high and incommunica branch of the royal prerogative. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and a natural-born subject, and partakes of the status of both of these. 1 Bl. Comm. 374; 7 Coke 6; Cockburn, Nationality 27; Morse, Citizenship 106. See Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 382; Ex parte Gilroy (D. C.) 257 F. 110, 128.

The term is used to signify a person who, being an alien by birth, has obtained letters patent making him an English subject. The king may denize, but not naturalize, a man; the latter requiring the consent of parliament, as under the naturalization act, 1870, (33 & 34 Vict. c. 14.) A denizen holds a position midway between an alien and a natural-born or naturalized subject, being able to take lands by purchase or devise, (which an alien could not until 1670 do,) but not able to take lands by descent, (which a natural-born or naturalized subject may do.) Brown.

The denizen becomes a British subject from the date of the letters while a naturalized person is placed in a position equivalent to that of a natural-born subject; Dicey, Conf. Laws 164.

The word is also used in this sense in South Carolina. See McClennahan v. McClennahan, 1 Strob. Eq. (S. C.) 319, 47 Am. Dec. 532.

A denizen, in the primary, but obsolete, sense of the word, is a natural-born subject of a country. Co. Litt. 129a; Levy v. McCurtey, 6 Pct. 102, 113; 8 L. Ed. 394.

DENMAN’S (LORD) ACT. An English statute, for the amendment of the law of evidence, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85,) which provides that no person offered as a witness shall thereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity, from crime or interest, from giving evidence.

DENMAN’S (MR.) ACT. An English statute, for the amendment of procedure in criminal trials, (25 & 26 Vict. c. 18,) allowing counsel to sum up the evidence in criminal as in civil trials, provided the prisoner be defended by counsel.

DENOMBREMENT. In French feudal law. A minute or act drawn up, on the creation of a fief, containing a description of the fief, and all the rights and incidents belonging to it. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 3.

Denominatio flori debet a dignioribus. Denomination should be made from the more worthy.

DENOUNCE. To declare (an act or thing) to be a crime and prescribe a punishment for it. State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570, 35 So. 606. The word is also used (not technically but popularly) as the equivalent of "accuse" or "inform against."

The term is frequently used in regard to treaties, indicating the act of one nation in giving notice to another nation of its intention to terminate an existing treaty between the two nations. The French dénoncer means to declare, to lodge an information against. Bellows, Fr. Dict.

DENOUNCEMENT.

In Spanish and Mexican Law

A judicial proceeding for the forfeiture of land held by an alien.

Though real property might be acquired by an alien in fraud of the law,—that is, without observing its requirements,—he nevertheless retained his right and title to it, but was liable to be deprived of it by the proper proceeding of denunciation, which in its substantive characteristics was equivalent to the inquest of office found, at common law. De Merle v. Mathews, 26 Cal. 477.

The "denunciation of a new work" is a proceeding to obtain an order of court, in the nature of an injunction, against the construction of a new building or other work, which, if completed, would injuriously affect the plaintiff's property. Von Schmidt v. Huntington, 1 Cal. 55.

In Mexican Mining Law

Denunciation is an application to the authorities for a grant of the right to work a mine, either on the ground of new discovery, or on the ground of forfeiture of the rights of a former owner, through abandonment or contravention of the mining law. Cent. Dict. See Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black, 109, 17 L. Ed. 360; Stewart v. King, 53 Or. 14, 166 P. 55, 56.

DENSIRING OF LAND. (Otherwise called "burn-beating.") A method of improving land by casting earthings of earth, turf, and stubble into heaps, which when dried are burned into ashes for a compost. Cowell.

DENUMERATION. The act of present payment.

DENUNCIA DE OBRA NUEVA. In Spanish law. The denunciation of a new work; being a proceeding to restrain the erection of some new work, as, for instance, a building which may, if completed, injuriously affect the property of the complainant; it is of a character similar to the interdicts of possess-DENUNCIATION.

In the Civil Law

The act by which an individual informs a public officer, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders, that a crime has been committed. See 1 Bro. Civ. Law 447; Ayliffe, Paring 210; Pothier, Proc. Cr. sect. 2, § 2.

The giving of an information in the ecclesiastical courts by one who was not the accuser.

In Scotch Practice

The act by which a person is declared to be a rebel, who has disobeyed the charge given on letters of Morning. Bell.

DENUNCIATIO. In old English law. A public notice or summons. Bract. 2025.

DENY. To traverse. Perry v. Tumlin, 161 Ga. 392, 131 S. E. 70, 73.

DEODAND. (l. Lat. Deo dandum, a thing to be given to God.) In English law. Any personal chattel which was the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature, and which was forfeited to the crown to be applied to pious uses, and distributed in alms by the high almoner. 1 Hale, P. C. 419; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 25; 1 Bl. Comm. 300; 2 Steph. Comm. 365. See Parker-Harris Co. v. Tate, 135 Tenn. 509, 188 S. W. 54, L. R. A. 1916F, 393.

DEOR HEDGE. In old English law. The hedge inclosing a deer park.

DEPART. To divide or separate actively. The departers of gold and silver were no more than the dividers and refiners of those metals. Cowell.

To go away, especially with reference to permanent visits. Pezzoni v. Pezzoni, 38 Cal. App. 209, 175 P. 801, 802. To depart, as from the state, is not necessarily synonymous with the phrase “leave the state.” Williams v. Williams, 57 Cal. App. 98, 206 P. 650, 652.

In Pleading

To forsake or abandon the ground assumed in a former pleading, and assume a new one. See Departure.

In Maritime Law

To leave a port; to be out of a port. To depart imports more than to sail, or set sail. A warranty in a policy that a vessel shall depart on or before a particular day is a warranty not only that she shall sail, but that she shall be out of the port on or before that day. 3 Maule & S. 461; 3 Kent Comm. 307, note. "To depart" does not mean merely to break ground, but fairly to set forward upon the voyage. Molr v. Assur. Co. 6 Taunt. 241; Young v. The Orphans, 110 Mass. 155; The Helen Brown (D. C.) 28 F. 111.

DEPARTMENT. One of the territorial divisions of a country. The term is chiefly used in this sense in France, where the division of the country into departments is somewhat analogous, both territorially and for governmental purposes, to the division of an American state into counties. The United States have been divided into military departments, including certain portions of the country. Parker v. U. S., 1 Pet. 283, 7 L. Ed. 150.

One of the divisions of the executive branch of government. Used in this sense in the United States, where each department is charged with a specific class of duties, and comprises an organized staff of officials; e. g., the department of state, department of war, etc.

With reference to state or municipal administration, a "bureau" is merely a division of a department. In re McLaughlin, 210 N. Y. S. 48, 72, 124 Misc. 766.

Also, a division of a business, or of something comparable thereto. See State v. Arkansas Lumber Co., 126 Ark. 107, 189 S. W. 671.

In Maritime Law

A deviation from the course prescribed in the policy of insurance.

In Pleading

The statement of matter in a replication, rejoinder, or subsequent pleading, as a cause of action or defense, which is not pursuant to the previous pleading of the same party, and which does not support and fortify it. 2 Williams, Saund. 84a, note 1; 2 Will. 98; Co. Litt. 304a; Railway Co. v. Wyler, 138 U. S. 285, 15 S. Ct. 877, 39 L. Ed. 983; Hanna v. Royce, 119 Or. 450, 249 P. 173, 175.

A departure, in pleading, is when a party quits or departs from the case or defense which he has first made, and has recourse to another. White v. Joy, 13 N. Y. 83; Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 265; Kimberlin v. Carter, 49 Ind. 111; Crim v. Drake, 88 Fla. 476, 98 So. 349, 353; Clonts v. State, 19 Ala. App. 120, 95 So. 562; Northwestern Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Ward, 56 Okl. 183, 245 P. 324, 325.

A departure takes place when, in any pleading, the party deserts the ground that he took in his last antecedent pleading, and resorts to another. Steph. Pl. 410; Burrell v. Masters, 65 Colo. 310, 176 P. 316, 317. Or, in other words, when the second pleading contains matter not pursuant to the former; and which does not support and fortify it.
Co. Litt. 294a. Hence a departure obviously can never take place till the replication. Steph. PI. 410. Each subsequent pleading must pursue or support the former one; i. e., the replication must support the declaration, and the rejoinder the plea, without departing out of it. 3 Bl. Comm. 310. An amendment to a petition changing the cause of action is not, technically, a "departure." Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Ponder, 220 Ky. 305, 258 S. W. 140, 141; King v. Milner, 63 Colo. 407, 167 P. 967, 969; MacGerry v. Rodgers, 144 Wash. 376, 238 P. 334, 315. That which is a "departure" in pleading is a "variance" in evidence. Wilson v. Oil Well Supply Co., 111 Okl. 63, 238 P. 415, 416.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF COURT. In old English practice. The tenant in a real action having once appeared, was considered as constructively present in court until again called upon. Hence if, upon being demanded, he failed to appear, he was said to have "departed in despite [i. e., contempt] of the court." Co. Litt. 139a; 8 Co. 62a; 1 Rolle, Abr. 583; Metc. Yelv. 211.

DEPASTURE. In old English law. To pasture. "If a man depastures unprofitable cattle in his ground." Bunn. 1, case 1.

DEPECULATION. A robbing of the prince or commonwealth; an embezzling of the public treasure.

DEPENDENCY. A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe. U. S. v. The Nancy, 3 Wash. C. C. 258, Fed. Cas. No. 15,854.

It differs from a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the sovereign or mother state; and from possession, because it is held by other title than that of mere conquest.

DEPENDENT, n. One who derives support from another; Ballou v. Glee, 50 Wis. 618, 7 N. W. 561; Supreme Council American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 140 Mass. 390, 5 N. E. 634; not merely persons who derive a benefit from the earnings of the deceased; [1589] 1 Q. B. 1005; Hovey v. Erie R. Co., 58 N. J. Law, 684, 96 A. 966, 996. One who depends on or is sustained by another, or who relies on another for support or favor. Wells-Dickey Trust Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 166 Minn. 79, 207 N. W. 186, 187; United States v. McHugh (D. C.) 253 F. 224, 228.

DEPENDENT, adj. Deriving existence, support, or direction from another; conditioned, in respect to force or obligation, upon an extraneous act or fact.

Under a statute relating to dependent children, "dependent" is synonymous with "neglected," but not with "delinquent." People v. Ellis, 186 Ill. App. 417, 420.

Under a California juvenile act, a "dependent person" is one under the age of 21 years who is in danger of growing up to lead an idle, dissolute, or immoral life. People v. Cruze, 24 Cal. App. 497, 141 P. 335.

—Dependent conditions. Mutual covenants which go to the whole consideration on both sides. Long v. Addix, 184 Ala. 230, 63 So. 982, 984.

—Dependent contract. One which depends or is conditional upon another. One which it is not the duty of the contractor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party. Ham. Parties, 17, 29, 30, 109.

—Dependent covenant. See Covenant.

—Dependent promise. One which it is not the duty of the promisor to perform until some obligation contained in the same agreement has been performed by the other party. Hamm. Partn. 17, 29, 30, 109; Harr. Cont. 152.

DEPENDING. In practice. Pending or undetermined; in progress. See 5 Coke, 47.

Under a statute (28 USCA §§ 639-641), permitting the taking of testimony by deposition de bene esse, a cause is "depending" from the time of the issuance of the original writ. Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. v. Bates Expanded Steel Truss Co. (D. C.) 296 F. 321, 283.

DEPESAS. In Spanish-American law. Spaces of ground in towns reserved for commons or public pasturage. 12 Pet. 443, note, 9 L. Ed. 1150.

DEPOLYMERIZATION. In connection with the devulcanizing of vulcanized rubber, the act of breaking into smaller aggregations the rubber molecules, which consist of hydrogen and carbon, thus rendering the waste rubber plastic. Philadelphia Rubber Works Co. v. United States Rubber Reclaiming Works (D. C.) 225 F. 789, 791.

DEPONE. In Scotch practice. To depose; to make oath in writing.

DEPONENT. In practice. One who deposes (that is, testifies or makes oath, now in writing) to the truth of certain facts; one who gives under oath testimony which is reduced to writing; one who makes oath to a written statement. The party making an affidavit is generally so called, though in the United States the term "affiant" is also commonly applied to such party.

The word "deponent," from which is derived "deponent," has relation to the mode in which the oath is administered, (by the witness placing his hand upon the book of the holy evangelists,) and not as to whether the testimony is delivered orally or reduced to writing. "Deponent" is included in the term "witness," but "witness" is more general. Blisse v. Shuman, 47 Me. 446.

DEPONER. In old Scotch practice. A deponent. 3 How. State Tr. 695.
DEPOPULATION AGRORUM. In old English law. The crime of destroying, ravaging, or laying waste a country. 2 Hale, P. C. 333; 4 Bl. Comm. 373.

DEPOPULATION. In old English law. A species of waste by which the population of the kingdom was diminished. Depopulation of houses was a public offense. 12 Coke, 30, 31.

DEPORTATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A kind of banishment, where a condemned person was sent or carried away to some foreign country, usually to an island, (in insulam deportatur) and thus taken out of the number of Roman citizens.

DEPORTATION. Banishment to a foreign country, attended with confiscation of property and deprivation of civil rights. A punishment derived from the deportatio (q. e.) of the Roman law, and still in use in France.

In Roman Law
A perpetual banishment, depriving the banished of his rights as a citizen; it differed from relegation (q. e.) and exile, (q. e.) 1 Brown, Civil & Adm. Law, 125, note; Inst. 1, 12, 1, and 2; Dig. 48, 22, 14, 1.

In American Law
The removal or sending back of an alien to the country from which he came, as a measure of national police and without any implication of punishment or penalty.

"The removal of an alien out of the country, simply because his presence is deemed inconsistent with the public welfare, and without any punishment being imposed or contemplated, either under the laws of the country out of which he is sent, or under those of the country to which he is taken." It differs from transportation, which is by way of punishment of one convicted of an offence against the laws of the country; and from extradition (q. e.), which is the surrender to another country of one accused of an offence against its laws, there to be tried, and, if found guilty, punished. Feng Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 15 S. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 906. "Deportation," as distinguished from "exclusion," is depriving a person already in the United States of a privilege which he, at least at the time, is enjoying; whereas "exclusion" is the denial of entry, and does not deprive one of any liberties he had theretofore enjoyed. Ex parte Domingo Corpus (D. C.) 6 F. (2d) 336.

DEPOSE. To deprive an individual of a public employment or office against his will. Wolfius, Inst. § 1063. The term is usually applied to the deprivation of all authority of a sovereign.

In Practice
In ancient usage, to testify as a witness; to give evidence under oath.

In Modern Usage
To make a deposition; to give evidence in the shape of a deposition; to make statements which are written down and sworn to; to give testimony which is reduced to writing by a duly-qualified officer and sworn to by the deponent. To say (in a deposition) under oath. Webb v. Iowa-Nebraska Coal Co., 168 Iowa, 778, 200 N. W. 225, 229.

A bailment of goods to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust. Story, Bailm. § 41; Richardson v. Putre, 42 Miss. 544.

The delivery of chattels by one person to another to keep for the use of the bailor. Code La. 1882, § 3108 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3444).

The giving of the possession of personal property by one person to another, with his consent, to keep for the use and benefit of the first or of a third person. Mounal v. Parkhurst, 89 Or. 248, 173 P. 669, 671.

Also, money lodged with a person as an earnest or security for the performance of some contract, to be forfeited if the depositor fails in his undertaking. It may be deemed to be part payment, and to that extent may constitute the purchaser the actual owner of the estate. Larson v. Mettalf, 201 Iowa, 1268, 207 N. W. 382, 384, 45 A. L. R. 344.

Classification
According to the classification of the civil law, deposits are of the following several sorts: (1) Necessary, made upon some sudden emergency, and from some pressing necessity; as, for instance, in case of a fire, a shipwreck, or other overwhelming calamity, when property is confided to any person whom the depositor may meet without proper opportunity for reflection or choice, and thence it is called "miserable depositum." (2) Voluntary, which arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties. Civ. Code La. art. 2964; Dig. 16, 3, 2; Story, Bailm. § 44. The common law has made no such division.

There is another class of deposits called "involuntary," which may be without the assistance or even knowledge of the depositor; as lumber, etc., left upon another's land by the subsidence of a flood. An "involuntary" deposit is defined by Civ. Code Cal. § 1515, as one made by the accidental leaving or placing of personal property in the possession of any person without negligence on the part of the owner. Copelin v. Berlin Dryworks & Laundry Co., 188 Cal. 715, 144 P. 961, 963, L. R. A. 1915C, 712.

The civilians again divide deposits into "simple deposits," made by one or more persons having a common interest, and "sequestrations," made by one or more persons, each of whom has a different and adverse interest in controversy touching it; and these last are of two sorts,—"conventional," or such as are made by the mere agreement of the parties without any judicial act; and "judicial," or such as are made by order of a court in the course of some proceeding. Rev. Civ. Code La. art. 2976. Thus, it is said that in view of Rev. Civ. Code La. art. 2976, the difference between "sequestration" and "deposit" is that the former may have for its object both movable and immovable property, while the latter is confined to movables. Raines v. Dunson, 145 La. 1011, 83 So. 224, 226.

There is another class of deposits called "irregular," as when a person, having a sum of money which he does not think safe in his own hands, confides it to another, who is to return to him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it. Poth. du Depot, 82, 83; Story, Bailm. § 84. A regular deposit is a strict or special deposit; a deposit which must be returned in specie; i. e., the thing deposited must be returned. A quasi deposit is a kind of implied or involuntary deposit, which takes place where a party comes lawfully to the possession of another person's property, by finding it. Story, Bailm. § 85. Particularly with reference to money, deposits are also classed as general or special. A general deposit is where the money deposited is not itself to be returned, but an equivalent in money (that is, a like sum) is to be returned. It is equivalent to a loan, and the money deposited becomes the property of the depositary. Insurance Co. v. Landers, 43 Ala. 138. A special deposit is a deposit in which the identical thing deposited is to be returned to the depositor. The particular object of this kind of deposit is safekeeping. Koetting v. State, 88 Wis. 502, 60 N. W. 822. In banking law, this kind of deposit is contrasted with a "general" deposit, as above; but in the civil law it is the antithesis of an "irregular" deposit. A gratuitous or naked deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the depositor without hire or reward on either side, or one for which the depositary receives no consideration beyond the mere possession of the thing deposited. Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2921 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3194); Civ. Code Cal. § 1544. Properly and originally, all deposits are of this description; for according to the Roman law, a bailment of goods for which hire or a price is to be paid, is not called "depositum" but "locatio." If the owner of the property pays for its custody or care, it is a "locatio custodii," if, on the other hand, the bailee pays for the use of it, it is "locatio rel." (See Locatio.) But in the modern law of those states which have been influenced by the Roman jurisprudence, a gratuitous or naked deposit is distinguished from a "deposit for hire," in which the bailee is to be paid for his services in keeping the article. Civ. Code Cal. § 1851; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2921 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3194).

In Mining

A quantity of ore or mineral substances occurring naturally in the earth; as, a deposit of gold, oil, etc. See Colorado Gold Dredging Co. v. Stearns-Roger Mfg. Co., 60 Colo. 412, 153 P. 765.

In Banking Law

The act of placing or lodging money in the custody of a bank or banker, for safety or convenience, to be withdrawn at the will of the depositor or under rules and regulations agreed on. Also, the money so deposited, or the credit which the depositor receives for it. Clement Nat. Bank v. Vermont, 231 U. S. 120, 34 S. Ct. 31, 35, 58 L. Ed. 147. See also, State v. Marron, 18 N. M. 426, 137 P. 845, 848, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 274; State v. Farmers' State Bank of Allen, 113 Neb. 82, 201 N. W. 896, 894; State Banking Board v. James (Tex. Civ. App.) 264 S. W. 145, 149.

In General

Deposit account. An account of sums lodged with a bank not to be drawn upon by checks, and usually not to be withdrawn except after a fixed notice.

Deposit company. A company whose business is the safe-keeping of securities or other valuables deposited in boxes or safes in its building which are leased to the depositors.

Deposit of title-deeds. A method of plessing real property as security for a loan, by placing the title-deeds of the land in the keeping of the lender as pledgee.

Deposit slip. An acknowledgment that the amount named therein has been received by the bank; it is a receipt intended to furnish evidence as between the depositor and depositary that on a given date there was deposited the sum named therein, the time of deposit, and amount deposited, being also shown. In re Ruskey (U. C. A.) 5 F.(2d) 143, 147; American Home Life Ins. Co. v. Citizens' State Bank of Headrick, 69 Okl. 193, 198 P. 437, 428, L. R. A. 1915B, 296.

General and special deposits. Deposits of money in a bank are either general or special. A general deposit (the ordinary form) is one which is to be repaid on demand, in whole or in part as called for, in any current money, not the same pieces of money deposited. In re Cronk, 110 Neb. 676, 194 N. W. 865. In this case, the title to the money deposited passes to the bank, which becomes debtor to the depositor for the amount. A special deposit is one in which the depositor is entitled to the return of the identical thing deposited (gold, bullion, securities, etc.) and the title to the property remains in him, the deposit being usually made only for purposes of safe-keeping. Shipman v. State Bank, 59 Hun, 621, 13 N. Y. Supp. 475; State v. Clark, 4 Ind. 315; Brahms v. Adkins, 77 Ill. 263; Marine Bank v. Fulton Bank, 2 Wall. 232, 17 L. Ed. 782. There is also a specific deposit, which exists where money or property is given to a bank for some specific and particular purpose, as a note for collection, money to pay a particular note, or property for some other specific purpose. Corporation Commission of North Carolina v. Merchants’ Bank & Trust Co., 193 N. C. 996, 138 S. E. 22, 24; Cooper v. National Bank of Savannah, 21 Ga. App. 356, 94 S. E. 611, 615; Officer v. Officer, 120 Iowa, 359, 94 N. W. 947, 98 Am. St. Rep. 385.

DEPOSITARY. The party receiving a deposit; one with whom anything is lodged in trust, as “depositary” is the place where it is put. A trustee; fiduciary; one to whom goods are bailed to be held without recompense. Stand. Dict. The obligation on the part of the depositary is that he keep the thing with reasonable care, and, upon request, restore it to the depositor, or otherwise deliver it, according to the original trust.

DEPOSITION. In Scotch law. Deposit or depositum, the species of bailment so called. Bell.

DEPOSITION. The testimony of a witness taken upon interrogatories, not in open court, but in pursuance of a commission to take testimony issued by a court, or under a general law on the subject, and reduced to writing and duly authenticated, and intended to be used upon the trial of an action in court. Lutcher v. U. S., 72 F. 972, 19 C. C. A. 259; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. (C. C.) 65 P. 535.

A written declaration under oath, made upon notice to the adverse party for the purpose of enabling him to attend and cross-examine; or upon written interrogatories. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 2004; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 7885; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 2752; N. S. Sherman Machine & Iron Works v. R. D. Cole Mfg. Co., 51 Okl. 533, 151 P. 1181, 1182. It is the giving of notice to the adverse party which especially distinguishes a deposition from an affidavit. State v. Quartier, 114 Or. 661, 236 P. 746, 748.

A deposition is evidence given by a witness under interrogatories, oral or written, and usually written down by an official person. In its generic sense, it embraces all written evidence verified by oath, and includes affidavit; but, in legal language, a distinction is maintained between depositions and affidavits. Stimpson v. Brooks, 3 Blatchf. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 14,641. But this distinction is not always observed in statutes. Arnold v. State (Okt. Cr. App.) 132 P. 112, 1125. See, also, State v. English, 71 Mont. 349, 239 P. 727, 728.

The term sometimes is used in a special sense to denote a statement made orally by a person on oath before an examiner, commissioner, or officer of the court, (but not in open court,) and taken down in writing by the examiner or under his direction. Sweet.

In Ecclesiastical Law

The act of depriving a clergymen, by a competent tribunal, of his clerical orders, to punish him for some offense and to prevent his acting in future in his clerical character. Ayl. Par. 296.

DEPOSITO. In Spanish law. Deposit; the species of bailment so called. Schm. Civil Law, 193.

A real contract by which one person confides to the custody of another an object on the condition that it shall be returned to him whenever he shall require it.

DEPOSITOR. One who makes a deposit.

In banking law, one who delivers and leaves money with a bank on his order or subject to check. Union Life & Accident Ins. Co. of Lincoln, Neb., v. American Surety Co. of New York, 113 Neb. 300, 203 N. W. 172, 175; Lummus Cotton Gin Co. v. Walker, 195 Ala. 552, 70 So. 754, 756; Austin v. Avant (Tex. Civ. App.) 277 S. W. 409, 410.

DEPOSITORY. The place where a deposit (q. v.) is placed and kept.

Sometimes, also, a depository: one with whom something is deposited. Jones v. Marrs, 114 Tex. 62, 263 S. W. 570, 573.

United States Depositories

Banks selected and designated to receive deposits of the public funds of the United States.

One of the four real contracts specified by Justinian, and having the following characteristics: (1) The depositary or depositee is not liable for negligence, however extreme, but only for fraud, dolus; (2) the property remains in the depository, the depositary having only the possession. Pro-carium and sequestre were two varieties of the deposition.

A place for the deposit of goods; a warehouse, or a storehouse. Weyman v. City of Newport, 153 Ky. 457, 156 S. W. 109, 111.

A place where military supplies or stores are kept or troops assembled. U. S. v. Caldwell, 19 Wall. 264, 22 L. Ed. 114.

—Depot grounds. Station grounds. Pecos & N. T. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 193 S. W. 770, 773; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. McCall, 48 Okl. 602, 150 P. 173, 174. The place where passengers get on and off, and on trains, where goods are loaded and unloaded, and all grounds necessary, convenient, and actually used for such purposes by the public and by the railway company, including the place where cars are switched and trains made up, also where tracks are used for storing cars, and where the public require open and free access to the railroad for the purpose of such business.

DÉPÔT. In French law. The depositum of the Roman and the deposit of the English law. It is of two kinds, being either (1) dépôt simply so called, and which may be either voluntary or necessary, and (2) sequestre, which is a deposit made either under an agreement of the parties, and to abide the event of pending litigation regarding it, or by virtue of the direction of the court or a judge, pending litigation regarding it. Brown; Civ. Code La. 2926.

DEPREVING. To deface; vilify; exhibit contempt for. In England it is a criminal offense to "deprave" the Lord's supper or the Book of Common Prayer. Steph. Crim. Dig. 99.

A mind which may become inflamed by liquor and passion to such a degree that it ceases to care for human life and safety is a "depraved mind." State v. Weltz, 155 Minn. 143, 161 N. W. 42, 44.

DEPREVATION RESERVE. An account kept on the books, as of a public utility, to offset the depreciation of the property due to time and use. People ex rel. Adironack Power & Light Corporation v. Public Service Commission, 200 App. Div. 268, 193 N. Y. S. 186, 191. It does not represent the actual depreciation of its properties which is to be deducted from the reproduction cost new to ascertain the present value for rate purposes; but only what observation and experience suggest as likely to happen, with a margin over. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Railroad Commission of South Carolina (D. C.) 5 F.(2d) 77, 80.

In French Law

Pillage, waste, or spoliation of goods, particularly of the estate of a decedent.

DEPRIVATION. In English ecclesiastical law. The taking away from a clergyman of his benefice or other spiritual promotion or dignity, either by sentence declaratory in the proper court for fit and sufficient causes or in pursuance of divers penal statutes which declare the benefice void for some nonfeasance or neglect, or some malfeasance or crime. 3 Steph. Comm. 87, 88; Burn, Ecc. Law, tit. "Deprivation." See Arliffe, Parerg. 206; 1 Bla. Comm. 393. See Degradation.

DEPUTIZE. To appoint a deputy; to appoint or commission one to act as deputy or officer. In a general sense, the term is descriptive of empowering one person to act for another in any capacity or relation, but in law it is almost always restricted to the substitution of a person appointed to act for an officer of the law.

DEPUTY. A substitute; a person duly authorized by an officer to exercise some or all of the functions pertaining to the office, in the place and stead of the latter. Carter v. Hornback, 139 Mo. 235, 49 S. W. 583; Rerring v. Lee, 22 W. Va. 667; Erwin v. U. S. (D. C.) 37 F. 470; 2 L. R. A. 229; Willingham v. State, 21 Fla. 775; Ellison v. Stevenson, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 271; People v. Barkley, 14 Misc. 369, 35 N. Y. S. 727; United States v. Rockefelder (D. C.) 221 F. 462, 465; State v. Stearns, 200 Ala. 405, 76 So. 321, 323. One appointed to substitute for another with power to act for him in his name or behalf. Saxby v. Sonnemann, 318 Ill. 600, 149 N. E. 526, 528.

A deputy differs from an assignee, in that an assignee has an interest in the office itself, and does all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer, except in special cases; but a deputy has not any interest in the office, and is only the shadow of the officer in whose name he acts. And there is a distinction in doing an act by an agent and by a deputy. An agent can only bind his principal when he does the act in the name of the principal. But a deputy may do the act and sign his own name, and it binds his principal; for a deputy has, in law, the whole power of his principal. Wharton.

Deputy consul. See Consul.

Deputy lieutenant. The deputy of a lord lieutenant of a county in England.

Deputy sheriff. One appointed to act in the place and stead of the sheriff in the official business of the latter's office. A general deputy (sometimes called "undersheriff"; see Shirran v. Dallas, 21 Cal. App. 405, 132 P. 454, 455) is one who, by virtue of his appointment, has authority to execute all the ordinary duties of the office of sheriff, and who executes process without any special authority from his principal. A special deputy, who is an officer pro hac vice, is one appointed for a special occasion or a special service, as, to serve a particular writ or to assist in keeping the peace when a riot or tumult is expected or in progress. He acts under a specific and not a general appointment and authority. Allen v. Smith, 12 N. J. Law, 162; Wilson v. Russell, 4 Duk. 376, 31 N. W. 645.

Deputy steward. A steward of a manor may depute or authorize another to hold a court; and the acts done in a court so holden will be as legal as if the court had been held by the chief steward in person. So an under steward or deputy may authorize another as subdeputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him; such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule delegatus non potest delegare. Wharton.

SPECIAL DEPUTY. One appointed to exercise some special function or power of the official or person for whom he is appointed. Saxby v. Sonnemann, 318 Ill. 600, 149 N. E. 526, 528.

DERAIN. Apparently, literally, to confound, and disorder, or to turn out of course, or displace; as derainment or departure out of religion, in St. 31 Hen. VIII. c. 6. In the common law, the word is used generally in the sense of to prove; viz., to derain a right, derain the warranty, etc. Glanv. lib. 2, c. 6; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 146. Perhaps this word "derain," and the word "derainment," derived from it, may be used in the sense of to prove and a proving, by disproving of what is asserted in opposition to truth and fact. Jacob. It is used as referring to a decree "which derains his title from a false source." Paxson v. Brown, 61 F. 874, 884, 10 C. C. A. 135.

DERAILMENT. The act of going off or the state of being off the rails of a railroad. Graham v. Insurance Co. of North America, 220 Mass. 230, 107 N. E. 915.

DERANGEMENT. See Insanity.

DERECO. In Spanish law. Law or right. Derecho común, common law. The civil law is so called. A right. Derechos, rights. Also, specifically, an impost laid upon goods or provisions, or upon persons or lands, by way of tax or contribution. Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 608.

DERELICT. Forsaken; abandoned; deserted; cast away.

Personal property abandoned or thrown away by the owner in such manner as to indicate that he intends to make no further claim thereto. 2 Bl. Comm. 9; 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 9; Thompson v. One Anchor and Two Anchor Chains (D. C.) 221 F. 770, 772; 1 C. B. 112; Broom, Max. 261; Goodenow v. Tappan, 1 Ohio, 51; Jones's Admirers v. Nunn, 12 Ga. 472; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 455, 45 Am. Rep. 600.

Land left uncovered by the receding of water from its former bed. 2 Rolle, Abr. 170; 2 Bl. Comm. 262; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 109.

In Maritime Law.

A boat or vessel found entirely deserted or abandoned on the sea without hope or intention of recovery or return by the master or crew, whether resulting from wreck, accident, necessity, or voluntary abandonment. U. S. v. Stone (C. C.) S F. 243; Cromwell v. The Island City, 1 Black, 121, 17 L. Ed. 70; The Hyderabad (D. C.) 11 F. 755; The Fairfield (D. C.) 30 F. 700; The Aquila, 1 C. Rob. 41; 20 E. L. & Eq. 607; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cranch, 246, 2 L. Ed. 266; The John Gillpin, Oic. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 7,435; Evans v. The Charles, 1 Newb. 829, Fed. Cas. No. 4, 556; Montgomery v. The T. P. Leathers, 1 Newb. 421, Fed. Cas. No. 8,780; The Atacca.
DEROPTION. The partial repeal or abolishing of a law, as by a subsequent act which limits its scope or impairs its utility and force. Distinguished from abrogation, which means the entire repeal and annulment of a law. Dig. 50, 17, 102.

DEROGATORY CLAUSE. In a will, this is a sentence or secret character inserted by the testator, of which he reserves the knowledge to himself, with a condition that no will be may take forthwith should be valid, unless this clause be inserted word for word. This is done as a precaution to guard against later wills being extorted by violence, or otherwise improperly obtained. By the law of England such a clause would be void, as tending to make the will irrevocable. Wharton.

Derogatur legi, cum pars detrahirur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsus tollitur. To derogate from a law is to take away part of it; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely. Dig. 50, 17, 102.

DESAFUERO. In Spanish law. An irregular action committed with violence against law, custom, or reason.

DESAMORTIZACION. In Mexican law. The desamortizacion of property is to take it out of mortmain, (dead hands;) that is, to unloose it from the grasp, as it were, of ecclesiastical or civil corporations. The term has no equivalent in English. Hall, Mex. Law, § 749.

DESCEND. To pass by succession; as when the estate vests by operation of law in the heirs immediately upon the death of the ancestor. Dove v. Torr, 125 Mass. 40; In re Leet’s Estate, 104 Or. 32, 206 P. 545, 550; Con- dran v. Martin, 113 Okl. 250, 241 P. 826, 828.

To pass down from generation to generation. Weedon v. Chin Bow (C. C. A.) 7 F. (2d) 369.

To go;—often used as a word of transfer. Gordon v. Cadwalader, 164 Cal. 509, 130 P. 18, 20.

As used in wills, the word “descend” is often regarded as a general expression equivalent to the words “go to” or “belong to,” and as indicating a passing of title by the force of the will rather than of the statute. Klingman v. Gilbert, 90 Kan. 446, 135 P. 682, 684; Carter v. Reserve Gas Co., 84 W. Va. 741, 100 S. E. 738, 742.

DESCENDANT. One who is descended from another; a person who proceeds from the body of another, such as a child, grandchild, etc., to the remotest degree. The term is the opposite of “ascendant,” (q. v.) Rasmussen v. Unknown Wife of Hodge, 293 Ill. 101, 127 N. E. 356, 359; In re Cupples’ Estate, 272 Mo. 465, 100 S. W. 556, 558; In re Tinker’s Estate, 61 Okl. 21, 215 P. 770, 781; State v. Ytur- ria, 109 Tex. 220, 204 S. W. 315, 326, L. R. A. 1918F, 1079; Aml. 327; 2 Bro. C. C. 30, 230; 1 Roper, Leg. 115. In the plural, the term means offspring or posterity in general. Carter Oil Co. v. Scott (D. C.) 12 F. (2d) 780, 788.

Descent is a good term of description in a will, and includes all who proceed from the body of the person named; as grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Amb. 287: 2 Hil. Real. Prop. 242.

One on whom the law has cast the property by descent. James v. Hooker, 172 N. C. 780, 90 S. E. 925, 926; Smith v. Thom, 158 Ky. 655, 166 S. W. 182. An heir. Lee v. Roberson, 257 Ill. 321, 130 N. E. 774, 778. In this sense, the term is frequently held to include an adopted child. In re Cadwell's Estate, 26 Wyo. 412, 186 P. 499, 501; In re Cupples' Estate, 272 Mo. 465, 199 S. W. 555, 557; In re Hobb's Estate, 134 Wash. 424, 235 P. 974, 975.

Lineal Descendant

DESCENDER. Descent; in the descent. See Formedon.

DESCENDIBLE. Capable of passing by descent, or of being inherited or transmitted by devise, (spoken of estates, titles, offices, and other property.) Collins v. Smith, 105 Ga. 525, 31 S. E. 449.

DESCENT. Hereditary succession. Succession to the ownership of an estate by inheritance, or by any act of law, as distinguished from "purchase." Title by descent is the title by which one person, upon the death of another, acquires the real estate of the latter as his heir at law. 2 Bl. Comm. 201; Com. Dig. "Descent," A; Adams v. Akerlund, 108 Ill. 632, 48 N. E. 454; Starr v. Hamilton, 22 Fed. Cas. 1,107; In re Donahue's Estate, 36 Cal. 362; Shippman v. Izard, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 924; Brower v. Hurd, 13 Ohio St. 358; Allen v. Bland, 134 Ind. 78, 33 N. E. 774; Reese v. Stires, 87 N. J. Eq. 32, 103 A. 679, 680; Moffett v. Conley, 63 Okl. 3, 163 P. 119, 120. The title by inheritance is in all cases called descent, although by statute law the title is sometimes made to ascend.

"Descent" in its broadest sense signifies an inheritance cast upon any one capable of receiving it, whether heir at common law or not. Barry v. Rosenblatt, 90 N. J. Eq. 1, 106 A. 698, 619.

The division among those legally entitled thereto of the real property of intestates.

Classification
Descents are of two sorts, lineal and collateral. Lineal descent is descent in a direct or right line, as from father or grandfather to son or grandson.

Collateral descent is descent in a collateral or oblique line, that is, up to the common ancestor and then down from him, as from brother to brother, or between cousins. Levy v. McCarter, 6 Pet. 112; 8 L Ed. 234. They are also distinguished into mediate and immediate descents. But these terms are used in different senses. A descent may be said to be a mediate or immediate descent of the estate or right; or it may be said to be mediate or immediate, in regard to the mediatees or immediatees of the pedigree or consanguinity. Thus, a descent from the father to the grandson who dies in possession, to the grandchild, the father being then dead, or from the uncle to the nephew, the brother being dead, is, in the former sense, in law, immediate descent, although the one is collateral and the other lineal; for the heir is in the per, and not in the per and cur. Or the other hand, with reference to the line of pedigree or consanguinity, a descent is often said to be immediate, when the ancestor from whom the party derives his blood is immediate, and without any intervening link or degrees; and mediate, when the kindred is derived from him medium altero, another ancestor intervening between them. Thus a descent in lineal from father to son is in this sense immediate; but a descent from grandfather to grandson, the father being dead, or from uncle to nephew, the brother being dead, is deemed mediate; the father and the brother being, in these latter cases, the medium deferens, as it is called, of the descent or consanguinity. Levy v. McCarter, 6 Pet. 112, 8 L Ed. 234; Furencos v. Mickelson, 86 Iowa, 568, 33 N. W. 416; Garner v. Wood, 71 Md. 37, 17 A. 1001.

Descent was denoted, in the Roman law, by the term "successio," which is also used by Bracton, from which has been derived the succession of the Scotch and French jurisprudence.

DESCENT CAST. The devolving of reility upon the heir on the death of his ancestor intestate.

Another name for what the older writers called a "descent which tolls entry." When a person had acquired land by devisee, abatement, or nomination and did not take title to the land, the descent of it to his heir took away or tolled the real owner's right of entry, so that he could only recover the land by an action. Co. Litt. 237 b; Rap. & L Dict.

DESCRIPTIO PERSONÆ. Lat. Description of the person. By this is meant a word or phrase used merely for the purpose of identifying or pointing out the person intended, and not as an intimation that the language in connection with which it occurs is to apply to him only in the official or technical character which might appear to be indicated by the word.

In wills, it frequently happens that the word heir is used as a descriptio persona. A legacy "to the eldest son" of A would be a designation of the person. See 1 Roper, Leg. c. 2.

DESCRIPTION. A delineation or account of a particular subject by the recital of its characteristic accidents and qualities. Ayliffe, Pud. 60.

A written enumeration of items composing an estate, or of its condition, or of titles or documents; like an inventory, but with more particularity, and without involving the idea of an appraisement.

An exact written account of an article, mechanical device, or process which is the subject of an application for a patent.

A method of pointing out a particular person by referring to his relationship to some other person or his character as an officer, trustee, executor, etc.

That part of a conveyance, advertisement of sale, etc., which identifies the land or premises intended to be affected.

The description in a search warrant must be such that any person familiar with the locality can by inquiry identify the premises described. U. S. v. Chin On (D. C.) 297 F. 531, 533.

DESERT. To leave or quit with an intention to cause a permanent separation; to forsake utterly; to abandon. It is essentially willful in nature. Stevens v. Stevens, 304 Ill. 297, 136 N. E. 785, 787; Stover v. Stover, 94 N. J. Eq. 705, 120 A. 788, 789.

DESERTER. As applied to seamen, one continually and intentionally absent from the ship, constituting a quitting of the service of the vessel. The Strathearn (D. C.) 239 F. 583, 585. Compare Mystic S. S. Co. v. Stromland (C. C. A.) 20 F.(2d) 342, 344; The Ella Pierce Thurlow (D. C.) 15 F.(2d) 675, 676.

Under the regulations of the Navy Department, a "deserter" is one who is absent without leave and with a manifest intention not to return, while a "straggler" is one absent without leave, with the probability that he does not intend to desert, but, if his absence continues for 10 days, he becomes a deserter. Reed v. United States (C. C. A.) 252 F. 21, 22.

DESERTION. The act by which a person abandons and forsakes, without justification, or unauthorized, a station or condition of public or social life, renouncing its responsibilities and evading its duties.

In Matrimonial and Divorce Law

Constructive Desertion

Obstinate Desertion

See that title.

In Military Law

An offense which consists in the abandonment of his post and duties by a person commissioned or enlisted in the army or navy, without leave and with the intention not to return. Hollingsworth v. Shaw, 19 Ohio St. 452, 2 Am. Rep. 411; In re Sutherland (D. C.) 53 F. 551. There is a difference between desertion and simple "absence without leave;" in order to constitute the former, there must be an intention not to return to the service. Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 335. See Deserter.

In Maritime Law

The act by which a seaman deserts and abandons a ship or vessel, in which he had engaged to perform a voyage, before the expiration of his time, and without leave. By desertion, in the maritime law, is meant, not a mere unauthorized absence from the ship without leave, but an unauthorized absence from the ship, with an intention not to return to her service, or, as it is often expressed, animus non revertendi; that is, with an intention to desert. Coffin v. Jenkins, 3 Story, 103, Fed. Cas. No. 2,948; The Union (D. C.) 20 F. 533; The Mary C. Conery (D. C.) 9 F. 223; The George, 10 Fed. Cas. 204; The Italiar (C. C. A.) 277 F. 712, 714; The M. S. Elliott (C. C. A.) 277 F. 580; The Levi W. Ostrander (D. C.) 231 F. 968, 910.

DESERVING. Worthy or meritorious, without regard to condition or circumstances. In no sense of the word is it limited to persons in need of assistance, or objects which come within the class of charitable uses. Nichols v. Allen, 130 Mass. 211, 39 Am. Rep. 445.

DESHONORA. In Spanish law. Dishonor; injury; slander. Las Partidas, pt. 7, tit. 9, l. 1, 6.

As a term of art, the giving of a visible form to the conception of the mind, or invention. Binns v. Woodruff, 4 Wash. C. C. 48, Fed. Cas. No. 1,424.

In Evidence

Purpose or Intention, combined with plan, or implying a plan in the mind. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 331; State v. Grant, 86 Iowa, 216, 35 N. W. 120; Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 388; Hogan v. State, 36 Wis. 226.

In Patent Law

The drawing or depiction of an original plan or conception for a novel pattern, model, shape, or configuration, to be used in the manufacturing or textile arts or the fine arts, and chiefly of a decorative or ornamental character. "Design patents" are contrasted with "utility patents," but equally involve the exercise of the inventive or originative faculty.

"Design, in the view of the patent law, is that characteristic of a physical substance which, by means of lines, images, configuration, and the like, taken as a whole, makes an impression, through the eye, upon the mind of the observer. The essence of a design resides not in the elements individually, nor in their method of arrangement, but in the total ensemble—in that indescribable whole that awakens some sensation in the observer's mind. Impressions thus imparted may be complex or simple; in one a mingled impression of gracefulness and strength, in another the impression of strength alone. But whatever the impression, there is attached in the mind of the observer, to the object observed, a sense of uniqueness and character." Pelo-ca Scale Co. v. American Cutlery Co., 102 F.

Designatio justiciariorum est a rege; jurisdictio vero ordinaria a lege. 4 Inst. 74. The appointment of justices is by the king, but their ordinary jurisdiction by the law.

DESIGNATIO PERSONAE. The description of a person or a party to a deed or contract. See, also, Descriptio Persone.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum factum cessare tacitum. Co. Litt. 210. The specifying of one is the exclusion of another, and that which is expressed makes that which is understood to cease. (The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of the other; and that which is expressed prevails over that which is implied.)

DESIGNATION. An addition to a name, as of title, profession, trade, or occupation, to distinguish the person from others. Inglis v. Pentius, 102 Ohio St. 149, 131 N. E. 506, 511, 512.

A description or descriptive expression by which a person or thing is denoted in a will without using the name.

Thus, a bequest of the farm which the testator bought of a person named, or of a picture which he owns, painted by a certain artist, would be a designation of the thing.

Also, an appointment or assignment, as to a particular office. Santa Barbara County v. Janassens, 177 Cal. 114, 169 P. 1025, 1027, L. R. A. 1916C, 588; Cunio v. Franklin County, 315 Mo. 465, 288 S. W. 1007, 1008; Hendee v. City of Wildwood, 96 N. J. Law, 296, 114 A. 749, 750.

DESIGNED. Conceived or taken to be employed for a particular purpose. People v. Dorrington, 221 Mich. 571, 191 N. W. 851, 852. Fit, adapted, prepared, suitable, appropriate. Thomas v. State, 34 Okl. Cr. 48, 244 P. 816.

The word "desire" may be as effective as if the word "devise" or "bequeath" had been used. Kepflinger v. Kepflinger, 186 Ind. 51, 113 N. E. 292, 293; In re Briggs' Estate, 156 Cal. 551, 199 P. 322, 324; In re Gellick's Will, 156 N. Y. S. 266, 267, 116 Misc. 109. The word "desire," in a will, raises a trust, where the objects of that desire are specified; Vanduyck v. Van Beuren, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 84.

DESISTEMENT. The name of a doctrine under which the court, in construing a foreign will, applies the law of the forum on the theory that there is a hiatus. In re Tallmadge, 181 N. Y. S. 536, 541, 106 Misc. 696.

DESLINDE. A term used in the Spanish law, denoting the act by which the boundaries of an estate or portion of a country are determined.

DESPACHEURS. In maritime law. Persons appointed to settle cases of average.

DESPATCHES. Official communications of official persons on the affairs of government.

DESPERATE. Hopeless; worthless. This term is used in inventories and schedules of assets, particularly by executors, etc., to describe debts or claims which are considered impossible or hopeless of collection. See Schultz v. Pulver, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 305; Darrow v. Rohrer, 71 Colo. 417, 207 P. 861; Toll. Ex. 248; 2 Wms. Ex. 644; 1 Chitt. Pr. 580.

DESPERATE DEBT. A hopeless debt; an irrecoverable obligation.

DESPITUS. Contempt. See Despite. A contemptible person. Fleta, lb. 4, c. 5.

DESPOLI. This word involves, in its signification, violence or clandestine means by which one is deprived of that which he possesses. Its Spanish equivalent, despojar, is a term used in Mexican law. Sunol v. Hophurn, 1 Cal. 268.

DESPOLAR. A possessory action of the Mexican law. It is brought to recover possession of inmovable property, of which one has been despoleo (despojado) by another. See, also, Despol.

DESPONSATION. The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DESPORIO. In Spanish law. Espousals; mutual promises of future marriage. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 6, c. 1, § 1.

DESPOT. This word, in its original and most simple acceptance, signifies master and supreme lord; it is synonymous with monarch; but taken in bad part, as it is usually employed, it signifies a tyrant. In some states, deposit is the title given to the sovereign, as king is given in others. Enc. Lond.

DESPOTISM. That abuse of government where the sovereign power is not divided, but united in the hands of a single man, whatever may be his official title. It is not, properly, a form of government. Toulmin, Dr. Civ. Fr. tit. préf. n. 32; Rutherf. Inst. b. 1, c. 20, § 1. "Despotism" is not exactly synonymous with "autocracy," for the former involves the idea of tyranny or abuse of power, which is not necessarily implied by the latter. Every despotism is autocratic; but an autocracy is not necessarily despotic.

DESRENABLE. L. Fr. Unreasonable. Brit. c. 121.

DESSAISSEMENT. In French law. When a person is declared bankrupt, he is immediately deprived of the enjoyment and administration of all his property; this deprivation, which extends to all his rights, is called "dessaissement." Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 556.

DESTINATION. The purpose to which it is intended an article or a fund shall be applied. A testator gives a designation to a legacy when he prescribes the specific use to which it shall be put.

The port at which a ship is to end her voyage is called her "port of destination." Pardeusus, no. 600.

The phrases "port of destination" and "port of discharge" are not equivalent; U. S. v. Barker, 5 Mason 494, Fed. Cas. No. 14,536. See Sheridan v. Ireland, 66 Me. 55.

DESTITUTE OR NECESSITOUS CIRCUMSTANCES

DESTITUTE OR NECESSITOUS CIRCUM-
STANCES. Circumstances in which one needs the necessaries of life, which cover not only primitive physical needs, things absolutely indispensable to human existence and decency, but those things, also, which are in fact necessary to the particular person left without support. State v. Waller, 90 Kan. 829, 136 P. 215, 217, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588.

A wife may be in “destitute or necessitous circumstances” though she is being given shelter and food by a child or by sympathizing relatives, friends, or strangers, if she does not have property or money available for such necessities or ordinary comforts of life as her husband can reasonably furnish. State v. Sharp, 111 A. 965, 969, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 148; Brandel v. State, 161 Wis. 532, 154 N. W. 997.

Young children, without property, are in “destitute or necessitous circumstances,” within the Delineware Nensupport Act (Rev. Code 1915, §§ 3033-3066), when the father can, but does not, and the mother cannot out of her independent means, provide for them, though the mother and children are supported by the maternal grandmother or grand-

DESTROY. As used in policies of insurance, leases, and in maritime law, and under various statutes, this term is often applied to an act which renders the subject-useless for its Intended purpose, though it does not literally demolish or annihilate it. In re McCabe, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 564; Solomon v. Kingston, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 564; Insurance Co. v. Feibelman, 118 Ala. 308, 23 So. 759; Spalding v. Munford, 37 Mo. App. 251; Friedman Bros. Holding Co. v. Nathan, 159 Minn. 101, 198 N. W. 460, 37 A. L. R. 1166; Davis v. Parker, 200 Ky. 847, 255 S. W. 836 (leased buildings); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 190 Ky. 78, 226 S. W. 115, 117 (railroad station); George v. McManus, 27 Cal. App. 414, 150 F. 73, 74 (automobile).

To “destroy” a vessel within the meaning of an act of congress means to unfit the vessel for service, beyond the hope of recovery by ordinary means. U. S. v. Johns, 1 Wash. C. C. 563, Fed. Cas. No. 15,831; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. 412, 1 L. Ed. 888.

The contents of a glass and bottle, emptied, emptied into a pail of water immediately when accused saw two uniformed police officers enter his building, are “destroyed” within the meaning of a statute making it unlawful to secrete or destroy any fluids on premises being searched for the purpose of preventing seizure. Pitkunas v. State, 183 Wis. 90, 207 N. W. 191, 192.

In relation to wills, contracts, and other documents, the term “destroy” does not import the annihilation of the instrument or its resolution into other forms of matter, but a destruction of its legal efficacy, which may be by cancellation, obliterating, tearing into fragments, etc. Appeal of Evans, 58 Pa. 244; Allen v. State Bank, 21 N. C. 12; In re Gang-

DESTRUCTION. A term used in old English law, generally in connection with waste, and having, according to some, the same meaning. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 385; 3 Bl. Comm. 223. Britton, however, makes a distinction between waste of woods and destruction of houses. Britton c. 66.

DESUBITO. To weary a person with continual barkings, and then to bite; spoken of dogs. Leg Alured. 26, cited in Cunningham’s Dict.

DESUETUDE. Disuse; cessation or discontinuance of use;—especially in the phrase, “to fall into desuétude.” Applied to obso-

DETACHIARE. To seize or take into custody another’s goods or person by writ of attachment or course of law. Cunningham.

DETAIL. An individual part, an item, a parcular. Board of Education of Prince George’s County v. County Com’rs of Prince George’s County, 151 Md. 658, 102 A. 1097, 1010.

One who belongs to the army, but is only detached, or set apart, for the time to some particular duty or service, and who is liable at any time to be recalled to his place in the ranks. In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 379.

DETAIN. To retain (as the possession of personality). First Nat. Bank v. Yocom, 96 Or. 458, 189 P. 220, 221.

DETAINER. The act (or the juridical fact) of withholding from a person lawfully entitled the possession of land or goods, or the restraint of a man’s personal liberty against his will; detention.

The wrongful keeping of a person’s goods is called an “unlawful detainer” although the original taking may have been lawful. As, if one distrains another’s cattle, damage peaceant, and before they are impounded the owner tenders sufficient amends; now, though the original taking was lawful, the subsequent detention of them after tender of amends is not lawful, and the owner has an action of reprieve to recover them, in which he will recover damages for the detention, and not for the caption, because the original taking was lawful. 3 Steph. Comm. 548.

In Practice

A writ or instrument, issued or made by a competent officer, authorizing the keeper of a prison to keep in his custody a person therein named. A detainer may be lodged against one within the walls of a prison, on what account soever he is there. Com. Dig. "Process," B, (3 B.) This writ was superseded by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, §§ 1, 2.

Foreseeable Detainer
See that title.

DETAINMENT. This term is used in policies of marine insurance, in the clause relating to "arrests, restraints, and detainments." The last two words are construed as equivalents, each meaning the effect of superior force operating directly on the vessel. Schmidt v. Insurance Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 262, 3 Am. Dec. 319; Bradle v. Insurance Co., 12 Pet. 402, 9 L. Ed. 1123; Simpson v. Insurance Co., Dudd. Law (S. C.) 242.

DETECTIVE. One whose business it is to watch, and furnish information concerning, alleged wrongdoers by investigating their haunts and habits. One whose business it is to detect criminals or discover matters of secret and pernicious import for the protection of the public. Smith v. S. H. Kress & Co., 210 Ala. 436, 98 So. 378, 380.

Private Detective

DETECTOR. Any device, or piece of apparatus, which, when energized, actuated, or acted upon by or by means of the so-called Hertzian waves, enable men, through the senses of hearing or sight, to understand signals based upon the intentionally regulated emission or propagation of the waves aforesaid. Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America v. De Forest Radio Telephone & Telegraph Co. (C. C. A.) 243 F. 560, 561. In wireless telegraphy, the "detector" or "coherer" and "wave responsive device" is a device by which the electromagnetic waves cause the indicator to respond. National Electric Signaling Co. v. Telefunken Wireless Telegraph Co. of United States (C. C. A.) 221 F. 629, 631.

DETENTIO. In the civil law. That condition of fact under which one can exercise his power over a corporeal thing at his pleasure, to the exclusion of all others. It forms the substance of possession in all its varieties. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 238.

DETENTION. The act of keeping back or withholding, either accidentally or by design, a person or thing. See Detainer.

DETENTION IN A REFORMATORY, as a punishment or measure of prevention, is where a juvenile offender is sentenced to be sent to a reformatory school, to be there detained for a certain period of time. 1 Russ. Crimes, 82.

DETERIORATION. Of a commodity, a constitutional hurt or impairment, involving some degeneration in the substance of the thing, such as that arising from decay, corrosion, or disintegration. The mere soiling of a commodity with sea water or other foreign substance, resulting in a purely superficial hurt or impairment removable by the simple process of cleansing, cannot be said to be "deterioration" within the ordinary meaning of that term. Rosen-Reichardt Brokerage Co. v. London Assur. Corporation, 214 Mo. App. 672, 294 S. W. 435, 436.

DETERMINABLE. LIABLE to come to an end upon the happening of a certain contingency. 2 Bl. Comm. 121.

As to determinable "Fee" and "Freehold," see those titles.

DETERMINE. That which is ascertained; what is particularly designated.

DETERMINE OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

DETERMINATION OF WILL. A phrase used of the putting an end to an estate at will. 2 Bl. Comm. 146.

DETERMINE. To come to an end. To bring to an end. 2 Bl. Comm. 121; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 380.

To estimate. Twin Falls Salmon River Land & Water Co. v. Caldwell (C. C. A.) 242 F. 177, 184.

DETESTATIO. Lat. In the civil law. A summoning made, or notice given, in the presence of witnesses, (demaniatio facta cum testatione.) Dig. 50, 16, 40.

DETINET. Lat. He detains. In old English law. A species of action of debt, which lay for the specific recovery of goods, under a contract to deliver them. 1 Reeves, Eng. Law, 159.
DETRIMENT. Any loss or harm suffered in person or property; e. g., the consideration for a contract may consist not only in a payment or other thing of value given, but also in loss or "detriment" suffered by the promisee. Civ. Code Mont. 1895, § 4271 (Rev. Codes 1921, § 8600); Civ. Code S. D. 1903, § 2287 (Comp. Laws 1929, § 1960); Rev. Stat. Okl. 1905, § 2724 (St. 1931, § 9807). In that connection, "detriment" means that the promisee has, in return for the promise, forborne some legal right which he otherwise would have been entitled to exercise: Harp v. Hamilton (Tex. Civ. App.) 177 S. W. 565, 568; Wallace v. Cook, 190 Ky. 262, 227 S. W. 279, 281; or that he has given up something which he had a right to keep, or done something which he had a right not to do. Wit v. Commercial Hotel Co., 253 Mass. 564, 149 N. E. 609, 612.

DETRIFICARE. To discover or lay open to the world. Matt. Wesm. 1240.

DEUNX, pl. DEUNCES. Lat. In the Roman law. A division of the as, containing eleven unciae or duodecimal parts; the proportion of eleven-twelveths. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note. See As.

Deus solus heredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir. Co. Litt. 76; Broom, Max. 516; 5 B. & C. 440, 454.

DEUTEROGAMY. The act, or condition, of one who marries after the death of a former wife or husband.

DEVADIATUS, or DIVADIATUS. An offender without sureties or pledges. Cowell.

DEVASTATION. Wasteful use of the property of a deceased person, as for extravagant funeral or other unnecessary expenses. 2 Bl. Comm. 508.

DEVASTEVERUNT. They have wasted. A term applied in old English law to waste by executors and administrators, and to the process issued against them therefor. Cowell. See Devastavit.

DEVASTAVIT. Lat. He has wasted. The act of an executor or administrator in wasting the goods of the deceased; mismanagement of the estate by which a loss occurs; a breach of trust or misappropriation of assets held in a fiduciary character; any violation or neglect of duty by an executor or administrator, involving loss to the decedent's estate, which makes him personally responsible to heirs, creditors, or legatees. Chit v. White, 12 N. Y. 331; Beardsley v. Marsteller, 120 Ind. 319, 22 N. E. 315; Steel v. Holladay, 20 Or. 70, 25 P. 69, 10 L. R. A. 670; Dawes v. Boylston, 9 Mass. 323, 6 Am. Dec. 72; McGlaughlin v. McGlaughlin, 43 W. Va. 226, 27 S. E. 376.
Also, if plaintiff, in an action against an executor or administrator, has obtained judgment, the usual execution runs de bonis testatoris; but, if the sheriff returns to such a writ nulla bona testatoris nec propriis, the plaintiff may, forthwith, upon this return, sue out an execution against the property or person of the executor or administrator, in as full a manner as in an action against him, sued in his own right. Such a return is called a "devastavit." Brown.

DEVELOP. To progress to a more advanced state or condition, as an injury. Rabin v. Central Business Men's Ass'n, 116 Kan. 250, 226 P. 764, 766, 38 A. L. R. 28. To bring, or attempt to bring, to a state of fruition; to continue the work in hand, as in operating under an oil and gas lease, in a manner that would discover oil, if it existed, and promote its production. Lacer v. Sumpter, 198 Ky. 752, 249 S. W. 1026, 1027. See, also, Buckeye Mining Co. v. Powers, 43 Idaho, 532, 237 P. 833, 834; McClung v. Paradise Gold Mining Co., 164 Cal. 517, 129 P. 774, 776.

DEVENERUNT. A writ, now obsolete, directed to the king's escheators when any of the king's tenants in capite dies, and when his heir dies within age and in the king's custody, commanding the escheators, that by the oaths of twelve good and lawful men they shall inquire what lands or tenements by the death of the tenant have come to the king. Dyer, 360; Termes de la Ley; Kelk, 190 a; Blount; Cowell.

DEVEST. To deprive; to take away; to withdraw. Usually spoken of an authority, power, property, or title; as the estate is devested.

Devest is opposite to invest. As to invest signifies to deliver the possession of anything to another, so to devest signifies to take it away. Jacob.

It is sometimes written "divest" but "devest" has the support of the best authority. Burrill.

DEVIEATION. In Insurance
Any unnecessary or unexcused departure from the usual or general mode of carrying on the voyage insured. 15 Amer. Law Rev. 108.

In Contracts
A change made in the progress of a work from the original terms or design or method agreed upon.

In the Law of Master and Servant
A departure on the part of a servant from his master's service, for some purpose of his own. The liability of the master to third persons injured by the servant depends on the degree of deviation and all the attending circumstances. 39 C. J. 1297. To exonerate the master, the deviation must be so substantial as to amount to an entire departure, and must be for purposes entirely personal to the servant. Thomas v. Lockwood Oil Co. 174 Wis. 456, 182 N. W. 811, 813. As to a distinction between "deviation," "temporary abandonment," and "complete abandonment," see Dockweiler v. American Piano Co., 94 Misc. 712, 160 N. Y. S. 270, 273.

DEVICE. An invention or contrivance; any result of design; as in the phrase "gambling device," which means a machine or contrivance of any kind for the playing of an unlawful game of chance or hazard. State v. Blackstone, 115 Mo. 424, 22 S. W. 370. Also, a plan or project; a scheme to trick or deceive; a statagem or artifice; as in the laws relating to fraud and cheating. State v. Smith, 82 Minn. 342, 85 N. W. 12; State v. Whitehouse, 123 Wash. 461, 212 P. 1043, 1044; Kinnine v. State, 106 Ark. 337, 163 S. W. 264, 265. Also an emblem, pictorial representation, or distinguishing mark or sign of any kind; as in the laws prohibiting the marking of ballots used in public elections with "any device." Baxter v. Ellis, 111 N. C. 124, 15 S. E. 985, 17 L. R. A. 582; Owca v. State, 64 Tex. 509; Steele v. Calhoun, 61 Miss. 550.

In a statute against gaming devices, this term is to be understood as meaning something formed by design, a contrivance, an invention. It is to be distinguished from "substitute," which means something put in the place of another thing, or used instead of something else. Henderson v. State, 59 Ala. 91.

In Patent Law

A plan or contrivance, or an application, adjustment, shaping, or combination of materials or members, for the purpose of accomplishing a particular result or serving a particular use, chiefly by mechanical means and usually simple in character or not highly complex, but involving the exercise of the inventive faculty.

DEVIL ON THE NECK. An instrument of torture, formerly used to extort confessions, etc. It was made of several irons, which were fastened to the neck and legs, and wrenched together so as to break the back. Cowell.

DEVILLING. A term used in London of a barrister recently admitted to the bar, who assists a junior barrister in his professional work, without compensation and without appearing in any way in the matter.

DEVISABLE. Capable of being devised. 1 Pow. Dev. 165; 2 Bl. Comm. 375.

DEVISAVIT VEL NON. In practice. The name of an issue sent out of a court of chancery, or one which exercises chancellor jurisdiction, to a court of law, to try the validity of a paper asserted and denied to be a will, to ascertain whether or not the testator did devise, or whether or not that paper was his will. 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 437; 2 Atk. 424; Assay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 21, 45 Am. Dec. 713.

Classification

Devises are contingent or vested; that is, after the death of the testator. Contingent, when the vesting of any estate in the devisee is made to depend upon some future event, in which case, if the event never occur, or until it does occur, no estate vests under the devise. But, when the future event is referred to merely to determine the time at which the devisee shall come into the use of the estate, this does not hinder the vesting of the estate at the death of the testator. 1 Jarm. Wills, c. 26. Devises are also classed as general or specific. A general devise is one which passes lands of the testator without a particular enumeration or description of them; as, a devise of "all my lands" or "all my other lands."

In a more restricted sense, a general devise is one which grants a parcel of land without the addition of any words to show how great an estate is meant to be given, or without words indicating either a grant in perpetuity or a grant for a limited term; in this case it is construed as granting a life estate. Hitch v. Patten, 8 Houst. (Del.) 334, 16 A. 558, 2 L. R. A. 724. Specific devises are devises of lands particularly specified in the terms of the devise, as opposed to general and residuary devises of land, in which the local or other particular descriptions are not expressed. For example, "I devise my Hennd Hall estate" is a specific devise; but "I devise all my lands," or "all other my lands," is a general devise or a residuary devise. But all devises are (in effect) specific, even residuary devises being so. L. R. 3 Ch. 429; Id. 138. At common law, all devises of land were deemed to be "specific" whether the land was identified in the devise or passed under the residuary clause. In re Sutton's Estate, 11 Del. Ch. 460, 97 A. 624, 626. A gift is specific when there is a bequest of a particular thing specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind which would immediately vest with the assent of the executor, and such gift can be satisfied by delivering only the particular thing specified. In re Wood's Estate, 267 Pa. 462, 110 A. 90, 91. A conditional devise is one which depends upon the occurrence of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or be defeated. Civ. Code Cal. § 1345. An executory devise of lands is such a disposition of them by will that thereby no estate vests at the death of the devisor, but only on some future contingency. It differs from a remainder in three very material points: (1) That it needs not any particular estate to support it; (2) that by it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited after a fee-simple; (3) that by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. 2 Bl. Comm. 172. In a stricter sense, a limitation by will of a future contingent interest in lands, contrary to the rules of the common law. 4 Kent, Comm. 263; 1 Steph. Comm. 564; Dean v. Crews, 77 Fla. 319, 51 So. 479. A limitation by will of a future estate or interest in land, which cannot, consistently with the rules of law, take effect as a remainder. c. 2, Pow. Dev. (by Jarm.) 237; Bean v. Atkins, 87 Vt. 376, 50 A. 643, 646. See Poor v. Considine, 6 Wall. 474, 18 L. Ed. 869; Bristol v. Atwater, 50 Conn. 406; Mangum v. Piester, 16 S. C. 325; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3339; Thompson v. Hoop, 6 Ohio St. 487; Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N. H. 273, 13 Am. Rep. 23; In re Brown's Estate, 38 Pa. 294; Glover v. Condell, 168 Ill. 506, 45 N. E. 173, 35 L. R. A. 380. A future interest taking effect as a fee in derogation of a defeasible fee devised or conveyed to the first taker, when created by will, is an "executory devise," and, when created by deed, is a "conditional limitation," and in either event is given effect as a shifting or springing use. McWilliams v. Havely, 214 Ky. 520, 285 S. W. 108, 104.

The estates known as a contingent remainder and an “executory devise” are fundamentally distinguishable. Both are interests or estates in land to take effect in the future and depend upon a future contingency; an “executory devise” being an interest such as the rules of law will not permit to be created in conveyances, but will allow in case of wills. It follows a fee estate created by a will. A contingent remainder may be created by will or other conveyance and must follow a particular or temporary estate created by the same instrument of conveyance. Wilkins v. Rowan, 107 Neb. 180, 185 N. W. 437, 439. Lapsed devise. A devise which fails, or takes no effect, in consequence of the death of the devisee before the testator; the subject-matter of it being considered as not disposed of by the will. 1 Steph. Comm. 559; 4 Kent, Comm. 541. Murphy v. McKean, 53 N. J. Eq. 405, 52 A. 374. Residuary devise. A devise of all the residue of the testator’s real property, that is, all that remains over and above the other devises.

Synonyms

The term “devise” is properly restricted to real property, and is not applicable to testamentary dispositions of personal property, which are properly called “bequests” or “legacies.” But this distinction will not be allowed in law to defeat the purpose of a testator; and all of these terms may be construed interchangeably or applied indifferently to either real or personal property, if the context shows that such was the intention of the testator. Ladd v. Harvey, 21 N. H. 528; Borgner v. Brown, 135 Ind. 689, 35 N. E. 52; Outhour v. Rogers, 50 Hun. 77, 37 N. Y. S. 120; McCorkle v. Sherrill, 41 N. C. 176; Wilson v. Wilson, 261 Ill. 174, 108 N. E. 743, 745; In re Breen’s Estate, 94 Kan. 474, 146 P. 1147, 4 A. L. R. 238; Miller v. Bower, 260 Pa. 349, 108 A. 727, 729; Utica Trust & Deposit Co. v. Thompson, 87 Misc. 81, 149 N. Y. S. 352, 403; Mockler v. Long, 5 N. J. Misc. 987, 139 A. 47, 49; In re McGovern’s Estate, 77 Mont. 182, 250 P. 812, 817; Johnson v. Talman, 99 N. J. Eq. 762, 134 A. 337, 358; Maibaum v. Union Trust Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 291 S. W. 924, 928; Neblett v. Smith, 142 Va. 840, 128 S. E. 247, 251.

To contrive; plan; scheme; invent; prepare. Stockton v. United States (C. C. A.) 205 F. 462, 464, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 936.

DIGEST. A collection or compilation, embodying the chief matter of numerous books in one, disposed under proper heads or titles, and usually by an alphabetical arrangement, for facility in reference.

As a legal term, "digest" is to be distinguished from "abridgment." The latter is a summary or epitome of the contents of a single work, in which, as a rule, the original order or sequence of parts is preserved, and in which the principal labor of the compiler is in the manner of consolidation. A digest is wider in its scope; is made up of quotations or paraphrased passages; and has its own system of classification and arrangement. An "index" merely points out the places where particular matters may be found, without purporting to give such matters in extenso. A "treatise" or "commentary" is not a compilation, but an original composition, though it may include quotations and excerpts.

A reference to the "Digest," or "Dig.," is always understood to designate the Digest (or Pandects) of Justinian collection; that being the digest par omminece, and the authoritative compilation of the Roman law.

The American Digest System embraces the Century, First, Second, Third Decennials, and Current Digest. It covers the decisions of all American courts of last resort, State and Federal, from 1638 to date, under one uniform classification. The First Decennial, Second Decennial, Third Decennial, and Current Digest, are Key-Numbered. There is also the Federal Digest, covering volumes 1-500 of the Federal Reporter and volumes 1-44 of the Supreme Court Reporter. Subsequent 15 volume digests bring it to date.

DIGESTS. The ordinary name of the Pandects of Justinian, which are now usually cited by the abbreviation "Dig." Instead of "Ft.,” as formerly. Sometimes called "Digest," in the singular.

DIGGING. Has been held as synonymous with "excavating," and not confined to the removal of earth. Sherman v. New York, 1 N. Y. 316.

DIGNITARY. In canon law. A person holding an ecclesiastical benefice or dignity, which gave him some pre-eminence above mere priests and canons. To this class exclusively belonged all bishops, deans, archdeacons, etc.; but it now includes all the prebendaries and canons of the church. Brande.

DIGNITY. In English law. An honor; a title, station, or distinction of honor. Dignities are a species of incorporeal hereditaments, in which a person may have a property or estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 37; 1 Bl. Comm. 896; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 468, et seq.

DIJUDICATION. Judicial decision or determination.

DIKING. Leveling land in arid regions, particularly sagebrush land. An essential operation in the conversion of such land into farms or orchards. Craig v. Crystal Realty Co., 89 Or. 26, 173 P. 322, 325.

DILACION. In Spanish law. A space of time granted to a party to a suit in which to answer a demand or produce evidence of a disputed fact.

DILAPIDATION. A species of ecclesiastical waste which occurs whenever the incumbent suffers any edifices of his ecclesiastical living to go to ruin or decay. It is either voluntary, by pulling down, or permissive, by suffering the church, parsonage-houses, and other buildings thereunto belonging, to decay. And the remedy for either lies either in the spiritual court, where the canon law prevails, or in the courts of common law. It is also held to be good cause of deprivation if the bishop, parson, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates buildings or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church, unless for necessary repairs; and that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the common-law courts. 3 Bl. Comm. 91.

The term is also used, in the law of landlord and tenant, to signify the neglect of necessary repairs to a building, or suffering it to fall into a state of decay, or the pulling down of the building or any part of it. Wall Estate Co. v. Standard Box Co., 20 Cal. App. 311, 125 P. 1020, 1021.

Dilaciones in lege sunt odiosae. Delays in law are odious. Branch, Princ.

DILATORY. Tending or intended to cause delay or to gain time or to put off a decision.
DILATORY DEFENSE. In chancery practice. One the object of which is to dismiss, suspend, or obstruct the suit, without touching the merits, until the impediment or obstacle insisted on shall be removed. 3 Bl. Comm. 301, 302.

DILATORY PLEAS. A class of defenses at common law, founded on some matter of fact not connected with the merits of the case, but such as might exist without impeaching the right of action itself. They were either pleas to the jurisdiction, showing that, by reason of some matter therein stated, the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court; or pleas in suspension, showing some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the suit; or pleas in abatement, showing some matter for abatement or quashing the declaration. 3 Steph. Comm. 576. Parks v. McCellan, 44 N. J. Law, 555; Mahoney v. Loan Ass'n (C. C.) 70 Fed. 515; Shaw v. Southern Ry. Co., 17 Ga. App. 78, 86 S. E. 95; Hill v. Cox, 151 Ga. 599, 107 S. E. 890, 891.

DILIGENCE. Prudence; vigilant activity; attentiveness; or care, of which there are infinite shades, from the slightest momentous thought to the most vigilant anxiety. Buchanan & Smock Lumber Co. v. Einstein, 87 N. J. Law, 307, 93 A. 716, 717; United States v. Midway Northern Oil Co. (D. C.) 232 F. 619, 626; People v. Fay, 82 Cal. App. 62, 255 P. 239, 242; Paterson Glass Co. v. Goldstein, 3 N. J. Misc. 53, 129 A. 422, 425; People v. Howitt, 78 Cal. App. 426, 248 P. 1021, 1024. The law recognizes only three degrees of diligence: (1) Common or ordinary, which men, in general, exert in respect of their own concerns; the standard is necessarily variable with respect to the facts, although it may be uniform with respect to the principle. (2) High or great, which is extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns. (3) Low or slight, which is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of no prudence at all, take of their own concerns. Brown & Flowers v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 197 Ala. 71, 72 So. 366, 367.

The civil law is in perfect conformity with the common law. It lays down three degrees of diligence,—ordinary, (diligentia:) extraordinary, (exactissima diligentia:) slight, (levissima diligentia.) Story, Balm. 19.

There may be a high degree of diligence, a common degree of diligence, and a slight degree of diligence, with these corresponding degrees of negligence, and these can be clearly enough defined for all practical purposes, and, with a view to the business of life, seem to be all that are really necessary. Common or ordinary diligence is that degree of diligence which men in general exercise in respect to their own concerns; high or great diligence is of course extraordinary diligence, or that which very prudent persons take of their own concerns; and low or slight diligence is that which persons of less than common prudence, or indeed of any prudence at all, take of their own concerns.

Ordinary negligence is the want of ordinary diligence; slight, or less than ordinary, negligence is the want of great diligence; and gross or more than ordinary negligence is the want of slight diligence. Railroad Co. v. Rollsins, 5 Kan. 189.

In Scotch Law and Practice

Process of law, by which persons, lands, or effects are seized in execution or in security for debt. Ersk. Inst. 2, 13, 1. Brande. Process for enforcing the attendance of witnesses, or the production of writings. Ersk. Inst. 4, 1, 71.

Other Classifications and Compound Terms

-Due diligence. Such a measure of prudence, activity, or assiduity, as is properly to be expected from, and ordinarily exercised by, a reasonable and prudent man under the particular circumstances; not measured by any absolute standard, but depending on the relative facts of the special case. Perry v. Cedar Falls, 87 Iowa, 315, 54 N. W. 225; Dillman v. Nadelhoffer, 160 Ill. 121, 43 N. E. 378; Hendricks v. W. U. Tel. Co., 126 N. C. 304, 35 S. E. 543, 78 Am. St. Rep. 655; Highland Ditch Co. v. Mumford, 5 Colo. 236; Vineyard Land & Stock Co. v. Twin Falls Salmon River Land & Water Co. (C. C. A.) 245 F. 9, 21; Moon v. O'Leary, 121 Kan. 663, 249 P. 582.

-Great diligence. Such a measure of care, prudence, and assiduity as persons of unusual prudence and discretion exercise in regard to any and all of their own affairs, or such as persons of ordinary prudence exercise in regard to very important affairs of their own. Railway Co. v. Rollsins, 5 Kan. 189; Litchfield v. White, 7 N. Y. 438, 57 Am. Dec. 534; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 7281.

-High diligence. The same as great diligence.

-Low diligence. The same as slight diligence.

-Necessary diligence. That degree of diligence which a person placed in a particular situation must exercise in order to entitle him to the protection of the law in respect to rights or claims growing out of that situation, or to avoid being left without redress on account of his own culpable carelessness or negligence. Garaly v. Bayley, 26 Tex. Supp. 302; Sanderson v. Brown, 57 Me. 312.

-Ordinary diligence is that degree of care which men of common prudence generally exercise in their affairs, in the country and the age in which they live. Erie Bank v. Smith, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 9; Zell v. Dunkle, 156 Pa. 533, 27 A. 38; Railroad Co. v. Scott, 42 Ill. 143.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)

—Special diligence. The measure of diligence and skill exercised by a good business man in his particular specialty, which must be commensurate with the duty to be performed and the individual circumstances of the case; not merely the diligence of an ordinary person or non-specialist. Brady v. Jefferson, 5 Houst. (Del.) 79.

DILIGENT. Attentive and persistent in doing a thing; steadily applied; active; sedulous; laborious; unremitting; untiring. Kingan & Co. v. Foster, 53 Ind. App. 511, 102 N. E. 105, 105.

DILIGIATUS. (Fr. De lege ejectus, Lat.) Outlawed.

DILLIGROUT. In old English law. Pottage formerly made for the king's table on the coronation day. There was a tenure in serjeantry, by which lands were held of the king by the service of finding this pottage at that solemnity.

DIMINUPTION. Incompleteness. A word signifying that the record sent up from an inferior to a superior court for review is incomplete, or not fully certified. In such case the party may suggest a "diminution of the record," which may be rectified by a certiorari. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1109.

DIMISI. In old conveyancing. I have demised. Dimisit, concessit, et ad firmum tradidit, have demised, granted, and to farm let. The usual words of operation in a lease. 2 Bl. Comm. 317, 318.

DIMISIT. In old conveyancing. [He] has demised. See Dimisit.

DIMISSORIÆ LITTERÆ. In the civil law. Letters dimissory or dismissory, commonly called "apostles," (quae vulgo apostoli dicitur.) Dig. 50, 16, 106. See Apostoli, Apostles.

DIMISSORY LETTERS. Where a candidate for holy orders has a title of ordination in one diocese in England, and is to be ordained in another, the bishop of the former diocese gives letters dimissory to the bishop of the latter to enable him to ordain the candidate. Hothouse.

DINARCHY. A government of two persons.

DINERO. In Spanish Law

In Roman Law

A civil division of the Roman empire, embracing several provinces. Calvin.

DIOCESAN. Belonging to a diocese; a bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

DIOCESAN COURTS. In English law. The consistorial courts of each diocese, exercising general jurisdiction of all matters arising locally within their respective limits, with the exception of places subject to peculiar jurisdiction; deciding all matters of spiritual discipline,—suspending or depriving clergyman,—and administering the other branches of the ecclesiastical law. 2 Steph. Comm. 672.

DIOICHLIA. The district over which a bishop exercised his spiritual functions.

DIP, v. To immerse for a short time in any liquid; to place in fluid and withdraw again; the act of dipping or immersing; a plunge; a brief bath, as the dip of the oars; a dip in the sea. Standard Dictionary, "dip." Covington County v. Pickering, 123 Miss. 20, 85 So. 114, 115.

DIP, n. In mining law. The line of declination of strata; the angle which measures the deviation of a mineralized vein or lode from the vertical plane; the slope or slant of a vein, away from the perpendicular, as it goes downward into the earth; distinguished from the "strike" of the vein, which is its extension in the horizontal plane, or its lengthwise trend or course with reference to the points of the compass. King v. Mining Co. 9 Mont. 543, 24 P. 200; Duggan v. Davey, 4 Dak. 110, 26 N. W. 887.

In Animal Husbandry

A liquid preparation into which infected animals may be plunged for eradication of fever ticks, or other sanitary or medical purposes. Ungles-Hoggette Mfg. Co. v. Farmers' Hog & Cattle Powder Co. (C. C. A.) 232 F. 116, 117.

DIPLOMA. In the civil law. A royal charter; letters patent granted by a prince or sovereign. Calvin.

A license granted to a physician, etc., to practice his art or profession. See Brooks v. State, 88 Ala. 122, 6 So. 902.

DIPLOMACY. The science which treats of the relations and interests of nations with nations.

Negotiation or intercourse between nations through their representatives. The rules, customs, and privileges of representatives at foreign courts.

DIPSOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence. A mental disease characterized by an uncontrollable desire for intoxicating drinks. An irresistible impulse to indulge in intoxication, either by alcohol or other drugs. Ballard v. State, 10 Neb. 614, 28 N. W. 271.

DIPSOMANIAC. A person subject to dipsomania. One who has an irresistible desire for alcoholic liquors. See Insanity.

DIPTYCHA. Diptychs; tablets of wood, metal, or other substance, used among the Romans for the purpose of writing, and folded like a book of two leaves. The diptychs of antiquity were especially employed for public registers. They were used in the Greek, and afterwards in the Roman, church, as registers of the names of those for whom supplication was to be made, and are ranked among the earliest monastic records. Burrell.

DIRECT. v. To point to; guide; order; command; instruct.

To advise; suggest; request. Bowden v. Cumberland County, 123 Me. 359, 123 Atl. 166, 168; Beakley v. Knutson, 90 Or. 574, 174 P. 1149, 1150; Perry Bros. v. McNeill (Tex. Civ. App.) 189 S. W. 120, 121; Conrad v. Conrad's Ex'r, 123 Va. 711, 97 S. E. 336, 338.

DIRECT, adj. Immediate; proximate; by the shortest course; without circuit; operating by an immediate connection or relation, instead of operating through a medium; the opposite of indirect. Trexler Lumber Co. v. Allemandia Fire Ins. Co., of Pittsburgh, 289 Pa. 13, 136 A. 856, 858; Western Assur. Co. v. Hann, 201 Ala. 376, 78 So. 232, 234; Howell v. Wood, 6 Boyce (Del.) 464, 100 A. 572; Pelton v. Williams (C. C. A.) 235 F. 131, 132.

In the usual or natural course or line; immediately upwards or downwards; as distinguished from that which is out of the line, or on the side of it; the opposite of collateral.

In the usual or regular course or order, as distinguished from that which diverts, interrupts, or opposes; the opposite of cross or contrary.

DIRECT ATTACK. A direct attack on a judgment or decree is an attempt, for sufficient cause, to have it annulled, reversed, vacated, corrected, declared void, or enjoined, in a proceeding instituted for that specific purpose, such as an appeal, writ of error, bill of review, or injunction to restrain its execution; distinguished from a collateral attack, which is an attempt to impeach the validity or binding force of the judgment or decree as a side issue or in a proceeding instituted for some other purpose. Schneider v. Sellers, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 61 S. W. 541; Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 235, 55 P. 824; Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 25 P. 362, 11 L. R. A. 155, 23 Am. St. Rep. 95; Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 626, 33 S. W. 322; Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 40 P. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110; Reger v. Reger, 316 Mo. 1310, 298 S. W. 414, 421; Gardner v. Howard, 197 Ky. 615, 247 S. W. 933, 941. A direct attack on a judicial proceeding is an attempt to void or correct it in some manner provided by law. Manuell v. Kidd, 126 Okl. 71, 255 P. 732, 734; Leslie v. Proctor & Gamble Mfg. Co., 102 Kan. 139, 160 P. 193, 195, L. R. A. 1918 C, 55.

DIRECT INTEREST. A direct interest, such as would render the interested party incompetent to testify in regard to the matter, is an interest which is certain, and not contingent or doubtful. Rine v. Rine, 100 Neb. 229, 155 N. W. 941, 943; Holladay v. Rich, 93 Neb. 491, 140 N. W. 794, 796; Selekreg v. Thomas, 27 Colo. App. 258, 149 P. 273, 274; Van Meter v. Goldfarb, 236 Ill. App. 126, 128. A matter which is dependent alone upon the successful prosecution of an execution cannot be considered as uncertain, or otherwise than direct, in this sense. In re Van Aistine's Estate, 26 Utah, 193, 72 P. 942.
DIRECT LINE. Property is said to descend or be inherited in the direct line when it passes in lineal succession; from ancestor to son, grandson, great-grandson, and so on. State v. Yturria (Tex. Civ. App.) 139 S. W. 291, 292; State v. Yturria, 109 Tex. 220, 204 S. W. 315, 316, L. R. A. 1918F, 1079.

DIRECT PAYMENT. One which is absolute and unconditional as to the time, amount, and the persons by whom and to whom it is to be made. People v. Boylan (C. C.) 25 F. 596. See Ancient Order of Hibernians v. Sparrow, 29 Mont. 192, 74 P. 197, 64 L. R. A. 128, 101 Am. St. Rep. 563; Hurd v. McClellan, 14 Colo. 213, 22 P. 792.

DIRECTION. The act of governing; management; superintendence. Also the body of persons (called "directors") who are charged with the management and administration of a corporation or institution.

The charge or instruction given by the court to a jury upon a point of law arising or involved in the case, to be by them applied to the facts in evidence.

The clause of a bill in equity containing the address of the bill to the court.

DIRECTLY. In a direct way without anything intervening; not by secondary, but by direct, means. Clark v. Warner, 58 Okl. 153, 204 P. 929, 934; Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 204 P. 393, 396.

DIRECTOR OF THE MINT. An officer having the control, management, and superintendence of the United States mint and its branches. He is appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate.

DIRECTORS. Persons appointed or elected according to law, authorized to manage and direct the affairs of a corporation or company. The whole of the directors collectively form the board of directors. Brandt v. Godwin (City Ct.) 3 N. Y. S. 809; Maynard v. Insurance Co., 34 Cal. 137, 91 Am. Dec. 672; Pen. Code N. Y. § 614; Vernon’s Ann. Civ. St. art. 4716; Ky. St. § 575.

DIRECTORY, adj. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, is said to be directory when it is to be considered as a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. In re Opinion of the Justices, 121 Me. 463, 126 A. 354, 363; McCreary v. Speer, 156 Ky. 783, 192 S. W. 99, 102; State v. Alderson, 49 Mont. 387, 142 P. 210, 215, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 39; State v. Hager, 102 W. Va. 689, 138 S. E. 263, 264; Alabama Pine Co. v. Merchants & Farmers’ Bank of Alcoville, 215 Ala. 66, 109 So. 358, 359; People v. Butler, 20 Cal. App. 379, 129 P. 600, 602. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of a statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day. Maxw. Interp. St. 330, et seq. And see Pearce v. Morse, 2 Adol. & El. 94; Nelms v. Vaughan, 84 Va. 696, 5 S. E. 704; State v. Conner, 86 Tex. 133, 28 S. W. 1108; Payne v. Fresco, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 28; Bladen v. Philadelphia, 60 Pa. 466.

A "directory" provision in a statute is one, the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding to which it relates; State v. Barnett, 109 Ohio St. 246, 142 N. E. 611, 613; City of Emdl v. Champion Refining Co., 112 Okl. 158, 249 P. 604, 606; one which leaves it optional with the department or officer to which it is addressed to obey or not as he may see fit; In re Thompson, 94 Neb. 638, 144 N. W. 243, 244.

Statutory requisitions are deemed "directory" only when they relate to some immaterial matter where a compliance is matter of convenience rather than of substance. This mode of getting rid of a statutory provision by calling it "direction" is not only unsatisfactory, on account of the vagueness of the rule itself, but it is the exercise of a dispensing power by the courts, which approaches so near legislative discretion that it ought to be resorted to with reluctance, only in extraordinary cases, where great public mischief would otherwise ensue, or important private interests demand the application of the rule. Ellis v. Tilton, 125 Misc. 675, 88 So. 281, 283.

Directory calls. Those which merely direct the neighborhood where the different calls may be found, whereas "locative calls" are those which serve to fix boundaries. Cates v. Reynolds, 143 Tenn. 307, 228 S. W. 695, 696.

Directory statute. Under a general classification, statutes are either "mandatory" or "directory," and, if mandatory, they prescribe, in addition to requiring the doing of the things specified, the result that will follow if they are not done, whereas, if directory, their terms are limited to what is required to be done. Hudgens v. Mooresville Consol. School Dist., 312 Mo. 1, 278 S. W. 769, 770. A statute is mandatory when the provision of the statute is the essence of the thing required to be done; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely. State v. Kosner, 108 Or. 559, 217 P. 827, 832.

Directory trust. Where, by the terms of a trust, the fund is directed to be vested in a particular manner till the period arrives at which it is to be appropriated, this is called a "directory trust." It is distinguished from a discretionary trust, in which the trustee has a discretion as to the management of the fund.
DIRECTORY

DIRIBITORES. In Roman law. Officers who distributed ballots to the people, to be used in voting. Tayl. Civil Law, 192.

DIRIMENT IMPEDIMENTS. In canon law. Absolute bars to marriage, which would make it null ab initio.

At the present day, disability is generally used to indicate an incapacity for the full enjoyment of ordinary legal rights; thus married women, persons under age, insane persons, and felons convict are said to be under disability. Sometimes the term is used in a more limited sense, as when it signifies an impediment to marriage, or the restraints placed upon clergymen by reason of their spiritual avocations. Money & Whitney.

Classification

Disability is either general or special; the former when it incapacitates the person for the performance of all legal acts of a general class, or giving to them their ordinary legal effect; the latter when it debars him from one specific act. Disability is also either personal or absolute; the former where it attaches to the particular person, and arises out of his status, his previous act, or his natural or juridical incapacity; the latter where it originates with a particular person, but extends also to his descendants or successors. Lord de le Warre's Case, 6 Coke, 1a; Avenog v. Schmidt, 113 U. S. 285, 8 Sup. Ct. 487, 28 L. Ed. 976. Considered with special reference to the capacity to contract a marriage, disability is either canonical or civil; a disability of the former class makes the marriage voidable only, while the latter, in general, avoids it entirely. The term civil disability is also used as equivalent to legal disability, both these expressions meaning disabilities or disqualifications created by positive law, as distinguished from physical disabilities. Ingalls v. Campbell, 18 Or. 461, 24 Pac. 904; Harland v. Territory, 3 Wash. T. 131, 13 Pac. 453; Meeks v. Vassault, 16 Fed. Cas. 1317; Wiesner v. Zaum, 39 Wis. 206; Bauman v. Grubbs, 26 Ind. 421; Supreme Council v. Fullman, 62 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 390. A physical disability is a disability or incapacity caused by physical defect or infirmity, or bodily imperfection, or mental weakness or alienation; as distinguished from civil disability, which relates to the civil status or condition of the person, and is imposed by the law.

Temporary Disability

"Temporary" as distinguished from "permanent" disability, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, is a condition that exists until the injured employee is as far restored as the permanent character of the injuries will permit. Visioney v. Empire Steel & Iron Co., 87 N. J. Law, 481, 95 A. 143, 144; Consolidated Coal Co. of St. Louis v. Industrial Commission, 311 Ill. 61, 142 N. E. 496, 500.

Total Disability

Total disability to follow insured's usual occupation arises where he is incapacitated from performing any substantial part of his ordinary duties, though still able to perform a few minor duties and be present at his place of business. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Bynum, 221 Ky. 450, 298 S. W. 1950, 1082. See, also, United States Casualty

DISABLE. In its ordinary sense, to disable is to cause a disability, (q. v.)

In the old language of pleading, to disable is to take advantage of one's own or another's disability. Thus, it is "an express maxim of the common law that the party shall not disable himself;" but "this disability to disable himself is personal." 4 Coke, 123b.

DISABLING STATUTES. These are acts of parliament, restraining and regulating the exercise of a right or the power of alienation; the term is specially applied to 1 Eliz. c. 19, and similar acts restraining the power of ecclesiastical corporations to make leases.

DISADVOCARE. To deny a thing.

DISAFFIRM. To repudiate; to revoke a consent once given; to recall an affirmation. To refuse one's subsequent sanction to a former act; to disclaim the intention of being bound by an antecedent transaction.

DISAFFIRMANCE. The repudiation of a former transaction. The refusal by one who has the legal power to refuse, (as in the case of a voidable contract,) to abide by his former acts, or accept the legal consequences of them. It may either be "express" (in words) or "implied" from acts inconsistent with a recognition of validity of former transaction. Ryan v. Morrison, 49 Okl. 49, 135 P. 1049, 1050; Parrish v. Treadway, 267 Mo. 91, 188 S. W. 593, 582.

DISAFFOREST. To restore to their former condition lands which have been turned into forests. To remove from the operation of the forest laws. 2 Bl. Comm. 416.

DISAGREEMENT. Difference of opinion or want of uniformity or concurrence of views; as, a disagreement among the members of a jury, among the judges of a court, or between arbitrators. Darnell v. Lyon, 85 Tex. 466, 22 S. W. 364; Insurance Co. v. Doyling, 55 N. J. Law, 589, 27 A. 927; Fowble v. Insurance Co., 108 Mo. App. 527, 81 S. W. 466.

In Real Property Law

The refusal by a grantee, lessee, etc., to accept an estate, lease, etc., made to him; the annulling of a thing that had essence before. No estate can be vested in a person against his will. Consequently no one can become a grantee, etc., without his agreement. The law implies such an agreement until the contrary is shown, but his disagreement renders the grant, etc., inoperative. Wharton.

DISALT. To disable a person.

DISAPPROPRIATION. In ecclesiastical law. This is where the appropriation of a benefice is severed, either by the patron presenting a clerk or by the corporation which has the appropriation being dissolved. 1 Bl. Comm. 385.

DISAVOW. To repudiate the unauthorized acts of an agent; to deny the authority by which he assumed to act.

DISBAR. In England, to deprive a barrister permanently of the privileges of his position; it is analogous to striking an attorney off the rolls. In America, the word describes the act of a court in rescinding an attorney's license to practice at its bar.

DISBUCATIO. In old English law. A conversion of wood grounds into arable or pasture; an assarting. Cowell. See Assart.

The term is also used under the codes of civil procedure, to designate the expenditures necessarily made by a party in the progress of an action, aside from the fees of officers and court costs, which are allowed, ex nunc, together with costs. Fertilizer Co. v. Glenn, 48 S. C. 494, 26 S. E. 796; De Chambrun v. Cox, 60 Fed. 479, 9 C. C. A. 86; Bilyeu v. Smith, 18 Or. 335, 22 P. 1073.
DISCARCARE. In old English law. To discharge, to unload; as a vessel. Carcere et discarcare; to charge and discharge; to load and unload. Cowell.

DISCARGARE. In old European law. To discharge or unload, as a wagon. Spelman.

DISCEPTIO CAUSÆ. In Roman law. The argument of a cause by the counsel on both sides. Calvin.

DISCHARGE. To release; liberate; annul; unburden; disincumber.

In the Law of Contracts

To cancel or unloose the obligation of a contract; to make an agreement or contract null and inoperative. As a noun, the word means the act or instrument by which the binding force of a contract is terminated, irrespective of whether the contract is carried out to the full extent contemplated (in which case the discharge is the result of performance) or is broken off before complete execution. Cort v. Railway Co., 17 Q. B. 145; Com. v. Talbot, 2 Allen (Mass.) 192; Rivers v. Blom, 163 Mo. 442, 63 S. W. 812; Stitt v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. Protective Ass'n, 177 Mich. 207, 142 N. W. 1110, 1113; The Great Canton (D. C.) 296 F. 953, 954; Burden v. Woodside Cotton Mills, 104 S. C. 435, 59 S. E. 474, 475; Petterson v. U. S. (D. C.) 274 F. 1000, 1002; Hurlburt v. Bradley, 94 Conn. 485, 109 A. 171, 172.

Discharge is a generic term; its principal species are rescission, release, accord and satisfaction, performance, judgment, composition, bankruptcy, merger (q. v.). Leake, Cont. 415.

As applied to demands, claims, rights of action, incumbrances, etc., to discharge the debt or claim is to extinguish it, to annul its obligatory force, to satisfy it. And here also the term is generic; thus a debt, a mortgage, a legacy, may be discharged by payment or performance, or by any act short of that, lawful in itself, which the creditor accepts as sufficient. Blackwood v. Brown, 29 Mich. 484; Rangely v. Spring, 28 Mo. 151. To discharge a person is to liberate him from the binding force of an obligation, debt, or claim.

There is a distinction between a "debt discharged" and a "debt paid." When discharged the debt still exists though divested of its character as a legal obligation during the operation of the discharge. Something of the original vitality of the debt continues to exist which may be transferred, even though the transferee takes it subject to its disability incident to the discharge. The fact that it carries something which may be a consideration for a new promise to pay, so as to make an otherwise worthless promise a legal obligation, makes it the subject of transfer by assignment. Stanek v. White, 172 Minn. 380, 215 N. W. 594.

Discharge by operation of law is where the discharge takes place, whether it was intended by the parties or not; thus, if a creditor appoints his debtor his executor, the debt is discharged by operation of law, because the executor cannot have an action against himself. Co. Litt. 254b, note 1; Williams, Ex'rs, 1218; Chit. Cont. 714.

In Civil Practice

To discharge a rule, an order, an injunction, a certificate, process of execution, or in general any proceeding in a court, is to cancel or annul it, or to revoke it, or to refuse to confirm its original provisional force. Nichols v. Chittenden, 14 Colo. App. 49, 59 P. 954.

To discharge a jury is to relieve them from any further consideration of a cause. This is done when the continuance of the trial is, by any cause, rendered impossible; also when the jury, after deliberation, cannot agree on a verdict.

In Equity Practice

In the process of accounting before a master in chancery, the discharge is a statement of expenses and counter-claims brought in and filed, by way of set-off, by the accounting defendant, which follows the charge in order.

In Criminal Practice

The act by which a person in confinement, held on an accusation of some crime or misdemeanor, is set at liberty. The writing containing the order for his being so set at liberty is also called a "discharge." Morgan v. Hughes, 2 Term. 231; State v. Garthwaite, 23 N. J. Law, 143; Ex parte Paris, 18 Fed. Cas. 1104; In re Eddinger, 236 Mich. 668, 211 N. W. 54.

In Bankruptcy Practice

The discharge of the bankrupt is the step which regularly follows the adjudication of bankruptcy and the administration of his estate. By it he is released from the obligation of all his debts which were or might be proved in the proceedings, so that they are no longer a charge upon him, and so that he may thereafter engage in business and acquire property without its being liable for the satisfaction of such former debts. Southern L & T. Co. v. Bendow (D. C.) 96 F. 528; In re Adler, 169 F. 441; Colton v. Depew, 50 N. J. L. 126, 44 A. 662; Murphy v. Nicholson, 87 N. J. Law, 278, 94 A. 62, 63; In re Bay State Milling Co. (C. C. A.) 223 F. 778, 779; Pitscairn v. Scully, 252 Pa. 82, 97 A. 120, 121.

In Maritime Law

In Military Law

The release or dismissal of a soldier, sailor, or marine, from further military service, either at the expiration of his term of enlistment, or previous thereto on special application therefor, or as a punishment. An "honorable" discharge is one granted at the end of an enlistment and accompanied by an official certificate of good conduct during the service. A "dishonorable" discharge is a dismissal from the service for bad conduct or as a punishment imposed by sentence of a court-martial for offenses against the military law. There is also in occasional use a form of "discharge without honor," which implies censure, but is not in itself a punishment. See Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1284, 1342 and section 1426 (24 USCA § 192); Williams v. U. S., 137 U. S. 113, 11 S. Ct. 43, 34 L. Ed. 590; U. S. v. Sweet, 189 U. S. 471, 23 S. Ct. 638, 47 L. Ed. 907.

DISCIPLINE. Instruction, comprehending the communication of knowledge and training to observe and act in accordance with rules and orders.

Correction, chastisement, punishment, penalty.

DISCLAIMER. The repudiation or renunciation of a claim or power vested in a person or which he had formerly alleged to be his. The refusal, or rejection of an estate or right offered to a person. The disavowal, denial, or renunciation of an interest, right, or property imputed to a person or alleged to be his. Also the declaration, or the instrument, by which such disclaimer is published. Moores v. Clackamas County, 40 Or. 538, 67 P. 662.

Of Estate

The act by which a party refuses to accept an estate which has been conveyed to him. Thus, a trustee who releases to his fellow-trustees his estate, and relieves himself of the trust, is said to disclaim. Watson v. Watson, 13 Conn. 85; Kentucky Union Co. v. Connell, 112 Ky. 677, 69 S. W. 728.

A renunciation or a denial by a tenant of his landlord's title, either by refusing to pay rent, denying any obligation to pay, or by setting up a title in himself or a third person, and this is a distinct ground of forfeiture of the lease or other tenancy, whether of land or tithe. See 16 Ch. Div. 730.

In Pleading

In Patent Law

When the title and specifications of a patent do not agree, or when part of that which it covers is not strictly patentable, because neither new nor useful, the patentee is empowered, with leave of the court, to enter a disclaimer of any part of either the title or the specification, and the disclaimer is then deemed to be part of the letters patent or specification, so as to render them valid for the future. Johns. Pat. 151; Permutit Co. v. Wadham (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 20, 21.

DISCLAMATION. In Scotch law. Disavowal of tenure; denial that one holds lands of another. Bell.

DISCLOSE. To bring into view by uncovering, to lay bare, to reveal to knowledge, to free from secrecy or ignorance, or make known. State v. Kroekston, 187 Mo. App. 67, 172 S. W. 1156, 1157.

DISCLOSURE. Revelation; the impartation of that which is secret. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 137 Va. 526, 120 S. E. 506, 509.

That which is disclosed or revealed. Webster, Dict.

In patent law, the specification; the statement of the subject-matter of the invention, or the manner in which it operates. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Metropolitan Electric Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 290 F. 661, 664.

What any patentee has invented is theoretically what he discloses, and the "disclosure" is the specification while a "claim" is a definition of that which has been disclosed in the specification; the disclosure telling how to do that of which the claimant attempts definition. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Metropolitan Electric Mfg. Co. (C. C. A.) 290 F. 661, 664.

DISCOMMON. To deprive commonable lands of their commonable quality, by inclosing and appropriating or improving them.

DISCONTINUANCE.

In Practice

In practice, a discontinuance is a sham or gap left by neglecting to enter a continuance. By our practice, a neglect to enter a continuance, even in a defaulted action, by no means puts an end to it, and such actions may always be brought forward. Taft v. Northern Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 416; Porter v. Watkins, 186 Ala. 233, 71 So. 667, 688.

The cessation of the proceedings in an action where the plaintiff voluntarily puts an end to it, either by giving notice in writing to the defendant before any step has been taken in the action subsequent to the answer, or at any other time by order of the court or a judge; a non-suit; dismissal. Payne v. Buena Vista Extract Co., 124 Va. 296, 98 S. E. 34, 30; Ternest v. Georgia Coast & P. R. Co., 19 Ga. App. 94, 90 S. E. 1040; Mur-
In practice, discontinuance and dismissal import the same thing, viz., that the cause is sent out of court. Thurman v. James, 48 Mo. 255.

In Pleading

That technical interruption of the proceedings in an action which follows where a defendant does not answer the whole of the plaintiff's declaration, and the plaintiff omits to take judgment for the part unanswered. Steph. Pl. 218, 217.

DISCONTINUANCE OF AN ESTATE. The termination or suspension of an estate-tail, in consequence of the act of the tenant in tail, in conveying a larger estate in the land than he was by law entitled to do. 2 Bl. Comm. 275; 3 Bl. Comm. 171. An alienation made or suffered by tenant in tail, or by any that is seised in autre droit, whereby the issue in tail, or the heir or successor, or those in reversion or remainder, are driven to their action, and cannot enter. Co. Litt. 325a. The cessor of a seisin under an estate, and the acquisition of a seisin under a new and necessarily a wrongful title. Prest. Morg. c. 2.

Disconuainre nihil aliud significat quam intermittere, desuiscere, interrupvere. Co. Litt. 325. To discontinue signifies nothing else than to intermit, to disuse, to interrupt.

DISCONTINUOUS. Occasional; intermittent; characterized by separate repeated acts; as, discontinuous easements and servitudes. See Easement.

DISCONVENABLE. L Fr. Improper; unfit. Kelham.

By the language of the commercial world and the settled practice of banks, a discount by a bank means a drawback or deduction made upon its advances or loans of money, upon negotiable paper or other evidences of debt payable at a future day, which are transferred to the bank. Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. 338, 5 L. Ed. 631; Bank v. Baker, 35 Ohio St. 67.

Although the discounting of notes or bills, in its most comprehensive sense, may mean lending money and taking notes in payment, yet, in its more ordinary sense, the discounting of notes or bills means advancing a consideration for a bill or note, deducting or discounting the interest which will accrue for the time the note has to run. Loan Co. v. Towne, 13 Conn. 240; In re Worth Lighting & Fixture Co. (D. C.) 292 F. 768, 772.

The ordinary meaning of the term "to discount" is to take interest in advance, and in banking is a mode of loaning money. It is the advance of money not due until some future period, less the interest which would be due thereon when payable. Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 592, 20 Am. Rep. 55.

Discount, as we have seen, is the difference between the price and the amount of the debt, the evidence of which is transferred. That difference represents interest charged, being at the same rate, according to which the price paid, if invested until the maturity of the debt, will just produce its amount. Bank v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 276, 25 L. Ed. 742; Napier v. John V. Farwell Co., 69 Colo. 219, 163 P. 654, 655.

Commission Equivalent

Where agreement provides for underwriting shares at "discount" of certain per cent, word "discount" is equivalent to commission. Stewart v. G. L. Miller & Co., 161 Ga. 513, 132 S. E. 583, 585, 45 A. L. R. 559.

Discounting a note and buying it are not identical in meaning, the latter expression being used to denote the transaction when the seller does not indorse the note, and is not accountable for it. Bank v. Baldwin, 22 Minn. 365, 23 Am. Rep. 683.

In Practice

A set-off or defealcation in an action. Vin. Abr. "Discount." But see Trabue's Ex'r v. Harris, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 537.

DISCOUNT BROKER. A bill broker; one who discounts bills of exchange and promissory notes, and advances money on securities.

DISCOVERED PERIL, DOCTRINE OF. A name for the doctrine otherwise known as that of the "last clear chance." See that title.

DISCOVERT. Not married; not subject to the disabilities of a coverture. It applies equally to a maid and a widow.

DISCOVERY. In a general sense, the ascertaining of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden; the acquisition of notice or knowledge of given acts or facts; as, in regard to the "discovery" of fraud affecting the running of the statute of limitations, or the granting of a new trial for newly "discovered" evidence. Francis v. Wallace, 77 Iowa, 373, 42 N. W. 823; Parker v. Kuhn, 21 Neb. 413, 32 N. W. 74, 59 Am. Rep. 866; Howton v. Roberts, 49 S. W. 340, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1331; Marbourg v. McCormick, 23 Kan. 43; Moore v. Palmer, 43 N. D. 89, 174 N. W. 98, 94; Kerrigan v. O'Meara, 71 Mont. 1, 227
DISCREDIT. To destroy or impair the credibility of a person; to impeach; to lessen the degree of credit to be accorded to a witness or document, as by impugning the veracity of the one or the genuineness of the other; to disparage or weaken the reliance upon the testimony of a witness, or upon documentary evidence, by any means whatever.

DISCREETLY. Prudently; judiciously; with discernment. Parks v. City of Des Moines, 195 Iowa, 972, 191 N. W. 728, 731.

DISCREPANCY. A difference between two things which ought to be identical, as between one writing and another; a variance, (q. v.) Also discord, discordance, dissonance, dissonance, unconformity, disagreement, difference. Smith v. Board of Canvassers of Oneida County, 156 N. Y. 837, 841, 92 Misc. 607; In re Barrett, 204 N. Y. 705, 706, 209 App. Div. 217; State v. Superior Court of King County, 158 Wash. 488, 244 P. 702, 703.

DISCRETELY. Separately; disjunctively. Parks v. City of Des Moines, 195 Iowa, 972, 191 N. W. 728, 731.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. 10 Coke, 140. Discretion is to know through law what is just.

When applied to public functionaries, discretion means a power or right conferred upon them by law of acting officially in certain circumstances.
DISCRETION

according to the dictates of their own judgment and conscience, uncontrolled by the judgment or conscience of others. This discretion undoubtedly is to some extent regulated by usage, or, if the term is preferred, by fixed principles. But by this is to be understood nothing more than that the same course cannot, consistently with its own dignity, and with its character and duty of administering impartial justice, decide in different ways two cases in every respect exactly alike. The question of fact whether the two cases are alike in every color, circumstance, and feature is of necessity to be submitted to the judgment of some tribunal.

lord Coke defines judicial discretion to be "discernere per legem quid sit justum," to see what would be just according to the laws in the premises. It does not mean a wild self-willfulness, which may prompt to any and every act; but this judicial discretion is guided by the law, (see what the law declares upon a certain statement of facts, and then decide in accordance with the law,) so as to do substantial equity and justice. Faber v. Bruner, 13 Mo. 543. It is a legal discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law and is not to give effect to the will of the judge, but to that of the law. McGurty v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 158 N. Y. S. 285, 288, 172 App. Div. 46.

True, it is a matter of discretion; but then the discretion is not willful or arbitrary, but legal. And, although its exercise be not purely a matter of law, yet it "involves a matter of law or legal inference," in the language of the Code, and an appeal will lie. Levitner v. Pearce, 70 N. C. 171.

In criminal law and the law of torts, it means the capacity to distinguish between what is right and wrong, lawful or unlawful, wise or foolish, sufficiently to render one amenable and responsible for his acts. Towle v. State, 3 Fla. 214.

Judicial Discretion, Legal Discretion

These terms are applied to the discretionary action of a judge or court, and mean discretion as above defined, that is, discretion bound by the rules and principles of law, and not arbitrary, capricious, or unrestrained. "Judicial discretion" is substantially synonymous with judicial power. Griffin v. State, 12 Ga. App. 625, 77 S. E. 1086, 1083.

It is not the indulgence of a judicial whim, but the exercise of judicial judgment, based on facts and guided by law, Smith v. Hill (C. C. A.) 5 F. (2d) 185, or the equitable decision of what is just and proper under the circumstances, People v. Pfanschmidt, 283 Ill. 411, 114 N. E. 804, 816, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1171. It is simply the technical name of the decision of certain questions of fact by the court. Nance v. Houston & M. R. R., 77 N. H. 293, 91 A. 181, 182.

Wise conduct and management; cautious discernment, especially as to matters of pro-

DISCRETIONARY TRUSTS. Such as are not marked out on fixed lines, but allow a certain amount of discretion in their exercise. Those which cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment.

DISCRIMINATION. With reference to common carriers (especially railroads), a breach of the carrier's duty to treat all shippers alike, and afford them equal opportunities to market their product. Cox v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 87 A. 581, 583, 240 Pa. 27. A carrier's failure to treat all alike under substantially similar conditions, Kentucky Traction & Terminal Co. v. Murray, 176 Ky. 503, 195 S. W. 1119, 1120.

"Discrimination" is a term well understood in the nomenclature of transportation over railroads. It implies to charge shippers of freight, as compensation for carrying the same over railroads, unequal sums of money for the same quantity of freight for equal distances; more for a shorter than a longer distance, more in proportion of distance for a shorter than a longer distance; more for freights called local freights than those designated otherwise; more for the former in proportion to distance such freights may be carried than the latter. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. State, 85 Okl. 225, 205 P. 228, 229.

In constitutional law, the effect of a statute which confers particular privileges on a class arbitrarily selected from a large number of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges granted and between whom and those not favored no reasonable distinction can be found. Franchise Motor Freight Ass'n v. Searcy, 235 P. 1000, 1002, 106 Cal. 77.

DISCUSSION.

In the Civil Law

A proceeding, at the instance of a surety, by which the creditor is obliged to exhaust the property of the principal debtor, towards the satisfaction of the debt, before having recourse to the surety; and this right of the surety is termed the "benefit of discussion." Civ. Code La. art. 5045, et seq.

In Scots Law

The ranking of the proper order in which heirs are liable to satisfy the debts of the deceased. Bell.

DISEASE. Deviation from the healthy or normal condition of any of the functions or tissues of the body; an alteration in the state of the body or of some of its organs, interrupting or disturbing the performance of the vital functions, and causing or threatening pain and weakness; illness; sickness; disorder; malady; bodily infirmity. Order

In construing a policy of life insurance, it is generally true that, before any temporary ailment can be called a "disease," it must be such as to indicate a vice in the constitution, or be so serious as to have some bearing upon general health and the continuance of life, or such as, according to common understanding, would be called a "disease." Cushman v. Insurance Co., 70 N. Y. 77; Insurance Co. v. Young, 115 Ind. 159, 15 N. E. 220, 3 Am. St. Rep. 630; Insurance Co. v. Simpson, 88 Tex. 332, 31 S. W. 601, 25 L. R. A. 765, 53 Am. St. Rep. 757; Delaney v. Modern Acc. Club, 121 Iowa, 538, 97 N. W. 91, 63 L. R. A. 603; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Wiggins (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 644, 648; Sovereign Camp of the Woodmen of the World v. Treanor (Tex. Civ. App.) 217 S. W. 204, 206; Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Cato, 113 Miss. 303, 74 So. 118, 119.

An ulcer is a "disease" or "infection," within Workmen's Compensation Law, § 3, subd. 7, declaring that "injury," or "personal injury," as used in the act, means only accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of employment and such disease or infection as may naturally and unavoidably result therefrom. Pinto v. Chelsea Fibre Mills, 186 N. Y. S. 748, 750, 190 App. Div. 221; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Dodge (C. C. A.) 11 F. (2d) 458, 459.

DISEASE COMMON TO BOTH SEXES. Malady, sickness, or illness that both males and females have. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Weaver (Tex. Civ. App.) 226 S. W. 754, 757.

DISENTAILING DEED. In English law. An enrolled assurance barring an entail, pursuant to 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

DISFIGUREMENT. That which impairs or injures the beauty, symmetry, or appearance of a person or thing; that which renders unsightly, misshapen, or imperfect, or deforms in some manner. Superior Mining Co. v. Industrial Commission, 141 N. E. 165, 399 N. C. 323; Jones v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, 1 La. App. 58, 59; Vukelich v. Industrial Commission of Utah, 62 Utah, 486, 220 P. 1073, 1075; Lee v. Commonwealth, 135 Va. 572, 115 S. E. 671, 673.

DISFRANCHISE. To deprive of the rights and privileges of a free citizen; to deprive of chartered rights and immunities; to deprive of any franchise, as of the right of voting in elections, etc. Webster.

DISFRANCHISEMENT. The act of disfranchising. The act of depriving a member of a corporation of his right as such, by expulsion.

It differs from amotion (q. v.) which is applicable to the removal of an officer from office, leaving him his rights as a member, Willecock, Mun. Corp. no. 708; Ang. & A. Corp. 237.

In a more popular sense, the taking away of the elective franchise (that is, the right of voting in public elections) from any citizen or class of citizens.

DISGAVEL. In English law. To deprive lands of that principal quality of gavelkind tenure by which they descend equally among all the sons of the tenant. 2 Wood. Lect. 76; 2 R. Comm. 85.

DISGRACE. Ignominy; shame; dishonor. No witness is required to disgrace himself. 13 Haw. State Tr. 17, 234.

DISGRADING. In old English law. The depriving of an order or dignity.

DISGUISE, v. To change the guise or appearance of, especially to conceal by unusual dress; to hide by a counterfeit appearance; to affect or change by liquor; to intoxicate. Darneal v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 549, 174 P. 290, 292, 1 A. L. R. 638.

Anything worn upon the person with the intention of so altering the wearer’s appearance that he shall not be recognized by those familiar with him, or that he shall be taken for another person.

A person lying in ambush, or concealed behind bushes, is not in "disguise," within the meaning of a statute declaring the county liable in damages to the next of kin of any one murdered by persons in disguises. Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 142.

DISHERITOR. One who disherherits, or puts another out of his freehold. Obsolete.

DISHONOR. In mercantile law and usage. To refuse or decline to accept a bill of exchange, or to refuse or neglect to pay a bill or note at maturity. Shelton v. Bralthwaite, 7 Mees. & W. 436; Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 276.
Notice of Dishonor

A notice given by the holder to the drawer of a bill, or to an indorser of a bill or note, that it has been dishonored by nonacceptance on presentment for acceptance, or by non-payment at its maturity. 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 970.

DISINCARCERATE. To set at liberty, to free from prison.

DISINHERISON. In the civil law. The act of depriving a forced heir of the inheritance which the law gives him.

DISINHERITANCE. The act by which the owner of an estate deprives a person, who would otherwise be his heir of the right to inherit it. Copeland v. Johnson, 101 Okl. 228, 224 P. 986, 988.

DISINTER. To exhume, unbury, take out of the grave. People v. Baumgartner, 135 Cal. 72, 66 P. 974.

DISJUNCTIM. Lat. In the civil law. Separately; severally. The opposite of conjunctim, (q. v.) Inst. 2, 20, 8.

DISJUNCTIVE ALLEGATION. A statement in a pleading or indictment which expresses or charges a thing alternatively, with the conjunction "or;" for instance, an averment that defendant "murdered or caused to be murdered," etc., would be of this character.

DISJUNCTIVE TERM. One which is placed between two contraries, by the affirminig of one of which the other is taken away; it is usually expressed by the word "or."

DISMES. Tenths; tithes, (q. v.) The original form of "dime," the name of the American coin.

DISMISS. To send away; to discharge; to cause to be removed temporarily or permanently; to relieve from duty. To dismiss an action or suit is to send it out of court without any further consideration or hearing. Bosley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 462; Taft v. Northern Transp. Co., 50 N. H. 417; Goldsmith v. Smith (C. C.) 21 F. 614; The Fort Gaines (D. C.) 18 F.(2d) 413; School District No. 1 of Jefferson County v. Parker, 82 Colo. 355, 260 P. 521, 522; People ex rel. Tims v. Bingham (Sup.) 166 N. Y. S. 28, 29; Goldsmith v. Board of Education of Sacramento City High School Dist., 66 Cal. App. 157, 153 P. 785, 786; Nichols v. Sunderland, 77 Cal. App. 627, 247 P. 614, 618.

DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Dismissal, as of a bill in equity, without prejudice to the right of the complainant to sue again on the same cause of action. The effect of the words "without prejudice" is to prevent the decree of dismissal from operating DISMISSED. A judgment of "Dismissed," without qualifying words indicating a right to take further proceedings, is presumed to be dismissed on the merits; Durant v. Essex Co., 7 Wall. 107, 19 L. Ed. 154. But a bill "dismissed" on motion of complainant does not bar a second suit; Ex parte Loung June (D. C.) 160 F. 251, 259.

DISMISSED FOR WANT OF EQUITY. A phrase used to indicate a decision on the merits, as distinguished from one based upon some formal defect. The dismissal may be because the averments of complainant's bill have been found untrue in fact, or because they are insufficient to entitle complainant to the relief sought. Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U. S. 171, 35 S. Ct. 511, 513, 59 L. Ed. 900.

DISMORTGAGE. To redeem from mortgage.

DISORDER. Turbulent or riotous behavior; immoral or indecent conduct. The breach of the public decorum and morality.

DISORDERLY. Contrary to the rules of good order and behavior; violative of the public peace or good order; turbulent, riotous, or indecent.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT. A term of loose and indefinite meaning (except as occasionally defined in statutes), but signifying generally any behavior that is contrary to law, and more particularly such as tends to disturb the public peace or decorum, scandalize the community, or shock the public sense of morality. People v. Keeper of State Reformatory, 176 N. Y. 465, 68 N. E. 884; People v. Davis, 90 App. Div. 448, 89 N. Y. Supp. 872; City of Mt. Sterling v. Holly, 108 Ky. 621, 57 S. W. 491; Pratt v. Brown, 80 Tex. 608, 16 S. W. 443; Kahn v. Macon, 95 Ga. 418, 22 S. E. 641; People v. Miller, 83 Hun. 82; Tyrrell v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. Law, 536.

DISORDERLY PERSONS. Such as are dangerous or hurtful to the public peace and welfare by reason of their misconduct or vicious habits, and are therefore amenable to police regulation. The phrase is chiefly used in statutes, and the scope of the term depends on local regulations. See 4 Bl. Comm. 169. Code Cr. Proc. N. Y. § 599; People v. Meara, 79 Misc. 37, 140 N. Y. S. 575; People v. Townsend, 214 Mich. 267, 183 N. W. 177, 179, 16 A. L. R. 902; People v. Thrime, 218 Mich. 687, 188 N. W. 406, 406.

DISPARAGARE. In old English law. To bring together those that are unequal, (disparas conferre;) to connect in an indecorous and unworthy manner; to connect in marriage those that are unequal in blood and parentage.

DISPARAGATION. In old English law. Disparagement. Hwedes marientur absque disparagacione, heirs shall be married without disparagement. Magna Charta (9 Hen. III.) e. 6.

DISPARAGATION. L. Fr. Disparagement; the matching an heir, etc., in marriage, under his or her degree or condition, or against the rules of decency. Kelham.

DISPARAGE. To connect unequally; to match unsuitably.

DISPARAGEMENT. In old English law. An injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence.

Marriage without disparagement was marriage to one of suitable rank and character. 2 Bl. Comm. 70; Co. Litt. 82b. Shutt v. Carloss, 36 N. C. 232.
DISPARAGIUM. In old Scotch law. Inequality in blood, honor, dignity, or otherwise. Skene de Verb. Sign.

Disparata non debent jungi. Things unlike ought not to be joined. Jenk. Cent. 24, marg.

DISPARK. To dissolve a park. Cro. Car. 59. To convert it into ordinary ground.

DISPATCH, or DESPATCH. A message, letter, or order sent with speed on affairs of state; a telegraphic message.

In Maritime Law

Diligence, due activity, or proper speed in the discharge of a cargo; the opposite of delay. Terjesen v. Carter, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 133; Moody v. Laths (D. C.) 2 F. 607; Sleeper v. Puig, 22 Fed. Cas. 321.

Customary Dispatch

Such as accords with the rules, customs, and usages of the port where the discharge is made. Quick Dispatch

Speedy discharge of cargo without allowance for the customs or rules of the port or for delay from the crowded state of the harbor or wharf. Mott v. Frost (D. C.) 47 F. 58; Bjorkquist v. Certain Steel Rail Crop Ends (D. C.) 3 F. 717; Davis v. Wallace, 7 Fed. Cas. 182.

DISPAUPER. When a person, by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in forma pauperis, and afterwards, before the suit be ended, acquires any lands, or personal estate, or is guilty of anything whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he loses the right to sue in forma pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered. Wharton.

DISPENSARY. A "dispensary" is a place where a drug is prepared or distributed. People v. Cohen, 94 Misc. 355, 157 N. Y. S. 591, 593.

Dispensatio eali prohibiti provida relaxatio, utile at sequit aestimatis pensata; et est de jure domino regi concessa, propter impossibilitatem pravidendi de omnibus particularibus. A dispensation is the proper relaxation of a malum prohibitum weighed from utility or necessity; and it is conceded by law to the king on account of the impossibility of foreknowledge concerning all particulars. 10 Coke, 88.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, which wounds common law. Dav. Ir. K. B. 69.

DISPENSATION. An exemption from some laws; a permission to do something forbidden; an allowance to omit something commanded; the canonical name for a license. Wharton; Baldwin v. Taylor, 166 Pa. 507, 31 A. 250; Viele v. Insurance Co., 26 Iowa, 56, 96 Am. Dec. 88; Sweeney v. Independent Order of Foresters, 190 App. Div. 787, 181 N. Y. S. 4, 5.

A relaxation of law for the benefit or advantage of an individual. In the United States, no power exists, except in the legislature, to dispense with law; and then it is not so much a dispensation as a change of the law.

DISPENSE. Etymologically, "dispense" means to weigh out, pay out, distribute, regulate, manage, control, etc., but when used with "with," it has, among other meanings, that of "doing without," and "doing away with," being synonymous with "abolish." Alexander v. City of Lampasas (Tex. Civ. App.) 275 S. W. 614, 616; Foreman v. United States (C. C. A.) 255 F. 621, 623; United States v. Reynolds (D. C.) 244 F. 931.

DISPERSONARE. To scandalize or disparage. Blount.

DISPLACE. This term, as used in shipping articles, means "disrate," and does not import authority of the master to discharge a second mate, notwithstanding a usage in the whaling trade never to disrate an officer to a seaman. Potter v. Smith, 103 Mass. 68.

DISPOSE. In Scotch law. To grant or convey. A technical word essential to the conveyance of heritable property, and for which no equivalent is accepted, however clear may be the meaning of the party. Paters. Comp.

DISPONO. Lat. To dispose of, grant, or convey. Dispone, he grants or alienates. Jus disponendi, the right of disposition, i. e., of transferring the title to property.

DISPOSABLE PORTION. That portion of a man's property which he is free to dispose of by will to beneficiaries other than his wife and children. By the ancient common law, this amounted to one-third of his estate if he was survived by both wife and children. 2 Bl. Comm. 452; Hopkins v. Wright, 17 Tex. 36. In the civil law (by the Lex Fæcide) it amounted to three-fourths. Mackeied, Rom. Law, §§ 708, 771.

DISPOSING CAPACITY OR MIND. These are alternative or synonymous phrases in the law of wills for "sound mind," and "testamentary capacity" (q. v.). Lockhart v. Ferguson, 243 Mass. 226, 137 N. E. 355, 356.

DISPOSITION. In Scotch law. A deed of alienation by which a right to property is conveyed. Bell.

DISPOSITIONAL FACTS. Jural facts, or those acts or events that create, modify or extinguish jural relations. Kocourek, Jural Relations (2d Ed.) p. 17.

DISPOSSESS PROCEEDINGS. Summary process by a landlord to oust the tenant and regain possession of the premises for non-payment of rent or other breach of the conditions of the lease. Of local origin and colloquial use in New York.

DISPOSSESSION. Ouster; a wrong that carries with it the emotion of possession. An act whereby the wrong-doer gets the actual occupation of the land or hereditament. It includes abatement, intrusion, dissuasion, discontinuance, defacement. 3 Bl. Comm. 167.

DISPROVE. To refute; to prove to be false or erroneous; not necessarily by mere de-Cunningham v. Fredericks, 106 Conn. 665, 138 A. 790, 793.

DISREPAIR. The state of being in need of repair or restoration after decay or injury. Wyoming Coal Mining Co. v. Stanko, 22 Wyo. 110, 115 P. 182, 183.

DISREPUTE. Loss or want of reputation; ill character; disesteem; discredit. U. S. v. Ault (D. C.) 263 F. 800, 810; U. S. v. Strong (D. C.) 263 F. 780, 796.

DISSASINA. In old Scotch law. Disseisin; dispossession. Skene.

DISSECTION. The act of cutting into pieces an animal or vegetable for the purpose of ascertaining the structure and use of its parts. The anatomical examination of a dead body by cutting into pieces or excising one or more parts or organs. Wehle v. Accident Ass'n, 31 N. Y. S. 865, 11 Misc. 36; Sudduth v. Insurance Co. (C. C.) 106 F. 822; Rhodes v. Brandt, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 3. Anatomy; the act of separating into constituent parts for the purpose of critical examination.

DISSEISE. To dispossess; to deprive.

DISSEISEE. One who is wrongfully put out of possession of his lands; one who is dispossessed.

It is a wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold, not, as in abatement or intrusion, a wrongful entry, where the possession was vacant, but an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out. It is an ouster from a freehold in deed, as abatement and intrusion are ousters in law. 3 Steph. Comm. 386.

When one man invades the possession of another, and by force or surprise turns him out of the occupation of his lands, this is termed a "disseisin," being a deprivation of that actual seisin or corporal possession of the freehold which the tenant before enjoyed. In other words, a disseisin is said to be when one enters intending to usurp the possession, and to oust another from the freehold. To constitute an entry a disseisin, there must be an ouster of the freehold, either by taking the profits or by claiming the inheritance. Brown.

According to the modern authorities, there seems to be no legal difference between the words "seisin" and "possession," although there is a difference between the words "disseisin" and "possession;" the former meaning an estate gained by wrong and injury, whereas the latter may be by right or by wrong; the former denoting an ouster of the disseisies, or some act equivalent to it, whereas by the latter no such act is implied. Slater v. Rawson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 429.

Equitable disseisin is where a person is wrongfully deprived of the equitable seisin of land, e. g., of the rents and profits. 2 Meriv. 171; 2 Jac. & W. 166.

Disseisin by election is where a person alleges or admits himself to be disseised when he has not really been so.

Disseisinam satis facit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, ilicet omnino non expellat. Co. Litt. 331. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less beneficial, although he does not expel him altogether.

DISSEISITRIX. A female disseisor; a disseisress. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 12, § 4.

DISSEISITUS. One who has been disseised.

DISSEISOR. One who puts another out of the possession of his lands wrongfully.

DISSEISORESS. A woman who unlawfully puts another out of his land.

DISSENSUS. Lat. In the civil law. The mutual agreement of the parties to a simple contract obligation that it shall be dissolved or annulled; technically, an undoing of the consensus which created the obligation. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 541.

Dissent. Contrariety of opinion; refusal to agree with something already stated or adjudged or to an act previously performed. The term is most commonly used in American law to denote the explicit disagreement of one or more judges of a court with the decision passed by the majority upon a case before them. In such event, the non-concurring judge is reported as "dissenting." Mere failure of a justice to vote is not a dissent. Zinke v. Hitchins, 184 N. Y. S. 802, 193 App. Div. 498. A dissent may or may not be accompanied by an opinion.

Dissenting Opinion
The opinion in which a judge announces his dissent from the conclusions held by the majority of the court, and expounds his own views.

In Ecclesiastical Law
A refusal to conform to the rites and ceremonies of the established church. 2 Burn, Decl. Law 165.

BL. LAW Dict. (3d Ed.)
DISTILLED LIQUOR OR DISTILLED SPIRITS

De Pacto Dissolution
That which takes place when corporation, by reason of insolvency or for other reason, suspends all operations and goes into liquidation. Hidden v. Edwards, 813 Mo. 642, 236 S. W. 462, 463.

In Practice
The act of rendering a legal proceeding null, abrogating or revoking it; unloosening its constraining force; as when an injunction is dissolved by the court. Jones v. Hill, 6 N. C. 131.

DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT. The crown may dissolve parliament either in person or by proclamation; the dissolution is usually by proclamation, after a prorogation. No parliament may last for a longer period than seven years. Seventennial Act, 1 Geo. I. c. 38. Under 6 Anne, c. 37, upon a demise of the crown, parliament became ipso facto dissolved six months afterwards, but under the Reform Act, 1867, its continuance is now nowise affected by such demise. May, Parl. Pr. (6th Ed.) 48. Brown.

DISSOLVE. To terminate; abrogate; cancel; annul; disintegrate. To release or unloose the binding force of anything. As to "dissolve a corporation," to "dissolve an injunction." See Dissolution.

DISSOLVING BOND. A bond given to obtain the dissolution of a legal writ or process, particularly an attachment or an injunction, and conditioned to indemnify the opposite party or to abide the judgment to be given. See Sanger v. Hibbard, 2 Ind. T. 547, 33 S. W. 330.

DISSUADE. In criminal law. To advise and procure a person not to do an act. To dissuade a witness from giving evidence against a person indicted is an indicable offense at common law. Hawk. P. C. b. 1, c. 21, § 15.

DISTANCE. A straight line along a horizontal plane from point to point and is measured from the nearest point of one place to the nearest point of another. Evans v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 261 F. 902, 904.

It may however be a broken line and represented by country roads or a railroad track. State v. Mostad, 34 N. D. 330, 158 N. W. 349, 350; Nedved v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 36 S. D. 1, 153 N. W. 886, 887.

DISTILL. To subject to a process of distillation, i. e., vaporizing the more volatile parts of a substance and then condensing the vapor so formed. In law, the term is chiefly used in connection with the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. Williams v. State, 236 S. W. 374, 161 Ark. 383.

DISTILLED LIQUOR or DISTILLED SPIRITS. A term which includes all potable alcoholic liquors obtained by the process of distillation (such as whisky, brandy, rum, DISTILLER. Every person who produces distilled spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation, separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance, or who, making or keeping mash, wort, or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller. Rev. St. U. S. § 3247 (26 USCA § 241). See Johnson v. State, 44 Ala. 416; U. S. v. Fricheia, 25 Fed. Cas. 1218; U. S. v. Wittig, 28 Fed. Cas. 745; U. S. v. Rideneau (D. C.) 119 F. 411.

DISTILLERY. The strict meaning of "distillery" is a place or building where alcoholic liquors are distilled or manufactured; not every building where the process of distillation is used. Atlantic Dock Co. v. Libby, 45 N. Y. 489; U. S. v. Blaisdell, 24 Fed. Cas. 1162; U. S. v. Tenbrook, Pet. C. C. 180, Fed. Cas. No. 16,446; Act July 13, 1866, 14 Stat. L. 117; Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 35, 13 Am. Rep. 556.

DISTILLING APPARATUS. Under National Prohibition Act, tit. 2, § 35 (27 USC § 88) "distilling apparatus" is not limited to a completed still fully equipped and ready for operation, but may cover a 15-gallon pot and coil of copper tubing or worm, which, when connected by gooseneck, would produce a completed still. Rossmans v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 289 F. 950, 952.

Evidently not identical; observably or decidedly different. Bayne v. Kansas City (Mo. App.) 263 S. W. 460, 461.

DISTINCTE ET APERTE. In old English practice. Distinctly and openly. Formal words in writs of error, referring to the return required to be made to them. Reg. Orig. 17.

DISTINCTIVELY. Characteristically, or peculiarly, but not necessarily exclusively. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Green, 153 Tenn. 522, 284 S. W. 588, 899, 48 A. L. R. 313.

Distinguenda sunt tempora. The time is to be considered. 1 Coke, 166; Bluss v. Tobey, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 327; Owens v. Missionary Society, 14 N. Y. 390, 393, 67 Am. Dec. 190.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do, another to perfect. 3 Leon. 243; Branch. Princ.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; distinguuntur tempora et concordantia leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish times, and you will harmonize laws. 1 Coke, 24. A maxim applied to the construction of statutes.

DISTINGUISH. To point out an essential difference; to prove a case cited as applicable, inapplicable.

DISTRACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. A separation or division into parts; also an alienation or sale. Sometimes applied to the act of a guardian in appropriating the property of his ward.

DISTRACTIO BONORUM. The sale at retail of the property of an insolvent estate, under the management of a curator appointed in the interest of the creditors, and for the purpose of realizing as much as possible for the satisfaction of their claim. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 524.

DISTRACTIO PIGNORIS. The sale of a thing pledged or hypothecated, by the creditor or pledgee, to obtain satisfaction of his claim on the debtor's failure to pay or redeem. Idem. § 348.

DISTRAHERE. To sell; to draw apart; to dissolve a contract; to divorce. Calvin.

DISTRAIN. To take as a pledge property of another, and keep it until he performs his obligation or until the property is reprieved by the sheriff. It was used to secure an appearance in court, payment of rent, performance of services, etc. 3 Bl. Comm. 221; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 32, B. C. 223; Boyd v. Howden, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 457; Byers v. Ferguson, 41 Or. 77, 68 P. 5. Also, any detention of personal property, whether lawful or unlawful, for any purpose. Adie v. William Knabe & Co. Mfg. Co., 124 Misc. 655, 208 N. Y. S. 160, 163; Wolfe v. Montgomery, 41 S. D. 267, 170 N. W. 158.

Distress is now generally resorted to for the purpose of enforcing the payment of rent, taxes, or other duties.

DISTRAINER, or DISTRAINER. He who seizes a distress.

DISTRAINT. Seizure; the act of distraining or making a distress.
DISTRESS. The taking a personal chattel out of the possession of a wrong-doer into the custody of the party injured, to procure a satisfaction for a wrong committed; as for non-payment of rent, or injury done by cattle. 3 Bl. Comm. 6, 7; Co. Litt. 47; Emig v. Cunningham, 62 Md. 400; Hard v. Near- ing, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 489; Owen v. Boyle, 22 Me. 61; Evans v. Lincoln Co., 204 Pa. 448, 54 A. 321; In re United Motor Chicago Co. (C. C. A.) 220 F. 772, 774, 775. The taking of beasts or other personal property by way of pledge, to enforce the performance of something due from the party distrained upon. 3 Bl. Comm. 231. The taking of a defendant's goods, in order to compel an appearance in court. Id. 250; 3 Steph. Comm. 361, 363. The seizure of personal property to enforce payment of taxes, to be followed by its public sale if the taxes are not voluntarily paid. Marshall v. Wadsworth, 64 N. H. 336, 10 A. 935. Also the thing taken by distraining, that which is seized to procure satisfaction. And in old Scotch law, a pledge taken by the sheriff from those attending fairs or markets, to secure their good behavior, and returnable to them at the close of the fair or market if they had been guilty of no wrong.

-Distress infinite. One that has no bounds with regard to its quantity, and may be repeated from time to time, until the stubbornness of the party is conquered. Such are distresses for fealty or suit of court, and for compelling jurors to attend. 3 Bl. Comm. 231.

-Distress warrant. A writ authorizing an officer to make a distrain; particularly, a writ authorizing the levy of a distress on the chattels of a tenant for non-payment of rent. Baileyville v. Lowell, 20 Me. 181; Bagwell v. Jamison, Cheves (S. C.) 252; Commercial Credit Co. of Baltimore v. Vinels, 98 N. J. Law, 376, 120 A. 417, 418.

-Grand distress, writ of. A writ formerly issued in the real action of quare impedit, when no appearance had been entered after the attachment; it commanded the sheriff to distraint the defendant's lands and chattels in order to compel appearance. It is no longer used, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, § 26, having abolished the action of quare impedit, and substituted for it the procedure in an ordinary action. Wharton.

-Second distress. A supplementary distress for rent in arrear, allowed by law in some cases, where the goods seized under the first distress are not of sufficient value to satisfy the claim.

DISTRESS AND DANGER. The "distress" and "danger" to which a ship needs to be exposed to entitle its rescuer to salvage need not be actual or immediate, or the danger imminent and absolute. It is sufficient if at the time the assistance is rendered, the ship has encountered any damage or misfortune which might possibly expose her to destruction if the services were not rendered, or if a vessel is in a situation of actual apprehension though not of actual danger. The Urko Mend- di (D. C.) 216 F. 427, 429.

DISTRIBUTE. To deal or divide out in proportion or in shares. Buchan v. Buchan, 177 N. Y. S. 176, 177, 108 Misc. 31; Foreman v. United States (C. C. A.) 255 F. 621, 623.

DISTRIBUTEE. An heir; a person entitled to share in the distribution of an estate. This term is admissible to denote one of the persons who are entitled, under the statute of distributions, to the personal estate of one who is dead intestate. Henry v. Henry, 31 N. C. 278; Kitchen v. Southern Ry., 68 S. C. 554, 48 S. E. 4; Carson Petroleum Co. v. Moorcroft (C. C. A.) 12 F.2d 572; Allen v. Foth, 210 Ky. 313, 275 S. W. 894, 805.

DISTRIBUTION. In practice. The apportionment and division, under authority of a court, of the remainder of the estate of an intestate, after payment of the debts and charges, among those who are legally entitled to share in the same. Rogers v. Gil- lett, 56 Iowa, 266, 9 N. W. 204; William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 P. 323; In re Creighton, 12 Neb. 280, 11 N. W. 313; Thomson v. Tracy, 60 N. Y. 180.

Statute of Distributions

A law prescribing the manner of the distribution of the estate of an intestate among his heirs or relatives. Such statutes exist in all the states.

DISTRIBUTIVE. Exercising or accomplishing distribution; apportioning, dividing, and assigning in separate items or shares.

DISTRIBUTIVE FINDING OF THE ISSUE. The jury are bound to give their verdict for that party who, upon the evidence, appears to them to have succeeded in establishing his side of the issue. But there are cases in which an issue may be found distributively, i.e., in part for plaintiff, and in part for defendant. Thus, in an action for goods sold and work done, if the defendant pleaded that he never was indebted, on which issue was joined, a verdict might be found for the plaintiff as to the goods, and for the defendant as to the work. Steph. Pl. (7th Ed.) 77d.

DISTRIBUTIVE JUSTICE. See Justice.

DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE. The share or portion which a given heir receives on the legal distribution of an intestate estate. People v. Beckwith, 10 N. Y. St. Rep. 97; Page v. Rives, 18 Fed. Cas. 992; Redding v. Bank of Green- ville, 92 Fla. 327, 109 So. 435, 437. Sometimes, by an extension of meaning, the share or portion assigned to a given person on the distribution of any estate or fund, as, under an assignment for creditors or under insolvency proceedings.

DISTRICT. One of the portions into which an entire state or country, county, municipality or other political subdivision or geographical territory is divided, for judicial, political, or administrative purposes. Briggs v. Stevens, 119 Or. 138, 248 P. 169; Rose v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, 80 Cal. App. 739, 252 P. 765, 770; Harkins v. Smith, 294 Ala. 417, 85 So. 812, 813; Pedersen v. U. S.

P. 283, 288; People v. Graham, 287 Ill. 426,
The United States are divided into judicial districts, in each of which is established a district court. They are also divided into election districts, collection districts, etc.
The circuit or territory within which a person may be compelled to appear. Cowell.
Circuit of authority; province. Enc. Lond.

—District attorney. The prosecuting officer of the United States government in each of the federal judicial districts. Also, under the state governments, the prosecuting officer who represents the state in each of its judicial districts. In some states, where the territory is divided, for judicial purposes, into sections called by some other name than "districts," the same officer is denominated "county attorney" or "state's attorney." Smith v.
Scranton, 2 C. P. Rep. (Pa.) 84; State v.
Salge, 2 Nev. 324.

—District clerk. The clerk of a district court of either a state or the United States.

—District courts. Courts of the United States, each having territorial jurisdiction over a district, which may include a whole state or only part of it. Each of these courts is presided over by one judge, who must reside within the district. These courts have original jurisdiction over all admiralty and mar-time causes and all proceedings in bankruptcy, and over all penal and criminal matters cognizable under the laws of the United States, exclusive jurisdiction over which is not vested either in the supreme or circuit courts. Also inferior courts in Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nebraska,
Nevada, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio,
Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, Wyoming, and Monttana, are also called "district courts." Their jurisdiction is for the most part similar to that of county courts (q. v.).

—District judge. The judge of a United States district court; also, in some states, the judge of a district court of the state.

—District parishes. Ecclesiastical divisions of parishes in England, for all purposes of worship, and for the celebration of marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, formed at the instance of the queen's commissioners for building new churches. See 3 Steph.
Comm. 744.

—District registry. By the English judicature act, 1873, c. 60, it is provided that to facilitate proceedings in country districts the crown may, from time to time, by order in council, create district registries, and appoint district registrars for the purpose of issuing writes of summons, and for other purposes.
Documents sealed in any such district registry shall be received in evidence without further proof, (section 61;) and the district registrars may administer oaths or do other things as provided by rules or a special order of the court, (section 62.) Power, however, is given to a judge to remove proceedings from a district registry to the office of the high court.
Section 65. By order in council of 12th of August, 1875, a number of district registries have been established in the places mentioned in that order; and the prothonotaries in Liverpool, Manchester, and Preston, the district registrar of the court of admiralty at Liverpool, and the county court registrars in the other places named, have been appointed district registrars. Wharton.

As to "Fire," "Judicial," "Land," "Levee,
"Mining," "Mining," "Road," "School," and "Taxing," districts, see those titles.

DISTRICT MESSENGER SERVICE. The service is not that of a common carrier, but the furnishing of messengers to be used by the employer in any way in which they could be properly employed, in the course of which the messenger becomes for the time the servant of the employer and the company is not liable for his dishonesty in the ordinary course of his employment unless there was failure to use proper care in his selection;
Haskell v. Messenger Co., 190 Mass. 189, 76
N. E. 215, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1091, 112 Am.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. A territory situated on the Potomac river, and being the seat of government of the United States. It was originally ten miles square, and was composed of portions of Maryland and Virginia ceded by those states to the United States; but in 1846 the tract coming from Virginia was retroceded. Legally it is neither a state nor a territory, but is made subject, by the constitution, to the exclusive jurisdiction of congress.

DISTRICTIO. Lat. A distress; a distraint.
Cowell.

DISTRINGAS. In English practice. A writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which a defendant resides, or has any goods or chattels, commanding him to distrain upon the goods and chattels of the defendant for forty shillings, in order to compel his appearance.
3 Steph. Comm. 557. This writ issues in cases where it is found impracticable to get at the defendant personally, so as to serve a summons upon him. Id.

A distriungas is also used in equity, as the first process to compel the appearance of a corporation aggregate. St. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 36.

A form of execution in the actions of detinue and assise of nuisance. Brooke, Abr. pl. 26; Barnet v. Inrie, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 44.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES. A writ commanding the sheriff to have the bodies of the jurors, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. 3 Bl. Comm. 354. It issues at the same time with the venire, though in theory afterwards, founded on the supposed neglect of the juror to attend. 3 Steph. Comm. 350.

DISTRINGAS NUPER VICE COMITEM. A writ to distrain the goods of one who lately filled the office of sheriff, to compel him to do some act which he ought to have done before leaving the office; as to bring in the body of a defendant, or to sell goods attached under a fi. fa.

DISTRINGAS VICE COMITEM. A writ of distriungas, directed to the coroner, may be issued against a sheriff if he neglects to execute a writ of venditioni exponas. Arch. P. 584.

DISTRINGERE. In feudal and old English law. To distrain; to coerce or compel. Spelman; Calvin.

DISTURB. To throw into disorder; to move from a state of rest or regular order; to interrupt a settled state of, to throw out of course or order. People v. Malone, 156 App. Div. 19, 141 N. Y. S. 149, 150; Stinchcomb v. Oklahoma City, 21 Okl. 250, 198 P. 565, 510.

DISTURBANCE. Any act causing annoyance, disquiet, agitation, or derangement to another, or interrupting his peace, or interfering with him in the pursuit of a lawful and appropriate occupation or contrary to the usages of a sort of meeting and class of persons assembled that interferes with its due progress or irritates the assembly in whole or in part. Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 472; State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 39 P. 665; George v. George, 47 N. E. 33; Varney v. French, 19 N. H. 233; State v. Mancini, 91 Ve. 507, 101 A. 551, 553.

A wrong done to an incorporeal hereditament by hindering or disquieting the owner in the enjoyment of it. Finch, 187; 3 Bl. Comm. 235.

DISTURBANCE OF COMMON. The doing any act by which the right of another to his common is commoved or diminished; as where one who has no right of common puts his cattle into the land, or where one who has a right of common puts in cattle which are not commovable, or surcharges the common; or where the owner of the land, or other person, incloses or otherwise obstructs it. 3 Bl. Comm. 237–241; 3 Steph. Comm. 511, 512.

DISTURBANCE OF FRANCHISE. The disturbing or incommoding a man in the lawful exercise of his franchise, whereby the profits arising from it are diminished. 3 Bl. Comm. 226; 3 Steph. Comm. 510; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 1074, § 2472a.

DISTURBANCE OF PATRONAGE. The hindrance or obstruction of a patron from presenting his clerk to a benefice. 3 Bl. Comm. 242; 3 Steph. Comm. 514.

DISTURBANCE OF TENURE. In the law of tenure, disturbance is where a stranger, by menaces, force, persuasion, or otherwise, causes a tenant to leave his tenancy; this disturbance of tenure is an injury to the lord for which an action will lie. 3 Steph. Comm. 414.

DISTURBANCE OF THE PEACE. Interruption of the peace, quiet, and good order of a neighborhood or community, particularly by unnecessary and distracting noises. City of St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 89; Yokum v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 21 S. W. 191.

DISTURBANCE OF WAYS. This happens where a person who has a right of way over another's ground by grant or prescription is obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by plowing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy his right of way, or at least in so commodious a manner as he might have done. 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

DISTURBER. If a bishop refuse or neglect to examine or admit a patron's clerk, without reason assigned or notice given, he is styled a "disturber" by the law, and shall not have any title to present by lapse; for no man shall take advantage of his own wrong. 2 Bl. Comm. 278.

DITCH. The words "ditch" and "drain" have no technical or exact meaning. They both may mean a hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected or passes off; also, entire irrigation project. Goldthwait v. East Bridgewater, 5 Gray (Mass.) 64; Wetmore v. Fiske, 15 R. I. 354, 5 A. 375; U. S. v. Big Horn Land & Cattle Co. (C. C. A.) 17 F. (2d) 357, 364; Cairns v. Hadock, 60 Cal. App. 83, 212 P. 222, 225; Wayne City Drainage Dist. v. Boggs, 262 Ill. 338, 104 N. E. 676, 679; Dickey v. Bullock, 25 Wyo. 265, 202 P. 1104, 1105.
DITCHING, DIKING, OR TILING. Every kind of work necessary to convert parts of arid lands, particularly sagebrush lands, into farms and orchards,—the word ‘diking’ as applied to arid regions implying a leveling of the land, and the term ‘clearing land’ as applied to arid regions covered with sagebrush meaning not only the removal of the destruction of the brush but the plowing or breaking up of the roots as well. Craig v. Crystal Realty Co., 89 Or. 25, 173 P. 322, 324.

DITES OUSTER. L. Fr. Say over. The form of awarding a respondeus ouster, in the Year Books, M. 6 Edw. III. 49.

DITYAY. In Scotch law. A technical term in civil law, signifying the matter of charge or ground of indictment against a person accused of crime. Taking up dittyay is obtaining informations and presentations of crime in order to trial. Skene, de Verb. Sign.; Bell.

DIVERGE. To extend from a common point in different directions. Daylight Inv. Co. v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Ry. Co. (Mo. Sup.) 176 S. W. 7, 8.

DIVERS. Various, several, sundry; a collective term grouping a number of unspecified persons, objects, or acts. Com. v. Butts, 124 Mass. 452; State v. Hodgson, 66 Vt. 134, 28 A. 1089; Munro v. Alaire, 2 Calnes (N. Y.) 326.

DIVERSION. A turning aside or altering the natural course of a thing. The term is chiefly applied to the unauthorized changing the course of a water course to the prejudice of a lower proprietor, or to unauthorized or illegal use of corporate funds. Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. Law, 490; Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 299, 42 Am. Dec. 739; Shamburger v. Scheurrer (Tex. Civ. App.) 198 S. W. 1060, 1072; Young v. Bierschenk, 199 Iowa, 309, 201 N. W. 591, 594.

DIVERSITÉ DES COURTS. A treatise on courts and their jurisdiction, written in French in the reign of Edward III. as is supposed, and by some attributed to Fitzherbert. It was first printed in 1525, and again in 1534. Crabb, Eng. Law, 330, 483.

DIVERSITY. In criminal pleading. A plea by the prisoner in bar of execution, alleging that he is not the same who was attained, upon which a jury is immediately impaneled to try the collateral issue thus raised, viz., the identity of the person, and not whether he is guilty or innocent, for that has been already decided. 4 Bl. Comm. 396.

DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP. A phrase used with reference to the jurisdiction of the federal courts, which, under the Constitution (art. 3, § 2) and Judicial Code, § 24 (28 USCA § 41), extends to cases between citizens of different states, designating the condition existing when the party on one side of a lawsuit is a citizen of one state, and the party on the other side is a citizen of another state. When this is the basis of jurisdiction, all the persons on one side of the controversy must be citizens of different states from all the persons on the other side. Sewing Mach. Co.'s Case, 18 Wall. 553, 21 L. Ed. 914; Mexican Cent. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 13 S. Ct. 589, 37 L. Ed. 690; Albert Pick & Co. v. Cass-Butnam Hotel Co. (D. C.) 41 F.(2d) 74; Sopich v. St. Joseph Nat. Croatia Beneficary Ass'n (D. C.) 34 F.(2d) 566.

DIVERSO INTUITU. Lat. With a different view, purpose, or design; in a different view or point of view; by a different course or process. 1 W. Bl. 89; 4 Kent Comm. 211, note.

DIVERSORIUM. In old English law. A lodging or inn. Townsh. Pl. 38.

DIVERT. To turn aside; to turn out of the way; to alter the course of things. Usually applied to water-courses. Ang. Water-Courses, § 97 et seq. Sometimes to roads. 8 East, 394.

DIVES. In the practice of the English chancery division, “dives costs” are costs on the ordinary scale, as opposed to the costs formerly allowed to a successful pauper suing or defending in forma pauperis, which consisted only of his costs out of pocket. Danielew, Ch. Pr. 43.

DIVEST. Equivalent to derest, (q. v.)

DIVESTITIVE FACT. Any act or event that extinguishes or modifies a juridal relation. Kocourek, Jural Relations (2d ed.) 17.

Divide et impera, cum radix et vertex imperii in obdientium consensu rata sunt. 4 Inst. 35. Divide and govern, since the foundation and crown of empire are established in the consent of the obedient.

Division.

601

In Old English Law

The term denotes one part of an indenture, (q. v.)

Cumulative Dividend

Dividend Addition

Something added to the policy in the form of paid-up insurance, and does not mean unapportioned assets or surplus. Jefferson v. New York Life Ins. Co., 151 Ky. 609, 152 S. W. 780, 783.

Ex Dividend

A phrase used by stock brokers, meaning that a sale of corporate stock does not carry with it the seller’s right to receive his proportionate share of a dividend already declared and shortly payable.

Preferred Dividend

Scrip Dividend

One paid in scrip, or in certificates of the ownership of a corresponding amount of capital stock of the company thereafter to be issued. Bailey v. Railroad Co., 22 Wall. 604, 22 L. Ed. 849.

Stock Dividend

One paid in stock, that is, not in money, but in a proportional number of shares of the capital stock of the company, which is ordinarily increased for this purpose to a corresponding extent. Kaufman v. Charlottesville Woolen Mills Co., 93 Va. 673, 25 S. E. 1003; Thomas v. Gregg, 78 Md. 545, 28 A. 565, 44 Am. St. Rep. 310. A stock dividend is not in the ordinary sense a dividend, which is a cash distribution to stockholders of profits on their investments, but rather it is an increase in the number of shares declared out of profits, the increased number representing exactly the same property as was represented by the smaller number of shares. Graves v. Graves, 94 N. J. Eq. 208, 129 A. 420, 424; Booth v. Gross, Kelley & Co., 30 N. M. 465, 238 P. 829, 831, 41 A. L. R. 868. It is really nothing more than a process in corporation bookkeeping. Hayes v. St. Louis Union Trust Co. (Mo. Sup.) 298 S. W. 91, 98.

DIVIDENDA. In old records, An inden- ture; one counterpart of an indenture.

DIVINARE. Lat. To divine; to conjecture or guess; to foretell. Divinatio, a conjecturing or guessing.

Divinatio, non interpretatio est, qua omnino reedita a litera. That is guessing, not interpretation, which altogether departs from the letter. Bac. Max. 18, (in reg. 3), citing Yearb. 3 Hen. VI. 20.

DIVINE RIGHT OF KINGS. The right of a king to rule as posited by the patriarchal theory of government, especially under the doctrine that no misconduct and no dispossession can forfeit the right of a monarch or his heirs to the throne, and to the obedience of the people. Webster, Dict. This theory “was in its origin directed, not against popular liberty, but against papal and ecclesiastical claims to supremacy in temporal as well as spiritual affairs.” Figgis, “The Theory of the Divine Right of Kings.”

DIVINE SERVICE. Divine service was the name of a feudal tenure, by which the tenants were obliged to do some special divine services in certain; as to sing so many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like. (2 Bl. Comm. 102; 1 Steph. Comm. 227.) It differed from tenure in frankalmoign, in this: that, in case of the tenure by divine service, the lord of whom the lands were helden might disfrain for its nonperformance, whereas, in case of frankalmoign, the lord had no remedy by distraint for neglect of the service, but merely a right of complaint to the visitor to correct it. Mozley & Whitley.

DIVISA. In old English law. A device, award, or decree; also a devise; also bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, etc. Cowell. Also a court held on the boundary, in order to settle disputes of the tenants.
DIVISIBLE. That which is susceptible of being divided.

DIVISIBLE CONTRACT. One which is in its nature and purposes susceptible of division and apportionment, having two or more parts in respect to matters and things contemplated and embraced by it, not necessarily dependent on each other nor intended by the parties so to be. Horsemann v. Horsemann, 43 Or. 83, 72 P. 698; Orenstien v. Kahn, 13 Del. Ch. 376, 119 A. 444, 446; Stavisky v. General Footwear Co. (City Ct. N. Y.) 185 N. Y. S. 760, 761.

DIVISIBLE OBLIGATION. See Obligation.

DIVISIBLE OFFENSE. One that includes one or more offenses of lower grade, e. g. murder includes assault, battery, assault with intent to kill, and other offenses. Williams v. State, 20 Ala. App. 604, 104 So. 280, 281.

DIVISIM. In old English law. Severally; separately. Bract. fol. 47.

DIVISION. In English law. One of the smaller subdivisions of a county. Used in Lincolnshire as synonymous with "riding" in Yorkshire.

DIVISION OF OPINION. In the practice of appellate courts, this term denotes such a disagreement among the judges that there is not a majority in favor of any one view, and hence no decision can be rendered on the case. But it sometimes also denotes a division into two classes, one of which may comprise a majority of the judges; as when we speak of a decision having proceeded from a "divided court."

DIVISIONAL COURTS. Courts in England, consisting of two or (in special cases) more judges of the high court of justice, sitting to transact certain kinds of business which cannot be disposed of by one judge.

DIVISUM IMPERIUM. Lat. A divided jurisdiction. Applied, e. g., to the jurisdiction of courts of common law and equity over the same subject. 1 Kent, Comm. 366; 4 Steph. Comm. 9.

The dissolution is termed "divorce from the bond of matrimony," or, in the Latin form of the expression, "a vinculo matrimonii;" the suspension, "divorce from bed and board," "a mensa et thoro." The former divorce puts an end to the marriage; the latter leaves it in full force. 2 Blash. Mar. & Div. § 225.

The term "divorce" is now applied, in England, both to decrees of nullity and decrees of dissolution of marriage, while in America it is ordinarily used only in cases of divorce a mensa or a vinculo, a decree of nullity of marriage being granted for the causes for which a divorce a vinculo was formerly obtainable in England.

-Divorce a mensa et thoro. A divorce from table and bed, or from bed and board. A partial or qualified divorce, by which the parties are separated and forbidden to live or cohabit together, without affecting the marriage itself. 1 Bl. Comm. 440; 3 Bl. Comm. 94; 2 Steph. Comm. 311; 2 Blash. Mar. & Div. § 225; Miller v. Clark, 23 Ind. 370; Rudolph v. Rudolph (Super. Buff.) 12 N. Y. Supp. 81; Zule v. Zule, 1 N. J. Eq. 99; Atkenson v. Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., 90 Okl. 154, 216 P. 467, 471, 32 A. L. R. 1105; McWilliams v. McWilliams, 216 Ala. 16, 112 So. 318, 319; Ex parte State ex rel. Tissler, 214 Ala. 219, 106 So. 868, 968.

-Divorce a vinculo matrimonii. A divorce from the bond of marriage. A total divorce of husband and wife, dissolving the marriage tie, and releasing the parties wholly from their matrimonial obligations. 1 Bl. Comm. 440; 2 Steph. Comm. 310, 311; 2 Blash. Mar. & Div. § 225; De Roche v. De Roche, 12 N. D. 17, 94 N. W. 770; Ex parte State ex rel. Tissler, 214 Ala. 219, 106 So. 868, 868.

-Foreign divorce. A divorce obtained out of the state or country where the marriage was solemnized. 2 Kent, Comm. 106, et seq.

-Limited divorce. A divorce from bed and board; or a judicial separation of husband and wife not dissolving the marriage tie.

-Divorce suit. A "divorce suit" is a civil proceeding founded on a matrimonial wrong, wherein the married parties are plaintiff and defendant, and the government, or public, occupies, without being mentioned in the pleadings, the position of a third party, resulting in a triangle and otherwise sui generis action of tort. Grant v. Grant (Tex. Civ. App.) 286 S. W. 474, 456; Gallemore v. Gallemore, 94 Fla. 516, 114 So. 371, 372.

Divortium dieitur a divertendo, qua vir divertitur ab uxore. Co. Litt. 235. Divorce is called from divertendo, because a man is diverted from his wife.

DIXIÈME. Fr. Tenth; the tenth part. Ord. Mar. liv. 1, tit. 1, art. 9.

In Old French Law

An income tax payable to the crown. Steph. Lect. 850.
DO. Lat. I give. The ancient and apostle word of feoffment and of gift. 2 Bl. Comm.
310, 318; Co. Litt. 9.

DO, DICO, ADDICO. Lat. I give, I say, I adjudge. Three words used in the Roman law, to express the extent of the civil jurisdiction of the praetor. Do denoted that he gave or granted actions, exceptions, and judices; dico, that he pronounced judgment; ad-dico, that he adjudged the controverted property, or the goods of the debtor, etc.; to the

DO, LEGO. Lat. I give, I bequeath; or I give and bequeath. The formal words of making a bequest or legacy, in the Roman law.
Titi et Seio hominem Stichum do, lego, I give and bequeath to Titius and Selus my man Stichus. Inst. 2, 20, 8, 30, 31. The expression is literally retained in modern wills.

DO UT DES. Lat. I give that you may give;
I give [you] that you may give [me]. A formula in the civil law, constituting a general division under which those contracts (termed "inominates") were classed in which something was given by one party as a consideration for something given by the other.
Dig. 19, 4; Id. 19, 5, 5; 2 Bl. Comm. 444.

DO UT FACIAS. Lat. I give that you may do; I give [you] that you may do or make [for me]. A formula in the civil law, under which those contracts were classed in which one party gave or agreed to give money, in consideration the other party did or performed certain work. Dig. 19, 5, 5; 2 Bl. Comm.
444.

In this and the foregoing phrase, the conjunction "ut" is not to be taken as the technical means of expressing a consideration. In the Roman usage, this word imported a modus, that is, a qualification;
while a consideration (causa) was more aptly expressed by the word "qua.

DOCIMASIA PULMONUM. In medical jurisprudence. The hydrostatic test used chiefly in cases of alleged infanticide to determine whether the child was born alive or dead.
See Hydrostatic Test.

DOCK, v. To curtail or diminish, as to dock an entail.

DOCK, n. The cage or inclosed space in a criminal court where prisoners stand when brought in for trial.

The space, in a river or harbor, inclosed between two wharves. City of Boston v. Le-craw, 17 How. 434, 15 L. Ed. 118; Bingham
v. Doane, 9 Ohio, 167.

A slip or waterway extending between two piers or projecting wharfs for the reception of ships, sometimes including the piers themselves. Wescott v. American Creosoting Co., 86 N. J. Eq. 104, 97 A. 493, 494.

"A dock is an artificial basin in connection with a harbor, used for the reception of vessels in the taking on or discharging of their cargoes, and provided with gates for preventing the rise and fall of the waters occasioned by the tides, and keeping a uniform level within the docks." Perry
v. Haines, 191 U. S. 17, 24 S. Ct. 5, 48 L. Ed. 73.

DOCKAGE. A charge against vessels for the privilege of mooring to the wharves or in the slips. People v. Roberts, 92 Cal. 659, 28 Pac.
689. A pecuniary compensation for the use of a dock while a vessel is undergoing repairs.
Ives v. The Buckeye State, 13 Fed. Cas. 184;
The Indomable (C. C. A.) 279 F. 827, 831;
Wilkins v. Tralfakktebolaget Grangesborg
Okelosund (C. C. A.) 10 F. 2d (2d) 129, 131.

DOCK-MASTER. An officer invested with powers within the docks, and a certain distance therefrom, to direct the mooring and removing of ships, so as to prevent obstruction to the dock entrances. Mosley & Whiteley.

DOCK WARRANT. In English law. A warrant given by dock-owners to the owner of merchandise imported and warehoused on the dock, upon the faith of the bills of lading, as a recognition of his title to the goods. It is a negotiable instrument. Pull. Port of London, p. 375.

DOCKET, v. To abstract and enter in a book,
3 Bl. Comm. 397, 398. To make a brief entry of any proceeding in a court of justice in the docket.

DOCKET, n. A minute, abstract, or brief entry; or the book containing such entries.
A small piece of paper or parchment having the effect of a larger. Blount.

In Practice
A formal record, entered in brief, of the proceedings in a court of justice.
A book containing an entry in brief of all the important acts done in court in the conduct of each case, from its inception to its
The name of "docket" or "trial docket" is sometimes given to the list or calendar of causes set to be tried at a specified term, prepared by the clerks for the use of the court and bar.

Kinds of Dockets
An appearance docket is one in which the appearances in actions are entered, containing also a brief abstract of the successive steps in each action. A bar docket is an unofficial paper consisting of a transcript of the docket for a term of court, printed for distribution to members of the bar. Gifford v.
Cole, 57 Iowa, 272, 10 N. W. 672. An execution docket is a list of the executions sued out or pending in the sheriff's office. A judgment docket is a list or docket of the judgments entered in a given court, methodically kept by the clerk or other proper officer, open to public inspection, and intended to afford official notice to interested parties of the existence or lien of judgments.

In General

—Docket fee. An attorney’s fee, of a fixed sum, chargeable with or as a part of the costs of the action, for the attorney of the successful party; so called because chargeable on the docket, not as a fee for making docket entries. Bank v. Neill, 13 Mont. 377, 31 Pac. 150; Goodyear v. Sawyer (C. C.) 17 Fed. 2.

—Docket, striking a. A phrase formerly used in English bankruptcy practice. It referred to the entry of certain papers at the bankruptcy office, preliminary to the prosecution of the flat against a trader who had become bankrupt. These papers consisted of the affidavit, the bond, and the petition of the creditor, and their object was to obtain from the lord chancellor his flat, authorizing the petitioner to prosecute his complaint against the bankrupt in the bankruptcy courts. Brown.

DOCKMASTERS. Officers appointed to direct the mooring of ships, so as to prevent the obstruction of dock entrances.

DOCTOR, v. To prescribe or treat medically or to treat as a doctor or physician. Haines v. Indiana Trust Co., 95 Ind. App. 651, 131 N. E. 89, 91.

DOCTOR, n. A learned man; one qualified to give instruction of the higher order in a science or art; particularly, one who has received the highest academical degree in his art or faculty, as, a doctor of laws, medicine, or theology. In colloquial language, however, the term is practically restricted to practitioners of medicine. Harrison v. State, 102 Ala. 170, 15 South. 598; State v. McKnight, 131 N. C. 717, 42 S. E. 580, 59 L. R. A. 187; Commonwealth v. New England College of Chiropractic, 221 Mass. 190, 108 N. E. 895, 897; Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 1.

DOCTOR AND STUDENT. The title of a work written by St. Germain in the reign of Henry VIII. In which many principles of the common law are discussed in a popular manner. It is in the form of a dialogue between a doctor of divinity and a student in law, and has always been considered a book of merit and authority. 1 Kent, Comm. 504; Crabb, Eng. Law, 482.

DOCTORS’ COMMONS. An institution near St. Paul’s Churchyard, in London, where, for a long time previous to 1857, the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts used to be held.

DOCTRINE. A rule, principle, theory, or tenet of the law; as, the doctrine of merger, the doctrine of relation, etc.

DOCTRINAL INTERPRETATION. See Interpretation.

DOCUMENT. An instrument on which is recorded, by means of letters, figures, or marks, matter which may be evidentially used. In this sense the term “document” applies to writings; to words printed, lithographed, or photographed; to seals, plates, or stones on which inscriptions are cut or engraved; to photographs and pictures; to maps or plans. The inscription may be on stone or gems, or on wood, as well as on paper or parchment. 1 Whart. Ev. § 614; Johnson Steel Street-Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. (C. C.) 45 F. 104; Arnold v. Water Co., 18 R. I. 180, 36 A. 85, 19 L. R. A. 602; Hayden v. Van Cortlandt, 32 N. Y. S. 507, 84 Hun. 150. It has various statutory meanings. Hays v. Hinkle (Tex. Civ. App.) 193 S. W. 133, 155; Cohn v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 258 F. 355, 361; Smith v. Lingebach, 177 Wis. 170, 187 N. W. 1007, 1008; Broadway Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (R. I.) 123 A. 506, 567; Cudahy Packing Co. v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 133, 135; Paola v. Porter Bros., 205 N. Y. S. 281-283, 209 App. Div. 716; Jordan v. Logia Suprema de la Alianza Hispano-Americana, 23 Ariz. 584, 206 P. 162, 169, 24 A. L. R. 974.

In the plural, the deeds, agreements, title-papers, letters, receipts, and other written instruments used to prove a fact.

In the Civil Law

Evidence delivered in the forms established by law, of whatever nature such evidence may be. The term is, however, applied principally to the testimony of witnesses. Sav. Dr. Rom. § 165.

In General

—Ancient documents. Deeds, wills, and other writings more than thirty years old are so called; they are presumed to be genuine without express proof, when coming from the proper custodv.

—Foreign document. One which was prepared or executed in, or which comes from, a foreign state or country.

—Judicial documents. Proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 252.

—Public document. A state paper, or other instrument of public importance or interest, issued or published by authority of congress or a state legislature. dogger-ships.

DOGMA. In the civil law. A word occasionally used as descriptive of an ordinance of the senate. See Nov. 2, 1, 1; Dig. 27, 1, 6.

DOING. The formal word by which services were reserved and expressed in old conveyances; as "rendering" (reddendo) was expressive of rent. Perk. c. 10, §§ 625, 635, 638.

DOING BUSINESS. Within the meaning of statutes pertaining to service of process on foreign corporations, equivalent to conducting or managing business. Wichita Film & Supply Co. v. Yale, 194 Mo. App. 60, 184 S. W.
119. A foreign corporation is "doing business" within a state, making it amenable to process therein, if it does business therein in such a manner as to warrant the inference that it is present there; Cannon Mfg. Co. v.
Cuddy Packing Co. (D. C.) 292 F. 169, 171; or that it has subjected itself to the jurisdiction and laws in which the service is made;
W. J. Armstrong Co. v. New York Cent. &
H. R. R. Co., 129 Minn. 104, 151 N. W. 917,
918, L. R. A. 1916B, 232, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 335;

Shambe v. Delaware & H. R. Co., 288 Pa. 240, 135 A. 755, 757. The doing of business is the exercise in the state of some of the ordinary functions for which the corporation was organized. Davis & Worrell v. General Motors Acceptance Corporation, 153 Ark. 628, 241 S. W. 44, 46; State v. Superior Court of Yakima County, 136 Wash. 653, 241 P. 306,
304; Hoffstater v. Jewell, 33 Idaho, 439, 99
P. 194, 195. What constitutes "doing business" depends on the facts in each particular case. Walton N. Moore Dry Goods Co. v.
Commercial Industrial Co. (C. C. A.) 282 F.
21, 25. The activities of the corporation, however, must represent a more or less continuous effort; Knapp v. Bullock Tractor Co. (D. C.)
242 F. 543, 550; Lloyd Thomas Co. v.
Grovenor, 144 Tenn. 347, 233 S. W. 669, 670;

Civ. App.) 177 S. W. 791, 793 (but see Tyler v.
Consolidated Portrait Frame Co. [Tex. Civ.
App.] 191 S. W. 710).

DOITKIN, or DOIT. A base coin of small value, prohibited by St. 3 Hen. V. c. 1. We still retain the phrase, in the common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit. Jacob.

DOLE. A part, share, or portion, as of a meadow. To "dole out" anything is to deal or distribute in small portions. Holthouse.

In Scotch Law

Criminal intent; evil design. Bell, Dict.
voe. "Crime."

DOLÉANCE. A peculiar appeal in the Channel Islands. It is a personal charge against a judicial officer, either of misconduct or of DOLES, or DOOLS. Slips of pasture left between the furrows of plowed land.

DOLG-BOTE. A recompense for a scar or wound. Cowell.

DOLI. Lat. See Dolus.

DOLLAR. The unit employed in the United States in calculating money values. It is coined both in gold and silver, and is of the value of one hundred cents. Thompson v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. R. 123, 234 S. W. 406, 408.

DOLIO. In Spanish law. Bad or mischievous design. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 1, c. 1, § 3.

Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurus est. He acts with guile who demands that which he will have to return. Broom, Max. 346.

Dolo malo pactum se non servaturum. Dig. 2, 14, 7, § 9. An agreement induced by fraud cannot stand.

Dolosus versat in generalibus. A person intending to deceive deals in general terms. Wing. Max. 636; 2 Coke, 34a; 6 Clark & P. 699; Broom, Max. 289.

Dolum ex indicis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear tokens. Code, 2, 21, 6; 1 Story, Cont. § 625.

DOLUS. In the civil law. Guile; deceitfulness; malicious fraud. A fraudulent address or trick used to deceive some one; a fraud. Dig. 4, 3, 1. Any subtle contrivance by words or acts with a design to circumvent. 2 Kent, Comm. 590; Code, 2, 21.

Such acts or omissions as operate as a deception upon the other party, or violate the just confidence reposed by him, whether there be a deceitful intent (malius animus) or not. Poth. Traité de Dépôt, nn. 23, 27; Story, Bailm. § 20a; 2 Kent, Comm. 509, note.

Fraud, willfulness, or intentionality. In that use it is opposed to culpa, which is negligence merely, in greater or less degree. The policy of the law may sometimes treat extreme culpa as if it were dolus, upon the maxim culpa dolos comparatur. A person is always liable for dolus producing damage, but not always for culpa producing damage, even though extreme, e. g., a depositary is only liable for dolus, and not for negligence. Brown.

—Dolus bonus, dolus malus. In a wide sense, the Roman law distinguishes between “good,” or rather “permissible” dolus and “bad” or fraudulent dolus. The former is justifiable or allowable deceit; it is that which a man may employ in self-defense against an unlawful attack, or for another permissible purpose, as when one dissembles the truth to prevent a lunatic from injuring himself or others. The latter exists where one intentionally misleads another or takes advantage of another’s error wrongfully, by any form of deception, fraud, or cheating. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 179; Broom, Max. 349; 2 Kent, Comm. 560, note.

—Dolus dans locus contracti. Fraud (or deceit) giving rise to the contract; that is, a fraudulent misrepresentation made by one of the parties to the contract, and relied upon by the other, and which was actually instrumental in inducing the latter to enter into the contract.

—Dolli capax. Capable of malice or criminal intention; having sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong, and so to become amenable to the criminal laws.

—Dolli incapax. Incapable of criminal intention or malice; not of the age of discretion; not possessed of sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong to the extent of being criminally responsible for his actions.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor prejudices not his successor.

Dolus ciruitus non purgatur. Fraud is not purged by circuity. Bac. Max. 4; Broom, Max. 228.

Dolus est machination, cum aliud dissimulat aliud agit. Lane. 47. Deceit is an artifice, since it pretends one thing and does another.

Dolus latet in generalibus. Fraud lurks in generalities. Tray. Lat. Max. 162.

Dolus versat in generalibus. Fraud deals in generalities. 2 Coke, 34a; 3 Coke, 81a.

DOM, PROC. An abbreviation of Domus Procerum or Domo Procerum; the house of lords in England. Sometimes expressed by the letters D. P.

DOMAIN. The complete and absolute ownership of land; a paramount and individual right of property in land. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 658. Also the real estate so owned. The inherent sovereign power claimed by the legislature of a state, of controlling private property for public uses, is termed the “right of eminent domain.” 2 Kent, Comm. 339. See Eminent Domain.

A distinction has been made between “property” and “domain.” The former is said to be that qualiity which is conceived to be in the thing itself, considered as belonging to such or such person, exclusively of all others. By the latter is understood that right which the owner has of disposing of the thing. Hence "domain" and "property" are said to be correlative terms. The one is the active right to dispose of; the other a passive quality which follows the thing and places it at the disposition of the owner. 3 Toullier, no. 82.

National Domain

A term sometimes applied to the aggregate of the property owned directly by a nation. Clv. Code La. art. 486.

Public Domain

This term embraces all lands, the title to which is in the United States, including as well land occupied for the purposes of federal buildings, arsenals, dock-yards, etc., as land of an agricultural or mineral character not yet granted to private owners. Barker v. Harvey, 21 S. Ct. 690, 181 U. S. 481, 45 L. Ed. 963; Day Land & Cattle Co. v. State, 68 Tex. 526, 4 S. W. 865.

DOMBEC, DOMBOC. (Sax. From dom, judgment, and bec, bec, a book.) Dome-book or doom-book. A name given among the Saxons to a code of laws. Several of the Saxon kings published domboes, but the most important one was that attributed to Alfred. Crabb, Com. Law, 7. This is sometimes confounded with the celebrated Domesday-Book. See Dome-Book; Domesday.

DOME-BOOK. A book or code said to have been compiled under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom of England; containing, as is supposed, the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors, and the forms of judicial proceedings. It is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Edward IV., but is now lost. 1 Bl. Comm. 64, 65.

DOMESDAY, DOMESDAY-BOOK. (Sax.) An ancient record made in the time of William the Conqueror, and now remaining in the English exchequer, consisting of two volumes of unequal size, containing minute and accurate surveys of the lands in England. 2 Bl. Comm. 49, 50. The work was begun by five justices in each county in 1081, and finished in 1086.

DOMEMEN. (Sax.) An inferior kind of judges. Most appointed to doom (judge) in matters in controversy. Cowell. Suits in a court of a manor in ancient demesne, who are judges there. Blount; Whishaw; Termes de la Ley.

DOMESTIC, a. A domestic, or, in full, domestic servant, is a servant who resides in the same house with the master. The term does not extend to workmen or laborers employed out of doors. Ex parte Meason, 5 Bin. (Pa.) 167; Richardson v. State, 43 Tex. 456; Wakefield v. State, 41 Tex. 553.

The Louisiana Civil Code enumerates as domestics those who receive wages and stay in the house of the person paying and employing them, for his own service or that of his family: such as valets, footmen, cooks, butlers, and others who reside in the house. Persons employed in public houses are not included. Cook v. Dodge, 6 La. Ann. 276.

The term is sometimes extended, however, to include servants who do not reside in the same house as the master. Catto v. Plant, 106 Conn. 256, 177 A. 764; 766 (gardener); Douglas v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 295, 225 S. W. 598, 598 (house porter).

—Domestic animals. Such as are habituated to live in or about the habitations of men, or such as contribute to the support of a family or the wealth of the community. This term includes horses, (State v. Gould, 29 V. W. A. 261; Osborn v. Lenox, 2 Allen [Mass.] 267,) but may or may not include dogs. See Wilcox v. State, 101 Ga. 653, 28 S. E. 951, 99 L. R. A. 709; State v. Harriman, 77 N. Y. 51, 16 Am. Rep. 423; Hurley v. State, 30 Tex. App. 333, 17 S. W. 455, 28 Am. St. Rep. 918; Thurston v. Carter, 112 Me. 381, 92 A. 295, 55 L. R. A. 1015c, 359, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 359.

DOMESTICUS. In old European law. A servus domesticus, steward, or major domo; a judge's assistant; an assessor, (q. v.) Spelman.

DOMICELLA. In old English law. A damsel. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 80.

DOMICELLUS. In old English law. A better sort of servant in monasteries; also an appellation of a king's bastard.

DOMICILE. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 188; Tanner v. King, 11 La. 175; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 503; White v. Brown, Wall. Jr. 217, Fed. Cas. No. 17,588; Horne v. Horne, 31 N.

That place in which a man has voluntarily fixed the habitation of himself and family, not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with the present intention of making a permanent home, for an unlimited or indefinite period. In re Garneau, 127 F. 677, 62 C. C. A. 403; 28 L. J. Ch. 361, 366; MacLeod v. Stelle, 43 Idaho, 64, 249 P. 254, 256; Steckel v. Steckel, 118 Va. 198, 66 S. E. 833.

In international law, a residence at a particular place, Accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to continue there for an unlimited time. State v. Collector of Bordentown, 32 N. J. Law. 192; Graham v. Graham, 9 N. D. 88, 81 N. W. 44; Philimore, Int. Law. 192.

The place where a person has fixed his habitation and has a permanent residence, without any present intention of removing therefrom. Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 536, 520; Holyoke v. Holyoke's Estate, 119 Me. 442, 57 A. 1192; Story, Con. L. § 43; Hindman's Appeal, 85 Pa. 496; Connolly v. Connolly, 33 S. D. 246, 146 N. W. 581, 582.

The established, fixed, permanent, or ordinary dwelling-place or place of residence of a person, as distinguished from his temporary and transient, actual, place of residence. It is his legal residence, as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; or his home, as distinguished from a place to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him. Slocum v. Lymne, 29 Conn. 74; Towson v. Towson, 136 Va. 640, 102 S. E. 45, 52.

As to abandonment of domicile, see Abandonment.

Classification

Domicile may be deemed to be of three sorts, —domicile by birth, domicile by choice, and domicile by operation of law. The first is the common case of the place of birth, domicili-um originis; the second is that which is voluntarily acquired by a party, proprio motu; the last is consequential, as that of the wife arising from marriage. Story, Const. Laws, § 46, and see Railroad Co. v. Kimbrough, 115 Ky. 512, 74 S. W. 229; Price v. Price, 150 Pa. 617, 27 A. 291; White v. Brown, 29 Fed. Cas. 992; In re Jones' Estate, 192 Iowa, 78, 182 N. W. 227, 228, 16 A. L. R. 1286; Thayer v. Thayer, 187 N. C. 575, 122 S. E. 307, 308; In re Lyon's Estate, 117 Misc. 189, 191 N. Y. S. 260, 268.

As from different points of view, other classifications are indicated by the following terms:

Commercial Domicile

A domicile acquired by the maintenance of a commercial establishment; a domicile which a citizen of a foreign country may acquire by conducting business in another country. 1 Kent, 82; U. S. v. Chin Quong Lock (D. C.) 52 F. 204; Lau Ow Biew v. U. S., 144 U. S. 47, 12 S. Ct. 517, 36 L. Ed. 340. See Dicey, Dom. 341; The Dos Hermanos, 2 Wheat. 76, 4 L Ed. 189.

De Facto Domicile

In French law, permanent and fixed residence in France of an alien who has not acquired French citizenship nor taken steps to do so, but who intends to make his home permanently or indefinitely in that country; called domicile "de facto" because domicile in the full sense of that term, as used in France, can only be acquired by an act equivalent to naturalization. In re Gruger's Will, 36 Misc. 477, 73 N. Y. S. 812.

Domestic Domicile

A name sometimes used for "municipal domicile" (q. v.). Hayward v. Hayward, 65 Ind. App. 440, 115 N. E. 966, 970.

Domicile of Origin

The home of the parents. Philim. Dom. 25, 101. That which arises from a man's birth and connections. 5 Ves. 750. The domicile of the parents at the time of birth, or what is termed the "domicile of origin," constitutes the domicile of an infant, and continues until abandoned, or until the acquisition of a new domicile in a different place. Prentiss v. Barton, 1 Brock. 339, 333, Fed. Cas. No.
DOMICILED. Established in a given domicile; belonging to a given state or jurisdiction by right of domicile.

DOMICILIARY. Pertaining to domicile; relating to one's domicile. Existing or created at, or connected with, the domicile of a suitor or of a decedent.

DOMICILATE. To establish one's domicile; to take up one's fixed residence in a given place. To establish the domicile of another person whose legal residence follows one's own.

DOMICILIATION. In Spanish law. The acquisition of domiciliary rights and status, nearly equivalent to naturalization, which may be accomplished by being born in the kingdom, by conversion to the Catholic faith there, by taking up a permanent residence in some settlement and marrying a native woman, and by attaching oneself to the soil, purchasing or acquiring real property and possessions. Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 185.

DOMICILIIUM. Lat. Domicile (g. v.).

DOMIGERIUM. In old English law. Power over another; also danger. Bract. l. 4, t. 1, c. 10.

DOMINA (DAME). A title given to honorable women, who, anciently, in their own right of inheritance, held a barony. Cowell.

DOMINANT ESTATE OR TENEMENT. That to which a servitude or easement is due, or for the benefit of which it exists. A term used in the civil and Scotch law, and thence in ours, relating to servitudes, meaning the tenement or subject in favor of which the service is constituted; as the tenement over which the servitude extends is called the “servient tenement.” Wharton; Walker v. Clifford, 128 Ala. 67, 29 South. 588, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74; Dillman v. Hoffman, 38 Wls. 572; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 339; Burdine v. Sewell, 92 Flm. 375, 109 So. 648, 652.

DOMINATIO. In old English law. Lordship.

DOMINICA PALMARUM. (Dominica in ramiis palmarum.) L. Lat. Palm Sunday. Townsh. Pl. 131; Cowell; Blount.

DOMINICAL. That which denotes the Lord's day, or Sunday.

DOMINICIDE. The act of killing one's lord or master.

DOMINICUM. Lat. Domain; demain; destine. A lordship. That of which one has the lordship or ownership. That which remains under the lord's immediate charge and control. Spelman; Blount.

In Domencay he meant the home farm as distinguished from the holdings of the tenants. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. in Eleventh Century 332.
Property; domain; anything pertaining to a lord. Cowell.

In Ecclesiastical Law

A church, or any other building consecrated to God. Du Cange.

DOMINIO. Sp. In Spanish law. A term corresponding to and derived from the Latin dominium (q. v.). Dominio alto, eminent domain; dominio directo, immediate ownership; dominio utile, beneficial ownership. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 556.

DOMINION. Ownership, or right to property. 2 Bl. Comm. 1. Title to an article of property which arises from the power of disposition and the right of claiming it. Baker v. Westcott, 73 Tex. 128, 11 S. W. 157. "The holder has the dominion of the bill." 8 East, 579. See, also, State v. Johnson, 34 S. D. 601, 149 N. W. 786, 784.

Sovereignty or lordship; as the dominion of the seas. Moll. de Jure Mar. 91, 92.

In the civil law, with reference to the title to property which is transferred by a sale of it, dominion is said to be either "proximate" or "remote," the former being the kind of title vesting in the purchaser when he has acquired both the ownership and the possession of the article, the latter describing the nature of his title when he has legitimately acquired the ownership of the property but there has been no delivery. Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 108.

DOMINIUM. In the civil and old English law. Ownership; property in the largest sense, including both the right of property and the right of possession or use.

The mere right of property, as distinguished from the possession or usufruct. Dig. 41, 2, 17, 1; Calvin. The right which a lord had in the fee of his tenant. In this sense the word is very clearly distinguished by Bracton from dominium.

The estate of a feoffee to use, "The feoffees to use shall have the dominium, and the cestui que use the disposition." 1 Lat. 137.

Sovereignty or dominion. Dominium maris, the sovereignty of the sea.

DOMINUM DIRECTUM.

In the Civil Law

Strict ownership; that which was founded on strict law, as distinguished from equity. In later law. Property without use; the right of a landlord. Tayl. Civil Law, 478.

In Feudal Law

Right or proper ownership;—the right of a superior or lord, as distinguished from that of his vassal or tenant. The title or property which the sovereign in England is considered as possessing in all the lands of the kingdom, they being helden either immediately or mediateiy of him as lord paramount.

DOMINIUM DIRECTUM ET UTILE. The complete and absolute dominion in property; the union of the title and the exclusive use. Fairfax v. Hunter, 7 Cranch, 603, 3 L. Ed. 453.

DOMINIUM EMINENS. Eminent domain.

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti. Lordship cannot be in suspense, i. e., property cannot remain in abeyance. Halk. Law Max. 39.

DOMINIUM PLENUM. Full ownership; the union of the dominium directum with the dominium utile. Tayl. Civil Law, 478.

DOMINIUM UTILE.

In the Civil Law

Equitable or proritum ownership; that which was founded on equity. MacKeld. Rom. Law, § 327, note. In later law. Use without property; the right of a tenant. Tayl. Civil Law, 478.

In Feudal Law

Useful or beneficial ownership; the usufruct, or right to the use and profits of the soil, as distinguished from the dominium directum (q. e.) or ownership of the soil itself; the right of a vassal or tenant. 2 Bl. Comm. 105.

DOMINO VOLENTE. Lat. The owner being willing; with the consent of the owner.

DOMINUS.

In Feudal and Ecclesiastical Law

A lord, or feudal superior. Dominus rei, the lord the king; the king’s title as lord paramount. 1 Bl. Comm. 367. Dominus capitis, a chief lord. Dominus medius, a mesne or intermediate lord. Dominus ligius, liege lord or sovereign. Id.

Lord or sir; a title of distinction. It usually denoted a knight or clergyman; and, according to Cowell, was sometimes given to a gentleman of quality, though not a knight, especially if he were lord of a manor.

The owner or proprietor of a thing, as distinguished from him who uses it merely. Calvin. A master or principal, as distinguished from an agent or attorney. Story. Ag. § 3.

In the Civil Law

Dominus capitis loeze harelis habetur, quoties per defectum vel delictum extinguitur sanquis sui tenentis. Co. Litt. 18. The supreme lord takes the place of the heir, as often as the blood of the tenant is extinct through deficiency or crime.

DOMINUS LITIS. Lat. The master of the suit; i. e., the person who was really and directly interested in the suit as a party, as distinguished from his attorney or advocate. But the term is also applied to one who, though not originally a party, has made himself such, by intervention or otherwise, and has assumed entire control and responsibility for one side, and is treated by the court as liable for costs. See In re Stover, 1 Curt. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 13,507.

It is also said that the attorney himself, when the cause has been tried, becomes the dominus litis, Vicat.

DOMINUS NAVIS. In the civil law. The owner of a vessel. Dig. 39, 4, 11, 2; Wharton.

Dominus non maritabit pupillum nisi semel. Co. Litt. 9. A lord cannot give a ward in marriage but once.

Dominus rex nullum habere potest parem, multo minus superiorem. The king cannot have an equal, much less a superior. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 115.

DOMITÆ. Lat. Tame; domesticated; not wild. Applied to domestic animals, in which a man may have an absolute property. 2 Bl. Comm. 301.

DOMMAGES INTÉRÊTS. In French law. Damages.

DOMO REPARANDA. A writ that lay for one against his neighbor, by the anticipated fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

DOMUS. Lat. In the civil and old English law. A house or dwelling; a habitation. Inst. 4, 4, 8; Townsh. Pl. 183-185. Bennet v. Bittle, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 342.

DOMUS CAPITULARIS. In old records. A chapter-house; the chapter-house. Dyer, 269.

DOMUS CONVERSORUM. An ancient house built or appointed by King Henry III. for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Edward III, who expelled the Jews from the kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the chancery. Jacob.

DOMUS DEI. The house of God; a name applied to many hospitals and religious houses.

DOMUS MANSIONALIS. A mansion house. 1 Hale, P. C. 558; State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 448; State v. Sultelle, 4 Strob. (S. C.) 376.

DOMUS PROCERUM. The house of lords, abbreviated into Dom. Proc., or D. P.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. To every man his own house is his safest refuge. 5 Coke, 91b; 11 Coke, 82; 3 Inst. 162. The house of every one is to him as his castle and fortress, as well for his defense against inal gift; donatio rerata, a gift made with reference to some service already done, (Fisk v. Flores, 43 Tex. 340;) donatio stricta et coactus, a restricted gift, as an estate tail.

DONATIO INOIFFICIOSA. An inofficious (undutiful) gift; a gift of so great a part of the donor’s property that the birthright portion of his heirs is diminished. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 460.

DONATIO INTER VIVOS. A gift between the living. The ordinary kind of gift by one person to another. 2 Kent, Comm. 438; 2 Steph. Comm. 102. A term derived from the civil law. Inst. 2, 7, 2. A donation inter vivos (between living persons) is an act by which the donor divests himself at present and irrevocably of the thing given in favor of the donee who accepts it. Civ. Code La. art. 1468; Succession of Brand, 111 So. 267; 203, 162 La. 880.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA. A gift made by a person in sickness, who, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another the possession of any personal goods, to keep as his own in case of the donor’s decease. 2 Bl. Comm. 514. The civil law defines it to be a gift under apprehension of death; as when anything is given upon condition that, if the donor dies, the donee shall possess it absolutely, or return it if the donor should survive or should repent of having made the gift, or if the donee should die before the donor. Adams v. Nicholas, 1 Miles (Pa.) 109-117. A gift in view of death is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver. Civ. Code Cal. § 1149; Prendergast v. Drew, 103 Conn. 68, 130 A. 75, 76. A dona- tion mortis causa (in prospect of death) is an act to take effect when the donor shall no longer exist, by which he disposes of the whole or a part of his property, and which is revocable. Civ. Code La. art. 1439.

Donatio perfectior possessione accipientis. A gift is perfected [made complete] by the possession of the receiver. Jenk. Cent. 109, case 9. A gift is incomplete until possession is delivered. 2 Kent, Comm. 438; Ewing v. Ewing, 2 Leigh (Va.) 337.

Donatio principis intelligitur sine prejudicio tertii. Dav. Ir. B. 75. A gift of the prince is understood without prejudice to a third party.

DONATIO PROPTER NUPTIAS. A gift on account of marriage. In Roman law, the bridegroom’s gift to the bride in anticipation of marriage and to secure her dos was called “donatio ante nuptias;” but by an ordinance of Justinian such gift might be made after as well as before marriage, and in that case it was called “donatio propter nuptias.” Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 572.

DONATION.

In Ecclesiastical Law

A mode of acquiring a benefice by deed of gift alone, without presentation, institution, or induction. 3 Steph. Comm. 51.

In General

As sometimes used, however, the term does not necessarily mean an absolute gift without any condition or consideration whatever. International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Anderson County (Tex. Civ. App.) 174 S. W. 305, 305.

A donation of real estate is certainly not a mortgage or privilege, but is a transfer of property of a peculiar kind, subject to revocation, sometimes without cause, and always subject to reduction at the suit of the forced heirs of the donor. Bank of Delphi v. Lea, 129 La. 730, 72 So. 187, 188.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta et non perfecta, ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ae traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incomplete and not perfect as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed. Co. Litt. 56.

DONATIVE ADVOWSON. In ecclesiastical law. A species of advowson, where the benefice is conferred on the clerk by the patron’s deed of donation, without presentation, institution, or induction. 2 Bl. Comm. 23; Termes de la Ley.

DONATOR. A donor; one who makes a gift, (donatio.)

Donator nunquam desinit possidere, antequam donatorius incipiat possidere. The donor never ceases to possess, until the donee begins to possess. Bract. fol. 410; Dyer 251.

DONATORIUS. A donee; a person to whom a gift is made; a purchaser. Bract. fol. 13, et seq.

DONATORY. The person on whom the king bestows his right to any forfeiture that has fallen to the crown.

DONE. Distinguished from “made.” “A ‘deed made’ may no doubt mean an ‘instrument made;’ but a ‘deed done’ is not an ‘instrument done,—it is an ‘act done;’ and therefore these words, ‘made and done,’ apply to acts, as well as deeds.” Lord Brougham, 4 Bell. App. Cas. 38.

DONEE. In Old English Law

He to whom lands were given; the party to whom a donatio was made.
In Later Law
He to whom lands or tenements are given in tail. Litt. § 57.

In Modern and American Law
One who is invested with a power of appointment; the party executing a power; otherwise called the “appointor.” 4 Kent, Comm. 316. One to whom a gift is made or a bequest given.

DONIS, STATUTE DE. See De Donis, the Statute.

DONNEUR D’AVAL. In French law. Guarantor of negotiable paper other than by indorsement.

DONOR.
In Old English Law
He by whom lands were given to another; the party making a donatio.

In Later Law
He who gives lands or tenements to another in tail. Litt. § 57; Termes de la Ley.

In Modern and American Law
The party conferring a power. 4 Kent, Comm. 316. One who makes a gift.

DONUM. Lat. In the civil law. A gift; a free gift. Calvin. Distinguished from munus. Dig. 50, 15, 194.

The difference between donum and munus is said to be that donum is more general, while munus is specific. Visat, Voc. Jur.; Calvin.

DOOM. In Scotch law. Judicial sentence, or judgment. The decision or sentence of a court orally pronounced by an officer called a “dempster” or “deemster.” In modern usage, criminal sentences still end with the words “which is pronounced for doom.”

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. See Domesday-Book.

DOOR. The place of usual entrance in a house, or into a room in the house. State v. McBeth, 49 Kan. 584, 31 P. 145.

DORMANT. Literally, sleeping; hence inactive; in abeyance; unknown; concealed; silent.

DORMANT CLAIM. One which is in abeyance.

DORMANT EXECUTION. One which a creditor delivers to the sheriff with directions to levy only, and not to sell, until further orders, or until a junior execution is received. See Storm v. Woods, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 110; Kimball v. Munger, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 364.

DORMANT JUDGMENT. One which has not been satisfied, nor extinguished by lapse of time, but which has remained so long unexecuted that execution cannot now be issued upon it without first reviving the judgment, or one which has lost its lien on land from the failure to issue execution on it or take other steps to enforce it within the time limited by statute. 1 Black, Judgm. (2d Ed.) § 462; Draper v. Nixon, 98 Ala. 436, 8 So. 480; General Electric Co. v. Hurd (C. C.) 171 F. 984; Burlington State Bank v. Marlin Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 207 S. W. 954, 956.

DORMANT PARTNER. See Partners.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. 2 Inst. 161. The laws sometimes sleep, never die.

DORSUM. Lat. The back. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Coke, 44b.

DORTURE. (Contracted from dormiture.) A dormitory of a convent; a place to sleep in.

In Roman Law
Dowry: a wife’s marriage portion; all that property which on marriage is transferred by the wife herself or by another to the husband with a view of diminishing the burden which the marriage will entail upon him. It is of three kinds. Profectitia dos is that which is derived from the property of the wife’s father or paternal grandfather. That dos is termed adventitia which is not profectitia in respect to its source, whether it is given by the wife from her own estate or by the wife’s mother or a third person. It is termed receptitia dos when accompanied by a stipulation for its reclamation by the constitutor on the termination of the marriage. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 561, 563; Visat; Calvinnus, Lex.; Du Cange; 1 Washb. R. P. 147.

In Old English Law
The portion given to the wife by the husband at the church door, in consideration of the marriage; dowry; the wife’s portion out of her deceased husband’s estate in case he had not endowed her. 1 Washb. R. P. 147; 1 Cruise, Dig. 152; Park, Dower.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be demanded of dower. Co. Litt. 31; 4 Coke, 122b. A widow is not dowable of lands assigned to another woman in dower. 1 Hill. Real Prop. 135; 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 1 Washb. R. P. 209; Brooks v. Everett, 13 Allen (Mass.) 459.

DOS RATIONABILIS. A reasonable marriage portion. A reasonable part of her husband’s estate, to which every widow is entitled, of lands of which her husband may have endowed her on the day of marriage. Co. Litt. 336. Dower, at common law. 2 Bl. Comm. 134.

Dos rationabilis vel legitima est cuiuslibet mulieris de quo cuene tenemento tertia pars omnium terrarum et tenementorum, que vir suus tenuit in dominio suo ut de feodo, etc. Co. Litt. 336. Reasonable or legitimate dower belongs to every woman of a third part of all the lands and tenements of which her husband was seised in his demesne, as of fee, etc.

DOSSIER. Fr. A brief; a bundle of papers.

DOT. (A French word, adopted in Louisiana.) The fortune, portion, or dowry which a woman brings to her husband by the marriage. Buisson v. Thompson, 7 Mart. La. (N. S.) 469.

DOTAGE. That feebleness of the mental faculties which proceeds from old age. It is a diminution or decay of that intellectual power which was once possessed. It is the slow approach of death; of that irrevocable cessation, without hurt or disease, of all the functions which once belonged to the living animal. The external functions gradually cease; but the senses waste away by degrees; and the mind is imperceptibly visited by decay. Owing’s Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 389, 17 Am. Dec. 311.

DOTAL. Relating to the dos or portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

DOTAL PROPERTY. In the civil law, in Louisiana, by this term is understood that property which the wife brings to the husband to assist him in bearing the expenses of the marriage establishment. Extradotal property, otherwise called "paraphernal property," is that which forms no part of the dowry. Civ. Code La. art. 2335; Flettas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 13 Sup. Ct. 495, 37 L. Ed. 276.

DOTION. The act of giving a dowry or portion; endowment in general, including the endowment of a hospital or other charitable institution.

DOTE, n. In Spanish law. The marriage portion of a wife. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 6, c. 1. The property which the wife gives to the husband on account of marriage, or for the purpose of supporting the matrimonial expenses. Id. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 1, § 1; Schm. Civil Law, 75; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 254; Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 668; Las Partidas, 4. 11. 1; Escruche, Dic. Ruz. Dote.

DOTE, v. To be besotted, delirious, silly, or insane. Gates v. Meredith, 7 Ind. 441.

DOTE ASSIGNANDA. A writ which lay for a widow, when it was judicially ascertained that a tenant to the king was seised of tenements in fee or fee-fine, at the day of his death, and that he held of the king in chief. In such case the widow might come into chancery, and then make oath that she would not marry without the king’s leave, and then she might have this writ. These widows were called the "king’s widows." Jacob; Holt-house.

DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ which lies for a widow to whom no dower has been assigned. 3 Bl. Comm. 352. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 128, an ordinary action commenced by writ of summons has taken its place; but it remains in force in the United States, and under the designation of "dower unde nihil habit" (see that title), is the form in common use for the recovery of dower at law. 1 Washb. R. P. 290; 4 Kent 63.

Doti lex favet; præmium pudoris est; ideo parcatur. Co. Litt. 31; Branch, Princ. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity; therefore let it be preserved.

DOTIS ADMINISTRATIO. Admeasurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, etc.

DOTISSA. A dowager.

DOUBLE. Twofold; acting in two capacities or having two aspects; multiplied by two. This term has ordinarily the same meaning in law as in popular speech. The principal compound terms into which it enters are noted below.

DOUBLE ADULTERY. Adultery committed by two persons each of whom is married to another as distinguished from "single" adultery, where one of the participants is unmarried. Hunter v. U. S., 1 Pin. (Wis.) 91, 30 Am. Dec. 277.

DOUBLE AVAIL OF MARRIAGE. In Scotch law. Double the ordinary or single value of a marriage. Bell. See Duplex Valor Maritagi.

DOUBLE BOND. In Scotch law. A bond with a penalty, as distinguished from a single bond. 2 Kames, Eq. 339.

DOUBLE COMPLAINT, DOUBLE QUARREL, or DUPLEX QUERELA. A grievance made known by a clerk or other person, to the archbishop of the province, against the ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical, as to give sentence, institute a clerk, etc. It is termed a "double complaint," because it is most commonly made against both the judge and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed; the effect whereof is that the archbishop, taking notice of the delay, directs his letters, under his authentic seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the ordinary, within a certain number of days, to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there allege the cause of his delay; and to signify to the ordinary that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear nor show cause against it, he himself, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. Cowell.

DOUBLE COSTS. See Costs.

DOUBLE DAMAGES. See Damages.

DOUBLE EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States of the value of twenty dollars.

DOUBLE ENTRY. A system of mercantile book-keeping, in which the entries in the daybook, etc., are posted twice into the ledger. First, to a personal account, that is, to the account of the person with whom the dealing to which any given entry refers has taken place; secondly, to an impersonal account, as “goods.” Mozley & Whitley.

DOUBLE FINE. In old English law. A fine sur done grant et render was called a “double fine,” because it comprehended the fine sur cognizance de droit come eco, etc., and the fine sur concedit. 2 Bl. Comm. 333.

DOUBLE GLAZING. That by which two panes of glass are set in each section of the window sash instead of one. Johnson v. Olsen, 134 Minn. 53, 168 N. W. 803, 806.

DOUBLE INSURANCE. Double insurance is where divers insurances are made upon the same interest in the same subject against the same risks in favor of the same assured, in proportions exceeding the value. 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 359, 360. A double insurance exists where the same person is insured by several insurers separately and interest to the same subject and interest. Civ. Code Cal. § 2641; Wells v. Insurance Co., 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 107; Insurance Co. v. Gwathmey, 82 Va. 923, 1 S. E. 269; Perkins v. Insurance Co., 12 Mass. 218; Lowell Mfg. Co. v. Safeguard F. Ins. Co., 88 N. Y. 597; Iuchs v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford (Mo. App.) 290 S. W. 456, 458.

DOUBLE PATENTING. The test respecting “double patenting” is whether the claims of both patents, when properly construed in the light of the descriptions given, define essentially the same things. Waterbury Buckle Co. v. G. E. Prentice Mfg. Co. (D. C.) 294 F. 930, 937.

DOUBLE PLEA, DOUBLE PLEADING. See Duplicity; Plea; Pleading.

DOUBLE POSSIBILITY. A possibility upon a possibility. 2 Bl. Comm. 179.

DOUBLE RECOVERY. Recovery which represents more than the total maximum loss which all parties have sustained. Hindmarsh v. Sulpho Saline Bath Co., 108 Neb. 168, 187 N. W. 806, 808.

DOUBLE RENT. In English law. Rent payable by a tenant who continues in possession after the time for which he has given notice to quit, until the time of his quitting possession. St. 11 Geo. II. c. 10.

DOUBLE TAXATION. The taxing of the same item or piece of property twice to the same person, or taxing it as the property of one person and again as the property of another; but this does not include the imposition of different taxes concurrently on the same property (e. g., a city tax and a school tax), nor the taxation of the same piece of property to different persons when they hold different interests in it or when it represents different values in their hands, as when both the mortgagor and mortgagee of property are taxed in respect to their interests in it, or when a tax is laid upon the capital or property of a corporation and also upon the value of its shares of stock in the hands of the separate stockholders. Cook v. Burlington, 59 Iowa, 251, 13 N. W. 113, 44 Am. Rep. 679; Cheshire County Tel. Co. v. State, 63 N. H. 167; Detroit Common Council v. Detroit Assessors, 91 Mich. 78, 51 N. W. 787, 16 L. R. A. 59; Commonwealth v. Harrisburg Light & Power Co., 254 Pa. 175, 130 A. 412, 413; Hope Natural Gas Co. v. Hall, 102 W. Va. 272, 135 S. E. 582, 584; State v. Ingalls, 18 N. M. 211, 153 P. 1177, 1180. “Double taxation” means taxing twice for the same purpose in the same year some of the property in the territory in which the tax is laid without taxing all of it; for, if all the property in the territory is taxed twice for the same purpose and in the same year without discrimination or exemption, double taxation does not result in the sense in which such taxation is prohibited, as it is uniform in the amount being within the discretion of the taxing authorities. Campbell County v. City of Newport, 174 Ky. 712, 198 S. W. 1, 5, L. R. A. 1917D, 791.

DOUBLE USE. In patent law. An application of a principle or process, previously known and applied, to some new use, but which does not lead to a new result or the production of a new article. De Lamar v. De Lamar Mfg. Co. (C. C.) 110 F. 542; In re Blandy, 3 Fed. Cas. 671; Weir Frog Co. v. Porter (C. C. A.) 206 F. 670, 671.

DOUBLE VALUE. In English law. This is a penalty on a tenant holding over after his landlord's notice to quit. By 4 Geo. II. c. 29, § 1, it is enacted that if any tenant for life or years hold over any lands, etc., after the determination of his estate, after demand made, and notice in writing given, for delivering the possession thereof, by the landlord, or the person having the reversion or remainder therein, or his agent thereunto lawfully authorized, such tenant so holding over shall pay to the person so kept out of possession at the rate of double the yearly value of the lands, etc., so detained, for so long a time as the DOUBLE VOUCHER. This was when a common recovery was had, and an estate of freehold was first conveyed to any indifferent person against whom the præcipue was brought, and then he vouched the tenant in tall, who vouched over the common vouchee. For, if a recovery were had immediately against a tenant in tall, it barred only the estate in the premises of which he was then actually seised, whereas, if the recovery were had against another person, and the tenant in tall were vouchee, it barred every latent right and interest which he might have in the lands recovered. 2 Bl. Comm. 359.

DOUBLE WASTE. When a tenant bound to repair suffers a house to be wasted, and then unlawfully sells timber to repair it, he is said to commit double waste. Co. Litt. 53.

DOUBLE WILL. A will in which two persons join, each leaving his property and estate to the other, so that the survivor takes the whole. Evans v. Smith, 28 Ga. 98, 73 Am. Dec. 731.

DOUBT, n. Uncertainty of mind; the absence of a settled opinion or conviction; the attitude of mind towards the acceptance of or belief in a proposition, theory, or statement, in which the judgment is not at rest but inclines alternately to either side. Rowe v. Baber, 83 Ala. 422, 8 So. 865; Smith v. Railway Co., 143 Mo. 33, 44 S. W. 718; West Jersey Traction Co. v. Camden Horse R. Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 452, 29 A. 333. An equipoise of the mind arising from an equality of contrary reasons. Ayliffe, Pand. 121.

Reasonable Doubt

This is a term often used, probably pretty well understood, but not easily defined. It does not mean a mere possible doubt, because everything relating to human affairs, and depending on moral evidence, is open to some possible or imaginary doubt. It is that state of the case which, after the entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge. The burden of proof is upon the prosecutor. All the presumptions of law independent of evidence are in favor of innocence; and every person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty. If upon such proof there is reasonable doubt remaining, the accused is entitled to the benefit of it by an acquittal; for it is not sufficient to establish a probability, though a strong one, arising from the doctrine of chances, that the fact charged is more likely to be true than the contrary, but the evidence must establish the truth of the fact to a reasonable and moral certainty,—a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. This is proof beyond reasonable doubt; because if the law, which mostly depends upon considerations of a moral nature, should go further than this, and require absolute certainty, it would exclude circumstantial evidence altogether. Per Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Dell'Aira v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 102, 106; Berkowitz v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 5 F.(2d) 967; Egan v. U. S., 52 App. D. C. 384, 287 F. 958, 967; Moore v. State, 175 Ark. 391, 299 S. W. 386, 387; People v. Tielke, 259 Ill. 88, 102 N. E. 229, 232; State v. Fisher, 95 N. J. Law, 419, 113 A. 607, 609. And see further, Tompkins v. Butterfield (C. C.) 25 F. 558; State v. Zdanowicz, 69 N. J. Law, 619, 55 A. 743; U. S. v. Youseey (C. C.) 91 F. 685; State v. May, 172 Mo. 330, 72 S. W. 918; Com. v. Childs, 2 Pittsb. R. (Pa.) 400; State v. Hennessy, 55 Iowa, 399, 7 N. W. 611; Harris v. State, 155 Ind. 265, 58 N. E. 76; Knight v. State, 74 Miss. 140, 20 So. 890; Carleton v. State, 43 Neb. 373, 61 N. W. 698; State v. Reed, 62 Me. 129; State v. Ching Ling, 16 Or. 419, 18 P. 844; Stout v. State, 90 Ind. 1; Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 505; Allen v. State, 111 Ala. 80, 20 So. 494; State v. Rover, 11 Nev. 314; Jones v. State, 120 Ala. 303, 25 So. 204; Siberry v. State, 133 Ind. 677, 33 N. E. 651; Purkey v. State, 3 Helsk. (Tenn.) 28; U. S. v. Post (D. C.) 128 F. 957; U. S. v. Breese (D. C.) 131 F. 917.

Proof "beyond a reasonable doubt" is not beyond all possible or imaginary doubt, but such proof as precludes every reasonable hypothesis except that which it tends to support. It is proof "to a moral certainty,"—such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men, and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible. Com. v. Costley, 115 Mass. 24; State v. Cassil, 71 Mont. 274, 229 P. 718, 729; Varner v. State, 27 Ga. App. 291, 108 S. E. 80; State v. Norman, 103 Ohio St. 541, 134 N. E. 474, 475; State v. Koski, 100 W. Va. 98, 130 S. E. 100, 101.

The difficulty of a satisfactory definition is discussed in 57 Am. L. Reg. 418, where C. J. Shaw's definition is criticized and that in Com. v. Costley, 115 Mass. 1, supra, is suggested as better. And in Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 S. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708, it was approved as contrasted with C. J. Shaw's definition.

A "reasonable doubt" is such a doubt as would cause a reasonable and prudent man in the graver and more important affairs of life to pause and hesitate to act upon the truth of the matter charged. But a reasonable doubt is not a mere possibility of innocence, nor a caprice, shadow, or speculation as to innocence not arising out of the evidence or the want of it. State v. Perkins, 21 N. M. 135, 153 P. 258, 259; U. S. v. McHigh (D. C.) 253 F. 224, 231.

DOUBTFUL TITLE. One as to the validity of which there exists some doubt, either as to matter of fact or of law; one which invites or exposes the party holding it to litigation. Beeler v. Sims, 93 Kan. 213, 144 P. 237, 239; Black v. American International Corporation, 264 Pa. 260, 107 A. 737, 739. Distinguished from a "marketable" title, which is of such a character that the courts will compel its acceptance by a purchaser who has agreed to buy the property or has bid it in at public sale. Herman v. Somers, 158 Pa. 424, 27 A. 1050, 38 Am. St. Rep. 851.

DOUN. L. Fr. A gift. Otherwise written "don" and "done." The thirty-fourth chapter of Britton is entitled "De Dona."

DOVE. Doves are animals ferre natura, and not the subject of larceny unless they are in the owner's custody; as, for example, in a dove-house, or when in the nest before they can fly. Com. v. Chace, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 15, 19 Am. Dec. 348; Buckman v. Outwater, 28 N. J. Law, 581.

DOWABLE. Subject to be charged with dower; as dowerable lands. Entitled or entitled to dower. Thus, a dowerable interest in lands is such as entitles the owner to have such lands charged with dower.

DOWAGER. A widow who is endowed, or who has a jointure in lieu of dower. In England, this is a title or addition given to the widows of prices, dukes, earls, and other noblemen, to distinguish them from the wives of the heirs, who have right to bear the tit-can law, consisting of a life interest in one-third of the lands of which the husband was seised in fee at any time during the coverture. Litt. § 36; 2 Bl. Comm. 152; 2 Steph. Comm. 302; 4 Kent. Comm. 35.

DOWER BY CUSTOM. A kind of dower in England, regulated by custom, where the quantity allowed the wife differed from the proportion of the common law; as that the wife should have half the husband's lands; or, in some places, the whole; and, in some, only a quarter. 2 Bl. Comm. 132; Litt. § 37.

DOWER DE LA PLUS BELLE (DE LA PLUS BEALE). L. Fr. Dower of the fairest [part.] A species of ancient English dower, incident to the old tenures, where there was a guardian in chivalry, and the wife occupied lands of the heir as a guardian in socage. If the wife brought a writ of dower against such guardian in chivalry, he might show this matter, and pray that the wife might be endowed de la plus belle of the tenement in socage. Litt. § 48. This kind of dower was abolished with the military tenures. 2 Bl. Comm. 132.

DOWER EX ASSSENSU PATRIS. Dower by the father's assent. A species of dower ad ostium ecclesia, made when the husband's father was alive, and the son, by his consent expressly given, endowed his wife with parcel of his father's lands. Litt. § 40; 2 Bl. Comm. 133; Grogan v. Garrison, 27 Ohio St. 61.

DOWER UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of right which lay for a widow to whom no dower had been assigned.

DOWLE STONES. Stones dividing lands, etc. Cowell.

DOWMENT. In old English law. Endowment; dower. Grogan v. Garrison, 27 Ohio St. 61.

DOWRESS. A woman entitled to dower; a tenant in dower. 2 P. Wms. 707.

DOWRY. The property which a woman brings to her husband in marriage; now more commonly called a "portion."

This word expresses the proper meaning of the "dote" of the Roman, the "dot" of the French, and the "dote" of the Spanish, law, but is a very different thing from "dower," with which it has sometimes been confounded. See Co. Litt. 31; Dig. 23, 3, 76; Code 5, 12, 20; Buard v. De Russy, 6 Rob. (La.) 111; Gates v. Legendre, 10 Rob. (La.) 74; Cutter v. Waddington, 22 Mo. 524.

By dowry, in the Louisiana Civil Code (see article 2337), is meant the effects which the wife brings to the husband to support the expenses of marriage. It is given to the husband, to be enjoyed by him so long as the marriage shall last, and the income of it belongs to him. He alone has the administration of it during marriage, and his wife cannot deprive him of it. The real estate settled as dowry is inalienable during marriage, unless the marriage contract contains a stipulation to the contrary. De Young v. De Young, 6 La. Ann. 786.

DOYLE RULE. A formula for computing the board measure from the dimensions of a log. Peter v. Owl Bayou Cypress Co., 137 La. 1067, 69 So. 549, 541. The rule is to deduct four inches from the diameter of the log, as an allowance for slabs, square one-quarter of the remainder, and multiply the result by the length of the log in feet. Morrison v. Pickrell Walnut Co., 199 Ill. App. 175, 176.

DOZEIN. L. Fr. Twelve; a person twelve years of age. St. 18 Edw. II.; Barring. Ob. St. 208.

DOZEN PEERS. Twelve peers assembled at the instance of the barons, in the reign of Henry III., to be privy counselors, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

DR. An abbreviation for "doctor;" also, in commercial usage, for "debtor," indicating the items or particulars in a bill or in an account-book chargeable against the person to whom the bill is rendered or in whose name the account stands, as opposed to "Cr." ("credit" or "creditor"), which indicates the items for which he is given credit. Jaqua v. Shewalter, 10 Ind. App. 234, 37 N. E. 1072.

DRACHMA. A term employed in old pleadings and records, to denote a great. Townsh. Pl. 180.

An Athenian silver coin, of the value of about fifteen cents.

DRAKO REGIS. The standard, ensign, or military colors borne in war by the ancient kings of England, having the figure of a dragon painted thereon.

DRACONIAN LAWS. A code of laws prepared by Draco, the celebrated lawgiver of Athens. These laws were exceedingly severe, and the term is now sometimes applied to any laws of unusual harshness.

An order for the payment of money drawn by one person on another. It is said to be a "nomen generalesinum," and to include all such orders. Wildes v. Savage, 1 Story, 30; 20 Fed. Cas. 1228; State v. Warner, 60 Kan. 94, 55 P. 342; Cunningham v. State, 115 Ark. 392, 171 S. W. 885.

The term includes a cashier's check (People v. Miller, 275 Ill. 490, 116 N. E. 121, 129; L. R. A. 1917E,
A tentative, provisional, or preparatory writing out of any document (as a will, contract, lease, etc.) for purposes of discussion and correction, which is afterwards to be copied out in its final shape.

DRAFTSMAN. Any one who draws or frames a legal document, e. g., a will, conveyance, pleading, etc.

In the marine engineering profession, any of various men who design the several parts of vessels and other machinery in the different departments. Ex parte Aird (D. C.) 273 F. 954, 956.

DRAG. In a technical sense, the lower part of the mold for casting iron pipe. Casey-Hedges Co. v. Gates, 139 Tenn. 282, 201 S. W. 760, 761.

DRAGO DOCTRINE. The principle asserted by Luis Drago, Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, in a letter to the Argentine Minister at Washington, December 29, 1902, that the forcible intervention of states to secure the payment of public debts due to their citizens from foreign states is unjustifiable and dangerous to the security and peace of the nations of South America. The subject was brought before the Conference by the United States and a Convention was adopted in which the conflicting powers agreed, with some restrictive conditions, not to have recourse to armed force for the recovery of contract debts claimed by their nationals against a foreign state. Higgins, 184-197. See Calvo Doctrine.

DRAGOMAN. An interpreter employed in the east, and particularly at the Turkish court.

DRAIN. n. To conduct water from one place to another, for the purpose of drying the former. To make dry; to draw off water; to rid land of its superfluous moisture by adapting or improving natural water courses and supplementing them, when necessary, by artificial ditches. People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 639.

To "drain," in its larger sense, includes not only the supplying of outlets and channels to relieve the land from water, but also the provision of ditches, drains, and embankments to prevent water from accumulating. Holt v. State (Tex. Civ. App.) 176 S. W. 743, 746; In re Mississippi and Fox River Drainage Dist., 270 Mo. 167, 182 S. W. 727, 731; Pioneer Real Estate Co. v. City of Portland, 119 Or. 1, 247 P. 319, 323.

DRAINAGE. A trench or ditch to convey water from wet land; a channel through which water may flow off.

The word has no technical legal meaning. Any hollow space in the ground, natural or artificial, where water is collected and passes off, is a ditch or drain. Goldthwait v. East Bridgewater, 5 Gray (Mass.) 61, 64; Murphy v. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co., 206 Mo. App. 692, 226 S. W. 637, 649; Sheeran v. Battle, 154 N. C. 345, 70 S. E. 384, 386; People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 639.

The term may be synonymous with "water course." Green v. County Com'r of Harbine, 74 Ohio St. 318, 78 N. E. 323, 327; Elder v. Smith, 103 Ohio St. 590, 132 N. E. 724, 727.

"Sewers" differ from "drains" only in that the former are in cities, and generally covered over, while the latter are in rural communities, and open. Pioneer Real Estate Co. v. City of Portland, 119 Or. 1, 247 P. 319, 327; Barton v. Drainage Dist. No. 50, 174 Ark. 173, 224 S. W. 418, 419. But "drains" may sometimes include sewers. City of Charleston, 170 Ill. 336, 48 N. E. 985, 988. See, generally, Mound City Land & Stock Co. v. Miller, 170 Mo. 249, 70 S. W. 721, 722, 6 L. R. A. 190, 84 Am. St. Rep. 277; Wetmore v. Fluske, 23 R. L. 354, 5 A. 375, 378.

Also, sometimes, the easement or servitude (acquired by grant or prescription) which consists in the right to drain water through another's land. See 3 Kent Comm. 436; 7 M. & G. 354.

DRAINAGE DISTRICT. A political subdivision of the state, created for the purpose of draining and reclaiming wet and overflowed land, as well as to preserve the public health and convenience. Tallahatchie Drainage Dist. No. 1 v. Yocona-Tallahatchie Drainage Dist. No. 1, 148 Miss. 182, 114 So. 264, 266. See Drain, n.

DRAM. In common parlance, a drink of some substance containing alcohol; something which can produce intoxication. Lacy v. State, 32 Tex. 228. See Wright v. People, 101 Ill. 134.

DRAM-SHOP. A drinking saloon, where liquors are sold to be drunk on the premises. Wright v. People, 101 Ill. 129; Brockway v. State, 36 Ark. 636; Com. v. Marzynski, 21 N. E. 228, 149 Mass. 68. A place where spirituous liquors are sold by the dram or the drink; a barroom. Wolfe v. State, 107 Ark. 33, 153 S. W. 1102, 1103; McCormick v. Brennan, 224 Ill. App. 251, 254.

DRAMA. A term descriptive of any representation in which a story is told, a moral conveyed, or the passions portrayed, whether by words and actions combined, or by mere actions alone. ASA G. Candler, Inc. v. Georgia Theater Co., 148 Ga. 186, 96 S. E. 226, 227.
DRAMATIC COMPOSITION

DRAMATIC COMPOSITION. In copyright law. A literary work setting forth a story, incident, or scene from life, in which, however, the narrative is not related, but is represented by a dialogue and action; may include a descriptive poem set to music, or a pantomine, but not a composition for musical instruments alone, nor a mere spectacular exhibition or stage dance. Daly v. Palmer, 6 Fed. Cas. 1132; Carre v. Duff (C. C.) 25 Fed. 183; Tompkins v. Halleck, 133 Mass. 35, 43 Am. Rep. 480; Russell v. Smith, 12 Adol. & El. 236; Martinetti v. McGuire, 16 Fed. Cas. 520; Fuller v. Bemis (C. C.) 50 Fed. 526.

DRAW, n. A movable section of a bridge, which may be raised up or turned to one side, so as to admit the passage of vessels. Gilder-sleeve v. Railroad Co. (D. C.) 52 Fed. 766; Hughes v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 114; Railroad Co. v. Daniels, 90 Ga. 608, 17 S. E. 647.

A depression in the surface of the earth, in the nature of a shallow ravine or gully, sometimes many miles in length, forming a channel for the escape of rain and melting snow draining into it from either side. Railroad Co. v. Sutherland, 44 Neb. 526, 62 N. W. 559.

The word "draw" does not mean a stream of running water with well-defined banks, as distinguished from the flow of surface water. Cartwright v. Warren (Tex. Civ. App.) 177 S. W. 157, 250.

DRAW, v.

In Old Criminal Practice

To drag (on a hurdle) to the place of execution. Anciently no hurdle was allowed, but the criminal was actually dragged along the road to the place of execution. A part of the ancient punishment of traitors was to be thus drawn. 4 Bl. Comm. 32, 377.

In Criminal Law

To draw a firearm or deadly weapon is to point it intentionally. State v. Boyles, 24 N. M. 464, 174 P. 423. To draw a head on; to bring into line with the bead or bore sight of a rifle and the back sight; to aim at. Hailfield v. Commonwealth, 200 Ky. 248, 254 S. W. 748, 749.

In Mercantile Law

To draw a bill of exchange is to write (or cause it to be written) and sign it; to make, as a note. Knox v. Rivers Bros., 17 Ala. App. 630, 88 So. 33, 34.

In Pleading, Conveyancing, Etc.

To prepare a draft; to compose and write out in due form, as, a deed, complaint, petition, memorial, etc. Winnebago County State Bank v. Hustel, 119 Iowa, 115, 93 N. W. 70; Hawkins v. State, 28 Fla. 363, 9 So. 652.

In Practice

To draw a jury is to select the persons who are to compose it, either by taking their names successively, but at hazard, from the jury box, or by summoning them individually to attend the court. Smith v. State, 136 Ala. 1, 34 So. 168; State v. Superior Court of Whatcom County, 82 Wash. 254, 144 P. 32, 33.

In Fiscal Law and Administration

To take out money from a bank, treasury, or other depository in the exercise of a lawful right and in a lawful manner. "No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Const. U. S. art. 1, § 9. But to "draw a warrant" is not to draw the money; it is to make or execute the instrument which authorizes the drawing of the money. Brown v. Fleischner, 4 Or. 149.

DRAWBACK. In the customs laws, an allowance made by the government upon the duties due on imported merchandise when the importer, instead of selling it here, re-exports it; or the refunding of such duties if already paid. This allowance amounts, in some cases, to the whole of the original duties; in others, to a part only. See 19 USCA §§ 152-152b.

A drawback is a device resorted to for enabling a commodity affected by taxes to be exported and sold in the foreign market on the same terms as if it had not been taxed at all. It differs from this bounty, that the latter enables a commodity to be sold for less than its natural cost, whereas a drawback enables it to be sold exactly at its natural cost. Downs v. U. S., 112 F. 144, 21 C. C. A. 109.

DRAWEE. A person to whom a bill of exchange is addressed, and who is requested to pay the amount of money therein mentioned.

DRAwer. The person drawing a bill of exchange and addressing it to the drawee. Stevenson v. Walton, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 265; Winnebago County State Bank v. Hustel, 119 Iowa, 115, 93 N. W. 70.

DRAWING. In patent law. A representation of the appearance of material objects by means of lines and marks upon paper, cardboard, or other substance. Ampt v. Cincinnati, 8 Ohio Dec. 628; 35 USCA § 34.

DRAWLATCHES. Thieves; robbers. Cowell.

DRAYAGE. A charge for the transportation of property in wheeled vehicles, such as drays, wagons, and carts. Soule v. San Francisco Gaslight Co., 54 Cal. 242.

DREDGE. Formerly applied to a net or drag for taking oysters; now a machine for cleansing canals and rivers. To "dredge" is to gather or take with a dredge, to remove sand, mud, and filth from the beds of rivers, harbors, and canals, with a dredging machine. 15 Can. L. T. 268.
DREIT—DREIT. Droit-droit. (Also written without the hyphen.) Double right. A union of the right of possession and the right of property. 2 Bl. Comm. 189.

DRENCHES, or DRENGES. In Saxon law. Tenants in capite. They are said to be such as, at the coming of William the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, were afterwards restored to them, on making it appear that they were the true owners thereof, and neither in auxilio or consilio against him. Spelman.

DRENGAGE. The tenure by which the drenches, or drenges, held their lands. A variety of feudal tenure by servicem (q. v.), often occurring in the northern counties of England, involving a kind of general service. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. In Eleventh Cent. 62. Little is known of it; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 122.

DRIER. In the paper-making trade, a hot drum. Tompkins-Hawley-Fuller Co. v. Holden (C. C. A.) 273 F. 424, 430.

DRIFT. In Mining Law
An underground passage driven horizontally along the course of a mineralized vein or approximately so. Distinguished from "shaft," which is an opening made at the surface and extending downward into the earth vertically, or nearly so, upon the vein or intended to reach it; and from "tunnel," which is a lateral or horizontal passage underground intended, to reach the vein or mineral deposit, where drifting may begin. Jurgenson v. Diller, 114 Cal. 491, 46 P. 610, 55 Am. St. Rep. 83.

In Old English Law
A driving, especially of cattle.

DRIFT NET. A net with both ends free to drift with the current;—distinguished from a "set net," which is one fastened at one or both ends, so the whole net cannot drift with the current. State v. Blanchard, 96 Or. 79, 189 P. 421, 427.

DRIFT-STUFF. This term signifies, not goods which are the subject of salvage, but matters floating at random, without any known or discoverable ownership, which, if cast ashore, will probably never be reclaim ed, but will, as a matter of course, accure to the riparian proprietor. Watson v. Knowles, 13 R. I. 641.

DRIFTS OF THE FOREST. A view or examination of what cattle are in a forest, chace, etc., that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are, and whether they are commonable. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest, when all cattle are driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the before-mentioned purposes, and also to discover whether any cattle of strangers be there, which ought not to be common. Manwood, p. 2, c. 15.

DRIFTLAND, DROFLAND, or DRYFLAND. A Saxon word, signifying a tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowell.

DRIFTWAY. A road or way over which cattle are driven. 1 Taunt. 279; Selw. N. P. 1037; Woolr. Ways 1; 2 Hilliard, Abr. Prop. 33; Smith v. Ladd, 41 Me. 314.

DRILLING IN. Drilling, as an oil well, after the casing has been set. Smith & Hayslip v. Wilcox Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 253 S. W. 641, 642.

DRINCLEAN. Sax. A contribution of tenants, in the time of the Saxons, towards a potation, or ale, provided to entertain the lord, or his steward. Cowell. See Cervisari.

DRINKING MAN. One who takes a drink of liquor when he chooses, even though it may be so infrequent as to produce no harmful effect on his health. Tynepker v. Sovereign Camp, W. O. W. (Mo. App.) 226 S. W. 1002, 1003.

DRINKING-SHOP. A place where intoxicating liquors are sold, bartered, or delivered to be drunk on the premises. Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. 221.

DRIP. A species of easement or servitude obligating one man to permit the water falling from another man's house to fall upon his own land. 3 Kent, Comm. 436; 1 Rolle, Abr. 107; Dig. 48, 43, 4, 6; 11 Ad. & E. 40.

DRIVE-IT-YOURSELF CARS. A term used to describe automobiles which their owners, as a regular business, rent out for hire without furnishing drivers. City of Rockford v. Nolan, 316 Ill. 60, 146 N. E. 564. See, also, Welch v. Hartnett, 127 Misc. 221, 215 N. Y. S. 540; White v. Holmes, 89 Fla. 251, 103 So. 623; Blashfield's Cyclopedia of Automobile Law, p. 2502.

DRIVER. One employed in conducting or operating a couch, carriage, wagon, or other vehicle, with horses, mules, or other animals, or a bicycle, tricycle, or motor car, though not a street railroad car. See Davis v. Petrovich, 112 Ala. 654, 21 So. 344, 36 L. R. A. 615; Isaacs v. Railroad Co., 7 Am. Rep. 418, 47 N. Y. 122.

DROFDEN, or DROFDENE. A grove or woody place where cattle are kept. Jacob.

DROFLAND. Sax. A quit rent, or yearly payment, formerly made by some tenants to the king, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowell; Blount.

DROIT. In French Law

Right, justice, equity, law, the whole body of law; also a right. Touliver, n. 96; Pothier, Droit.

This term exhibits the same ambiguity which is discoverable in the German equivalent, "recht," and the English word "right." On the one hand, these terms answer to the Roman "ius," and thus indicate law in the abstract, considered as the foundation of all rights, or the complex of underlying moral principles which impart the character of justice to all positive law, or give it an ethical content. In this abstract sense, the terms may be adjectives, in which case they are equivalent to "just," or "right," in nouns, in which case they may be paraphrased by the expressions "justice," "morality," or "equity." On the other hand, they serve to point out a right; that is, a power, privilege, faculty, or demand, inherent in one person, and incident upon another. In the latter sense, droit (or recht or right) is the corollary of "duy" or "obligation." In the former sense, it may be considered as opposed to wrong, injustice, or the absence of law. Droit has the further ambiguity that it is sometimes used to denote the existing body of law considered as one whole, or the sum total of a number of individual laws taken together. See Jus; Recht; Right.

Droits civils. This phrase in French law denotes private rights, the exercise of which is independent of the status (qualite) of citizen. Foreigners enjoy them; and the extent of that enjoyment is determined by the principle of reciprocity. Conversely, foreigners may be sued on contracts made by them in France. Brown.

Droit coutumier. Common law.

Droit d'accession. That property which is acquired by making a new species out of the material of another. It is equivalent to the Roman "specification." This subject is treated of in the Code Civil de Napoleon, art. 585, 577; Merlin, Rappart. Accession; Malleville's Discussion, art. 565.

Droit d'accroissement. The right which an heir or legatee has of combining with his own interest in a succession the interest of a co-heir or colegatee who either refuses to or cannot accept his interest. Houghton v. Brantingham, 86 Conn. 530, 56 A. 664, 667.

Droit d'abaisse. A rule by which all the property of a deceased foreigner, whether movable or immovable, was confiscated to the use of the state, to the exclusion of his heirs, whether claiming ab intestato or under a will of the deceased. Finally abolished in 1819. Opel v. Shoup, 100 Iowa, 407, 69 N. W. 560, 37 L. R. A. 583.

Droit d'exécution. The right of a stockbroker to sell the securities bought by him for account of a client, if the latter does not accept delivery thereof. The same expression is also applied to the sale by a stockbroker of securities deposited with him by his client. In order to guarantee the payment of operations for which the latter has given instructions. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 557.

Droit de bris. A right formerly claimed by the lords of the coasts of certain parts of France, to shipwrecks, by which not only the property, but the persons of those who were cast away, were confiscated for the prince who was lord of the coast. Otherwise called "droit de bris sur le naufrage." This right prevailed chiefly in Bretagne, and was solemnly abrogated by Henry III, as duke of Normandy, Aquitaine, and Guienne, in a charter granted A. D. 1226, preserved among the rolls at Bordeaux.

Droit de dérivation. A tax upon the removal from one state or country to another of property acquired by succession or testamentary disposition; it does not cover a tax upon the succession to or transfer of property. In re Peterson's Estate, 168 Iowa, 531, 151 N. W. 66, 68; Moody v. Hagen, 162 N. W. 794, 708, 36 N. D. 471, L. R. A. 1918F, 947, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 933. Cf. Duties of Detraction.

Droit de garde. In French feudal law. Right of ward. The guardianship of the estate and person of a noble vassal, to which the king, during his minority, was entitled. Steph. Lect. 250.

Droit de gite. In French feudal law. The duty incumbent on a rotisseur, holding lands within the royal domain, of supplying board and lodging to the king and to his suite while on a royal progress. Steph. Lect. 351.

Droit de greffe. In old French law. The right of selling various offices connected with the custody of judicial records or notarial acts. Steph. Lect. 554. A privilege of the French kings.
—Droit de maîtrise. In old French law. A charge payable to the crown by any one who, after having served his apprenticeship in any commercial guild or brotherhood, sought to become a master workman in it on his own account. Steph. Lect. 354.

—Droit de naufrage. The right of a seigneur, who owns the seashore, or the king, when a vessel is wrecked, to take possession of the wreckage and to kill the crew or sell them as slaves. 14 Yale L. Jour. 129.

—Droit de prise. In French feudal law. The duty (incumbent on a roturier) of supplying to the king on credit, during a certain period, such articles of domestic consumption as might be required for the royal household. Steph. Lect. 351.

—Droit de quint. In French feudal law. A relief payable by a noble vassal to the king as his seigneur, on every change in the ownership of his fief. Steph. Lect. 350.

—Droit de suite. The right of a creditor to pursue the debtor's property into the hands of third persons for the enforcement of his claim.

—Droit international. International law.

—Droit maritime. Maritime law.

—Droit naturel. Fr. The law of nature.

Law; right; a writ of right. Co. Litt. 1588.

A person was said to have droit droit, pluraum juris, and pluraum possessionis, when he had the freehold, the fee, and the property in him. Crabbe, Hist. E. L. 406.

—Autre droit. The right of another.

—Droit-clos. An ancient writ, directed to the lord of ancient demesne on behalf of those of his tenants who held their lands and tenements by charter in fee-simple, in fee-tall, for life, or in dower. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 23.

—Droit commun. The common law. Litt. § 213; Co. Litt. 142a.

—Droit-droit. A double right; that is, the right of possession and the right of property. These two rights were, by the theory of our ancient law, distinct; and the above phrase was used to indicate the concurrence of both in one person, which concurrence was necessary to constitute a complete title to land. Mozley & Whitley.

—Droits de admiralty. Rights or perquisites of the admiralty. A term applied to goods found derelict at sea. Applied also to property captured in time of war by non-commissioned ves-DROITURAL. What belongs of right; relating to right; as real actions are either droitural or possessory,—droitural when the plaintiff seeks to recover the property. Finch, Law, 257.

DROMONES, DROMOS, DROMUNDA. These were at first high ships of great burden, but afterwards those which we now call "men-of-war." Jacob.

DROP. In English practice. When the members of a court are equally divided on the argument showing cause against a rule nisi, no order is made, t. c., the rule is neither discharged nor made absolute, and the rule is said to drop. In practice, there being a right to appeal, it has been usual to make an order in one way, the junior judge withdrawing his judgment. Wharton.

DROP-LETTER. A letter addressed for delivery in the same city or district in which it is posted.

DROP SHIPMENT DELIVERY. In mercantile usage, this phrase refers to ordinary freight unloaded from railroad cars,—distinguished from carload shipments, known as "track delivery shipments." Doshell v. Receivers of St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 206 Ala. 366, 76 So. 282, 284.

DROPPING GROUND. In the logging industry, a place on the bank of a stream to store sawlogs, railroad ties, staves, and the products of the forest, while waiting for a rise of the stream that will enable the owner to float his timbered products down the river to a market. Lexington & E. Ry. Co. v. Grigsby, 176 Ky. 727, 197 S. W. 408.

DROVE. A number of animals collected and driven together in a body; a flock or herd of cattle in process of being driven; indefinite as to number, but including at least several. Caldwell v. State, 2 Tex. App. 54; McConville v. Jersey City, 39 N. J. Law, 43.
DROVE-ROAD. In Scotch law. A road for driving cattle. 7 Bell, App. Cas. 43, 53, 57. A drift-road. Lord Brougham, Id.

DROVE-STANCE. In Scotch law. A place adjoining a drove-road, for resting and refreshing sheep and cattle on their journey. 7 Bell, App. Cas. 53, 57.

DROVER'S PASS. A free pass given by a railroad company, accepting a drove of cattle for transportation, to the drover who accompanies and cares for the cattle on the train. Railroad Co. v. Tanner, 100 Va. 379, 41 S. E. 721; Railway Co. v. Ivy, 71 Tex. 409, 9 S. W. 546, 1 L. R. A. 500, 16 Am. St. Rep. 758.

DROWN. To merge or sink. "In some cases a right of freehold shall drown in a chattel." Co. Litt. 206a, 321a.

DRU. A thicket of wood in a valley. Domesday.

DRUGGIST. A dealer in drugs; one whose business is to sell drugs and medicines. In strict usage, this term is to be distinguished from "apothecary." A druggist deals in the uncompounded medicinal substances; the business of an apothecary is to mix and compound them. But in America the two words are used interchangeably, as the same persons usually discharge both functions. State v. Holmes, 28 La. Ann. 707, 26 Am. Rep. 110; Halinlin v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 352; State v. Donaldson, 41 Minn. 74, 42 N. W. 781.

DRUNGARIUS. In old European law. The commander of a drungarius, or band of soldiers. Applied also to a naval commander. Spelman.

DRUNGUS. In old European law. A band of soldiers, (globus milium.) Spelman.

DRUNK. A person is "drunk", when he is so far under the influence of liquor that his passions are visibly excited or his judgment impaired, or when his brain is so far affected by potations of liquor that his intelligence, sense-perceptions, judgment, continuity of thought or of ideas, speech, and co-ordination of volition with muscular action (or some of these faculties or processes) are impaired or not under normal control. State v. Pierce, 65 Iowa, 85, 21 N. W. 195; Elkin v. Buschner (Pa.) 16 A. 102, 104; Sapp v. State, 116 Ga. 182, 42 S. E. 411; State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 So. 153, 17 L. R. A. 426; Lewis v. Jones, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 667; People v. Selladay, 22 Cal. App. 552, 135 P. 508; Columbia Life Ins. Co. v. Tousey, 152 Ky. 447, 153 S. W. 767, 770; Parker v. C. A. Smith Lumber & Mfg. Co., 70 Or. 41, 138 P. 1061, 1065; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Johnsson, 64 Okl. 222, 166 P. 1074, 1076; Bragg v. Commonwealth, 133 Va. 645, 112 S. E. 609; State v. Baughn, 162 Iowa, 308, 143 N. W. 1100, 1101, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912; Cope- land v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 213 Ala. 620, 105 So. 509, 510; State v. McDaniel, 115 Or. 187, 237 P. 375, 375; Scooggins v. State, 98 Tex. Cr. R. 548, 266 S. W. 513.

DRUNKARD. He is a drunkard whose habit it is to get drunk; whose brute life has become habitual. The terms "drunkard" and "habitual drunkard" mean the same thing. Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 80; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R. I. 705, 19 A. 142; Lewis v. State, 15 Ala. App. 31, 68 So. 752, 754.

A "common" drunkard is defined by statute in some states as a person who has been convicted of drunkenness (or proved to have been drunk) a certain number of times within a limited period. State v. Kelly, 12 R. I. 533; State v. Flynn, 16 R. I. 19, 11 A. 170. Elsewhere the word "common" in this connection is understood as being equivalent to "habitual," (State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 So. 133, 7 L. R. A. 436; Com. v. McNamara, 112 Mass. 258; State v. Ryan, 79 Wts. 735, 57 N. W. 823;) or perhaps as synonymous with "public," (Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray [Mass.] 80.)

DRUNKENNESS. In medical jurisprudence. The condition of a man whose mind is affected by the immediate use of intoxicating drinks; the state of one who is "drunk." Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 64 Okl. 222, 166 P. 1074, 1076. See Drunk.

DRY. adj. In the vernacular, this term means desiccated or free from moisture; but, in legal use, it signifies formal or nominal, without imposing any duty or responsibility, or unfruitful, without bringing any profit or advantage.

—Dry exchange. See Exchange.

—Dry mortgage. One which creates a lien on land for the payment of money, but does not impose any personal liability upon the mortgagor, collateral to or over and above the value of the premises. Frowenfeld v. Hastings, 134 Cal. 128, 66 P. 178.

—Dry-maltures. In Scotch law. Corn paid to the owner of a mill, whether the payers grind or not.

—Dry natural gas. Natural gas that does not contain an appreciable amount of readily condensable gasoline. When natural gas contains readily condensable gasoline it is called "wet natural gas." Mussellem v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 107 Okl. 185, 231 P. 526, 530.

—Dry rent. Rent seek; a rent reserved without a clause of distress.

—Dry trust. A passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust. Bradford v. Robinson, 7 Houst. (Del.) 29, 30 A. 670; Cornell v. Wulff, 148 Mo. 542, 50 S. W. 439, 45 L. R. A. 53.

—Dry weight. In tariff laws, this term does not mean the weight of an article after desiccation in a kiln, but its air-dry weight as understood in commerce. U. S. v. Perkins, 66 F. 50, 13 C. C. A. 324.

DRIY, s. Term used to designate a person who is opposed to allowing the sale of intoxicating liquors; a prohibitionist; in contradistinction to a "wet" or antiprohibitionist. State v. Shumaker, 300 Ind. 629, 157 N. E. 769, 778, 58 A. L. R. 954.

DUARCHY. A form of government where two reign jointly.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet. It is not lawful to have two wives at the same time. Inst. 1, 10, 6; 1 Bl. Comm. 436.

DUBITANS. Doubting. Dobbin, J., dubitans. 1 Show. 364.

DUBITANTE. Doubting. Is affixed to the name of a judge, in the reports, to signify that he doubted the decision rendered.

DUBITATUR. It is doubted. A word frequently used in the reports to indicate that a point is considered doubtful.

DUCAT. A foreign coin, varying in value in different countries, but usually worth about $2.26 of our money.

DUCATUS. In feudal and old English law. A duchy, the dignity or territory of a duke.

DUCES TECUM. (Lat. Bring with you.) The name of certain species of wilds, of which the subprena ducis tecum is the most usual.

BL. LAW DICT.(3D ED.)—40

requiring a party who is summoned to appear in court to bring with him some document, piece of evidence, or other thing to be used or inspected by the court.

DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS. (Bring with you, although sick.) In practice. An ancient writ, now obsolete, directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he could not bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus, (so sick;) whereupon on the court granted a habeas corpus in the nature of a ducet tecum licet languidus. Cowell; Blount.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER. Those lands which formerly belonged to the dukes of Lancaster, and now belong to the crown in right of the duchy. The duchy is distinct from the county palatine of Lancaster, and includes not only the county, but also much territory at a distance from it, especially the Savoy in London and some land near Westminster. 3 Bl. Comm. 78.

DUCHY COURT OF LANCASTER. A tribunal of special jurisdiction, held before the chancellor of the duchy, or his deputy, concerning all matters of equity relating to lands holden of the crown in right of the duchy of Lancaster; which is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, (which has also its separate chancery, for sealing of writs, and the like,) and comprises much territory which lies at a vast distance from it; as particularly a very large district surrounded by the city of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as were those on the equity side of the court of chancery, so that it seems not to be a court of record; and, indeed, it has been holden that the court of chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with the duchy court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. The appeal from this court lies to the court of appeal. Jud. Act 1873, § 18; 3 Bl. Comm. 78.

DUCKING-STOOL. See Castigatory.

DUCROIRE. In French law., Guaranty; equivalent to del credere, (which see.)

DUE. Just; proper; regular; lawful; sufficient; reasonable; as in the phrases "due care," "due process of law," "due notice."

Owing; payable; justly owed. That which one contracts to pay or perform to another; that which law or justice requires to be paid or done.

Owed, or owing, as distinguished from payable. A debt is often said to be due from a person where he is the party owing it, or primarily bound to pay, whether the time for payment has or has not arrived. The same thing is true of the phrase "due and owing." Lobson v. Young, 99 N. J. Law, 28, 122 A. 618, 619; Ahrens-Rich Auto Co. v. Beck & Corinth Iron Co., 212 Ala. 530, 103 So. 556, 557; In re Duncan Const. Co. (D. C.) 280 F. 205, 207;

Payable. A bill or note is commonly said to be due when the time for payment of it has arrived.

The word "due" always imports a fixed and settled obligation or liability, but with reference to the time for its payment there is considerable ambiguity in the use of the term, as will appear from the foregoing definitions, the precise significance being determined in each case from the context. It may mean that the debt or claim in question is now (presently or immediately) matured and enforceable, or that it matured at some time in the past and yet remains unsatisfied, or that it is fixed and certain but the day appointed for its payment has not yet arrived. But commonly, and in the absence of any qualifying expressions, the word "due" is restricted to the first of these meanings, the second being expressed by the term "overdue," and the third by the word "payable." See Feerer v. Feerer, 82 Md. 716, 50 A. 406; Ames v. Ames, 128 Mass. 277; Van Hook v. Walton, 25 Tex. 75; Leggett v. Bank, 26 W. Va. 398; Scudder v. Scudder, 10 N. J. L. 126; Barnum v. Ames, 45 App. Div. 814, 61 N. Y. S. 85; Yocum v. Allen, 58 Ohio St. 289, 59 N. E. 900; Gies v. Boetcher, 12 Minn. 281, (Gill. 185); Mars timer v. Ward, 52 W. Va. 74, 42 S. E. 173.

―Due care. Just, proper, and sufficient care, so far as the circumstances demand it; the absence of negligence. That care which an ordinarily prudent person would have exercised under the circumstances. Dulim v. Henderson-Gilmer Co., 192 N. C. 628, 135 S. E. 614, 615, 49 A. L. R. 633; Kingan & Co. v. Gleason, 55 Ind. App. 684, 101 N. E. 1027, 1029; Tibbels v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. (Mo. App.) 219 S. W. 109, 114; Dahl v. Valley Dredging Co., 125 Minn. 90, 145 N. W. 796, 796, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1173; Shaw v. Bolton, 122 Me. 232, 119 A. 801, 802; County Com'r of Kent County v. Pardue, 151 Md. 68, 134 A. 33, 36; Eargle v. Sumter Lighting Co., 110 S. C. 560, 96 S. E. 909, 911. "Due care" is care proportioned to any given situation, its surroundings, peculiarities, and hazards. It may and often does require extraordinary care. Towel v. Camp, 103 Conn. 41, 130 A. 86, 89. "Due care," "reasonable care," and "ordinary care" are convertible terms. Wiley v. Rutland R. Co., 86 Vt. 504, 86 A. 806, 811; Union Traction Co. of Indiana v. Berry, 188 Ind. 514, 212 N. E. 655, 657, 32 A. L. R. 1171. This term, as usually understood in cases where the gist of the action is the defendant's negligence, implies not only that a party has not been negligent or careless, but that he has been guilty of no violation of law in relation to the subject-matter or transaction which constitutes the cause of action. Evidence that a party is guilty of a violation of law supports the issue of a want of proper care; nor can it be doubted that in these and similar actions the averment in the declaration of the use of due care and the denial of it in the answer, properly and distinctly put in issue the legality of the conduct of the party as contributing to the accident or injury which forms the groundwork of the action. No specific averment of the particular unlawful act which caused or contributed to produce the result complained of should, in such cases, be deemed necessary. See Ryan v. Bristol, 63 Conn. 26, 27 Atl. 306; Eaden v. Van Blarecom, 100 Mo. App. 153, 74 S. W. 124; Joyner v. Railway Co., 26 S. C. 49, 1 S. E. 52; Nicholas v. Peck, 21 R. I. 484, 43 Atl. 1038; Railroad Co. v. Yorty, 128 Ill. 321, 42 N. E. 64; Schmidt v. Shanott, 108 Ill. 105; Butterfield v. Western R. Corp., 19 Allen (Mass.) 532, 87 Am. Dec. 678; Jones v. Andover, 10 Allen (Mass.) 29.

―Due course of law. This phrase is synonymous with "due process of law," or "the law of the land," and the general definition thereof is "law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice;" and, while not always necessarily confined to judicial proceedings, yet these words have such a significance as to mean to operate of the kind of an eviction, or ouster, from real estate by which a party is dispossessed, as to preclude thereunder proof of a constructive eviction resulting from the purchase of a paramount title when hostilely asserted by the party holding it. See Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 509, 9 N. E. 672; In re Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 404; Backus v. Shipherd, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 635; Dwight v. Williams, 8 Fed. Cas. 187.

―Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. 3 Story, Const. 264, 661. "Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individual rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs." Cooley, Const. Lim. 441. Whatever difficulty may be experienced in giving to those terms a definition which

DUE-BILL. A brief written acknowledgment of a debt. It is not made payable to order, like a promissory note. See Feese v. Feese, 98 Md. 718, 90 Atl. 406; Marrigan v. Page, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 247; Carrier v. Lockwood, 40 Conn. 350, 16 Am. Rep. 40; Lee v. Balcomb, 9 Colo. 216, 11 Pac. 74. See I. O. U.

DUEL. A duel is any combat with deadly weapons, fought between two or more persons, by previous agreement or upon a previous quarrel. Pen. Code Cal. § 225; State v. Fritz, 133 N. C. 725, 45 S. E. 857; State v. Herrriott, 1 McMul. (S. C.) 130; Bassett v. State, 44 Fla. 2, 33 South. 262; Davis v. Modern Woodmen, 98 Mo. App. 713, 73 S. W. 629; Griffin v. State, 100 Tex. Cr. 611, 274 S. W. 611, 612; People v. Morales, 77 Cal. App. 483, 247 P. 221, 222; Baker v. Supreme Lodge K. P., 103 Miss. 374, 60 So. 333, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 547.

DUELLING. The fighting of two persons, one against the other, at an appointed time and place, upon a precedent quarrel. It differs from an affray in this, that the latter occurs on a sudden quarrel, while the former is always the result of design.

DUELLUM. The trial by battle or judicial combat. See Battle.

DUKE, in English law, is a title of nobility, ranking immediately next the Prince of Wales. It is only a title of dignity. Conferring it does not give any domain, territory, or jurisdiction over the place whence the title is taken. Duchess, the consort of a duke. Wharton.

DUKE OF EXETER'S DAUGHTER. The name of a rack in the Tower, so called after a minister of Henry VI. who sought to introduce it into England.

DUKE OF YORK'S LAWS. A body of laws compiled in 1663 for the government of the colony of New York.

DULOCRACY. A government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they domineer. Wharton.

DULY. In due or proper form or manner; according to legal requirements. Regularly; properly: upon a proper foundation, as distinguished from mere form; according to law in both form and substance. Robertson v. Perkins, 129 U. S. 233, 9 S. Ct. 279, 32 L. Ed. 686; Brownell v. Greenwich, 114 N. Y. 518, 22 N. E. 24, 28, 4 L. R. A. 850; Van Arsdale v. Van Arsdale, 26 N. J. Law, 423; Dunning v. Coleman, 27 La. Ann. 48;

DUM. Lat. While; as long as; until; upon condition that; provided that.

DUM BENE SE GESSERIT. While he shall conduct himself well; during good behavior. Expressive of a tenure of office not dependent upon the pleasure of the appointing power, nor for a limited period, but terminable only upon the death or misconduct of the incumbent.

DUM FERVET OPUS. While the work glows; in the heat of action. 1 Kent, Comm. 120.

DUM FUIT IN PRISONA. In English law. A writ which lay for a man who had aliened lands under duress by imprisonment, to restore to him his proper estates. 2 Inst. 482. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

DUM FUIT INFRA ETATEM. (While he was within age.) In old English practice. A writ of entry which formerly lay for an infant after he had attained his full age, to recover lands which he had aliened in fee, in tail, or for life, during his infancy; and, after his death, his heir had the same remedy. Reg. Orig. 229b; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 192, G; Lit. § 400; Co. Litt. 247b.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MENTIS. The name of a writ which the heirs of a person who was non compos mentis, and who aliened his lands, might have sued out to restore him to his rights. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

DUM RECENS FUIT MALEFICUM. While the offense was fresh. A term employed in the old law of appeal of rape. Bract. fol. 147.

DUM SOLA. While sole, or single. Dum sola fuerit, while she shall remain sole. Dum sola et casta vixerit, while she lives single and chaste. Words of limitation in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 235a. Also applied generally to an unmarried woman in connection with something that was or might be done during that condition.

DUMB. One who cannot speak; a person who is mute.

DUMB-BIDDING. In sales at auction, when the minimum amount which the owner will take for the article is written on a piece of paper, and placed by the owner under a candlestick, or other thing, and it is agreed that no bidding shall avail unless equal to that, this is called "dumb-bidding." Bab. Auct. 44.

DUMMODO. Provided; provided that. A word of limitation in the Latin forms of conveyances, of frequent use in introducing a reservation; as in reserving a rent.

DUMMY DIRECTOR. One to whom (usually) a single share of stock in a corporation is transferred for the purpose of qualifying him as a director of the corporation, in which he has no real or active interest. Hoopes v. Basic Co., 61 A. 979, 980, 69 N. J. Eq. 679.

DUMPING. In commercial usage, the act of selling in quantity at a very low price or practically regardless of the price; also, selling (surplus goods) abroad at less than the market price at home. Webster, Dict. The act of forcing a product such as cotton on the market during the short gathering season. Arkansas Cotton Growers' Co-op. Ass'n v. Brown, 168 Ark. 504, 270 S. W. 946, 953.

DUMPING BOARD. An elevated structure of timber, which in part overhangs the water, to enable a scow to go under it for the purpose of taking on a load. Hesley v. Moran Towing & Transportation Co. (C. C. A.) 253 F. 334, 337.

DUN. One who duns or urges for payment; a troublesome creditor. A demand for payment whether oral or written. Stand. Dict.

A mountain or high open place. The names of places ending in dun or don were either built on hills or near them in open places.

DUNA. In old records. A bank of earth cast up; the side of a ditch. Cowell.

DUNGEON. Such an underground prison or cell as was formerly placed in the strongest part of a fortress; a dark or subterranean prison.

DUNIO. A double; a kind of base coin less than a farthing.

DUNNAGE. Pieces of wood placed against the sides and bottom of the hold of a vessel, to preserve the cargo from the effect of leakage, according to its nature and quality. Abb. Shipp. 227.

There is considerable resemblance between dunnage and ballast. The latter is used for trimming the ship, and bringing it down to a draft of water proper and safe for sailing. Dunnage is placed under the cargo to keep it from being wetted by water getting into the hold, or between the different parcels to keep them from bruising and injuring each other. Great Western Ins. Co v. Thwing, 13 Wall. 674, 20 L. Ed. 607; Richards v. Hansen (C. C.) 1 F. 36.

"Dunnage" belongs to the category of crating and boxing employed to protect more valuable articles in shipment, the weight of which, unless some provision to the contrary appears in a tariff classification, naturally takes the rate applicable to the contents. "Dunnage" used in blocking and securing automobiles was held subject to the automobile rate and not to the lumber rate, under tariff classification providing charges shall be computed on gross weights. Butler Motor Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 272 F. 683, 684.

DUNSETS. People that dwell on hilly places or mountains. Jacob.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess one thing in entirety. Co. Litt. 368.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnandas, ratio et authoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning all things,—reason and authority. 8 Coke, 16.

DUODECIMVIRALE JUDICUM. The trial by twelve men, or by jury. Applied to juries de mediate lingua. Mol. de Jure Mar. 448.

DUODECIMA MANUS. Twelve hands. The oaths of twelve men, including himself, by whom the defendant was allowed to make his law. 3 Bl. Comm. 343.

DUODENA MANU. A dozen hands, i.e., twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offense.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two persons of the same thing. Dig. 13, t 6, 5, 15; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 245. Bract. fol. 289.

DUPLA. In the civil law. Double the price of a thing. Dig. 21, 2, 2.

DUPLEX QUERELA. A double complaint. An ecclesiastical proceeding, which is in the nature of an appeal. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 440. See Double Complaint.

DULPEX VALOR MARITAGII. In old English law. Double the value of the marriage. While an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power of tendering him or her a suitable match, without disparagement, which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage to their guardian, that is, so much as a jury would assess or any one would give to the guardian for such an alliance; and, if the infants married themselves without the guardian's consent, they forfeited double the value of the marriage. 2 Bl. Comm. 70; Litt. § 110; Co. Litt. 829.

DUPPLICATE, v. To double, repeat, make, or add a thing exactly like a preceding one; reproduce exactly. State v. Ogden, 20 N. M. 636, 151 P. 758, 760.

DUPPLICATE, n. When two written documents are substantially alike, so that each might be a copy or transcript from the other, while both stand on the same footing as original instruments, they are called "duplicates." Agreements, deeds, and other documents are frequently executed in duplicate, in order that each party may have an original in his possession. State v. Graffam, 74 Wis. 643, 43 N. W. 727; Grant v. Griffith, 56 N. Y. 8, 791, 39 App. Div. 107; Trust Co. v. Codington County, 9 S. D. 159, 66 N. 314; Nelson v. Blakey, 54 Ind. 39; Reynolds v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 200 N. Y. 105, 107, 120 Misc. 501; Lorch v. Page, 97 Conn. 66, 115 A. 681, 682, 24 A. L. R. 1204.

A duplicate is sometimes defined to be the "copy" of a thing; but, though generally a copy, a duplicate differs from a mere copy, in having all the validity of an original. Nor, it seems need it be an exact copy. Defined also to be the "counterpart" of an instrument; but in indentures there is a distinction between counterparts executed by the several parties respectively, each party affixing his or her seal to only one counterpart, and duplicate originals, each executed by all the parties. Toms v. Cuming, 7 Man. & G. 91, note; Maston v. Glen Lumber Co., 85 Okl. 86, 163 P. 128, 129. The old indentures, charters, or chiromaps seem to have had the character of duplicates. Burrii.

The term is also frequently used to signify a new original, made to take the place of an instrument that has been lost or destroyed, and to have the same force and effect. Bentin v. Martin, 40 N. Y. 347.

In English Law

The certificate of discharge given to an insolvent debtor who takes the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors.

The ticket given by a pawnbroker to the owner of a chattel.

In General

—Duplicate taxation. The same as "double taxation." See that title.

—Duplicate will. A term used in England, where a testator executes two copies of his will, one to keep himself, and the other to be deposited with another person. Upon application for probate of a duplicate will, both copies must be deposited in the registry of the court of probate.

DUPLICATIO. In the civil law. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication; corresponding to the rejoinder of the common law.
DUPlicitatem possibilittatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow the doubling of a possibility. 1 Rolle, 321.

DUPICATUM JUS. Double right. Bract. fol. 283. See Droit-Droit.

DUPLY, n. (From Lat. duplicatio, q. v.) In Scotch pleading. The defendant’s answer to the plaintiff’s replication.

DUPLY, v. In Scotch pleading. To rejoin. “It is duplyed by the panel.” 3 State Trials, 471.

DURANTE ABSENTIA. During absence. In some jurisdictions, administration of a deceased’s estate is said to be granted during absentia in cases where the absence of the proper proponents of the will, or of an executor, delays or imperils the settlement of the estate.

DURANTE BENE PLACITO. During good pleasure. The ancient tenure of English judges was durante bene placito. 1 Bl. Comm. 267, 342.

DURANTE MINORE ÆSTATE. During minority. 2 Bl. Comm. 503; 5 Coke, 29, 30. Words taken from the old form of letters of administration. 5 Coke, ubi supra.

DURANTE VIRGINITATE. During virginity, (so long as she remains unmarried.)

DURANTE VITA. During life.

DURATION. Extent, limit or time. People v. Hill, 7 Cal. 102. The portion of time dur-DURESSOR. One who subjects another to duress; one who compels another to do a thing, as by menace. Bac. Max. 90, reg. 22.

DURHAM. A county palatine in England, the jurisdiction of which was vested in the Bishop of Durham until the statute 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 19, vested it as a separate franchise and royalty in the crown. The jurisdiction of the Durham court of pleas was transferred to the supreme court of judicature by the judicature act of 1873.

DURING. Throughout the course of; throughout the continuance of; in the time of. Ellis v. Fraternal Aid Union, 108 Kan. 819, 197 P. 189, 190; Richardson v. City of Seattle, 97 Wash. 521, 166 P. 1131, 1133.

DURING GOOD BEHAVIOR. While defendant whose sentence had been suspended, was obedient to the state law. State v. Hardin, 183 N. C. 815, 112 S. E. 593, 595.

DURSLEY. In old English law. Blows without wounding or bloodshed; dry blows. Blount.

DUSTUCK. A term used in Hindostan for a passport, permit, or order from the English East Indian Company. It generally meant a permit under their seal exempting goods from the payment of duties. Enc. Lond.

DUTCH AUCTION. See Auction.

DUTIES. In its most usual signification this word is the synonym of impose or customs; but it is sometimes used in a broader sense, as including all manner of taxes, charges, or governmental impositions. Pollock v. Farmers’ L. & T. Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 S. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108; Alexander v. Railroad Co., 3 Strob. (S. C.) 593; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. 453, 19 L. Ed. 95; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. 290, 19 L. Ed. 906; Blake v. Baker, 115 Mass. 198.

DUTIES ON IMPORTS. This term signifies not merely a duty on the act of importation, but a duty on the thing imported. It is not confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but extends to a duty levied after it has entered the country. Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 457, 6 L. Ed. 673.

DUTY. A human action which is exactly conformeable to the laws which require us to obey them. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Filson, 35 Okl. 59, 91, 128 P. 298.

The words, “it shall be the duty,” in ordinary legislation, imply the assertion of the power to command and to coerce obedience. Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 107, 15 L. Ed. 717.

In its use in jurisprudence, this word is the correlative of right. Thus, wherever there exists a right in any person, there also rests a corresponding duty upon some other person or upon all persons generally. But it is also used, in a wider sense, to designate that class of moral obligations which lie outside the juridical sphere; such, namely, as rest upon an imperative ethical basis, but have not been recognized by the law as within its proper province for purposes of enforcement or redress. Thus, gratitude towards a benefactor is a duty, but its refusal will not ground an action. In this meaning “duty” is the equivalent of “moral obligation,” as distinguished from a “legal obligation.” Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bll. 349.

Duty is considered by some modern ethicalists to be the fundamental conception of ethics and to be subject to intuitive knowledge; by others it is conceived as that which is ethically valid because sanctioned by law, society, or religion. Webster, Dict.

As a technical term of the law, “duty” signifies a thing due; that which is due from a person; that which a person owes to another. An obligation to do a thing. A word of more extensive signification than “debt,” although both are expressed by the same Latin word “debitum.” Beach v. Boynton, 26VT. 725, 733; Bankers’ Deposit Guaranty & Surety Co. v. Barnes, 81 Kan. 422, 105 P. 697, 698; Taylor v. White (Tex. Civ. App.) 113 S. W. 554, 556. Sometimes, however, the term is used synonymously with debt. Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 295, 305.

But in practice it is commonly reserved as the designation of those obligations of performance, care, or observance which rest upon a person in an official or fiduciary capacity; as the duty of an executor, trustee, manager, etc. Goodwin v. Vermilion County, 271 III. 126, 110 N. E. 890, 892.

It also denotes a tax or impost due to the government upon the importation or exportation of goods.

Judicial Duty

See Judicial.

Legal Duty

That which the law requires to be done or forborne to a determinate person or the public at large, correlative to a vested and coextensive right in such person or the public, and the breach of which constitutes negligence. Heaven v. Pender, 11 Q. B. Div. 506; Smith v. Clarke Hardware Co., 10 Ga. 163, 28 S. E. 73; 39 L. R. A. 607; Railroad Co. v. Ballentine, 54 S. 935, 28 C. C. A. 572.

DUUMVIRI. (From duo, two, and viri, men.) A general appellation among the ancient Romans, given to any magistrates elected in pairs to fill any office, or perform any function. Brande.

Duumviri municipales were two annual magistrates in the towns and colonies, having judicial powers. Calvin.

Duumviri navales were officers appointed to man, equip, and refit the navy. Id.

DUX.

In Roman Law
A leader or military commander. The commander of an army. Dig. 3, 2, 2, pr.

In Feudal and Old European Law
Duke; a title of honor, or order of nobility. 1 Bl. Comm. 397; Crabb, Eng. Law, 226.

In Later Law
A military governor of a province. See Cod. 1, 27, 2. A military officer having charge of the borders or frontiers of the empire, called "dux limitis." Cod. 1, 48, 1, pr. At this period, the word began to be used as a title of honor or dignity.

D. W. I. In genealogical tables, a common abbreviation for "died without issue."

To delay, to pause or linger, to abide as a permanent residence or for a time; to live in a place, to have one's residence or domicile, to reside. It is synonymous with inhabit, live, sojourn, stay, rest. MacLeod v. Stelle, 43 Idaho, 64, 249 P. 254, 256.

DWELLING HOUSE. The house in which a man lives with his family; a residence; the apartment or building, or group of buildings, occupied by a family as a place of residence.

In Conveyancing
Includes all buildings attached to or connected with the house. 2 Hill, Real Prop. 338, and note.

In the Law of Burglary
A house in which the occupier and his family usually reside, or, in other words, dwell and lie in. Whart. Crim. Law, 357.

In general

Private Dwelling
Within a restrictive covenant, a piece or house in which a person or family lives in an individual or private state, the covenant being violated by the conversion of a house theretofore used as a residence for a single family into a residence for two families, even though the outward appearance of the house was not materially affected. Palme v. Bergrose Development Corp., 198 N. Y. S. 311, 312, 119 Misc. 796. The distinction between a boarding house and a "private dwelling house" is whether the house is occupied as a home for the occupant and his wife and child, or whether he occupied it as a place for carrying on the business of keeping boarders, although while prosecuting the business and as a means of prosecuting it, he and his wife and children live in the house also. Trainor
v. Le Beek, 101 N. J. Eq. 823, 139 A. 16, 17.

DWELLING-PLACE, or home, is some permanent abode or residence, in which one has the intention of remaining; it is not synonymous with "domicile," as used in International law, but has a more limited and restricted 293. Nor is it synonymous with a "place of pauper settlement." Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N.
H. 550.

DYED HANGING PAPER. See Hanging Paper.

DYING DECLARATION. See Declaration.

DYING WITHOUT ISSUE. At common law this phrase imports an indefinite failure of issue, and not a dying without issue surviving at the time of the death of the first taker.
But this rule has been changed in some of the states, by statute or decisions, and in England by St. 7 Wm. IV., and 1 Vict. c. 26, § 29.

The words "die without issue," and "die without leaving issue," in a devise of real estate, import an indefinite failure of issue, and not the failure of issue at the death of the first taker.
And no distinction is to be made between the words
"without issue" and "without leaving issue." Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 228; McGraw v.
Davenport, 6 Port. (Ala.) 319; Harwell v. Harwell, 151 Tenn. 587, 271 S. W. 353, 355.

In Connecticut and other states it has been repeatedly held that the expression "dying without issue," and like expressions, have reference to the time of the death of the party, and not to an indefinite failure of issue. Phelps v. Phelps, 55 Conn.
359, 11 A. 596; Meriden Trust & Safe Deposit Co.
v. Squire, 92 Conn. 440, 108 A. 266, 272; Briggs v.
Hopkins, 103 Ohio St. 321, 132 N. E. 843; In re
Price's Estate, 289 Pa. 376, 108 A. 893, 894; Davis
v. Davis, 107 Neb. 70, 185 N. W. 442, 444.

Dying without children imports not a failure of issue at any indefinite future period, but a leaving no children at the death of the legatee. Condict
v. King, 12 N. J. Eq. 375. The law favors vesting of estates, and limitation such as "dying without issue," refers to a definite period, fixed in will, rather than to an indefinite failure of issue. Howard v. Howard's Trustee, 312 Ky. 847, 280 S. W. 156, 157. Where context is such as to show clearly that testator intended the phrase "die without issue" to mean that, if first taker die without issue during life of testator, the second taker shall stand in his place and prevent a lapse, the words "die without issue" are taken to mean death during life of testator. Brittain v. Farrington, 318 Ill. 474, 149 N.
E. 486, 489.

DYKE-REED, or DYKE-REEVE. An officer who has the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny counties.

DYNASTY. A succession of kings in the same line or family.

DYNOSM. Bad legislation; the enactment of bad laws.

DYSAREUNIA. In medical jurisprudence.
Incacity of a woman to sustain the act of sexual intercourse except with great difficulty and pain; anaphrodisia (which see).

DYSPEPSIA. A state of the stomach in which its functions are disturbed, without the presence of other diseases, or when, if other diseases are present, they are of minor

DYVOUR. In Scotch law. A bankrupt.

DYVOUR'S HABIT. In Scotch law. A habit which debtors who are set free on a cessio bonorum are obliged to wear, unless in the summons and process of cessio it be libeled, sustained, and proved that the bankruptcy proceeds from misfortune. And bankrupts are condemned to submit to the habit, even where no suspicion of fraud lies against them, if they have been dealers in an illicit trade.

E. A Latin preposition, meaning from, out of, after, or according. It occurs in many Latin phrases; but (in this form) only before a consonant. When the initial of the following word is a vowel, ex is used.

—_E contra_. From the opposite; on the contrary.

—_E converso_. Conversely. On the other hand; on the contrary. Equivalent to _e contra_.

—_E mera gratia_. Out of mere grace or favor.

—_E pluribus unum_. One out of many. The motto of the United States of America.

E. G. An abbreviation of _exempit gratia_. For the sake of an example.

EA. Sax. The water or river; also the mouth of a river on the shore between high and low water-mark.

_Ea est accipienda interpretatio, quae vitio caret_. That interpretation is to be received [or adopted] which is free from fault [or wrong]. The law will not intend a wrong. Bac. Max. 17, (in reg. 3.)

EA INTENTIOINE. With that intent. Held not to make a condition, but a confidence and trust. Dyer, 1389.

_Ea quae, commendandi causa, in venditionibus dicatur, si palam appaerat, vendiorem non obligat_. Those things which are said on sales, in the way of commendation, if [the qualities of the thing sold] appear openly, do not bind the seller. Dig. 18, 1, 43, pr.

_Ea quae dari impossibilia sunt, vel quae in rorum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur_. Those things which are impossible to be given, or which are not in the nature of things, are regarded as not added, [as no part of an agreement.] Dig. 50, 17, 185.

_Ea quae in curia nostra rite acta sunt debita executioni demandandae debent_. Co. Litt. 289. Those things which are properly transacted in our court ought to be committed to a due execution.

_Ea quae raro accidunt non temere in agentibus negotiis computatur_. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason. Dig. 50, 17, 64.

EACH. A distributive adjective pronoun, which denotes or refers to every one of the persons or things mentioned; every one of two or more persons or things, composing the whole, separately considered. The effect of this word, used in the covenants of a bond, is to create a several obligation. Seller v. State, 190 Ind. 665, 67 N. E. 449; Klockc-

Eadem causa diversis rationibus aequi judicis ecclesiasticis et secularibus ventilatur. 2 Inst. 622. The same cause is argued upon different principles before ecclesiastical and secular judges.

_Eadem est ratio, eadem est lex_. The same reason, the same law. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 493.

_Eadem mens prae summur regis quae est juris et quae esse debet, praeertim in dubiis_. Hob. 154. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which it ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters.

EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States of the value of ten dollars.

EALDER, or EALDING. In old Saxon law. An elder or chief.

EALDERMAN, or EALDORMAN. The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman; analogous to _earl_ among the Danes, and _senator_ among the Romans. See Alderman. The name of _Ealdorman_ is one of a large class; among a primitive people age implies command and command implies age; hence, in a somewhat later stage of language, the elders are simply the rulers. 1 Freeman, Norman Conquest, 51, quoted in Cent. Dict.

EALDOR-BISCIOP. An archbishop.

EALDORBURG. Sax. The metropolis; the chief city. Obsolete.

EALEHUS. (Fr. _eule_, Sax., ale, and _hus_, house.) An ale-house.

EALHORDA. Sax. The privilege of assissing and selling beer. Obsolete.

EAR GRASS. In English law. Such grass which is upon the land after the mowing, until the feast of the Annunciation after. 3 Leon. 213.

EAR-MARK. A mark put upon a thing to distinguish it from another. Originally and literally, a mark upon the ear; a mode of marking sheep and other animals.

Property is said to be ear-marked when it can be identified or distinguished from other property of the same nature.

Money has no ear-mark, but it is an ordinary term for a privy mark made by any one on a coin.

EAR-MARK RULE. Rule that through the process of commingling money or deposit with the funds of a bank it loses its identity, with the resultant effect of defeating the right of preference over general creditors. Hilt Fireworks Co. v. Scandinavian American Bank of Tacoma, 121 Wash. 261, 209 P. 680, 682.

EAR-WITNESS. In the law of evidence. One who attests or can attest anything as heard by himself.

EARL. A title of nobility, formerly the highest in England, now the third, ranking between a marquis and a viscount, and corresponding with the French "comte" and the German "grafen." The title originated with the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage. William the Conqueror first made this title hereditary, giving it in fee to his nobles; and allotting them for the support of their state the third penny out of the sheriff's court, issuing out of all pleas of the shire, whence they had their ancient title "shiremen." At present the title is accompanied by no territory, private or judicial rights, but merely confers nobility and an hereditary seat in the house of lords. Wharton.

—Earl marshal of England. A great officer of state who had anciently several courts under his jurisdiction, as the court of chivalry and the court of honor. Under him is the herald's office, or college of arms. He was also a judge of the Marshalsea court, now abolished. This office is of great antiquity, and has been for several ages hereditary in the family of the Howards. 3 Bl. Comm. 68, 103; 3 Steph. Comm. 335, note.

—Earldom. The dignity or jurisdiction of an earl. The dignity only remains now, as the jurisdiction has been given over to the sheriff. 1 Bl. Comm. 339.

EARLES—PENNY, or EARL'S PENNY. Money given in part payment. See Earnest; Arles.

A token or pledge passing between the parties, by way of evidence, or ratification of the sale. 2 Kent, Comm. 495, note.

EARNING CAPACITY. "Earning capacity" does not necessarily mean the actual earnings that one who suffers an injury was making at the time the injuries were sustained, but refers to that which, by virtue of the training, the experience, and the business acumen possessed, an individual is capable of earning. Texas Electric Ry. v. Worthy (Tex. Civ. App.) 250 S. W. 710, 711. Not saving ability, but capacity to acquire money, less the necessary expense of his own living. Pitman v. Merriman, 80 N. H. 295, 117 A. 18, 26 A. L. R. 569.

EARNINGS. This term is used to denote a larger class of credits than would be included in the term "wages." Somers v. Kelhier, 115 Mass. 165; Jenks v. Dyer, 102 Mass. 235.

—Net earnings rule. The net earnings rule for assessing a special franchise for taxation starts with the gross earnings for the year ending with the commencement of the year for which the valuation is made from which is deducted operating expenses and a fair and reasonable return on that portion of the corporation's capital invested in tangible property, the balance being deemed to give the net earnings attributable to the special franchise, the value of which is then found by capitalizing such balance at a rate 1 per cent. higher than that found as a matter of fact to be a fair and reasonable return on the tangible property. People ex rel. Third Ave. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Comrs., 142 N. Y. S. 988, 987, 157 App. Div. 731.

—Surplus earnings of a company or corporation means the amount owned by the company over and above its capital and actual liabilities. People v. Comrs.'s of Taxes, 76 N. Y. 74.

EARTH. Soil of all kinds, including gravel, clay, loam, and the like, in distinction from the firm rock. Dickinson v. Poundkeepsie, 75 N. Y. 76.

EASEMENT. A right in the owner of one parcel of land, by reason of such ownership, to use the land of another for a special purpose not inconsistent with a general property in the owner. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 25. Davis v. Briggs, 117 Me. 336, 106 A. 128, 129; Clark v. Glidden, 80 Vt. 702, 15 A. 328; Rogers v. Hussion (Tex. Civ. App.) 273 S. W. 969, 971, 972; City of Franklin v. St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, 188 Ky. 161, 221 S. W. 503, 506.

A privilege which the owner of one adjacent tenement hath of another, existing in respect of their several tenements, by which that owner against whose tenement the privilege exists is obliged to suffer or not to do something on or in regard to his own land for the advantage of him in whose land the privilege exists. Termes de la Ley, Easements; Downing v. Baldwin, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 298; 3 B. & C. 339; Lawton v. Rivers, 2 McCord (S. C.) 451, 13 Am. Dec. 741; Com. v. Low, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 408; Forbes v. Balensiefer, 74 Ill. 188; Oliver v. Hook, 47 Md. 301; Strong v. Wares, 50 Vt. 361; Howell v. Estes, 71 Tex. 96, 12 S. W. 62; Koensig v. Jung, 73 Wis. 175, 40 N. W. 501; Burdine v. Sewell, 92 Fla. 375, 109 So. 648, 652; Ernst v. Allen, 55 Utah 272, 184 P. 827, 829.

A liberty, privilege, or advantage without profit, which the owner of one parcel of land may have in the lands of another. Thomas v. Morris, 190 N. C. 244, 129 S. E. 623, 625; Ritter v. Hill, 282 Pa. 315, 127 A. 455, 457; Setteggast v. Foley Bros. Dry Goods Co., 114 Tex. 452, 270 S. W. 1014, 1016.

The land against which the easement or privilege exists is called the "servient" tenement, and the estate to which it is annexed the "dominant" tenement; and their owners are called respectively the "servient" and "dominant" owner. These terms are taken from the civil law. Saratoga State Waters Corporation v. Pratt, 227 N. Y. 429, 125 N. E. 384, 388; West v. Gieon (Tex. Civ. App.) 242 S. W. 312, 319; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 108; Grant v. Chase, 17 Mass. 446, 2 Am. Dec. 111; Meek v. Breckinridge, 29 Ohio St. 642.

Synonyms
Although the terms are sometimes used as if convertible, properly speaking easement refers to the right enjoyed by one and servitude the burden imposed upon the other. Stephenson v. St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Texas (Tex. Civ. App.) 181 S. W. 568, 572.

The distinguishing feature of a "profit à prendre" is the right to take from the land part of the soil or a product of it, and of an "easement" is the absence of all right to participate in the profits of the soil. Saratoga State Waters Corporation v. Pratt, 227 N. Y. 429, 125 N. E. 384, 388; Mathews Slate Co. of New York v. Advance Industrial Supply Co., 172 N. Y. 880, 892, 155 App. Div. 74.

An "easement" is a right, distinct from ownership, to use in some way the land of another, without any compensation, whereas a "restriction" is a limitation of the manner in which one may use his own land, and may or may not involve a grant. Kutschinski v. Thompson, 101 N. J. Eq. 449, 138 A. 569, 573.

At the present day, the distinction between an "easement" and a "license" is well settled and fully recognized, although it becomes difficult in some of the cases to discover a substantial difference between them. An easement is a permanent interest in another's land, with a right to enjoy it fully and without obstruction. A license, on the other hand, is a bare authority to do a certain act or series of acts upon another's land, without possessing any estate therein. Cook v. Railroad Co., 40 Iowa, 456; Nunnelly v. Iron Co., 94 Tenn. 397, 29 S. W. 361, 28 L. R. A. 421; Baldwin v. Taylor, 106 Pa. 507, 31 A. 250; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 A. 358; Asher v. Johnson, 118 Ky. 702, 82 S. W. 300; Bur-

Classification

Easements are classified as affirmative or negative; the former being those where the servient estate must permit something to be done thereon, (as to pass over it, or to discharge water upon it;) the latter being those where the owner of the servient estate is prohibited from doing something otherwise lawful upon his estate, because it will affect the dominant estate, (as interrupting the light and air from the latter by building on the former.) 2 Washb. Real Prop. 301. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Brennan (Sup.) 24 N. Y. S. 788; Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 447, 26 Am. Rep. 612; Miller v. Babb (Tex. Com. App.) 243 S. W. 253, 254; Davis v. Robinson, 159 N. C. 359, 127 S. E. 697, 703. As to "reciprocal negative easement," see that title, infra.

They are also either continuous or discontinuous. An easement of the former kind is one that is self-perpetuating, independent of human intervention, as, the flow of a stream, or one which may be enjoyed without any act on the part of the person entitled thereto, such as a spout which discharges the water whenever it rains, a drain by which surface water is carried off, windows which admit light and air, and the like. Starrett v. Baudler, 151 Iowa, 965, 105 N. W. 216, 219, L. R. A. 1915D, 528; Caulfield v. Lobenstein, 123 Misc. 285, 205 N. Y. S. 150, 152; Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 503; Bonelli v. Blakemore, 66 Miss. 135, 5 So. 228, 14 Am. St. Rep. 550; Providence Tool Co. v. Engine Co., 9 R. I. 571. A continuous easement is sometimes termed an "apparent" easement, and defined as one depending on some artificial structure upon, or natural conformation of, the servient tenement, obvious and permanent, which constitutes the easement or is the means of enjoying it. Petters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 260; Larsen v. Peterson, 53 N. J. Eq. 88, 30 A. 1094; Whalen v. Land Co., 65 N. J. Law, 206, 47 A. 443. See, also, Apparent Easement, infra. Discontinuous, non-continuous, or non-apparent easements are those the enjoyment of which can be had only by the interference of man, as, a right of way or a right to draw water. Outerbridge v. Phelps, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 570; Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 515. This distinction is derived from the French law.

Easements are also classed as private or public, the former being an easement the enjoyment of which is restricted to one or a few individuals, while a public easement is one the right to the enjoyment of which is vested in the public generally or in an entire community; such as an easement of passage on the public streets and highways or of navigation on a stream. Kennedy v. Jersey City, 57 N. J. Law, 298, 30 A. 531, 26 L. R. A. 281; Niovol v. Telephone Co., 62 N. J. Law, 783, 42 A. 588, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666.

They may also be either of necessity or of convenience. The former is the case where the easement is indispensable to the enjoyment of the dominant estate; the latter, where the easement increases the facility, comfort, or convenience of the enjoyment of the dominant estate, or of some right connected with it.

Easements are again either appurtenant or in gross. An appurtenant easement is one which is attached to and passes with the dominant tenement as an appurtenance thereof; while an easement in gross is not appurtenant to any estate in land (or not belonging to any person by virtue of his ownership of an estate in land) but a mere personal interest in, or right to use, the land of another. Cadwalader v. Bailey, 17 R. I. 495, 23 A. 20, 14 L. B. A. 300; Pinkham v. Eau Claire, 51 Wis. 301, 51 N. W. 550; Stovall v. Coggin Granite Co., 116 Ga. 376, 42 S. E. 723; Waller v. Hildebrecht, 295 Ill. 116, 128 N. E. 807, 809; Davis v. Robinson, 189 N. C. 559, 127 S. E. 697, 702; Safety Building & Loan Co. v. Lyles, 131 S. C. 540, 128 S. E. 724, 725; Ernst v. Allen, 55 Utah, 272, 184 P. 827, 829; Chase v. Cram, 39 R. I. 83, 97 A. 481, 483, L. R. A. 1915F, 444; Davis v. Briggs, 117 Me. 536, 105 A. 128, 129; Saratoga State Waters Corporation v. Pratt, 227 N. Y. 429, 125 N. E. 834, 835.

Apparent Easement

One the existence of which appears from the construction or condition of one of the tenements, so as to be capable of being seen or known on inspection. Miller v. Skaggs, 79 W. Va. 645, 91 S. E. 538, 537, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 929; Pioneer Mining Co. v. Bannack Gold Mining Co., 69 Mont. 254, 198 P. 748, 751. See, also, continuous easements under heading "Classification," supra.

Equitable Easements

The special easements created by derivation of ownership of adjacent proprietors from a common source, with specific intentions as to buildings for certain purposes, or with implied privileges in regard to certain uses, are sometimes so called. U. S. v. Peachy (D. C.) 36 F. 162. A name frequently applied to building restrictions in a deed. Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 P. 945, 947; Sprague v. Kimball, 213 Mass. 350, 100 N. E. 622, 624, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 431.

Implied Easement

An easement resting upon the principle that, where the owner of two or more adjacent lots sells a part thereof, he grants by implication to the grantee all those apparent and visible easements which are necessary for the reasonable use of the property granted, which at the time of the grant are used by the own-
EASEMENT

Intermittent Easement
One which is usable or used only at times, and not continuously. Eaton v. Railroad Co., 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

Quasi Easement
An “easement,” in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor’s land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a “quasi easement.” Gale, Easem. 516; Sweet.

Reciprocal Negative Easement
If the owner of two or more lots, so situated as to bear the relation, sells one with restrictions of benefit to the land retained, the servitude becomes mutual, and, during the period of restraint, the owner of the lot or lots retained can do nothing forbidden to the owner of the lot sold; this being known as the doctrine of “reciprocal negative easement.” Sanborn v. McLean, 233 Mich. 227, 206 N. W. 496, 497.

Secondary Easement
One which is appurtenant to the primary or actual easement; every easement includes such “secondary easements,” that is, the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself. Tootle v. Bryce, 50 N. J. Eq. 589, 25 A. 182; North Fork Water Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 662, 54 P. 69.

EAST. In the absence of other words qualifying its meaning, the word “east” in a petition for the formation of a permanent road division, describing boundaries by courses and distances, means due east. Anaheim Sugar Co. v. Orange County, 181 Cal. 212, 183 P. 809, 813. Sec. also, Easterly.

In the customs laws of the United States, the words “countries east of the Cape of Good Hope” mean countries with which, formerly, the United States ordinarily carried on commercial intercourse by passing around that cape. Powers v. Conley, 101 U. S. 790, 25 L. Ed. 805.

EAST GREENWICH. The name of a royal manor in the county of Kent, England; mentioned in royal grants or patents, as descriptive of the tenure of free socage.

EAST INDIA COMPANY. Originally established for prosecuting the trade between England and India, which they acquired a right to carry on exclusively. Since the middle of the last century, however, the company’s political affairs had become of more importance than their commerce. In 1858, by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, the government of the territories of the company was transferred to the crown. Wharton.

EASTER. A feast of the Christian church held in memory of our Saviour’s resurrection. The Greeks and Latins call it “pascha,” (passover,) to which Jewish feast our Easter answers. This feast has been annually celebrated since the time of the apostles, and is one of the most important festivals in the Christian calendar, being that which regulates and determines the times of all the other movable festivals. Enc. Lond.

EASTER-OFFERINGS, or EASTER-DUES. In English law. Small sums of money paid to the parochial clergy by the parishioners at Easter as a compensation for personal tithes, or the tithe for personal labor; recoverable under 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 6, before justices of the peace.

EASTER TERM. In English law. Formerly one of the four movable terms of the courts, but afterwards a fixed term, beginning on the 15th of April and ending on the 8th of May in every year, though sometimes prolonged so late as the 13th of May, under St. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70. From November 2, 1875, the division of the legal year into terms is abolished so far as concerns the administration of Justice. 3 Steph. Comm. 482-486; Mozley & Whitley.

EASTERLING. A coin struck by Richard II. which is supposed by some to have given rise to the name of “sterling;” as applied to English money.

EASTERLY. This word, when used alone, will be construed to mean “due east.” But that is a rule of necessity growing out of the indefiniteness of the term, and has no application where other words are used for the purpose of qualifying its meaning. Where such is the case, it means precisely what the qualifying word makes it mean. Pratt v. Woodward, 32 Cal. 227, 91 Am. Dec. 573; Scraper v. Pipes, 59 Ind. 164; Wiltsie v. Mill & Min. Co., 7 Ariz. 96, 60 P. 506; Walker v. City of Los Angeles, 23 Cal. App. 634, 139 P. 90, 90. See East.

EASTINUS. An easterly coast or country.

EAT INDE SINE DIE. In criminal practice. Words used on the acquittal of a defendant, or when a prisoner is to be discharged, that he may go thence without a day, i. e., be dismissed without any further continuance or adjournment. Dane, Abr. Index.

EATING-HOUSE. Any place where food or refreshments of any kind, not including spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, are provided for casual visitors, and sold for consumption therein. Act Cong. July 13, 1866, § 9 (11 St. at Large, 119). And see Carpenter v. Taylor, 1 Hint. (N. Y.) 195; State v. Hall, 73 N. C. 253. A place where the public may go and be served with meals. Chochoo v. Burden, 74 Ind. App. 242, 128 N. E. 696; Babv v. Elsinger (Sup.) 147 N. Y. S. 98, 99.

EAVES. The edge of a roof, built so as to project over the walls of a house, in order that the rain may drop therefrom to the ground instead of running down the wall. Center St. Church v. Machias Hotel Co., 51 Me. 413.

EAVES-DRIP. The drip or dropping of water from the eaves of a house on the land of an adjacent owner; the easement of having the water so drip, or the servitude of submitting to such drip; the same as the stillicidium of the Roman law. See Stillicidium.

EAVESDROPPING. In English criminal law. The offense of listening under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and therupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales. 4 H. Comm. 189. It is a misdemeanor at common law, inadmissible at sessions, and punishable by fine and finding sureties for good behavior. Id.; Steph. Crim. Law, 109. See State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 300, 75 Am. Dec. 771; Com. v. Lovett, 4 Clark (Pa.) 5; Selden v. State, 74 Wis. 271, 42 N. W. 218, 17 Am. St. Rep. 144; State v. Williams, 2 Ov. (Tenn.) 109.

EBBA. In old English law. Ebba. Ebba et Nactus; ebb and flow of tide; ebb and flood. Pract. fols. 225, 328. The time occupied by one ebb and flood was anceintly granted to persons ensomed as being beyond sea, in addition to the period of forty days. See Fleta, lib. 6, c. 8, § 2.

EBDOMADARIUS. In ecclesiastical law. An officer in cathedral churches who supervised the regular performance of divine service, and prescribed the particular duties of each person in the choir.

EBEREMORTH, EBEREMORS, EBEREMURDER. See Abereemuder.

ECCLESIA. Lat. An assembly. A Christian assembly; a church. A place of religious worship. In the law, generally, the word is used to denote a place of religious worship, and sometimes a personage. Spelman.

Ecclesia ecclesia decimas solvere non debet. Cro. Eliz. 479. A church ought not to pay tithes to a church.

Ecclesia est donus mansionalis Omnipo tentis. Del. 2 Inst. 164. The church is the mansionhouse of the Omnispotent God.

Ecclesia est infra statum et in custodia domini regis, qui tenetur iura et hereditates ejusdem manu tenere et defendere. 11 Coke, 49. The church is under age, and in the custody of the king, who is bound to uphold and defend its rights and inheritances.

Ecclesia fungitur vice minoris; mitigore conditionem suam facere potest, deteriori necquaquam. Co. Litt. 341. The church enjoys the privilege of a minor; it can make its own condition better, but not worse.

Ecclesia non moritur. 2 Inst. 3. The church does not die.

Ecclesiæ magis favendum est quam personæ. Godol. Ecc. Law, 172. The church is to be more favored than the person (or an individual).

ECCLISIAE SCULPTURA. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure or relic.
and to perpetuate the memory of some famous churches. Jacob.

ECCLI$$ASIC. The ruler of a church.

ECCL$$SI$$STIC. A clergyman; a priest; a man consecrated to the service of the church; as, a bishop, a priest, a deacon.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL. Pertaining to anything belonging to or set apart for the church, as distinguished from "civil" or "secular," with regard to the world. Wharton.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL AUTHORITIES. In England, the clergy, under the sovereign, as temporal head of the church, set apart from the rest of the people or laity, in order to superintend the public worship of God and the other ceremonies of religion, and to administer spiritual counsel and instruction. The several orders of the clergy are: (1) Archbishops and bishops; (2) deans and chapters; (3) archdeacons; (4) rural deans; (5) parsons (under whom are included appropriators) and vicars; (6) curates. Churchwardens or sidesmen, and parish clerks and sextons, inasmuch as their duties are connected with the church, may be considered to be a species of ecclesiastical authorities. Wharton.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL COMMISSIONERS. In English law. A body corporate, erected by St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 77, empowered to suggest measures conducive to the efficiency of the established church, to be ratified by orders in council. Wharton. See 3 Steph. Comm. 156, 157.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL CORPORATION. See Corporation.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL COURTS (called, also, "Courts Christian"). A system of courts in England, held by authority of the sovereign, and having jurisdiction over matters pertaining to the religion and ritual of the established church, and the rights, duties, and discipline of ecclesiastical persons as such. They are as follows: The archdeacon's court, consistory court, court of arches, court of peculiar, prerogative court, court of delegates, court of convocation, court of audience, court of faculties, and court of commissioners of review. See those several titles; and see 3 Bl. Comm. 64-68. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Paterson, 41 Ga. 364, 5 Am. Rep. 355.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL DIVISION OF ENGLAND. This is a division into provinces, dioceses, archdeaconries, rural deaneries, and parishes.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL JURISDICTION. Jurisdiction over ecclesiastical cases and controversies; such as appertains to the ecclesiastical courts. Short v. Stotts, 88 Ind. 35.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL LAW. The body of jurisprudence administered by the ecclesiastical courts of England; derived, in large measure, from the canon and civil law. As now restricted, it applies mainly to the affairs, and the doctrine, discipline, and worship, of the established church. De Witt v. De Witt, 67 Ohio St. 340, 66 N. E. 136.

ECCL$$SI$$STICAL THINGS. This term, as used in the canon law, includes church buildings, church property, cemeteries, and property given to the church for the support of the poor or for any other pious use. Smith v. Bonhoof, 2 Mich. 115.

ECDICUS. The attorney, proctor, or advocate of a corporation. Episcoporum evdicii; bishops' proctors; church lawyers. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 63.

ÉCHANTILLON. In French law. One of the two parts or pieces of a wooden tally. That in possession of the debtor is properly called the "tally," the other "échantillon." Poth. Obl. pt. 4, c. 1, art. 2, § 8.

ÉCHEVIN. In French law. A municipal officer corresponding with alderman or burgess, and having in some instances a civil jurisdiction in certain causes of trifling importance.

ECHOLALIA. In medical jurisprudence. The constant and senseless repetition of particular words or phrases, recognized as a sign or symptom of insanity or of aphasia.

ÉCHOUEMENT. In French marine law. Stranding. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 12, a. 13, no. 1.

ECLAMPSIA PARTURIENTIUM. In medical jurisprudence. Puerperal convulsions; a convulsive seizure which sometimes suddenly attacks a woman in labor or directly after, generally attended by unconsciousness and occasionally by mental aberration, which may be permanent. The attack closely resembles the convulsions of epilepsy, and is often fatal.

ECLECTIC PRACTICE. In medicine. That system followed by physicians who select their modes of practice and medicines from various schools. Webster.

"Without professing to understand much of medical phraseology, we suppose that the terms 'allopathic practice' and 'legitimate business' mean the ordinary method commonly adopted by the great body of learned and eminent physicians, which is taught in their institutions, established by their highest authorities, and accepted by the larger and more respectable portion of the community. By 'eclectic practice,' without imputing to it, as the counsel for the plaintiff seem inclined to, an odor of illegality, we presume is intended another and different system, unusual and eccentric, not countenanced by the classes before referred to, but characterized by them as spurious and denounced as dangerous. It is sufficient to say that the two modes of treating human maladies are essentially distinct, and based upon different views of the nature and causes of diseases, their appropriate remedies, and the modes of applying them." Bradbury v. Bardin, 34 Conn. 453.

ECONOMIZER. As applied to boiler construction, a contrivance or device in which water is heated preliminary to entering the boiler proper. Ithaca Traction Corporation v. Travelers' Indemnity Co. (Sup.) 177 N. Y. 753, 754.

ÉCRIVAIN. In French marine law. The clerk of a ship. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 11, s. 3, no. 2.

EDDERBRECHE. In Saxon law. The offense of hedge-breaking. Obsolete.

EDESTIA. In old records. Buildings.

EDICT. A positive law promulgated by the sovereign of a country, and having reference either to the whole land or some of its divisions, but usually relating to affairs of state. It differs from a "public proclamation," in that it enacts a new statute, and carries with it the authority of law, whereas the latter is, at most, a declaration of a law before enacted.

In Roman Law

Sometimes, a citation to appear before a judge. A "special edict" was a judgment in a case; a "general edict" was in effect a statute. See Edictum.

EDICTAL CITATION. In Scotch law. A citation published at the market-cross of Edinburgh, and pier and shore of Leith. Used against foreigners not within the kingdom, but having a landed estate there, and against natives out of the kingdom. Bell.

EDICTS OF JUSTINIAN. Thirteen constitutions or laws of this prince, found in most editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis, after the Novels. Being confined to matters of police in the provinces of the empire, they are of little use.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)—41

EDICTUM. In the Roman law. An edict; a mandate, or ordinance. An ordinance, or law, enacted by the emperor without the senate; belonging to the class of constitutio princeps. Inst. 1, 2, 6. An edict was a mere voluntary constitution of the emperor; differing from a rescript, in not being returned in the way of answer; and from a decree, in not being given in judgment; and from both, in not being founded upon solicitation. Tayl. Civil Law, 233.

A general order published by the praetor, on entering upon his office, containing the system of rules by which he would administer justice during the year of his office. Dig. 1, 2, 2, 10; Mackell. Rom. Law, § 33; Tayl. Civil Law, 214. See Calvin.

EDICTUM ANNUUM. The annual edict or system of rules promulgated by a Roman praetor immediately upon assuming his office, setting forth the principles by which he would be guided in determining causes during his term of office. Mackell. Rom. Law, § 36.

EDICTUM PERPETUUM. The perpetual edict. A compilation or system of law in fifty books, digested by Julian, a lawyer of great eminence under the reign of Adrian, from the praetor's edicts and other parts of the Jus Honorarium. All the remains of it which have come down to us are the extracts of it in the Digests. Butl. Hor. Jur. 52.

EDICTUM PROVINCIALE. An edict or system of rules for the administration of justice, similar to the edict of the praetor, put forth by the procurators and proconsuls in the provinces of the Roman Empire. Mackell. Rom. Law, § 36.

EDICTUM THEODORICI. This is the first collection of law that was made after the downfall of the Roman power in Italy. It was promulgated by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, at Rome in A. D. 500. It consists of 154 chapters, in which we recognize parts taken from the Code and Novellae of Theodosius, from the Codices Gregorianus and Hermogenianus, and the Sententiae of Paulus. The edict was doubtless drawn up by Roman writers, but the original sources are most disfigured and altered than in any other compilation. This collection of law was intended to apply both to the Goths and the Romans, so far as its provisions went; but, when it made no alteration in the Gothic law, that law was still to be in force. Savigny, Geschichte des R. R.

EDICTUM TRALATITIUM. Where a Roman praetor, upon assuming office, did not publish a wholly new edict, but retained the whole or a principal part of the edict of his predecessor (as was usually the case) only adding to it such rules as appeared to be necessary to adapt it to changing social conditions or juristic ideas, it was called "edictum tralatitium." Mackell. Rom. Law, § 36.
EDITION. Any quantity of books put forth to the bookselling trade at one time by the publisher. 4 K. & J. 656. A new edition is published whenever, having in his warehouse a certain number of copies, the publisher issues a fresh batch of them to the public.

EDITOR. One who directs or supervises the policies and contributions of a newspaper, magazine, work of reference, or the like. Brokaw v. Cottrell, 114 Neb. 538, 211 N. W. 164, 165. The term is held to include not only the personal and physical editor who selects the articles for publication, but he who publishes a paper and puts it in circulation. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 721, 24 L. Ed. 565; Bunce v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. X.) 350.

EDITUS. In old English law. Put forth or promulgated, when speaking of the passage of a statute; and brought forth, or born, when speaking of the birth of a child.

EDMUNDS ACT. An act of congress of March 22, 1882, punishing polygamy. See 18 USCA §§ 514-516.

EDUCATION. Within the meaning of a statute relative to the powers and duties of guardians, this term comprehends not merely the instruction received at school or college, but the whole course of training, moral, intellectual, and physical. Educational may be particularly directed to either the mental, moral, or physical powers and faculties, but in its broadest and best sense it relates to them all. Mount Herman Boys’ School v. Gill, 145 Mass. 139, 13 N. E. 354; Cook v. State, 90 Tenn. 407, 16 S. W. 471, 13 L. R. A. 183; Ruohs v. Backer, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 400, 19 Am. Rep. 598; Conley v. Daughters of the Republic, 103 Tex. 80, 156 S. W. 107, 201.

"Education" is not confined to the improvement and cultivation of the mind, but may consist of the cultivation of one’s religious or moral sentiments, and likewise may consist in the development of one’s physical faculties. Commissioners of District of Columbia v. Shannon & Luchs Const. Co., 57 App. D. C. 67, 17 F. (2d) 219, 220; Gibson v. Frye Institute, 137 Tenn. 452, 253 S. W. 1063, 1062, L. R. A. 3917d, 1062; In re Syracuse University, 212 N. Y. S. 253, 256, 214 App. Div. 755.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION. A school, seminary, college, or educational establishment, not necessarily a chartered institution. Ward Seminary for Young Ladies v. City of Nashville, 129 Tenn. 412, 167 S. W. 113. As used in a zoning ordinance, the term may include not only buildings, but also all grounds necessary for the accomplishment of the full scope of educational instruction, including those things essential to mental, moral, and physical development. Commissioners of District of Columbia v. Shannon & Luchs Const. Co., 57 App. D. C. 67, 17 F. (2d) 219, 220.

EFFECT, v. A belief that a mortgage would “effect” a preference under the bankruptcy act is equivalent to a belief that it would “operate as” a preference. Ogden v. Reddish (D. C.) 200 F. 977, 979.

EFFECT, n. Result. Western Indemnity Co. v. MacKechnie (Tex. Civ. App.) 214 S. W. 456, 460; Beeler v. People, 58 Colo. 451, 146 P. 762, 764. The result which an instrument between parties will produce in their relative rights, or which a statute will produce upon the existing law, as discovered from the language used, the forms employed, or other materials for construing it. The operation of a law, an agreement, or an act. Maisze v. State, 4 Ind. 342.

The phrases “take effect,” “be in effect,” “go into operation,” etc., are used interchangeably. Maisze v. State, 4 Ind. 342.

With Effect

In this sense, the term is more comprehensive than the word “goods,” as including fixtures and choses in action, which “goods” will not include. Bank v. Pyram, 121 Ill. 92, 22 N. E. 442; Alma Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 125 Miss. 387, 88 So. 583, 591; First Nat. Bank v. Ellison, 125 Miss. 42, 99 So. 573, 576; 2 Bl. Comm. 284.

In Wills

Personal property; worldly substance. If the term is used simpliciter, as in a gift of "all my effects," it will carry the whole personal estate, unless an intention appears to the contrary. Schouler, Will. § 509; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. 400, 14 L. Ed. 472; Hope Bl. Law Dict. (3d Ed.)
Natural Gas Co. v. Shriver, 75 W. Va. 401, 82 S. E. 1011, 1016; In re Wolfe’s Will, 185 N. C. 568, 117 S. E. 894, 896; Dickson v. Dickson, 180 Ky. 423, 202 S. W. 891, 894, L. R. A. 1919F, 765. The meaning of the term is determined by the context and surrounding circumstances; Coffman’s Adm’r v. Coffman, 131 Va. 456, 109 S. E. 454, 459; and is broad enough to include reality. In re Sprigg’s Estate, 70 Mont. 272, 225 P. 617, 620.

The words “real and personal effects” will embrace the whole estate. Hogan v. Jackson, Cowp. 301; The Alpena (D. C.) 7 F. 361; 13 M. & W. 430; Foxall v. McKenney, 3 Cranch C. C. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 5,016.

Effectus sequitur causam. Wing. 226. The effect follows the cause.

EFFENDI. Turkish, Master; a title of respect.

EFFICIENT CAUSE. The working cause; that cause which produces effects or results; an intervening cause, which produces results which would not have come to pass except for its interposition, and for which, therefore, the person who set in motion the original chain of causes is not responsible. Central Coal & Iron Co. v. Pearce (Ky.) 50 S. W. 450; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lauck, 148 Ill. 242, 32 N. E. 283, 18 L. R. A. 215; Sarber v. City of Indianapolis, 72 Ind. App. 594, 126 N. E. 330, 331. The cause which originates and sets in motion the dominating agency that necessarily proceeds through other causes as mere instruments or vehicles in a natural line of causation to the result. Nelson Creek Coal Co. v. Bransford, 189 Ky. 741, 225 S. W. 1070, 1071. That cause of an injury to which legal liability attaches. Wolfe v. Pittsburgh Athletic Club (C. C. A.) 205 F. 468, 471, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 602. The "proximate cause." Munger v. Hancock (Tex. Civ. App.) 271 S. W. 228, 231. The phrase is practically synonymous with "procuring cause." Bagley v. Foley, 52 Wash. 222, 144 P. 25.

EFFICIENT INTERVENING CAUSE. One not produced by a wrongful act or omission but independent of it, and adequate to bring the injurious results. State v. Des Champs, 126 S. C. 413, 120 S. E. 481, 483.

EFFIGY. The figure or corporeal representation of a person.

To make the effigy of a person with an intent to make him the object of ridicule is a libel. 3 Chit. Crim. Law, 561; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, a. 1, 2; 14 East 227.

EFFLUX. The running, as of a prescribed period of time to its end; expiration by lapse of time. Particularly applied to the termination of a lease by the expiration of the term for which it was made.

EFFLUXION OF TIME. When this phrase is used in leases, conveyances, and other like deeds, or in agreements expressed in simple writing, it indicates the conclusion or expiration of an agreed term of years specified in the deed or writing, such conclusion or expiration arising in the natural course of events, in contradistinction to the determination of the term by the acts of the parties or by some unexpected or unusual incident or other sudden event. Brown.

EFFORCIALITER. Forcibly; applied to military force.

EFFRACTION. A breach made by the use of force.

EFFRACTOR. One who breaks through; one who commits a burglary.

EFFUSUS SANGUINIS. In old English law. The shedding of blood; the malet, fine, sute, or penalty imposed for the shedding of blood, which the king granted to many lords of mans. Cowell; Tomlins. See Bloodwit.

EFTERS. In Saxon law. Ways, walks, or hedges. Blount.

EGALITY. Oweitly, (q. v.) Co. Litt. 169a.

EGO. I; myself. This term is used in forming genealogical tables, to represent the person who is the object of inquiry.

EGO, TALIS. I, such a one. Words used in describing the forms of old deeds. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 5.

EGREDIENS ET EXEUNXS. In old pleading. Going forth and issuing out of (land.) Townsh. Pl. 17.

EGRESS. Often used interchangeably with the word “access.” C. Hacker Co. v. City of Joliet, 196 Ill. App. 415, 423.

EGYP'TANS, commonly called “Gypsies” (in old English statutes,) are counterfeit rogues, Welsh or English, that disguise themselves in speech and apparel, and wander up and down the country, pretending to have skill in telling fortunes, and to deceive the common people, but live chiefly by欺诈 or stealing, and, therefore, the statutes of 1 & 2 Mar. c. 4, and 5 Eliz. c. 20, were made to punish such as felons if they departed not the realm or continued to a month. Terms de in Ley.
EI incumbit probatio, qui diit, non qui negat; cum rerum naturam factum negantis probatio nulla sit. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not upon him who denies; since, by the nature of things, he who denies a fact cannot produce any proof. Dig. 22, 3, 2; 1 Phill. Ev. 194; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; Dranguet v. Prudhomme, 3 La. 88; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 408.

Ei nihil turpe, cui nihil saties. To him to whom nothing is enough, nothing is base. 4 Inst. 53.

EIA, or EY. An island. Cowell.

EIGNE. L. Fr. Eldest; eldest-born. The term is of common occurrence in the old books. Thus, bastard eigne means an illegitimate son whose parents afterwards marry and have a second son for lawful issue, the latter being called mulier puisme, (after-born.) Eigne is probably a corrupt form of the French "ainé." 2 Bl. Comm. 248; Litt. § 389.

EIK. In Scotch law. An addition; as, eik to a reversion, eik to a confirmation. Bell.

EINECIA. Eldership. See Eseney.

EINETIUS. In English law. The oldest; the first-born. Spielman.

EIRE, or EYRE. In old English law. A journey, route, or circuit. Justices in eire were judges who were sent by commission, every seven years, into various counties to hold the assizes and hear pleas of the crown. 3 Bl. Comm. 58.

EIRENARCHA. A name formerly given to a justice of the peace. In the Digests, the word is written "irenarcha."

Eisdem modis dissolvitur obligatio qua nascitur ex contractu, vel quasi, quibus contrahitur. An obligation which arises from contract, or quasi contract, is dissolved in the same ways in which it is contracted. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 10.

EISE. The senior; the oldest son. Spelled, also, "eigen," "einsen," "aiten," "eign." Terms of the Ley; Kelham.

EISNETIA, EINETIA. The share of the oldest son. The portion acquired by primogeniture. Terms de la Ley; Co. Litt. 1609; Cowell.

EJECT. To cast, or throw out; to oust, or dispossess; to put or turn out of possession. 3 Bl. Comm. 198, 199, 200. See Bohannon v. Southern Ry. Co., 112 Ky. 106, 65 S. W. 169. To expel or thrust forcibly, as passengers from a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ogles, 142 Ga. 729, 83 S. E. 851, 853.

EJECTA. In old English law. A woman ravished or deflowered, or cast forth from the virtuous. Blount.

EJECTION. A turning out of possession. 3 Bl. Comm. 199.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. In old English law. Ejection of ward. This phrase, which is the Latin equivalent for the French "ejectement de garde," was the title of a writ which lay for a guardian when turned out of any land of his ward during the minority of the latter. Brown. It lay to recover the land or person of his ward, or both, Fitzh. N. B. 158, L.; Co. Litt. 199. EJECTIOE FIRMÆ. Ejection, or ejcetion of farm. The name of a writ or action of trespass, which lay at common law where lands or tenements were let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reverserion, remainder-man, or any stranger ejected or ousted the lessee of his term, ferme, or farm, (ipsam a ferme ejected.) In this case the latter might have his writ of ejection, by which he recovered at first damages for the trespass only, but it was afterwards made a remedy to recover back the term itself, or the remainder of it, with damages. Reg. Orig. 227b; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 229, F, G; 3 Bl. Comm. 199; Litt. § 322; Crabb, Eng. Law, 290, 448. It is the foundation of the modern action of ejectment.

EJECTMENT. At common law, this was the name of a mixed action (springing from the earlier personal action of ejectione firmæ) which lay for the recovery of the possession of land, and for damages for the unlawful detention of its possession. The action was highly fictitious, being in theory only for the recovery of a term for years, and brought by a purely fictitious person, as lessee in a supposed lease from the real party in interest. The latter's title, however, must be established in order to warrant a recovery, and the establishment of such title, though nominally a mere incident, is in reality the object of the action. Hence this convenient form of suit came to be adopted as the usual method of trying titles to land. See 3 Bl. Comm. 199, French v. Robb, 67 N. J. Law, 290, 51 A. 569, 57 L. R. A. 806, 81 Am. St. Rep. 433; Crockett v. Haskbrook, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 655, 17 Am. Dec. 98; Wilson v. Wrightman, 36 App. Div. 41, 55 N. Y. S. 800; Hoover v. King, 43

It was the only mixed action at common law, the whole method of proceeding in which was anomalous, and depended on fictions invented and upheld by the court to escape from the inconveniences which were found to attend the ancient forms of real and mixed actions.

It is also a form of action by which possessory titles to corporeal hereditaments may be tried and possession obtained.

—Equitable ejectment. A proceeding in use in Pennsylvania, brought to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and for some other purposes, which is in form an action of ejectment, but is in reality a substitute for a bill in equity. Bie v. Gannon, 161 Pa. 289, 29 A. 55; McKendry v. McKendry, 131 Pa. 24, 18 A. 1078, 6 L. R. A. 663.

—Justice ejectment. A statutory proceeding in Vermont, for the eviction of a tenant holding over after termination of the lease or breach of its conditions. Foss v. Stanton, 76 Vt. 365, 57 A. 942.

EJECTOR. One who ejects, puts out, or dispossesses another.

Casual Ejector

The nominal defendant in an action of ejectment; so called because, by a fiction of law peculiar to that action, he is supposed to come casually or by accident upon the premises and to eject the lawful possessor. 3 Bl. Comm. 203.

EJECTUM. That which is thrown up by the sea. Also jetsam, wreck, etc. Warder v. La Belle Creole, 1 Pet. Adm. Dec. 48, Fed. Cas. No. 17,165.

EJERCITORIA. In Spanish law. The name of an action lying against a ship's owner, upon the contracts or obligations made by the master for repair or supplies. It corresponds to the actio exercitatoria of the Roman law. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 512.

EJIDOS. In Spanish law. Commons; lands used in common by the inhabitants of a city, pueblo, or town, for pasture, wood, threshing-ground, etc. Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 554.

EJURATION. Renouncing or resigning one's place.

Ejus est interpretari cujus est onerandi. It is to interpret whose it is to enact. Tayl. Civil Law, 96.

Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle. He who can will, [exercise volition,] has a right to refuse to will, [to withhold consent.] Dig. 50, 7, 3. This maxim is sometimes written, Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle, and is translated, "He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly."

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum. He who has the dominion or advantage has the risk. Bart. Max. 33.

Ejus nulla culpa est, cui parere nessesit. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Dig. 50, 17, 168. Obedience to existing laws is a sufficient extenuation of guilt before a civil tribunal. Broom, Max. 12, note.

EJUSDEM GENERIS. Of the same kind, class, or nature.

In the construction of laws, wills, and other instruments, the "ejusdem generis rule" is, that where general words follow an enumeration of persons or things, by words of a particular and specific meaning, such general words are not to be construed in their widest extent, but are to be held as applying only to persons or things of the same general kind or class as those specifically mentioned. Black, Interp. Laws, 141; Cutshall v. Denver, 19 Colo. App. 911, 56 P. 22; Ex parte Leland, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 492; Spalding v. People, 372 Ill. 49, 43 N. E. 593; State v. Gardner, 174 Iowa, 748, 156 N. W. 747, 756, 156 N. A. 1916D, 767, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 238; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Anderson (Tex. Civ. App.) 259 S. W. 998, 1906; U. S. v. Sixtho (D. C.) 292 F. 496, 1906; United States v. Baumgartner (D. C.) 292 F. 722, 724; Hills v. Joseph (C. C. A.) 233 F. 865, 907; Curtis & Hill Gravel & Sand Co. v. State Highway Commission, 91 N. J. Eq. 421, 111 A. 16, 19; Sulzberger & Sons Co. of Oklahoma v. Strickland, 60 Okl. 158, 159 P. 833, 846; Dillard v. State, 164 Neb. 268, 156 N. W. 698. The rule, however, does not necessarily require that the general provision be limited in its scope to the identical things specifically named. Children's Bootsery v. Sutker, 91 Fla. 497, 345, 347, 44 A. L. R. 968. Nor does it apply when the context manifests a contrary intention. Gaulley Coal Land Co. v. Koonts, 77 W. Va. 963, 87 S. E. 399, 391; State v. Grovenor, 149 Tenn. 158, 258 S. W. 140; State v. Mfillie, 25 N. D. 27, 141 N. W. 82, 84; Brooklyn City R. Co. v. Kings County Trust Co., 212 N. Y. S. 243, 347, 214 App. Div. 506.

The maxim "ejusdem generis," is only an illustration of the broader maxim, "noscitur a sociis."
ELECTION. The act of choosing or selecting one or more from a greater number of persons, things, courses, or rights. The choice of an alternative. State v. Tucker, 54 Ala. 210.

The internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. Dyer, 281.

With respect to the choice of persons to fill public office or the decision of a particular public question or public policy the term means in ordinary usage the expression by vote of the will of the people or of a somewhat numerous body of electors. State v. State Board of Canvassers, 77 S. C. 461, 59 S. E. 145; McKinney v. Baker, 190 Ky. 536, 298 S. W. 803, L. R. A. 1928 E, 581; State ex rel. Smith v. Bowman, 194 Mo. App. 454, 170 S. W. 700, 701. But this is not necessarily so, for the term may apply to the selection by a city council of one of their number as mayor. Kopczynski v. Schriver, 194 Mich. 533, 161 N. W. 328, 329. Compare, however, Town of Nortonville v. Woodward, 191 Ky. 730, 231 S. W. 254.

"Election" ordinarily has reference to a choice or selection by electors, while "appointment" refers to a choice or selection by an individual, as the Governor, or an official body. Schaffner v. Shaw, 191 Iowa, 1047, 189 N. W. 853, 854. But the terms are sometimes used interchangeably. Hill v. City of Rector, 261 Ark. 574, 566 S. W. 348, 349.

The choice which is open to a debtor who is bound in an alternative obligation to select either one of the alternatives.

In Equity

The obligation imposed upon a party to choose between two inconsistent or alternative rights or claims, in cases where there is clear intention of the person from whom he derives one that he should not enjoy both. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075; Bliss v. Geer, 7 Ill. App. 617; Norwood v. Lassiter, 122 N. C. 52, 45 S. E. 509; Salentine v. Insurance Co., 79 Wis. 580, 48 N. W. 855, 12 L. R. A. 690; Renlux v. Hardman, 72 W. Va. 580, 78 S. E. 749, 750; In re Itza's Estate, 104 Or. 59, 202 P. 409, 412; McGehee v. McGehee, 159 N. C. 558, 127 S. E. 654, 655; In re Blumenthal's Estate, 128 Misc. 608, 215 N. Y. S. 142.

A choice shown by an overt act between two inconsistent rights, either of which may be asserted at the will of the chooser alone. Bierce v. Hutchins, 205 U. S. 346, 27 S. Ct. 524, 51 L. Ed. 525; Macbeth-Evans Glass Co. v. General Electric Co. (C. C. A.) 246 F. 695, 701.

The doctrine of election presupposes a plurality of gifts or rights, with an intention, express or implied, of the party who has a right to control one or both, that one should be a substitute for the other. 1 Swanst. 94, note b; 3 Wood, Lect. 481; 3 Rop. Leg. 480-487.
In Practice

The liberty of choosing (or the act of choosing) one out of several means afforded by law for the redress of an injury, or one out of several available forms of action. Almy v. Harris, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 175; Socelow v. J. & A. Stone Realty Co., 128 Misc. 152, 215 N. Y. S. 408, 409.

An "election of remedies" arises when one having two coexistent but inconsistent remedies chooses to exercise one, in which event he loses the right to thereafter exercise the other. Mosher Mfg. Co. v. Eastland W. F. & H. G. R. Co., 502 Ala. 234, 255; Moran v. Weilberger, 129 Tenn. 537, 539 S. W. 896, 899; Geo. A. Hormel Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 111 Minn. 65, 213 N. W. 783, 740.

In Criminal Law

The choice, by the prosecution, upon which of several counts in an indictment (charging distinct offenses of the same degree, but not parts of a continuous series of acts) it will proceed. Jackson v. State, 95 Ala. 17, 10 So. 657.

In the Law of Wills

A widow's election is her choice whether she will take under the will or under the statute; that is, whether she will accept the provision made for her in the will, and acquire in her husband's disposition of his property, or disregard it and claim what the law allows her. In re Cunningham's Estate, 137 Pa. 621, 20 A. 714, 21 Am. St. Rep. 901; Sill v. Sill, 31 Kan. 245, 1 P. 596; Burroughs v. De Coutts, 70 Cal. 58, 17 P. 734; Johnson v. Bumpass (Tex. Civ. App.) 275 S. W. 1108, 1111; In re Vanatta's Estate, 99 N. J. Eq. 339, 131 A. 515, 518; Arnold v. Livingston, 157 Iowa, 677, 139 N. W. 927, 929.

An "election under the will" means that a legatee or devisee under a will is put to the choice of accepting the beneficial interest offered by the donor in lieu of some estate which he is entitled to, but which is taken from him by the terms of the will. Dunn v. Vinyard (Tex. Com. App.) 251 S. W. 1043, 1046; Burns v. First Nat. Bank, 304 Ill. 292, 136 N. E. 693, 696; McDermid v. Bourhill, 101 Or. 365, 199 P. 610, 612, 22 A. L. R. 428;

In General

-Election auditors. In English law, Officers annually appointed, to whom was committed the duty of taking and publishing the account of all expenses incurred at parliamentary elections. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, §§ 18, 26-28. But these sections have been repealed by 26 Vict. c. 29, which throws the duty of preparing the accounts on the declared agent of the candidate, and the duty of publishing an abstract of it on the returning officer. Wharton.

-Election district. A subdivision of territory, whether of state, county, or city, the boundaries of which are fixed by law, for convenience in local or general elections. Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. 420; Lane v. Otis, 68 N. J. Law, 656, 54 A. 442.

The term has been held not to refer to senatorial district. Appeal of Phillips, 262 Pa. 396, 105 A. 547, 548.

-Election dower. A name sometimes given to the provision which a law or statute makes for a widow in case she "elects" to reject the provision made for her in the will and take what the statute accords. Adams v. Adams, 183 Mo. 396, 82 S. W. 66.

-Election judges. In English law. Judges of the high court selected in pursuance of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 125, § 11, and Jud. Act 1873, § 38, for the trial of election petitions.

-Election petitions. Petitions for inquiry into the validity of elections of members of parliament when it is alleged that the return of a member is invalid for bribery or any other reason.

-Equitable election. The choice to be made by a person who may, under a will or other instrument, have either one of two alternative rights or benefits, but not both. Peters v. Bain, 123 U. S. 670, 10 S. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 606; Drake v. Wild, 70 Va. 52, 39 A. 248.

-General election. One at which the officers to be elected are such as belong to the general government,—that is, the general and central political organization of the whole state; as distinguished from an election of officers for a particular locality only. Also, one held for the selection of an officer after the expiration of the full term of the former officer; thus distinguished from a special election, which is one held to supply a vacancy in office occurring before the expiration of the full term for which the incumbent was elected. State v. King, 17 Mo. 514; Downs v. State, 78 Md. 128, 26 A. 1005; Mackin v. State, 62 Md. 247; Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 169. One that regularly recurs in each election precinct of the state on a day designated by law for the selection of officers, or is held in such entire territory pursuant to an enactment specifying a single day for the ratification or rejection of one or more measures submitted to the people by the Legislative Assembly, and not for the election of any officer. Bethune v. Funk, 106 P. 981, 982, 85 Or. 246. One that is held throughout the entire state or territory. Territory v. Ricordati, 18 N. M. 10, 132 P. 1139, 1140.

An election for the choice of a national, state, judicial, district, municipal, county, or township official, required by law to be held regularly at a designated time, to fill a new office or a vacancy in an office at the expiration of the full term thereof. Eakle v. Board of Education of Independent School Dist. of Henry, 97 W. Va. 494, 125 S. E. 155, 158.

In statutes, the term may include a primary election. Taylor v. Multnomah County, 119 Or. 123, 248 P. 167, 168; State v. Marsh, 107 Neb. 697, 187 N. W. 88; Kelso v. Cook, 154 Ind. 173, 110 N. E. 987, 993, Ann. Cas. 1915E, 68. Contrary, under a municipal charter, City Council of San Jose v. Goodwin, 196 Cal. 274, 237 P. 548, 549. In Vermont, the term is used throughout the Public Statutes to designate what before had commonly been known as “freeman’s meeting.” Martin v. Fullam, 97 A. 442, 445, 90 Vt. 163.

—Primary election. An election by the voters of a ward, precinct, or other small district, belonging to a particular party, of representatives or delegates to a convention which is to meet and nominate the candidates of their party to stand at an approaching municipal or general election. State v. Hirsch, 125 Ind. 207, 24 N. E. 1062, 9 L. R. A. 170; People v. Cavanaugh, 112 Cal. 676, 44 P. 1057; State v. Woodruff, 68 N. J. Law, 52, 52 A. 294.

Also, an election to select candidates for office by a political organization, the voters being restricted to the members or supporters of such organization. Kelso v. Cook, 184 Ind. 173, 110 N. E. 297, Ann. Cas. 1915E, 68; Chandler v. Neff (D. C.) 298 F. 515, 518; Bell v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 57, 141 P. 804, 806; State v. Paris, 179 Ind. 460, 101 N. E. 497, 499; Bethune v. Funk, 85 Or. 246, 166 P. 931. They are not in reality elections but are merely nominating devices. Van Dyke v. Thompson, 136 Tenn. 139, 189 S. W. 62, 66.

—Regular election. One recurring at stated times fixed by law. State v. Andresen, 110 Or. 1, 222 P. 585, 587. A general, usual, or stated election. When applied to elections, the terms “regular” and “general” are used interchangeably and synonymously. The word “regular” is used in reference to a general election occurring throughout the state. State v. Conrades, 45 Mo. 47; Ward v. Clark, 35 Kan. 315, 10 P. 287; People v. Babcock, 123 Cal. 307, 55 P. 1017.

—Result of election. Usually, the expression of the will of the voters as determined by a count of the ballots. Olsowski v. Calumet City, 322 Ill. 575, 153 N. E. 613, 614.

—Special election. An election for a particular emergency; out of the regular course; as one held to fill a vacancy arising by death of the incumbent of the office. State v. Andresen, 110 Or. 1, 222 P. 585, 587; Scovill v. City of Ypsilanti, 207 Mich. 288, 174 N. W. 139, 141.

In a statute, any election at which officers are not chosen. Hutchins v. City of Des Moines, 176 Iowa, 189, 157 N. W. 881, 883. In determining whether an election is special or general, regard must be had to the subject-matter as well as date of the election, and, if an election occurs throughout state uniformly by direct operation of law, it is a “general election,” but, if it depends on employment of special preliminary proceeding peculiar to process which may or may not occur, and the election is applicable only to a restricted area less than whole state, it is a “special election.” Norton v. Coos County, 113 Or. 618, 233 P. 864, 866; Hill v. Hartzell, 121 Or. 4, 252 P. 552, 555.

Electiosi fill rite et libere sine interruptus alia. Elections should be made in due form, and freely, without any interruption. 2 Inst. 169.

ELECTIVE. Dependent upon choice; bestowed or passing by election. Also pertaining or relating to elections; conferring the right or power to vote at elections.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE. The right of voting at public elections; the privilege of qualified voters to cast their ballots for the candidates they favor at elections authorized by law. Parks v. State, 100 Ala. 634, 13 South. 756; People v. Barber, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 198; State v. State, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 255; Xippas v. Commonwealth, 141 Va. 497, 126 S. E. 207, 209.

ELECTOR. A duly qualified voter; one who has a vote in the choice of any officer; a constituent. Appeal of Cusick, 136 Pa. 459, 20 Atl. 574, 10 L. R. A. 228; Bergevin v. Curts, 127 Cal. 86, 59 Pac. 312; State v. Tuttle, 53 Wis. 45, 9 N. W. 791; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107 (Gil. 81); Allen v. Wildman, 38 Okt. 652, 134 P. 1102, 1106. One who elects or has the right of choice, or who has the right to vote for any functionary, or for the adoption of any measure. Aczel v. United States (C. C. A.) 222 F. 652, 657. In a narrower sense, one who has the general right to vote, and the right to vote for public officers. Sears v. City of Maquoketa, 153 Iowa, 1104, 166 N. W. 700, 701. One authorized to exercise the elective franchise. NeEvoy v. Christensen, 176 Iowa, 1156, 159 N. W. 175, 181. But a woman citizen, though having such general right and authority to vote, may nevertheless not be an "elector" entitled to have her name put on a jury list, in view of a state constitution and statute. People v. Barnett, 319 Ill. 403, 150 N. E. 290, 291.

While the terms "electors" and "voters" are sometimes used interchangeably, their meaning is not precisely the same; "electors" being properly applied to all those entitled to vote, whereas "voters" appropriately designates only those actually voting. Clayton v. Hill City, 111 Kan. 566, 207 P. 770; State ex rel. Chanev v. Grinsted, 314 Mo. 55, 282 S. W. 715, 719. A fortiori, "electors" is a broader term than "registered voters." City of Dayton, Ohio, v. City Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 401, 405.

One of the persons chosen to comprise the "electoral college" (q. v.).

Also, the title of certain German princes who had a voice in the election of the Holy Roman Emperors. The office of elector in some instances became hereditary and was connected with territorial possessions.

Sometimes, one who exercises the right of election in equity. Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 287.

Registered Qualified Elector

One possessing the constitutional qualifications, and registered under the registration statute. Minges v. Board of Trustees of City of Merced, 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 P. 816, 817.

ELECTORAL. Pertaining to electors or elections; composed or consisting of electors.

ELECTORAL COLLEGE. A name sometimes given, in the United States, to the college or body of electors of a state chosen to elect the president and vice-president; also, the whole body of such electors, composed of the electoral colleges of the several states. Webster; Cent. Dict.; 2 Sto. Const. § 1463; 1 Hare, Am. Const. L. 219; Stevens, Sources of the Constitution of the U. S. 153, note; Black, Const. L. 86; 1 Calhoun's Works, 173.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION. A commission created by an act of congress of January 29, 1877, to decide certain questions arising out of the presidential election of November, 1876, in which Hayes and Wheeler had been candidates of the Republican party and Tilden and Hendricks of the Democratic party. From the personnel of the Supreme Court, Justices Clifford, Miller, Field, and Strong were named in the act as members, and they chose as the fifth justice Justice Bradley. The other members were Senators Bayard, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Morton, and Thurman, and Representatives Abbott, Garfield, Hoar, Huton, and Payne.

ELECTRICITY. A highly subtle imponderable fluid, whose presence or influence is only known by its effect. Myers v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 68 Or. 599, 138 P. 213. Though not susceptible of definition it may be gathered from the elements and stored, transmitted and utilized and when a person does this it becomes a subject of ownership, of barter and sale, so long as it is in possession. Torrance Water Co. v. San Antonio Light & Power Co., 1 Cal. App. 511, 82 P. 532.

ELECTROCU T. To put (a criminal) to death by passing through the body a current of electricity of high power; also, by extension, to kill by an electric current. Ferguson v. State, 90 Fla. 105, 105 So. 840.

The word is a hybrid, and has met with the disapproval of some for that reason. This barbarian jars the unhappy Latinist's nerves much more cruelly than the operation denoted jars those of its victim." Fowler, Dict. of Mod. English Usage (1896), p. 130. "To one having even an elementary knowledge of Latin grammar this word is no less than disgusting, and the thing meant by it is felt to be altogether too good for the word's inventor." Pierce, Write It Right (1969), p. 24. It is not included in the New English Dict. (Oxford, 1897), but is listed without comment in the New Cent. Dict. (1927) and also in Funk & Wagnalls' New Standard Dict. (1955), which spells it "electrocute." "It is considered by many to be inelegant, but is widely used and has no accepted equivalent." Webster, New Internat. Dict. (1927). The word is "now in established use, though formerly much criticized from the learned point of view because of the manner of its formation." Krepp, Comprehensive Guide to Good English (1927), p. 218.

ELECTROCUTION. A method of punishment of death inflicted by causing to pass through the body of the convicted person a current of electricity. See 1 With. & Beck. Med. Jur. 663; People v. Durston, 119 N. Y. 569, 24 N. E. 6, 7 L. R. A. 715, 16 Am. St. Rep. 859; In re Kemmell, 136 U. S. 436, 10 S. Ct. 990, 34 L. Ed. 519; Ex parte Mirzan, 119 U. S. 584, 7 S. Ct. 341, 30 L. Ed. 513. This method has been provided for in a number of states, beginning with New York as early as 1888, Ohio in 1896, and Pennsylvania in 1913. See Electrocute.

ELECTROLYSIS. The decomposition of a metal solution in water, liquid ammonia, etc., accompanied by decomposition of the water into oxygen and hydrogen or of a mass of molten metal by having an electric current passed through it. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria Ry. Co. (C. C.) 181 F. 590.

As applied to water pipes electrolysis is the stripping off of the outer particles of the iron when a suitable electrolytic solution is present leaving the carbon of which the pipe is partly composed intact. Peoria Waterworks Co. v. Peoria R. Co. (C. C.) 181 F. 590.

The term is also said to cover a wide variety of acts, ranging from the removal of superfluous hair by electricity to the electrocution of a human being. State v. Armstrong, 33 Idaho, 492, 255 P. 481, 493, 33 A. L. R. 835.

ELEEMOSYNA REGIS, and ELEEMOSYNA ARATRI, or CARUCARUM. A penny which King Ethelred ordered to be paid for every plow in England towards the support of the poor. Leg. Ethel. c. 1.
ELEEMOSYNÆ. Possessions belonging to the church. Blount.

ELEEMOSYNARIA. The place in a religious house where the common alms were deposited, and thence by the almoner distributed to the poor.

In Old English Law

The awnerie, awnby, or ambry; words still used in common speech in the north of England, to denote a pantry or cupboard. Cowell.

The office of almoner. Cowell.

ELEEMOSYNARIUS. In old English law. An almoner, or chief officer, who received the eleemosynary rents and gifts, and in due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. Cowell; Wharton.

The name of an officer (lord almoner) of the English kings, in former times, who distributed the royal alms or bounty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 23.

ELEGANTER. In the civil law. Accurately; with discrimination. Vezzie v. Williams, 3 Story, 611, 636, Fed. Cas. No. 16,907.

ELEGIT. (Lat. He has chosen.) This is the name, in English practice, of a writ of execution first given by the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. l. c. 19) either upon a judgment for a debt or damages or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the king's court. It is so called because it is in the choice or election of the plaintiff whether he will sue out this writ or a fl. fa. By it the defendant's goods and chattels are appraised and all of them (except oxen and beasts of the plow) are delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part satisfaction of his debt. If the goods are not sufficient, then the moiety of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, are also to be delivered to the plaintiff, to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof of the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired. During this period the plaintiff is called tenant by elegit, and his estate, an estate by elegit. This writ, or its analogue, is in use in some of the United States, as Virginia and Kentucky. See 3 Bl. Comm. 418; Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 254; North American F. Ins. Co. v. Graham, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 197.

Also, one of the simple substances or principles of which, according to early natural philosophers, the physical universe is composed, the four elements pointed out by Empedocles being air, water, earth, and fire. Webster. See Elements.

ELEMENTS. The forces of nature. Popularly, fire, air, earth, and water, anciently supposed to be the four simple bodies of which the world was composed. Encyc. Dict. Often applied in a particular sense to wind and water, as “the fury of the elements.” Cent. Dict.

ELEVATOR. A building containing one or more mechanical elevators, especially a warehouse for the storage of grain; a hoisting apparatus; a lift; a car or cage for lifting and lowering passengers or freight in a hoistway. Cent. Dict.

In Insurance Law

The term has been held not to be limited to the car, or platform, but to include the elevator shaft. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Ladd (C. C. A.) 299 F. 502, 506. It has also been held to include the machinery to which the car is attached, and by which it is operated; Fuller v. Lanett Bleaching & Dye Works, 190 Ala. 208, 67 So. 378, 380; and the fixed equipment necessary to operate the elevator. St. Mary's Mill Co. v. Illinois Oil Co. (Mo. App.) 254 S. W. 735, 738. The term has been interpreted as meaning only a passenger elevator. Jaens & Knuth Co. v. American Indemnity Co., 182 Wis. 556, 196 N. W. 509, 571.

Passenger Elevator

Any elevator ordinarily or customarily used for conveying passengers, though also used for conveying freight, and though not of any particular form laid in any particular way or with any particular kind of gates or safety contrivances. Wilmarth v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. of California, 185 Cal. 536, 143 P. 780, 782, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1120.
ELIGIBILITY. A word which, when used in connection with an office, where there are no explanatory words indicating that it is used with reference to the time of election, may be deemed to refer to the qualification to hold the office rather than to be elected. Bradfield v. Avery, 16 Idaho, 769, 102 P. 657; 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1228; Hoy v. State, 168 Ind. 506, 81 N. E. 509, 11 Ann. Cas. 944; Powell v. Hart, 132 La. 237, 61 So. 233, 235; State v. Edwards, 99 Vt. 1, 130 A. 276, 277. See Eligible.

ELIMINATION. In old English law. The act of banishing or turning out of doors; rejection.

ELINGUATION. The punishment of cutting out the tongue.

ELISORS. In practice. Electors or choosers. Persons appointed by the court to execute writs of "vire", in cases where both the sheriff and coroner are disqualified from acting, and whose duty is to choose—that is, name and return—the jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 355; Co. Litt. 158; 3 Steph. Comm. 597, note; People v. Nakis, 13 Cal. 105, 105 P. 92, 94; Allen v. Com., 12 S. W. 382; 11 Ky. Law Rep. 566; 5 Bac. Abr. 318; 3 East 141; Fortesc. de Laudibus L. 53; Alloc. & Nap. 113; Tidd. Prac. 723, 769; People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 Pac. 890; State v. Hultz, 106 Mo. 41, 16 S. W. 940; Harriman v. State, 2 G. Greene (Iowa) 270. Persons appointed to execute any writ, in default of the sheriff and coroner, are also called "elisors." See Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 Pac. 341. An elisor may be appointed to take charge of a jury retiring to deliberate upon a verdict, when both sheriff and coroner are disqualified or unable to act. People v. Fellows, 122 Cal. 233, 54 Pac. 890; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 692, 48 Pac. 1048, 40 L. R. A. 293.

ELL. A measure of length, answering to the modern yard. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

ELLENBOROUGH'S ACT. An English statute (43 Geo. III. c. 58) punishing offenses against the person.

ELLIPSIS. Omission of words or clauses necessary to complete the construction, but not necessary to convey the meaning. In re Lippincott's Estate, 276 Pa. 283, 120 A. 136, 137.

ELOGIUM. In the civil law. A will or testament.

ELOIGNE. (Fr. éloigner, to remove to a distance; to remove afar off.) In practice. A return to a writ of replevin, when the chattels have been removed out of the way of the sheriff.

ELOIGNMENT. The getting a thing or person out of the way; or removing it to a distance, so as to be out of reach. Garneau v. Mill Co., 8 Wash. 467, 36 Pac. 463.

ELONGATA. In practice. Eloigned; carried away to a distance. The old form of the return made by a sheriff to a writ of replevin, stating that the goods or beasts had been eloigned; that is, carried to a distance, to places to him unknown. 3 Bl. Comm. 148; 3 Steph. Comm. 522; Flitzb. Nat. Brev. 73, 74; Archib. N. Pract. 552. The word eloigne is sometimes used as synonymous with elongata.

ELONGATUS. Eloigned. A return made by a sheriff to a writ de homine replegando, stating that the party to be rebreplied has been eloigned, or conveyed out of his jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Comm. 129.

ELONGAVIT. In England, where in a proceeding by foreign attachment the plaintiff has obtained judgment of appraisement, but by reason of some act of the garnishee the goods cannot be appraised, or where he has removed them from the city, or has sold them, etc., the sergeant-at-mace returns that the garnishee has eloigned them, i. e., removed them out of the jurisdiction, and on this return (called an "elongavit") judgment is given for the plaintiff that an inquiry be made of the goods eloigned. This inquiry is set down for trial, and the assessment is made by a jury after the manner of ordinary issues. Sweet.

ELOPEMENT. The act of a wife who voluntarily deserts her husband to go away with and cohabit with another man. 2 Bl. Comm. 130; State v. O'Higgins, 173 N. C. 768, 100 S. E. 438. The departure of a married woman from her husband and dwelling with an adulterer. Cowell; Tomlin. Also, the act of a man in going away with a woman who has voluntarily left her husband, to indulge in

To constitute an elopement, the wife must not only leave the husband, but go beyond his actual control; for if she abandons the husband, and goes and lives in adultery in a house belonging to him, it is said not to be an elopement. Cogswell v. Tibbetts, 3 N. H. 42.

In a popular sense, also, the act of an unmarried woman in secretly leaving her home with a man, especially with a view to marriage without her parents' consent.

In shipping articles, this term, following the designation of the port of destination, must be construed either as void for uncertainty or as subordinate to the principal voyage stated in the preceding words. Brown v. Jones, 2 G.all. 477, Fed. Cas. No. 2,017.

ELUVIONES. In old pleading. Spring tides. Townsh. Pl. 197.

EMANCIPATION. The act by which one who was unfree, or under the power and control of another, is rendered free, or set at liberty and made his own master. Fremont v. Sandown, 36 N. H. 303; Porter v. Powell, 79 Iowa, 151, 44 N. W. 295, 7 L. R. A. 176, 18 Am. St. Rep. 353; Varney v. Young, 11 Vt. 258.

The term is principally used with reference to the emancipation of a minor child by its parents, which involves an entire surrender of the right to the care, custody, and earnings of such child as well as a renunciation of parental duties. Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Petrowsky (C. C. A.) 230 F. 554, 559; Wabash R. Co. v. McDonels, 183 Ind. 104, 107 N. E. 291, 294; Merithew v. Ellis, 116 Me. 468, 102 A. 301, 302, 2 A. L. R. 1429. The emancipation may be express, as by voluntary agreement of parent and child, or implied from such acts and conduct as import consent, and it may be conditional or absolute, complete or partial. Wallace v. Cox, 136 Tenn. 69, 188 S. W. 611, 612, L. R. A. 1917B, 690.

In Roman Law

The enfranchisement of a son by his father, which was anciently done by the formality of an imaginary sale. This was abolished by Justinian, who substituted the simpler proceeding of a manumission before a magistrate. Inst. 1, 12, 6.

In England

The term "emancipation" has been borrowed from the Roman law, and is constantly used in the law of parochial settlements. 7 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 574, note.

In General

—Emancipation proclamation. An executive proclamation, declaring that all persons held in slavery in certain designated states and districts were and should remain free. It was issued January 1, 1863, by Abraham Lincoln, as president of the United States and commander in chief of its armed forces.

—Partial emancipation. That which frees a child for only a part of the period of minority, or from only a part of the parent's rights, or for some purposes, and not for others. Memphis Steel Const. Co. v. Lister, 138 Tenn. 307, 197 S. W. 902, 903, L. R. A. 1918B, 406.

Emargo is the hindering or detention by any government of ships of commerce in its ports. If the embargo is laid upon ships belonging to citizens of the state imposing it, it is called a "civil embargo." If, as more commonly happens, it is laid upon ships belonging to the enemy, it is called a "hostile embargo." The effect of this latter embargo is that the vessels detained are restored to the rightful owners if no war follows, but are forfeited to the embargoe government if war does follow, the declaration of war being held to relate back to the original seizure and detention. Brown.

The temporary or permanent sequestration of the property of individuals for the purposes of a government, e. g., to obtain vessels for the transport of troops, the owners being reimbursed for this forced service. Man. Int. Law, 148.

EMBASSADOR. See Ambassador.

EMBASSAGE, or EMBASSY. The message or commission given by a sovereign or state to a minister, called an "ambassador," empowered to treat or communicate with another sovereign or state; also the establishment of an ambassador.

EMBER DAYS. In ecclesiastical law. Those days which the ancient fathers called "quattor tempora jejunii" are of great antiquity in the church. They are observed on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, or the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsunfide, Holyrood Day, in September, and St. Lucy's Day, about the middle of December. Brit. c. 53. Our almanace call the weeks in which they fall the "Ember Weeks," and they are now chiefly noticed on account of the ordination of priests and deacons; because the canon appoints the Sundays next after the Ember weeks for the solemn times of ordination, though the bishops, if they please, may ordain on any Sunday or holiday. Enc. Lond.,

Embezzlement is not an offense at common law, but was created by statute. "Embezzlement" includes in its meaning appropriation to one's own use, and therefore the use of the single word "embezzlement." in the indictment or information, contains within itself the charge that the defendant appropriated the money or property to his own use. State v. Wolf, 24 La. Ann. 1163; State v. Hudson, 23 W. Va. 455, 117 S. E. 122, 125.

Embezzlement is common-law larceny extended by statute to cover cases where the stolen property comes originally into the possession of the defendant without a trespass. Moody v. People, 65 Colo. 339, 176 P. 476.

Embezzlement is a species of larceny, and the term is applicable to cases of futile and fraudulent appropriation by clerks, servants, or carriers of property coming into their possession by virtue of their employment. It is distinguished from "larceny," properly so called, as being committed in respect of property which is not at the time in the actual or legal possession of the owner. People v. Burr, 41 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 294; 4 Steph. Comm. 168; Brown v. Moore, 122 Md. 146, 89 A. 494, 496. That is to say, that in embezzlement, the original taking of the property was lawful or with the consent of the owner, while in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. State v. Curtis, 95 A. 322, 284, 5 Boyce (Del.) 518; State v. Thomas, 126 Mo. 230, 107 A. 396, 397; People v. Padlock, 30 Ill. 304, 132 N. E. 240, 242; Splegel v. Levine, 147 N. Y. S. 75, 81, 161 App. Div. 794; Ludlum v. State, 13 Ala. App. 278, 69 So. 255, 266; Davis v. State, 96 Ind. 213, 147 N. E. 766, 770; State v. Henderson, 102 Conn. 558, 129 A. 724, 725. See, also, Grisa v. Shinn, 187 U. S. 131, 23 S. Ct. 96, 47 L. Ed. 130; People v. Toulinson, 102 Cal. 15, 36 P. 566; Wright v. State, 266 S. W. 285, 288; State v. Burke, 192 Wis. 641, 207 N. W. 466, 465; State v. Uglund, 48 N. D. 841, 137 N. W. 237, 238; Tredwell v. U. S. (C. A. C.) 266 F. 350, 352. Both words, however, may be used, as in a bond, as generic terms to indicate the dishonest and fraudulent breach of any duty or obligation upon the part of an employee to pay over to his employer, or account to him for any money, securities, or other personal property, title to which is in the employer, but which may come into the possession of the employee. National Surety Co. v. Williams, 74 Fla. 446, 77 So. 212, 212; Delaware State Bank v. Colton, 102 Kan. 365, 170 P. 932, 936.

Within Pen. Code Tex. 1911, art. 533 (Vernon's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 544), declaring guilty of a felony an officer or clerk of a state bank who "embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies" its funds, "embezzle" refers to acts done for the benefit of the actor as against the bank, "misapply" covers acts having no relation to pecuniary profit or advantage to the doer, while "abstract" means only to take and withdraw from the possession and control of the bank: and while "embezzlement" may include the offenses of abstraction and willful misapplication, either of those offenses may be committed without embezzlement. Ferguson v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 333, 189 S. W. 271, 273. See, however, Winkelman v. State, 114 Neb. 1, 205 N. W. 565, 566.

EMBLEMATA TRIBONIANI. In the Roman law. Alterations, modifications, and additions to the writings of the older jurists, selected to make up the body of the Pandects. Introduce by Tribonian and his associates who constituted the commission appointed for that purpose, with a view to harmonize contradictions, excising obsolete matter, and make the whole conform to the law as understood in Justinian's time, were called by this name. Mackeld. Rom. Law., § 71.

EMBLEMENTS. The vegetable chattels called "emblements" are the corn and other growth of the earth which are produced annually, not spontaneously, but by labor and industry, and thence are called "fructus industriales." Reiff v. Reiff, 64 Pa. 137. See Crop.

The growing crops of those vegetable productions of the soil which are annually produced by the labor of the cultivator. They are deemed personal property, and pass as such to the executor or administrator of the occupier, whether he were the owner in fee, or for life, or for years, if he die before he has legally paid, or consumed, the same; and this, although, being annexed to the soil, they might for some purposes be considered, while growing, as part of the realty. Wharton.

The term also denotes the right of a tenant to take and carry away, after his tenancy has ended, such annual products of the land as have resulted from his own care and labor.

Emblements are the away-going crop: in other words, the crop which is upon the ground and unreaped when the tenant goes away, his lease having determined; and the right to emblements is the right in the tenant to take away the away-going crop, and for that purpose to come upon the land, and do all other necessary things thereon. Brown; Wood v. Noack, 84 Wis. 398, 54 N. W. 786; Davis v. Brocklebank, 9 N. H. 73; Cottle v. Spitzer, 55 Cal. 465, 4 P. 436, 52 Am. Rep. 356; Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 52 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 156, 52 Am. St. Rep. 571; Dinwiddie v. Jordan (Tex. Com. App.) 288 S. W. 130; Miller v. Lewis (Tex. Civ. App.) 277 S. W. 796; Nosbitt v. Thompson, 157 N. Y. S. 166, 269 Misc. 503.

Where a life tenant, having leased the premises, died, and the remainderman did not recognize the lease, the lessee of the life tenant was entitled to the emblements, which are the crops of grain growing yearly, but requiring an outlay of labor or industry, without payment of any compensation for use of the land in harvesting the emblements. Turner v. Turner, 132 Tenn. 592, 179 S. W. 132, 133; Bateman v. Brown (Tex. Civ. App.) 297 S. W. 773, 775.

EMBLLERS DE GENTZ. L. Fr. A stealing from the people. The phrase occurs in the old rolls of parliament: “Whereas divers murders, emblpers de gentz, and robberies are committed,” etc.

EMBOLISM. In medical jurisprudence. The mechanical obstruction of an artery or capillary by some body traveling in the blood current, as, a blood-clot (embolus), a globule of fat, or an air-bubble.

Emboli is to be distinguished from “thrombosis,” a thrombus being a clot of blood formed in the heart or a blood vessel in consequence of some impediment of the circulation from pathological causes, as distinguished from mechanical causes, for example, an alteration of the blood or walls of the blood vessels. When embolism occurs in the brain (called “cerebral embolism”) there is more or less consecutive from the blood in the surrounding parts, and there may be apoplectic shock or paralysis of the brain, and its functional activity may be so far disturbed as to cause entire or partial insanity. See Gundall v. Hasswell, 23 R. I. 506, 51 A. 426.

EMBACEOR. A person guilty of the offense of embracery (q. v.). See Co. Litt. 369.

EMBRACERY. In criminal law. This offense consists in the attempt to influence a jury corruptly to one side or the other, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, entertainments, doughers, and the like. The person guilty of it is called an “embracer.” Brown; State v. Williams, 136 Mo. 239, 38 S. W. 75; Grannis v. Branden, 5 Day (Conn.) 274, 5 Am. Dec. 143; State v. Brown, 95 N. C. 686; Brown v. Beauchamp, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 415, 17 Am. Dec. 81.

Embracer being but an attempt corruptly to influence juror, there is no such crime as to commit embracery. Wiseman v. Commonwealth, 14 Va. 631, 130 S. E. 349, 251.

EMENDA. Amends; something given in preparation for a trespass; or, in old Saxon times, in compensation for an injury or crime. Spelman.

EMENDALS. An old word still made use of in the accounts of the society of the Inner Temple, where so much in emendals at the foot of an account on the balance thereof signifies so much money in the bank or stock of the houses, for repairation of losses, or other emergent occasions. Spelman.

EMENDARE. In Saxon law. To make amends or satisfaction for any crime or trespass committed; to pay a fine; to be fined. Spelman. Emendare so to redeem, or ransom one’s life, by payment of a weregild.

EMENDATIO.

In Old English Law

Amendment, or correction. The power of amending and correcting abuses, according to certain rules and measures. Cowell.

In Saxon Law

A pecuniary satisfaction for an injury; the same as emenda (q. v.). Spelman.

In General

—Emenatio panis et cerevisiae. In old English law. The power of supervising and correcting the weights and measures of bread and ale, (assisting bread and beer.) Cowell.

EMERGE. To arise; to come to light. “Unless a matter happen to emerge after issue joined.” Hale, Anal. § 1.

EMERGENT YEAR. The epoch or date whence any people begin to compute their time.
EMIGRANT. One who quits his country for any lawful reason, with a design to settle elsewhere, and takes his family and property, if he has any, with him. Vattel, b. 1, c. 18, § 224. See Williams v. Fears, 110 Ga. 594, 35 S. E. 699, 50 L. R. A. 580; The Danube (D. C.) 55 F. 985; Benson v. State, 26 Ga. App. 87, 135 S. E. 514.

EMIGRATION. The act of removing from one country or state to another.

It is to be distinguished from "expatriation." The latter means the abandonment of one's country and renunciation of one's citizenship in it, while emigration denotes merely the removal of person and property to another country. The former is usually the consequence of the latter. Emigration is also used of the removal from one section to another of the same country.

EMINENCE. An honorary title given to cardinals. They were called "Illustrissimi" and "reverendissimi" until the pontificate of Urban VIII.

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanenty, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state, on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the territory of the state for the common safety; and in time of peace the legislature may authorize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, construction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Code Ga. 1882, § 2222 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3624).

The right of society, or of the sovereign, to dispose, in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth contained in the state, is called "eminent domain." Jones v. Walker, 2 Paige, 680, Fed. Cas. No. 7,507.

Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it. Beckman v. Saratoga & S. R. Co., 3 Paige (N. Y.) 45, 73, 22 Am. Dec. 679.

"The exaction of money from individuals under the right of taxation, and the appropriation of private property for public use by virtue of the power of eminent domain, must not be confused. In paying taxes the citizen contributes his just and ascertained share to the expenses of the government under which he lives. But when his property is taken under the power of eminent domain, he is compelled to surrender to the public something above and beyond his due proportion for the public benefit. The matter is special. It is in the nature of a compulsory sale to the state." Black, Tax-Titles, § 3.

The term "eminent domain" is sometimes (but inaccurately) applied to the land, buildings, etc., owned directly by the government, and which have not yet passed into any private ownership. This species of property is much better designated as the "public domain," or "national domain."

EMISSARY. A person sent upon a mission as the agent of another; also a secret agent sent to ascertain the sentiments and designs of others, and to propagate opinions favorable to his employer.

EMISSION. In medical jurisprudence. The ejection or throwing out of any secretion or other matter from the body; the expulsion of urine, semen, etc.

EMIT. In American Law

To put forth or send out; to issue. "No state shall emit bills of credit." Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10.

To issue; to give forth with authority; to put into circulation. See Bill of Credit.

The word "emit" is never employed in describing those contracts by which a state binds itself to pay money at a future day for services actually received, or for money borrowed for present use. Nor are instruments executed for such purposes, in common language, denominated "bills of credit." "To emit bills of credit" conveys to the mind the idea of issuing paper intended to circulate through the community, for its ordinary purposes, as money, which paper is redeemable at a future day. Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet. 346, 9 L. Ed. 769; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 438, 7 L. Ed. 801; Ramsey v. Cox, 28 Ark. 383; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 56, 20 S. Ct. 345, 44 L. Ed. 673.

To throw off; give out; discharge. Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Stewart, 15 Ala. App. 466, 73 So. 827, 828.
In Scotch Practice

To speak out; to state in words. A prisoner is said to emit a declaration. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 560.

EMMENAGOQUES. In medical jurisprudence. The name of a class of medicines supposed to have the property of promoting the menstrual discharge, and sometimes used for the purpose of procuring abortion.

EMOTIONAL INSANITY. The species of mental aberration produced by a violent excitement of the emotions or passions, though the reasoning faculties may remain unimpaired. See Insanity.

EMPALEMENT. In ancient law. A mode of inflicting punishment, by thrusting a sharp pole up the fundament. Enc. Loud.

EMPANNEL. See Impanel.

EMPARLANCE. See Imparlance.

EMPEROR. The title of the sovereign ruler of an empire. This designation was adopted by the rulers of the Roman world after the decay of the republic, and was assumed by those who claimed to be their successors in the "Holy Roman Empire," as also by Napoleon. "The sovereigns of Japan and Morocco are often, though with little propriety, called emperors." 10 Encye. Amer. (1929), p. 300. In western speech the former sovereigns of Turkey and China were called emperors. Cent. Dict.

The title "emperor" seems to denote a power and dignity superior to that of a "king." It appears to be the appropriate style of the executive head of a federal government, constructed on the monarchial principle, and comprising in its organization several distinct kingdoms or other quasi sovereign states; as was the case with the German empire from 1871 to 1918. "The proper meaning of emperor is the chief of a confederation of states of which kings are members." Cent. Dict., quoting Encyc. Brit. "In general, an emperor is the holder of a sovereignty extending over conquered or confederated peoples, a king is ruler of a single people. Thus * * * the 'King of England' is 'Emperor of India.'" Webster's New Int. Dict. Before the dissolution of the Austro-Hungarian empire in November, 1918, its monarch was known as the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary.

EMPHYSEUM. In the Roman and civil law. A contract by which a landed estate was leased to a tenant, either in perpetuity or for a long term of years, upon the reservation of an annual rent or canon, and upon the condition that the lessee should improve the property, by building, cultivating, or otherwise, and with a right in the lessee to alien the estate at pleasure or pass it to his heirs by descent, and free from any revocation, reentry, or claim of forfeiture on the part of the grantor, except for non-payment of the rent. Inst. 3, 25, 3; 3 Bl. Comm. 232; Maine, Anc. Law, 290.

The right granted by such a contract, (ius emphyseuticum, or emphyseuticarium.) The real right by which a person is entitled to enjoy another's estate as if it were his own, and to dispose of its substance, as far as can be done without deteriorating it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 326.

EMPHYVEUTA. In the civil law. The person to whom an emphyteusis is granted; the lessee or tenant under a contract of emphyteusis.

EMPHYTHEUTICUS. In the civil law. Founded on, growing out of, or having the character of, an emphyteusis; held under an emphyteusis. 3 Bl. Comm. 232.

EMPIRE. The dominion or jurisdiction of an emperor; the region over which the dominion of an emperor extends; imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

EMPIRIC. A practitioner in medicine or surgery, who proceeds on experience only, without science or legal qualification; a quack. Nelson v. State Board of Health, 108 Ky. 766, 57 S. W. 591, 50 L. R. A. 383; Parks v. State, 339 Ind. 211, 64 N. E. 852, 58 L. R. A. 190.

EMPLAZAMIENTO. In Spanish law. A summons or citation, issued by authority of a judge, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to appear before the tribunal at a designated day and hour.

EMPLASE. To indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.
EMPLOY. To engage in one's service; to use as an agent or substitute in transacting business; to commission and intrust with the management of one's affairs; and, when used in respect to a servant or hired laborer, the term is equivalent to hiring, which implies a request and a contract for a compensation, and has but this one meaning when used in the ordinary affairs and business of life. McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 605; Murray v. Walker, 83 Iowa, 202, 48 N. W. 1075; Malloy v. Board of Education, 102 Cal. 642, 36 P. 948; Gurney v. Railroad Co., 58 N. Y. 371.

EMPLOYEE. This word "is from the French, but has become somewhat naturalized in our language. Strictly and etymologically, it means 'a person employed,' but, in practice in the French language, it ordinarily is used to signify a person in some official employment, and as generally used with us, though perhaps not confined to any official employment, it is understood to mean some permanent employment or position." The word may be more extensive than "clerk" or "officer," and may signify any one in place, or having charge or using a function, as well as one in office. See Kitter v. State, 111 Ind. 324, 12 N. E. 501; Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 153 N. Y. 612, 47 N. E. 915, 38 L. R. A. 402; Frick Co. v. Norfolk & O. V. R. Co., 86 Fed. 738, 32 C. C. A. 31; People v. Board of Police, 75 N. Y. 38; Finance Co. v. Charleston, C. & O. R. Co. (C. C.) 32 Fed. 527; State v. Sartis, 136 Ind. 195, 34 N. E. 1129; Hopkins v. Cromwell, 80 App. Div. 481, 85 N. Y. S. 839.

One who works for an employer; a person working for salary or wages; applied to anyone so working, but usually only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government or to domestic servants. Century Dict., quoted in U. S. v. Schierholz, 137 F. 616, 624; Maryland Casualty Co. v. New Orleans Cotton Seed Oil, etc., Co., 3 Orl. App. (La.) 288; Palmer v. Van Santvoord, 153 N. Y. 612, 47 N. E. 915, 38 L. R. A. 402; Hellwell v. Sweitzer, 278 Ill. 248, 115 N. E. 810, 812.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS. Statutes defining or limiting the occasions and the extent to which employers shall be liable in damages for injuries to their employees occurring in the course of the employment, and particularly (in recent times) abolishing the common-law rule that the employer is not liable if the injury is caused by the fault or negligence of a fellow servant. For the federal Employers' Liability Act April 22, 1906, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65, see 45 USCA §§ 51-59. A Workman's Compensation Act was passed in England in 1877, and similar acts were passed in 1911 in New Jersey, California, Wisconsin, Kansas, Nebraska, and other states, and in 1912 in Illinois, Michigan, Arizona, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. For a short history of this kind of legislation, see State v. Carter, 30 Wyo. 222, 215 P. 477, 480, 28 A. L. R. 1099. See, also, L. R. A. 1916A, 25. A Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act was passed by Congress March 4, 1927 (29 USCA §§ 901-950) providing compensation for disability or death from injury occurring on the navigable waters of the United States, including dry docks, if recovery through workmen's compensation proceedings may not be validly provided by state law.

It does not necessarily import an engagement or rendering services for another. A person may as well be "employed" about his own business as in the transaction of the same for a principal. State v. Canton, 45 Mo. 51.

EMPORIUM. A place for wholesale trade in commodities carried by sea. The name is sometimes applied to a seaport town, but it properly signifies only a particular place in such a town. Smith, Dict. Antiq.

EMPRESARIOS. In Mexican law. Underwriters or promoters of extensive enterprises, aided by concessions or monopolistic grants from government; particularly, persons receiving extensive land grants in consideration of their bringing emigrants into the country and settling them on the lands, with a view of increasing the population and developing the resources of the country. U. S. v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co., 7 S. Ct. 1015, 121 U. S. 325, 30 L. Ed. 949.

EMPRESTITO. In Spanish law. A loan. Something lent to the borrower at his request. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 18, l. 70.

EMPTIO. In the Roman and civil law. The act of buying; a purchase.

EMPTIO BONORUM. A species of forced assignment for the benefit of creditors; being a public sale of an insolvent debtor's estate whereby the purchaser succeeded to all his property, rights, and claims, and became responsible for his debts and liabilities to the extent of a quota fixed before the transfer. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 521.

EMPTIO ET VENDITIO. Purchase and sale; sometimes translated "emption and vendition." The name of the contract of sale in the Roman law. Inst. 3, 25; Bract. fol. 61b. Sometimes made a compound word, empto-venditio.

EMPTIO REI SPERATÆ. A purchase in the hope of an uncertain future profit; the purchase of a thing not yet in existence or not yet in the possession of the seller, as, the cast of a net or a crop to be grown, and the price of which is to depend on the actual gain. On the other hand, if the price is fixed and not subject to fluctuation, but is to be paid whether the gain be greater or less, it is called empto spec. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 400.

EMPTOR. Lat. A buyer or purchaser. Used in the maxim "caecet emptor," let the buyer beware; i. e., the buyer of an article must be on his guard and take the risks of his purchase.

Empetor emit quam minimque potes, venditor vendit quam maximque potes. The buyer purchases for the lowest price he can; the seller sells for the highest price he can. 2 Kent, Comm. 486.

EMTIO. In the civil law. Purchase. This form of the word is used in the Digests and Code. Dig. 13, 1; Cod. 4, 49. See Emptio.

EMTOR. In the civil law. A buyer or purchaser; the buyer. Dig. 13, 1; Cod. 4, 49.

EMTRIX. In the civil law. A female purchaser; the purchaser. Cod. 4, 54, 1.

EN ARELE. L. Fr. In time past. 2 Inst. 506.

EN AUTRE DROIT. In the right of another. See Auter Droit.

EN BANKE. L. Fr. In the bench. 1 Anders. 51.

EN BREVET. In French law. An acte is said to be en brevet when a copy of it has not been recorded by the notary who drew it.

EN DÉCLARATION DE SIMULATION. A form of action used in Louisiana. Its object is to have a contract declared judicially a simulation and a nullity, to remove a cloud from the title, and to bring back, for any legal purpose, the thing sold to the estate of the true owner. Edwards v. Ballard, 20 La. Ann. 169.

EN DEMEURE. In default. Used in Louisiana of a debtor who fails to pay on demand according to the terms of his obligation. See Bryan v. Cox, 3 Mart. (La. N. S.) 674.

En eschange il covient que les esates soient egales. Co. Litt. 50. In an exchange it is desirable that the estates be equal.

EN FAIT. Fr. In fact; in deed; actually.

EN GROS. Fr. In gross. Total; by wholesale.

EN JUICIO. Span. Judicially; in a court of law; in a suit at law. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 8, c. 1.

EN MASSE. Fr. In a mass; in a lump; at wholesale.
EN MORT MEYNE. L. Fr. In a dead hand; in mortmain. Britt. c. 49.

EN OWE L MAIN. L. Fr. In equal hand. The word "oweil" occurs also in the phrase "owelly of partition."

EN RECOUVREMENT. Fr. In French law. An expression employed to denote that an indorsement made in favor of a person does not transfer to him the property in the bill of exchange, but merely constitutes an authority to such person to recover the amount of the bill. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 558.

EN ROUTE. Fr. On the way; in the course of a voyage or journey; in course of transportation. McLean v. U. S., 17 Ct. Cl. 90.

EN VENTRE SA MERE. L. Fr. In its mother's womb. A term descriptive of an unborn child. For some purposes the law regards an infant en ventre as in being. It may take a legacy; have a guardian; an estate may be limited to its use, etc. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

EN VIE. L. Fr. In life; alive. Britt. c. 50.

ENABLE. To give power to do something. In the case of a person under disability as to dealing with another, "enable" has the primary meaning of removing that disability; not of conferring a compulsory power as against that other; 66 L. J. Ch. 208; [1897] A. C. 647.

ENABLING POWER. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seised of the fee the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an "enabling power." 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 1928.

ENABLING STATUTE. The act of 32 Henry VIII. c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others were empowered to make leases for their lives or for twenty-one years, which they could not do before. 2 Bl. Comm. 319; Co. Litt. 44a. The phrase is also applied to any statute enabling persons or corporations to do what before they could not.

ENACH. In Saxon law. The satisfaction for a crime; the recompense for a fault. Skene.

ENACT. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The usual introductory formula in making laws is, "Be it enacted." In re Senate File, 25 Neb. 864, 41 N. W. 981.

ENACTING CLAUSE. That part of a statute which declares its enactment and serves to identify it as an act of legislation proceeding from the proper legislative authority. Various formulas are used for this clause, such as "Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois represented in general assembly," "Be it enacted by the senate and house of represen-tatives of the United States of America in congress assembled." "The general assembly do enact," etc. State v. Patterson, 98 N. C. 660, 4 S. E. 350; Pearce v. Vittum, 193 Ill. 192, 61 N. E. 1116; Territory v. Burns, 6 Mont. 72, 9 P. 432; State v. Reilly, 88 N. J. Law, 104, 95 A. 1005, 1006. A section of a statute denouncing an offense is sometimes spoken of as the "enacting clause." City of Astoria v. Malone, 87 Or. 88, 189 P. 749, 750.

ENAJENACION. In Spanish and Mexican law. Alienation; transfer of property. The act by which the property in a thing, by lucrative title, is transferred, as a donation; or by onerous title, as by sale or barter. In a more extended sense, the term comprises also the contracts of emphytesis, pledge, and mortgage, and even the creation of a servitude upon an estate. Escribne; Mulford v. Le Franc, 23 Cal. 88.

ENBREVER. L. Fr. To write down in short; to abbreviate, or, in old language, "ibreviare;" to put into a schedule. Britt. c. 1.

ENCAUSTUM. In the civil law. A kind of ink or writing fluid appropriate to the use of the emperor. Cod. 1. 23, 6.

ENCEINTE. Pregnant. See Pregnancy.

ENCHESON. The occasion, cause, or reason for which anything is done. Termes de la Ley.

ENCLOSE. In the Scotch law. To shut up a jury after the case has been submitted to them. 2 Alls. Crim. Fr. 634. See Inclose.

ENCLOSURE. See Inclusion.

ENCOMIENDA. In Spanish law. A grant from the crown to a private person of a certain portion of territory in the Spanish colonies, together with the conclusion of a certain number of the native inhabitants, on the feudal principle of commendation. 2 Wool. Pol. Science, 161, 162. Also a royal grant of privileges to the military orders of Spain.

ENCOURAGE. In criminal law. To instigate; to incite to action; to give courage to; to inspire; to embolden; to raise confidence; to make confident; to help; to forward; to advise. Comites v. Parkinson (C. C.) 59 F. 179; True v. Com., 90 Ky. 631; 14 S. W. 894; Johnson v. State, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 621; State v. Pickel, 116 Wash. 600, 200 P. 316, 317; United States v. Strong (D. C.) 263 F. 789, 795; Voris v. People, 75 Colo. 574, 227 P. 551, 553; U. S. v. International Silver Co. (C. C. A.) 271 F. 925, 927; United States v. Ault (D. C.) 263 F. 800, 811.

ENCROACH. To gain unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another; as if one man presses upon the grounds of another too far, or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service, and the lord exact three.
ENCROACHMENT. An encroachment upon a street or highway is a fixture, such as a wall or fence, which illegally intrudes into or invades the highway or incloses a portion of it, diminishing its width or area, but without closing it to public travel. State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122, 45 A. 256, 48 L. R. A. 102; State v. Pomeroys, 73 Wis. 664, 41 N. W. 726; Barton v. Campbell, 54 Ohio St. 147, 42 N. E. 698; Grand Rapids v. Hughes, 15 Mich. 57; State v. Leaver, 62 Wis. 357, 22 N. W. 576; Bloom v. City of Orange, 91 N. J. Law, 376, 103 A. 395; Bier v. Walbaum, 102 N. J. Law, 385, 131 A. 888, 889; State v. Scott, 82 N. H. 278, 132 A. 655, 686.

In the Law of Easements

Where the owner of an easement alters the dominant tenement, so as to impose an additional restriction or burden on the servient tenement, he is said to commit an encroachment. Sweet.

ENCUMBER. See Incumbent.

ENCUMBRANCE. See Incumbrance.

END. Object; Intent. Things are construed according to the end. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, no. 10.

—End on or nearly so. Approaching vessels whose courses diverge not more than one or two points are meeting "end on or nearly so," within article 15 of the Inland Rules (33 US CA § 203), and are required to pass port to port. The Amoco (C. G. A.) 283 F. 299, 393.

—End to end. The expression "end to end," used in a patent claim in describing the relative position of rollers, does not necessarily require that there shall be no longitudinal space between the ends of the rollers, nor impose a limitation which will enable another to avoid infringement by leaving a space between them, where it does not change their function or mode of operation. Stebler v. Riverside Heights Orange Growers' Ass'n (C. C. A.) 205 F. 735, 740.

END LINES. In mining law, the end lines of a claim, as platted or laid down on the ground, are those which mark its boundaries on the shorter dimension, where it crosses the vein, while the "side lines" are those which mark its longer dimension, where it follows the course of the vein. But with reference to extra-lateral rights, if the claim as a whole crosses the vein, instead of following its course, the end lines will become side lines and vice versa. Consolidated Wyoming Gold Min. Co. v. Champion Min. Co. (C. C.) 63 F. 549; Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. Last Chance Min. Co., 171 U. S. 55, 18 S. Ct. 895, 42 L. Ed. 72; Northport Smelting & Refining Co. v. Lone Pine-Surprise Consol. Mines Co. (D. C.) 271 F. 105, 108; Jim Butler

END OF WILL. Whether a will has been signed or attested at the "end" depends on the particular facts and circumstances of each case. In re Peiser's Will, 79 Misc. 668, 149 N. Y. S. 844, 848; In re Rudolph's Estate, 97 Misc. 548, 163 N. Y. S. 411, 412; In re Lowden's Estate, 106 Misc. 707, 175 N. Y. S. 591; In re Moro's Estate, 183 Cal. 29, 190 P. 168, 169, 10 A. L. R. 422.

END SILLS. The sill of a car is one of the main longitudinal timbers which are connected transversely by the end sills, bolsters, and cross-ties. Sills are divided into side sills, intermediate sills, and center sills. The end sill is the transverse member of the under frame of a car framed across the ends of all the longitudinal sills. In passenger cars the end sill comes directly under the end door; the platform with its various parts usually being a separate construction. The platform end sill is the transverse end piece of the platform frame, and is also called the "end timber" and buffer beam on passenger equipment cars. Hill v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 180 Minn. 454, 200 N. W. 485, 486.

ENDENZIE, or ENDENIZEN. To make free; to enfranchise.

ENDOCARDITIS. In medical jurisprudence. An inflammation of the muscular tissue of the heart.

ENDORSE. See Indorse.

ENDOW. To give a dower; to bestow upon; to make pecuniary provision for. Fish v. Fish, 184 Ky. 700, 212 S. W. 586, 587; In re McLure's Estate, 63 Mont. 536, 208 F. 900, 902.

ENDOWED SCHOOLS. In England, certain schools having endowments are distinctively known as "endowed schools;" and a series of acts of parliament regulating them are known as the "endowed schools acts." Mezley & Whitley.

ENDOWMENT. The assignment of dower; the setting off a woman's dower. 2 Bl. Comm. 123.

In appropriations of churches (in English law), the setting off a sufficient maintenance for the vicar in perpetuity. 1 Bl. Comm. 387.

The act of settling a fund, or permanent pecuniary provision, for the maintenance of a public institution, charity, college, etc. A fund settled upon a public institution, etc., for its maintenance or use.

The words "endowment" and "fund," in a statute exempting from taxation the real estate, the furniture and personal property, and the "endowment or fund" of religious and educational corporations, are ejusdem generis, and intended to com-
ENDOWMENT POLICY. In life insurance, a policy which is payable when the insured reaches a given age, or upon his decease, if that occurs earlier. Carr v. Hamilton, 129 U. S. 252, 9 S. Ct. 295, 32 L. Ed. 669; State v. Orear, 45 S. W. 1081, 144 Mo. 157.

ENEMY, in public law, signifies either the state which is at war with another, or a citizen or subject of such state, or a person, partnership, or corporation doing business within the territory of an enemy state or an ally thereof. Swiss Nat. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 267 U. S. 42, 45 S. Ct. 213, 214, 69 L. Ed. 594; Niederländische Petroleum en Asphalt Maatschappij v. Interocian Oil Co., 209 N. Y. S. 45, 46, 208 App. Div. 107; United States v. Fricke (D. C.) 239 F. 673, 675; Rossie v. Garvan (D. O.) 274 F. 447, 453; Tortorello v. Seghorn (N. J. Ch.) 108 A. 398.

Alien Enemy

An alien, that is, a citizen or subject of a foreign state or power, residing within a given country, is called an "alien ami" if the country where he lives is at peace with the country of which he is a citizen or subject; but if a state of war exists between the two countries, he is called an "enemy amid," and in that character is denied access to the courts or aid from any of the departments of government.

Enemy's Property

In international law, and particularly in the usage of prize courts, this term designates any property which is engaged or used in illegal intercourse with the public enemy, whether belonging to an ally or a citizen, as the illegal traffic stamps it with the hostile character and attaches to it all the penal consequences. The Benito Estenger, 176 U. S. 568, 20 S. Ct. 469, 44 L. Ed. 592; The Sally, 8 Cranch, 382, 3 L. Ed. 597; Prize Cases, 2 Black, 674, 17 L. Ed. 459.

Public Enemy

A nation at war with the United States; also every citizen or subject of such nation. Not including robbers, thieves, private depositories, and cattle upon the mariner, or by a release from the lord of all seigniorial rights, etc., which destroys the customary descent, and also all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate. 1 Watk. Coply. 362; 2 Steph. Oomm. 51.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLDS. In English law. The conversion of copyhold into freehold tenure, by a conveyance of the fee-simple of the property from the lord of the manor to the copyholder, or by a release from the lord of all seigniorial rights, etc., which destroys the customary descent, and also all rights and privileges annexed to the copyholder's estate. 1 Watk. Coply. 362; 2 Steph. Oomm. 51.

ENGAGE. To employ or involve one's self; to take part in; to embark on. Smallwood v. Jeter, 42 Idaho, 168, 244 P. 149, 193; Barnett v. Merchants' Life Ins. Co. of Des Moines, Iowa, 87 Okl. 42, 208 P. 271, 274; Nowland v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America, 89 W. Va. 503, 107 S. E. 177, 178; Marion v. Cleveland, 212 Mo. App. 457, 252 S. W. 95.
ENGAGED IN AVIATION. See Aviation.

ENGAGEMENT.

In French Law
A contract. The obligation arising from a quasi contract.
The terms "obligation" and "engagement" are said to be synonymous, (17 Toullier, no. 1;) but the Code seems specially to apply the term "engagement" to those obligations which the law imposes on a man without the intervention of any contract, either on the part of the obligor or the obligee, (article 1370.) An engagement to do or omit to do something amounts to a promise. Rue v. Rue, 21 N. J. Law, 360.

In English Practice
The term has been appropriated to denote a contract entered into by a married woman with the intention of binding or charging her separate estate, or, with stricter accuracy, a promise which in the case of a person sui juris would be a contract, but in the case of a married woman is not a contract, because she cannot bind herself personally, even in equity. Her engagements, therefore, merely operate as dispositions or appointments pro fante of her separate estate. Sweet.

ENGENDER. To cause, to bring about, to excite, to occasion, to call forth. Lacy v. State, 30 Okl. Cr. 273, 238 P. 53, 54.

ENGINE. This is said to be a word of very general significance; and, when used in an act, its meaning must be sought out from the act itself, and the language which surrounds it, and also from other acts in pari materia, in which it occurs. Abbott, J., 6 Maule & S. 102. In a large sense, it applies to all utensils and tools which afford the means of carrying on a trade. But in a more limited sense it means a thing of considerable dimensions, of a fixed or permanent nature, analogous to an erection or building. Id. 182. And see Lettier v. Forsberg, 1 App. D. C. 41; Brown v. Benson, 101 Ga. 753, 29 S. E. 215.

Within Employers’ Liability Law, § 1, par. 2, subd. (a), an “engine” is an ingenious or skilful contrivance used to effect a purpose, and is often synonymous with the word “machine”; machinery being any combination of mechanical means designed to work together so as to effect a given end. Haddad v. Commercial Motor Truck Co., 146 La. 897, 84 So. 197, 198, 9 A. L. R. 1380.

Compound Compressed Air Engine
An engine in which the compressed air is first used in a high pressure cylinder, that is, in a cylinder of relatively small diameter, and after driving the piston connected therewith, instead of being permitted to escape, is conveyed to a low pressure cylinder, that is, to a cylinder of larger diameter, where it still has sufficient expansive force to drive another piston. This operation may again be repeated in a third cylinder or the air be permitted to escape to the atmosphere. H. K. Porter Co. v. Baldwin Locomotive Works (D. C.) 219 F. 226, 229.

ENGLESHERE. A law was made by Canute, for the preservation of his Danes, that, when a man was killed, the hundred or town should be liable to be amerced, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman. This proof was called “Englesheire.” 1 Hale, P. C. 447; 4 Bl. Comm. 196; Spelman.

ENGLETERRE. L. Fr. England.

ENGLISH INFORMATION. In English law. A proceeding in the court of exchequer in matters of revenue.

ENGLISH MARRIAGE. This phrase may refer to the place where the marriage is solemnized, or it may refer to the nationality and domicile of the parties between whom it is solemnized, the place where the union so created is to be enjoyed. 6 Prob. Div. 51.

ENGRAVING. In copyright law. The art of producing on hard material incised or raised patterns, lines, and the like, from which an impression or print is taken. The term may apply to a text or script, but is generally restricted to pictorial illustrations or works connected with the fine arts, not including the reproduction of pictures by means of photography. Wood v. Abbott, 5 Blatchf. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 17,988; Higgins v. Keuffel, 140 U. S. 428, 11 Sup. Ct. 731, 35 L. Ed. 470; In re American Bank Note Co., 27 Misc. Rep. 572, 58 N. Y. Supp. 276.

ENGROSS. To copy the rude draft of an instrument in a fair, large hand. To write out, in a large, fair hand, on parchment.

In Old Criminal Law
To buy up so much of a commodity on the market as to obtain a monopoly and sell again at a forced price.

ENGROSSER. One who engrosses or writes on parchment in a large, fair hand. One who purchases large quantities of any commodity in order to acquire a monopoly, and to sell them again at high prices.

ENGROSSING. In English law. The getting into one’s possession, or buying up, large quantities of corn, or other dead victuals, with intent to sell them again. The total engrossing of any other commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price. 4 Bl. Comm. 158, 159. This was a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment. Steph. Crim. Law, 96. Now repealed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24. 4 Steph. Comm. 291, note.

ENHANCED. This word, taken in an unqualified sense, is synonymous with “increased,” and comprehends any increase of value, however caused or arising. Thornburn v. Doscher (C. C.) 32 Fed. 812.

ENHERITIA PARS. The share of the eldest. A term of the English law descriptive of the lot or share chosen by the eldest of coparencers when they make a voluntary partition. The first choice (primer election) belongs to the eldest. Co. Litt. 166.

Enitia pars semper praferenda est propter privilegium statu. Co. Litt. 106. The part of the elder sister is always to be preferred on account of the privilege of age.

ENJOIN. To require; command; positively direct. To require a person, by writ of injunction from a court of equity, to perform, or to abstain or desist from, some act. Clifford v. Stewart, 95 Me. 38, 40 Atl. 52; Lawrence v. Cooke, 32 Hun. 126; Brimberg v. Hartenfeld Bag Co., 89 N. J. Eq. 425, 105 A. 68, 69.

ENJOYMENT. The exercise of a right; the possession and fruition of a right, privilege or incorporeal hereditament.

Adverse Enjoyment

The possession or exercise of an easement, under a claim of right against the owner of the land out of which such easement is derived. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 42; Cox v. Forrest, 60 Md. 79.

Quiet Enjoyment

Covenant for. See Covenant.

ENLARGE. To make larger; to increase; to extend a time limit; to grant further time. Also to set at liberty one who has been imprisoned or in custody.

ENLARGER L'ESTATE. A species of release which inures by way of enlarging an estate, and consists of a conveyance of the ulterior interest to the particular tenant; as if there be tenant for life or years, remainder to another in fee, and he in remainder releases all his right to the particular tenant and his heirs, this gives him the estate in fee. 1 Steph. Comm. 518.

ENLARGING. Extending, or making more comprehensive; as an enlarging statute, which is a remedial statute enlarging or extending the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 86, 87.

ENLISTMENT. The act of one who voluntarily enters the military or naval service of the government, contracting to serve in a subordinate capacity. Morrissey v. Perry, 137 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 34 L. Ed. 644; Bab-ENROLLMENT. The act of putting upon a roll.

In English law. The registering or entering on the rolls of chancery, king's bench, common pleas, or exchequer, or by the clerk of the peace in the records of the quarter sessions, of any lawful act; as a recognition, a deed of bargain and sale, and the like. Jacob.

ENROLLMENT OF VESSELS. In the laws of the United States on the subject of merchant shipping, the recording and certification of vessels employed in coastwise or inland navigation; as distinguished from the "registration" of vessels employed in foreign commerce. U. S. v. Leetzel, 3 Wall. 566, 18 L. Ed. 67.

ENROLLMENT RECORDS. All the testimony and exhibits tending to establish age that were in evidence before the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the conclusions of the Commission based thereon from the date of the application for enrollment of any particular individual up to the date of the ascertainment by the Commission as to whether the name of such person was intended to be included upon the final roll of the nation in which he claimed citizenship. Campbell v. McSpadden, 44 Okl. 138, 44 P. 1138, 1139; Scott v. Brakel, 43 Okl. 655, 143 P. 510, 511; Perryman v. Sharp, 71 Okl. 242, 176 P. 526, 528; Winsor v. Wilkinson, 98 Okl. 188, 244 P. 716, 718; Duncan v. Byars, 44 Okl. 538, 141 P. 1033, 1054.

ENS LEGIS. L. Lat. A creature of the law; an artificial person, as contrasted with a natural person. Applied to corporations, considered as deriving their existence entirely from the law.

ENSCHEDULE. To insert in a list, account, or writing.

ENSEAL. To seal. Ensealing is still used as a formal word in conveyancing.

ENSERVER. L. Fr. To make subject to a service or servitude. Britt. c. 54.

ENSUE. To follow after; to follow in order or train of events. Agricultural Publishers' Ass'n v. Homestead Co., 197 Iowa, 380, 197 N. W. 314.

ENTAIL, n. To settle or limit the succession to real property; to create an estate tail.

ENTAIL, v. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 66; Cowell; 2 Bl. Comm. 112, note. Stearns v. Curry, 306 Ill. 94, 137 N. E. 471, 472.

Entail, in legal treatises, is used to signify an estate tail, especially with reference to the restraint which such an estate imposes upon its own-er, or, in other words, the points wherein such an estate differs from an estate in fee-simple. And this is often its popular sense; but sometimes it is, in popular language, used differently, so as to signify a succession of life-estates, as when it is said that "an entail ends with A.,” meaning that A. is the first person who is entitled to bar or cut off the entail, being in law the first tenant in tail. Motley & Whitley.

Break or Bar an Entail

To free an estate from the limitations imposed by an entail and permit its free disposition, ancienly by means of a fine or common recovery, but now by deed in which the tenant and next heir join.

Quasi Entail

An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a "quasi entail;” the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail, (for the statute De Donis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inheritance,) but yet so far in the nature of an estate-tail that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the ceutul qui vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body. Wharton.

ENTAILED. Settled or limited to specified heirs, or in tail.

ENTAILED MONEY. Money directed to be invested in realty to be entailed. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, §§ 70, 71, 72.

ENTAILMENT. An interference with and curtailment of the ordinary rules pertaining to devolution by inheritance; a limitation and direction by which property is to descend different from the course which it would take if the creator of the entailment, grantor or testator, had been content that the estate should devolve in regular and general succession to heirs at law in the statutory order of precedence and sequence. Gardner v. Anderson, 114 Kan. 778, 227 P. 745, 748.

ENTENCION. In old English law. The plaintiff's count or declaration.

ENTENDMENT. The old form of intendment (q. v.) derived directly from the French, and used to denote the true meaning or significance of a word or sentence; that is, the understanding or construction of law. Cowell.

ENTER.

In the Law of Real Property

To go upon land for the purpose of taking possession of it. In strict usage, the entering is preliminary to the taking possession but in common parlance the entry is now merged in the taking possession. See Entry.
In Practice

To place anything before a court, or upon or among the records, in a formal and regular manner, and usually in writing; as to "enter an appearance," to "enter a judgment." In this sense the word is nearly equivalent to setting down formally in writing, in either a full or abridged form.

In General

—Entering short. When bills not due are paid into a bank by a customer, it is the custom of some bankers not to carry the amount of the bills directly to his credit, but to "enter them short," as it is called, i.e., to note down the receipt of the bills, their amounts, and the times when they become due in a previous column of the page, and the amounts when received are carried forward into the usual cash column. Sometimes, instead of entering such bills short, bankers credit the customer directly with the amount of the bills as cash, charging interest on any advances they may make on their account, and allow him at once to draw upon them to that amount. If the banker becomes bankrupt, the property in bills entered short does not pass to his assignees, but the customer is entitled to them if they remain in his hands, or to their proceeds, if received, subject to any lien the banker may have upon them. Wharton.

ENTERCOURT. L. Fr. A party challenging (claiming) goods; he who has placed them in the hands of a third person. Kelham.

ENTERTAINMENT. This word is synonymous with "board," and includes the ordinary necessities of life. See Scattergood v. Waterman, 2 Miles (Pa.) 323; Lasar v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 549, 58 P. 161; In re Breslin, 45 Hun, 213. Hospitable provision for the wants of a guest, especially a provision for the table. City of Ft. Smith v. Gunter, 106 Ark. 371, 154 S. W. 181, 183.

ENTHUSIASTS. Those who believe far more than they can prove and can prove far more than any other one can believe. Peskind v. State, 115 Ohio St. 279, 152 N. E. 670.

ENTIRE. Whole; without division, separation, or diminution; unmingled; complete in all its parts; not participated in by others. 15 Cyc. 1054; 11 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 48; Miller v. Walley, 122 Miss. 521, 84 So. 466, 468; City of Waco v. Texas Life Ins. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 223 S. W. 245, 247.

ENTIRE CONTRACT. See Contract.

ENTIRE DAY. This phrase signifies an undivided day, not parts of two days. An entire day must have a legal, fixed, precise time to begin, and a fixed, precise time to end. A day, in contemplation of law, comprises all the twenty-four hours, beginning and ending at twelve o'clock at night. Robertson v. State, 43 Ala. 325. In a statute requiring the closing of all liquor saloons during "the entire day of any election," etc., this phrase means the natural day of twenty-four hours, commencing and terminating at midnight. Hallin v. State, 7 Tex. App. 30.

ENTIRE INTEREST. The whole interest or right, without diminution. Where a person in selling his tract of land sells also his entire interest in all improvements upon public land adjacent thereto, this vests in the purchaser only a quitclaim of his interest in the improvements. McLeroy v. Duckworth, 13 La. Ann. 410.

ENTIRE STRUCTURE. Under lien statute. Not a completed, as distinguished from an uncompleted, building, but a new structure, not before existing, as distinguished from betterments and repairs on previously constructed improvements. Atkinson v. Colorado Title & Trust Co., 59 Colo. 528, 151 P. 457, 461.

ENTIRE TENANCY. A sole possession by one person, called "severalty," which is contrary to several tenancy, where a joint or common possession is in one or more.

ENTIRE USE, BENEFIT, ETC. These words in the habendum of a trust-deed for the benefit of a married woman are equivalent to the words "sole use," or "sole and separate use," and consequently her husband takes nothing under such deed. Heathman v. Hall, 38 N. C. 414.

ENTIRETY. The whole, in contradistinction to a moiety or part only. When land is conveyed to husband and wife, they do not take by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety. 2 Kent, Comm. 132; 4 Kent, Comm. 382. Parceners, on the other hand, have not an entirety of interest, but each or only entitled to the whole of a distinct moiety. 2 Bl. Comm. 188. See Estate by the Entirety.

The word is also used to designate that which the law considers as one whole, and not capable of being divided into parts. Thus, a judgment, it is held, is an entirety, and, if void as to one of the two defendants, cannot be valid as to the other. So, if a contract is an entirety, no part of the consideration is due until the whole has been performed.

In Ecclesiastical Law

To entitle is to give a title or ordination as a minister.

ENTREBAT. L. Fr. An intruder or interloper. *Britt. c. 114.

ENTREPÔT. A warehouse or magazine for the deposit of goods. In France, a building or place where goods from abroad may be deposited, and from whence they may be withdrawn for exportation to another country, without paying a duty. Brandt; Webster.

ENTRY.

In Real Property Law

Entry is the act of going peaceably upon a piece of land which is claimed as one's own, but is held by another person, with the intention and for the purpose of taking possession of it.

Entry is a remedy which the law affords to an injured party ousted of his lands by another person who has taken possession thereof without right. This remedy (which must in all cases be pursued peaceably) takes place in three only out of the five species of ouster, viz., abatement, Intrusion, and disseisin; for, as in these three cases the original entry of the wrong-doer is unlawful, so the wrong may be remedied by the mere entry of the former possessor. But it is otherwise upon a discontinuance or deforciement, for in these latter two cases the former possessor cannot remedy the wrong by entry, but must do so by action, inasmuch as the original entry being in these cases lawful, and therefore conferring an apparent right of possession, the law will not suffer such apparent right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Brown. See Innes v. Mims, 1 Ala. 674; Moore v. Hodgdon, 18 N. H. 143; Riley v. People, 29 Ill. App. 139; Johnson v. Cobb, 29 S. C. 375, 7 S. E. 601.

—Forible entry. See that title.

—Re-entry. The resumption of the possession of leased premises by the landlord on the tenant's failure to pay the stipulated rent or otherwise to keep the conditions of the lease.

—Open entry. An entry upon real estate, for the purpose of taking possession, which is not clandestine nor effected by secret artifice or stratagem, and (in some states by statute) one which is accomplished in the presence of two witnesses. Thompson v. Kenyon, 100 Mass. 108.

In Criminal Law

Entry is the unlawful making one's way into a dwelling or other house, for the purpose of committing a crime therein.

In cases of burglary, the least entry with the whole or any part of the body, hand, or foot, or with any instrument or weapon, introduced for the purpose of committing a felony, is sufficient to complete the offense. 3 Inst. 64. And see Walker v. State, 63 Ala. 49, 35 Am. Rep. 1; Conner v. Glover, 111 Mass. 402; Franco v. State, 42 Tex. 239; State v. McCull, 4 Ala. 644, 39 Am. Dec. 314; Pen. Code N. Y. § 501; Vernon's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 1393.

In Practice

Entry denotes the formal inscription upon the rolls or records of a court of a note or minute of any of the proceedings in an action; and it is frequently applied to the filing of a proceeding in writing, such as a notice of appearance by a defendant, and, very generally, to the filing of the judgment roll as a record in the office of the court. Thomason v. Ruggles, 60 Cal. 425, 11 P. 20; State v. Lamm, 9 S. D. 429; N. W. 552; McMillan v. Town of Plymouth, Electric Light & Power Co., 70 Ind. App. 239, 123 N. E. 448, 445; State v. Marty, 52 N. D. 478, 203 N. W. 679, 681; Beuhler v. Beuhler Realty Co., 155 La. 319, 99 So. 279, 277; Ex parte Rains, 115 Tex. 428, 257 S. W. 217, 220; Dawson v. Phillips, 78 W. Va. 14, 85 S. E. 456, 457; The Washington (C. C. A.), 16 F.(2d) 206, 208; Littlejohn v. Littlejohn, 226 Mass. 326, 128 N. E. 425, 426; City of Talladega v. Jackson-Trukey Lumber Co., 209 Ala. 106, 95 So. 455, 458; State v. Ellis, 211 Ala. 489, 100 So. 866, 867.

—Entry of cause for trial. In English practice. The proceeding by a plaintiff in an action who had given notice of trial, Depositing with the proper officer of the court the nisi prius record, with the panel of jurors annexed, and thus bringing the issue before the court for trial.

—Entry on the roll. In former times, the parties to an action, personally or by their counsel, used to appear in open court and make their mutual statements until such time, in steal of as at the present day delivering their mutual pleadings, until they arrived at the issue or precise point in dispute between them. During the progress of this oral statement, a minute of the various proceedings was made on parchment by an officer of the court appointed for that purpose. The parchment then became the record; in other words, the official history of the suit. Long after the practice of oral pleading had fallen into disuse, it continued necessary to enter the proceedings in like manner upon the parchment roll, and this was called "entry on the roll," or making up the "issue roll." But by a rule of H. T. 4 Wm. IV, the practice of making up the issue roll was abolished; and it was only necessary to make up the issue in the form prescribed for the purpose by a rule of H. T. 1853, and to deliver the same to the court and to the opposite party. The issue which was delivered to the court was called the "nisi prius record," and that was regarded as the official history of the suit, in like manner as the issue roll formerly was. Under the present practice, the issue roll or nisi prius record consists of the papers delivered to the court, to facilitate the trial of the action, these papers constituting the pleadings simply, with the notice of trial. Brown.

In Commercial Law

Entry denotes the act of a merchant, trader, or other business man in recording in his account-books the facts and circumstances of a sale, loan, or other transaction. Also the note or record so made. Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 517; U. S. v. Crescent (D. C.) 34 F. 39. The books in which such memoranda are first (or originally) inscribed are called "books of original entry," and are prima facie evidence for certain purposes.

—Entry in regular course of business. A record setting forth a fact or transaction made by one in the ordinary and usual course of one's business, employment, office or profession, which it was the duty of the enterer in such manner to make, or which was commonly and regularly made, or which it was convenient to make, in the conduct of the business to which such entry pertains. Leonard v. State, 100 Ohio St. 456, 127 N. E. 464, 468; Bolden v. State, 140 Tenn. 118, 203 S. W. 755.

In Revenue Law

The entry of imported goods at the custom house consists in submitting them to the inspection of the revenue officers, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon. U. S. v. Legg, 105 F. 960, 45 C. C. A. 124; U. S. v. Baker, 24 Fed. Cas. 963; U. S. v. Selendberg (C. C.) 17 F. 293.

In Parliamentary Law

The "entry" of a proposed constitutional amendment or of any other document or

In Copyright Law

Depositing with the register of copyrights the printed title of a book, pamphlet, etc., for the purpose of securing copyright on the same. The old formula for giving copyright notice was, "Entered according to act of congress," etc.

In Public Land Laws

Under the provisions of the land laws of the United States, the term "entry" denotes the filing at the land-office, or inscription upon its records, of the documents required to found a claim for a homestead or pre-emption right, and as preliminary to the issuing of a patent for the land. Chotard v. Pope, 12 Wheat. 588, 6 L. Ed. 737; Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541; 10 S. Ct. 350, 33 L. Ed. 761; Goddard v. Storch, 57 Kan. 714, 48 P. 15; Goodnow v. Wells, 67 Iowa, 654, 25 N. W. 894; Stephens v. Terry, 178 Ky. 129, 198 S. W. 768, 771.

The word "entry," as used in the public land laws, covers all methods by which a right to acquire title to public lands may be initiated. United States v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 204 F. 485, 487.

—Entry by court. Acts 1923, c. 6, amending Acts 1921, c. 112, § 138, provides that county court may enter upon lands and build roads and within 60 days after such entry shall petition for assessment of compensation. An "entry" within statute means the establishing of the road on, and appropriation of, the land, by a proper order of the county court. To effect an entry under the statute it is not necessary that the county court go upon the lands and begin the work of construction. McGibbon v. Roane County Court, 95 W. Va. 338, 121 S. E. 99, 104.

—Homestead entry. An entry under the United States land laws for the purpose of acquiring title to a portion of the public domain under the homestead laws, consisting of an affidavit of the claimant's right to enter, a formal application for the land, and payment of the money required. Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 10 S. Ct. 112, 33 L. Ed. 363; Dealy v. U. S., 152 U. S. 539, 14 S. Ct. 680, 38 L. Ed. 545; McConley v. Essig (C. C.) 118 F. 277; Whitmire v. Spears, 212 Ala. 573, 583, 103 So. 686, 689.

—Pre-emption entry. An entry of public lands for purchase under the pre-emption laws, giving the entryman a preferred right to acquire the land by virtue of his occupation and improvement of it. Hartman v. Warren, 76 F. 161, 22 C. C. A. 30; McFadden v. Mountain View Min. Co. (C. C.) 57 F. 154.

In Mining Law

A place in coal mines used by the miners and other workmen generally in going to and from their work, through which coal is hauled from the necks of the rooms to the foot of the shaft; a "room" being the place in which a miner works and from which he mines coal. Ricardo v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 100 Kan. 95, 103 P. 641, 643.

In Scotch Law

The term refers to the acknowledgment of the title of the heir, etc., to be admitted by the superior.

ENTRY, WRIT OF. In old English practice. This was a writ made use of in a form of real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withheld the same from the demandant.

Its object was to regain the possession of lands of which the demandant, or his ancestors, had been unjustly deprived by the tenant of the freehold, or those under whom he claimed, and hence it belonged to the possessory division of real actions. It decided nothing with respect to the right of property, but only restored the demandant to that situation in which he was (or by law ought to have been) before the dispossessory committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 180. It was usual to specify in such writs the degree or degrees within which the writ was brought, and it was said to be "in the per" or "in the per and caul," according as there had been one or two descendents or alienations from the original wrongdoer. If more than two such transfers had intervened, the writ was said to be "in the post." See 3 Bl. Comm. 181. See, further, Writ of Entry.

—Entry ad communem legem. Entry at common law. The name of a writ of entry which lay for a reversioner after the alienation and death of the particular tenant for life, against him who was in possession of the land.
Brown.

—Entry ad terminum qui praterit. The writ of entry ad terminum qui praterit lies where a man leases land to another for a term of years, and the tenant holds over his term.
And if lands he leased to a man for the term of another's life, and he for whose life the lands are leased dies, and the lessee holds over, then the lessor shall have this writ.
Termes de la Ley.

—Entry for marriage in speech. A writ of entry causa matrimonii praequiqui lies where lands or tenements are given to a man upon condition that he shall take the donor to be his wife within a certain time, and he does not espouse her within the said term, or espouses another woman, or makes himself priest. Termes de la Ley.

—Entry in casu consimili. A writ of entry in casu consimili lies where a tenant for life or by the curtesy aliens in fee. Termes de la Ley.

—Entry in the case provided. A writ of entry in casu proviso lies if a tenant in dower alien in fee, or for life, or for another's life, living the tenant in dower. Termes de la Ley.

—Entry without assent of the chapter. A writ of entry sine asessu capituli lies where an abbot, prior, or such as hath covert or common seal, aliens lands or tenements of the right of his church, without the assent of the covert or chapter, and dies. Termes de la Ley.

ENUMERATED. This term is often used in law as equivalent to “mentioned specifically,” “designated,” or “expressly named or granted”; as in speaking of “enumerated” governmental powers, items of property, or articles in a tariff schedule. See Bloomer v.
Todd, 3 Wash. T. 599, 19 P. 135, 1 L. R. A.
111; Wolff v. U. S., 71 F. 291, 18 C. O. A. 41;
San Francisco v. Pennie, 93 Cal. 465, 29 P.
69; Cutting v. Cutting, 20 Hun, 365.

Enumeratio infrarn regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated. Bac. Aph. 17.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. The specification of one thing is the exclusion of a different thing. A maxim more generally expressed in the form “expressio unius est exclusio alterius.” (q. v.)

ENUMERATORS. Persons appointed to collect census papers or schedules. 33 & 34 Vict.

ENURE. To operate or take effect. To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person.
A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion; that is, it has the same effect for him as for the tenant for life. Often written “inure.”

ENVY. In international law. A public minister of the second class, ranking next after an ambassador.

Envoys are either ordinary or extraordi-ary; by custom the latter is held in greater consideration.

EO DIE. Lat. On that day; on the same day.

EO INSTANTE. Lat. At that instant; at the very or same instant; immediately. 1
Litt. 298a; 1 Coke 158.

EO INTUITU. Lat. With or in that view; with that intent or object. Hale, Anal. § 2.

EO LOCI. Lat. In the civil law. In that state or condition; in that place, (eo loco.) Calvin.

EO NOMINE. Lat. Under that name; by that appellation. Perinde ac si eo nomine libri tradita sunt, just as if it had been deliered to you by that name. Inst. 2, 1, 43.
A common phrase in the books.

Eodem ligamine quo ligatum est dissolvitur.
A bond is released by the same formalities with which it is contracted. Co. Litt. 212b; Broom, Max. 891.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, dissolvitur.
In the manner in which [by the same means by which] a thing is constituted, is it dissolved. 6 Coke, 536.

EORLE. In Saxon law. An earl.

EOTH. In Saxon law. An oath.

EPIDEMIC. This term, in its ordinary and popular meaning, applies to any disease which is widely spread or generally prevailing at a given place and time. Pohalski v. Mutual L.

EPILEPSY. In medical jurisprudence. A disease of the brain, which occurs in paroxysms with uncertain intervals between them. Vulgarly called “fits.” Westphall v.
Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal. App. 754, 151 P. 159, 162; Busch v. Gruber, 96 N. J.
Eq. 1, 131 A. 101.

The disease is generally organic, though it may be functional and symptomatic of irritation in other parts of the body. The attack is characterized by loss of consciousness, sudden falling down, distortion of the eyes and face, grinding or grasping of the teeth, stertorous respiration, and more or less severe muscular spasms or convulsions. Epilepsy, thought of a disease of the brain, is not to be regarded as a form of insanity, in the sense that a person thus afflicted can be said to be permanently insane, for there may be little or no mental aberration in the intervals between the attacks. But the paroxysm is frequently followed by a temporary insanity, varying in particular instances from slight alienation to the most violent mania. In the latter form the affection is known as "epileptic fury." But this generally passes off within a few days. But the course of the principal disease is generally one of deterioration, the brain being gradually more and more deranged in its functions in the intervals of attack, and the memory and intellectual powers in general becoming enfeebled, leading to a greatly impaired state of mental efficiency, or to dementia, or a condition bordering on imbecility. See Arens v. Anderson, 2 Pittsb. R. (Pa.) 318; Lawton v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 2 Cush. (Mass.) 357.

Proof of epilepsy does not necessarily directly establish insanity, as epilepsy is not as a matter of fact or law insanity, though evidence thereof may bear on the mental condition of the afflicted person to the extent of establishing insanity. Oborn v. State, 126 N. W. 797, 747, 142 Wis. 249, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956.

Hystero-epilepsy

A condition initiated by an apparently mild attack of convulsive hystera, followed by an epileptiform convolution, and succeeded by a period of "clownism" (Osler) in which the patient assumes a remarkable series of droll contortions or cataleptic poses, sometimes simulating attitudes expressive of various passions, as, fear, joy, eroticism, etc. The final stage is one of delirium with unusual hallucinations. The attack differs from true epilepsy in that the convulsions may continue without serious result for several successive days, while true epilepsy, if persistent, is always serious, associated with fever, and frequently fatal.

EPIMENIA. Expenses or gifts. Blount.

EPHINANY. A Christian festival, otherwise called the "Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles," observed on the 6th of January, in honor of the appearance of the star to the three magi, or wise men, who came to adore the Messiah, and bring him presents. It is commonly called "Twelfth Day." Enc. Lond.

EPIQUEYA. In Spanish law. A term synonymous with "equity" in one of its senses, and defined as "the benignant and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person."

EPISCOPACY. The office of overlooking or overseeing; the office of a bishop, who is to overlook and oversee the concerns of the church. A form of church government by diocesan bishops. Trustees of Diocese of Central New York v. Colgrove, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 306.

EPISCOPALIA. In ecclesiastical law. Synodals, pentecostals, and other customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, formerly collected by the rural deans. Cowell.

EPISCOPALIAN. Of or pertaining to episcopacy, or to the Episcopal Church.

EPISCOPATE. A bishopric. The dignity or office of a bishop.

EPISCOPUS.

In the Civil Law

An overseer; an inspector. A municipal officer who had the charge and oversight of the bread and other provisions which served the citizens for their daily food. Victat.

In Medieval History

A bishop; a bishop of the Christian church.

In General

-Episopus puero rum. It was an old custom that upon certain feasts some lay person should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them pretend to exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several lusious actions, for which reason he was called "bishop of the boys," and this custom obtained in England long after several constitutions were made to abolish it. Blount.

Episcopus alterius mandato quam regis non tenetur obtentare. Co. Litt. 134. A bishop needs not obey any mandate save the king's.

Episcopus tenet placitum, in curia christianitas, de iles que mere sunt spiritualia. 12 Coke, 44. A bishop may hold plea in a Court Christian of things merely spiritual.

EPISTOLA. A letter; a charter; an instrument in writing for conveyance of lands or assurance of contracts. Calvin; Spelman.

EPISTOLAE. In the civil law. Rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision.

Answers of the emperors to petitions.

The answers of counselors, (juris-consulti,) as Ulpián and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called "epistolae."

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as litterae. Victat.

EPOCH. The time at which a new computation is begun; the time whence dates are numbered. Enc. Lond.

EQUAL AND UNIFORM TAXATION. Taxes are said to be "equal and uniform" when no person or class of persons in the taxing district, whether it be a state, county, or city, is taxed at a different rate than are other persons in the same district upon the same value or the same thing, and where the objects of taxation are the same, by whomsoever owned or whatsoever they may be. Norris v. Waco, 57 Tex. 641; People v. Whyler, 41 Cal. 355; The Railroad Tax Cases (C. C.) 13 F. 753; Ottawa County v. Nelson, 19 Kan. 239.

EQUAL DEGREE. Persons are said to be related to a decedent "in equal degree" when they are all removed by an equal number of steps or degrees from the common ancestor. Fidler v. Higgins, 21 N. J. Eq. 102; Helmes v. Elliott, 89 Tenn. 446, 14 S. W. 930, 10 L. R. A. 553.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS. The equal protection of the laws of a state is extended to persons within its jurisdiction, within the meaning of the constitutional requirement, when its courts are open to them on the same conditions as to others, with like rules of evidence and modes of procedure, for the security of their persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts; when they are subjected to no restrictions in the acquisition of property, the enjoyment of personal liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which do not generally affect others; when they are liable to no other or greater burdens and charges than such as are laid upon others; and when no different or greater punishment is enforced against them for a violation of the laws. State v. Montgomery, 94 Me. 192, 47 A. 165, 50 Am. St. Rep. 386. And see Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 14 S. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Carland, 5 Mont. 146, 3 Pac. 134; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 25, 25 L. Ed. 889; Cotting v. Godard, 138 U. S. 79, 22 S. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92; State Board of Assessors v. Central R. Co., 48 N. J. Law, 146, 4 A. 578; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 9 S. Ct. 207, 32 L. Ed. 553; State v. Sixth Taxing Dist., 104 Conn. 192, 132 A. 561, 563; Harrison v. Candle, 141 S. C. 407, 139 S. E. 842, 845; South Carolina v. McMaster, 257 U. S. 63, 35 S. Ct. 504, 505, 506, 59 L. Ed. 839; Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana v. Police Jury of Red River Parish, 140 La. 42, 72 So. 802, 804; Sealy v. Dussel, 137 La. 485, 102 So. 581; Davis v. Florida Power Co., 64 Fla. 246, 60 So. 759, 766, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 965; Power Mfg. Co. v. Saunders, 274 U. S. 490, 47 S. Ct. 678, 679, 71 L. Ed. 1165; City of New Orleans v. Le Blanc, 139 La. 113, 71 So. 248, 250.

Equality is equity. Fran. Max. 9, max. 3.

Thus, where an heir bears in an incumbrance for less than is due upon it, (except it be to protect an incumbrance to which he himself is entitled,) he shall be allowed no more than what he really paid for it, as against other incumbrancers upon the estate. 2 Vent. 353; 1 Vern. 48; 1 Salk. 155.

EQUALIZATION. The act or process of making equal or bringing about conformity to a common standard. The process of equalizing assessments or taxes, as performed by "boards of equalization" in various states, consists in comparing the assessments made by the local officers of the various counties or other taxing districts within the jurisdiction of the board and reducing them to a common and uniform basis, increasing or diminishing by such percentage as may be necessary, so as to bring about, within the entire territory affected, a uniform and equal ratio between the assessed value and the actual cash value of property. The term is also applied to a similar process of leveling or adjusting the assessments of individual taxpayers, so that the property of one shall not be assessed at a higher (or lower) percentage of its market value than the property of another. See Harney v. Mitchell County, 44 Iowa, 203; Wallace v. Bullen, 6 Old. 757, 54 P. 974; Poe v. Howell (N. M.) 67 P. 62; Chamberlain v. Walter, 60 Fed. 792; State v. Karr, 64 Neb. 514, 90 N. W. 298; People v. Orvis, 301 Ill. 550, 135 N. E. 787, 788, 24 A. L. R. 325; People v. Militard, 307 Ill. 556, 139 N. E. 113, 115.

EQUALLY DIVIDED. Provision in will that property shall be "equally divided," or divided "share and share alike" means that the property shall be divided per capita and not per stirpes. However, these phrases may be so modified by other parts of the will as to require distribution per stirpes. In re Mays' Estate, 197 Mo. App. 555, 196 S. W. 1099, 1040; In re Flint, 118 Misc. 134, 192 N. Y. S. 630; Prather v. Watson's Ex'r, 187 Ky. 709, 220 S. W. 532, 533; Garnier v. Garnier, 265 Pa. 175, 108 A. 586, 586; Burton v. Cahill, 193 N. C. 603, 135 S. E. 332, 335; In re Bailey's Estate, 124 Misc. 466, 209 N. Y. S. 137, 141; Rogers v. Burress, 150 Ky. 766, 251 S. W. 809, 811; In re Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 213 N. Y. 168, 107 N. E. 340, 342, 2 A. L. R. 910; In re Leverich's Will, 123 Misc. 130, 210 N. Y. S. 605, 606; Siedlaczek v. Drezury, 220 App. Div. 446, 221 N. Y. S. 625, 628.

EQUIERY. An officer of state under the master of the horse.

EQUES. Lat. In Roman and old English law. A knight.

EQUILOCUS. An equal. It is mentioned in Simeon Dunelm, A. D. 882. Jacob.

EQUINOXES. The two periods of the year (vernal equinox about March 21st, and autumnal equinox about September 22d) when the time from the rising of the sun to its setting EQUIPMENT.

EQUITABLE. Just; conformable to the principles of justice and right. Just, fair, and right, in consideration of the facts and circumstances of the individual case. Existing in equity; available or sustanable only in equity, or only upon the rules and principles of equity. As to equitable “Assets,” “Construction,” “Conversion,” “Defense,” “Easement,” “Ejectment,” “Election,” “Estate,” “Estoppel,” “Execution,” “Garnishment,” “Lien,” “Title,” “Mortgage,” “Title,” and “Waste,” see those titles.

EQUITABLE ACTION. One founded on an equity or cognizable in a court of equity; or, more specifically, an action arising, not immediately from the contract in suit, but from an equity in favor of a third person, not a party to it, but for whose benefit certain stipulations or promises were made. Cragin v. Lovell, 3 S. Ct. 132, 135, 109 U. S. 194, 27 L. Ed. 908; Thomas v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 121 N. Y. 45, 24 N. E. 24, 25, 8 L. R. A. 175; Wallis v. Shelly (C. C.) 80 F. 747, 748; People’s Bank of Mobile, Ala., v. Shreveport Ice & Brewing Co., 142 La. 502, 77 So. 636, 638; Trotter v. Dann, 83 Misc. 399, 145 N. Y. S. 56, 58.

EQUITABLE DEFENSE. A defense to an action on grounds which, prior to the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act (17 and 18 Vict. c. 125), would have been cognizable only in a court of equity. Moz. & W. The codes of procedure and the practice in some of the states likewise permit both a legal and equitable defense to the same action. Ford v. Huff (C. C. A.) 266 F. 652, 658; WM. Weissman Co. v. Cohen, 157 Minn. 161, 195 N. W. 388, 390; Kelly v. Hurt, 74 Mo. 561, 570; Susquehanna S. S. Co. v. A. O. Andersen & Co., 239 N. Y. 285, 146 N. E. 383, 388; Hynds v. Hynds, 274 Mo. 123, 202 S. W. 387, 390. It has also been construed to mean a defense which a court of equity would recognize, or one founded on some distinct ground of equi- table jurisdiction. City of New York v. Hol- derber, 44 Misc. 509, 90 N. Y. S. 63, 64.

EQUITABLE RATE OF INTEREST. In England, the interest, generally at a lower rate than legal, charged against a trustee or executor improperly or unnecessarily keeping balances or portion of trust moneys in his hands, is called an “equitable rate of interest.” In re Ricker’s Estate, 14 Mont. 153, 35 P. 960, 968, 29 L. R. A. 622.

EQUITABLE RESCSSION. Rescission de- creed by court of equity, as distinguished from "legal rescission" which is effected by restoration or offer to restore. Mueller v. Michels, 184 Wis. 324, 190 N. W. 380, 382.

EQUITAS sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. Tullman v. Varick, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 282; Cas temp. Tabb. 52: 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 64. In respect of this maxim it has been said: "Operative only within a very narrow range." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 427. The reverse is quite as sound a maxim; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 18. "The main business of equity is avowedly to correct and supplement the law." Phelps, Jurid. Eq. § 237. The English Judicature Act 1873.
provides that when law and equity conflict equity shall prevail.

EQUITATURA. In old English law. Traveling furniture, or riding equipments, including horses, horse harness, etc. Reg. Orig. 1008; St. Westm. 2, c. 39.

EQUITY.

In Broadest and Most General Signification

In its broadest and most general signification, this term denotes the spirit and the habit of fairness, justness, and right dealing which would regulate the intercourse of men,—the rule of doing to all others as we desire them to do to us; or, as it is expressed by Justinian, "to live honestly, to harm nobody, to render to every man his due." Inst. 1, 1, 3. It is therefore the synonym of natural right or justice. But in this sense its obligation is ethical rather than jural, and its discussion belongs to the sphere of morals. It is grounded in the precepts of the conscience, not in any sanction of positive law.

In More Restricted Sense

In a more restricted sense, the word denotes equal and impartial justice as between two persons whose rights or claims are in conflict; justice, that is, as ascertained by natural reason or ethical insight, but independent of the formulated body of law. This is not a technical meaning of the term, except in so far as courts which administer equity seek to discover it by the agencies above mentioned, or apply it beyond the strict lines of positive law. See Miller v. Kenniston, 86 Me. 550, 30 A. 114.

In One of its Technical Meanings

It is a body of rules existing by the side of the original civil law, founded on distinct principles, and claiming incidentally to supersede the civil law in virtue of a superior sanctity inherent in those principles. Maine, Anc. Law, 27.

"As old rules become too narrow, or are felt to be out of harmony with advancing civilization, a machinery is needed for their gradual enlargement and adaptation to new views of society. One mode of accomplishing this object on a large scale, without appearing to disregard existing law, is the introdution, by the prerogative of some high functionary, of a more perfect body of rules, discoverable in his judicial conscience, which is to stand side by side with the law of the land, overriding it in case of conflict, as on some title of inherent superiority, but not purporting to repeal it. Such a body of rules has been called 'Equity.'" Holl. Jur. 63.

"Equity," in its technical sense, contradistinguished from natural and universal equity or justice, may well be described as a "portion of justice" or natural equity, not embodied in legislative enactments, or in the rules of common law, yet modified by a due regard thereto and to the complex relations and conveniences of an artificial state of society, and administered in regard to cases where the particular rights, in respect of which relief is sought come within some general class of rights enforced at law, or may be enforced without detriment or inconvenience to the community; but where, as to such particular rights, the ordinary courts of law cannot, or originally did not, clearly afford relief. Rob. Eq.

In Still More Restricted Sense

In a still more restricted sense, it is a system of jurisprudence, or branch of remedial justice, administered by certain tribunals, distinct from the common-law courts and empowered to decree "equity" in the sense last above given. Here it becomes a complex of well-settled and well-understood rules, principles, and precedents. See Hamilton v. Avery, 20 Tex. 638; Dalton v. Vanderveer, 8 Misc. Rep. 484, 29 N.Y. S. 542; Parmeter v. Bourne, 8 Wash. 45, 35 P. 556; Ellis v. Davis, 190 U. S. 485, 3 S. Ct. 327, 27 L. Ed. 1006.

"The meaning of the word 'equity,' as used in its technical sense in English jurisprudence, comes back to this: that it is simply a term descriptive of a certain field of jurisdiction exercised, in the English system, by certain courts, and of which the extent and boundaries are not marked from lines founded upon principle so much as by the features of the original constitution of the English scheme of remedial law, and the accidents of its development." Bl. Eq. 11.

A system of jurisprudence collateral to, and in some respects independent of, "law," properly so called; the object of which is to render the administration of justice more complete, by affording relief where the courts of law are incompetent to give it, or to give it with effect, or by exercising certain branches of jurisdiction independently of them. This is equity in its proper modern sense; an elaborate system of rules and process, administered in many cases by distinct tribunals, (termed "courts of chancery," and with exclusive jurisdiction over certain subjects. It is "still distinguished by its original and animating principle that no right should be without an adequate remedy," and its doctrines are grounded upon the same basis of natural justice; but its action has become systematized, deprived of any loose and arbitrary character which might once have belonged to it, and as carefully regulated by fixed rules and precedents as the law itself. Burnett.

Equity, in its technical and scientific legal use, means neither natural justice nor even all that portion of natural justice which is susceptible of being judicially enforced. It has a precise, limited, and definite signification, and is used to denote a system of justice which was administered in a particular court—the English high court of chancery—which system can only be understood and explained by studying the history of that court, and how it came to exercise what is known as its extraordinary jurisdiction. Disp. Eq. § 1.

That part of the law which, having power to enforce discovery, (1) administrates trusts, mortgages, and other fiduciary obligations; (2) administrates and adjusts common-law rights where the courts of common law have no machinery; (3) supplies a specific and preventive remedy for common-law wrongs where courts of common law only give subsequent damages. Chute, Eq. 4.

—Equity jurisdiction. Includes not only the ordinary meaning of the word "jurisdiction," the power residing in a court to hear and determine an action, but also a consideration of the cases and occasions when that power is to be exercised. In other words, the question whether the action will lie in equity. Anderson v. Carr, 63 Hun, 179, 19 N. Y. S. 992; People v. McKane, 78 Hun, 154, 28 N. Y. S. 981; Wadham's Oil Co. v. Tracy, 141 Wis. 150, 128 N. W. 785, 478, 18 Am. Cas. 779; Miller v. Rowan, 251 Ill. 344, 96 N. E. 288, 287; Theise v. Spokane Falls Gas Light Co., 34 Wash. 23, 74 P. 1004, 1006. For a specific and extended discussion of the meaning of the term equity jurisdiction, see Venner v. Great Northern R. Co. (C. C.) 153 F. 408, 413, 414 (quoting and adopting definitions in 1 Pomeroy, Eq. Jour. [3d Ed.] §§ 120–131).

—Equity jurisprudence. That portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by courts of equity, as distinguished from courts of common law. Malone v. Meres, 91 Fla. 709, 109 So. 677, 883, 884; Jackson v. Nimmo, 71 Tenn. (3 Lea.) 597, 609.

—Equity of a statute. By this phrase is intended the rule of statutory construction which admits within the operation of a statute a class of cases which are neither expressly named nor excluded, but which, from their analogy to the cases that are named, are clearly and justly within the spirit and general meaning of the law; such cases are said to be "within the equity of the statute."

—Equity term. An equity term of court is one devoted exclusively to equity business, that is, in which no criminal cases are tried nor any cases requiring the impaneling of a jury. Hesselgrave v. State, 63 Neb. 897, 89 N. W. 295.

—Natural equity. A term sometimes employed in works on jurisprudence, possessing no very precise meaning, but used as equivalent to justice, honesty, or morality in business relations, or man's innate sense of right dealing and fair play. Inasmuch as equity, as now administered, is a complex system of rules, doctrines, and precedents, and possesses, within the range of its own fixed principles, but little more elasticity than the law, the term "natural equity" may be understood to denote, in a general way, that which strikes the ordinary conscience and sense of justice as being fair, right, and equitable, in advance of the question whether the technical jurisprudence of the chancery courts would so regard it.

—Equitable Right

Equity also signifies an equitable right, i.e., a right enforceable in a court of equity; hence, a bill of complaint which did not show that the plaintiff had a right entitling him to relief was said to be demurrable for want of equity; and certain rights now recognized in all the courts are still known as "equities," from having been originally recognized only in the court of chancery. Sweet.

—Better equity. The right which, in a court of equity, a second incumbrancer has who has taken securities against subsequent dealings to his prejudice, which a prior incumbrancer neglected to take although he had an opportunity. 1 Ch. Prec. 470, note. See 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2462.

—Countervailing equity. A contrary and balancing equity; an equity or right opposed to that which is sought to be enforced or recognized, and which ought not to be sacrificed or subordinated to the latter, because it is of equal strength and justice, and equally deserving of consideration.

—Latent or secret equity. An equitable claim or right, the knowledge of which has been confined to the parties for and against whom it exists, or which has been concealed from one or several persons interested in the subject-matter.

—Perfect equity. An equitable title or right which lacks nothing to its completeness as a legal title or right except the formal conveyance or other investiture which would make it cognizable at law; particularly, the equity or interest of a purchaser of real estate who has paid the purchase price in full and fulfilled all conditions resting on him, but has not yet received a deed or patent. See Shaw v. Lindsey, 60 Ala. 344; Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 75.

—Equity of partners. A term used to designate the right of each of them to have the firm's property applied to the payment of the firm's debts. Colwell v. Bank, 18 R. I. 288, 17 A. 913.

—Equity of redemption. The right of the mortgagor of an estate to redeem the same after it has been forfeited, at law, by a breach of the condition of the mortgage, upon paying the amount of debt, interest and costs. Na-

—Equity to a settlement. The equitable right of a wife, when her husband sues in equity for the reduction of her equitable estate to his own possession, to have the whole or a portion of such estate settled upon herself and her children. Also a similar right now recognized by the equity courts as directly to be asserted against the husband. Also called the “wife’s equity.” Polinder v. Jeffries, 15 Grat. (Va.) 363; Clarke v. McCleary, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 544.

Equity delights to do justice, and that not by halves. Talman v. Varick, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277, 280; Story, Eq. Pl. § 72.

Equity follows the law. Talb. 52. Equity adopts and follows the rules of law in all cases to which those rules may, in terms, be applicable. Equity, in dealing with cases of an equitable nature, adopts and follows the analogies furnished by the rules of law. A leading maxim of equity jurisprudence, which, however, is not of universal application, but liable to many exceptions. Story, Eq. Jur. § 64. American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. New York Rys. Co. (C. C. A.) 238 F. 633, 637; Marquette Cement Mining Co. v. Oglesby Coal Co. (D. C.) 238 F. 107; Frink v. Commercial Bank of Emmettsburg, 105 Iowa, 1011, 191 N. W. 513.

Equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64g. Equity will treat the subject-matter, as to collateral consequences and incidents, in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been; not as the parties might have executed them. Id. Gardiner v. Gerlich, 23 Me. (10 Shep.) 46; Goodell v. Monroe, 87 N. J. Eq. 328, 100 A. 238, 240; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779; Rankin v. Rankin, 36 Ill. 293, 87 Am. Dec. 205; Duly v. Lahontan Mines Co., 39 Nev. 14, 158 P. 285, affirming judgment on rehearing 39 Nev. 14, 151 P. 514.

EQUIVALENT, n. In patent law. Any act or substance which is known in the arts as a proper substitute for some other act or substance employed as an element in the invention, whose substitution for that other act or substance does not in any manner vary the idea of means. It possesses three characteristics: It must be capable of performing the same office in the invention as the act or substance whose place it supplies; it must relate to the form or embodiment alone and not affect in any degree the idea of means; and it must have been known to the arts at the date of the patent as endowed with this capability. Duff Mfg. Co. v. Forgie, 59 F. 772, 5 C. C. A. 261; Norton v. Jensen, 49 F. 683, 1 C. C. A. 452; Imhauser v. Buerk, 101 U. S. 655, 25 L. Ed. 945; Carter Mach. Co. v. Hanover (C. C.) 70 F. 559; Schillinger v. Cranford, 4 MacKey (D. C.) 428; Stockham v. Duncan (C. C. A.) 226 F. 740, 743.

“Equivalents” in an art or process are such acts as, in accordance with preceding rules, are interchangeable with those which the inventor has himself employed. Superior Skylight Co. v. August Kuhala (D. C.) 265 F. 282, 284.

An “equivalent,” in patent law, is not the same as a “substitute.” McCaskey Register Co. v. Mann (D. C.) 217 F. 415, 419.

EQUIVOCAL. Having a double or several meanings or senses. See Ambiguity.

EQUEULEUS. A kind of rock for extorting confessions.

EQUUS COOPERUTUS. A horse equipped with saddle and furniture.

ERABILIS. A maple tree. Not to be confused with arabilis, (arable land.)

ERASTIANS. The followers of Erastus. The sect obtained much influence in England, particularly among common lawyers in the time of Selden. They held that offenses against religion and morality should be punished by the civil power, and not by the censures of the church or by excommunication. Wharton.

ERASURE. The obliteration of words or marks from a written instrument by rubbing, scraping, or scratching them out. Also the place in a document where a word or words have been so removed. The term is sometimes used for the removal of parts of a writing by any means whatever, as by cancellation; but this is not an accurate use. Cloud v. Hewitt, 5 Fed. Cas. 1,085; Valliere v. Brakke, 7 S. D. 343, 64 N. W. 180; In re Ferguson, 126 Misc. 256, 213 N. Y. S. 656, 658.

ERICUSCUNDUS. In the civil law. To be divided. Judicium familier ericus unda, a suit for the partition of an inheritance. Inst. 4, 17, 4. An ancient phrase derived from the Twelve Tables. Calvin.

ERECT. One of the formal words of incorporation in royal charters. "We do, incorporate, erect, ordain, name, constitute, and establish."

ERGO. Lat. Therefore; hence; because.

ERGOLABI. In the civil law. Undertakers of work; contractors. Cod. 4, 50.

ERIACH. A term of the Irish Breton law, denoting a pecuniary mulct or recompense which a murderer was judicially condemned to pay to the family or relatives of his victim. It corresponded to the Saxon weregild. See 4 Bl. Comm. 313.

ERIGIMUS. We erect. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England by the king's charter. 1 Bl. Comm. 473.

ERMINE. By metonymy, this term is used to describe the office or functions of a judge, whose state robe, lined with ermine, is emblematical of purity and honor without stain. Webster.

ERNES. In old English law. The loose scattered ears of corn that are left on the ground after the binding.

EROTOMANIA. See Insanity.

ERRANT. Wanderer; itinerant; applied to justices on circuit, and bailiffs at large, etc.

ERRATICUM. In old law. A waif or stray; a wandering beast. Cowell.

ERRATUM. Lat. Error. Used in the Latin formula for assigning errors, and in the reply thereto, "in nullo est erratum," i. e., there was no error, no error was committed.

ERRONEOUS. Involving error; deviating from the law. This term is never used by courts or law-writers as designating a corrupt or evil act. Thompson v. Doty, 72 Ind. 338; U. S. v. Sakharom Ganesh Pandit (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 285, 286.

ERRONENCE. Lat. Erroneously; through error or mistake.

ERROR. A mistaken judgment or incorrect belief as to the existence or effect of matters of fact, or a false or mistaken conception or application of the law.

Such a mistaken or false conception or application of the law to the facts of a cause as will furnish ground for a review of the proceedings upon a writ of error; a mistake of law, or false or irregular application of it, such as vitiates the proceedings and warrants the reversal of the judgment.

Error is also used as an elliptical expression for "writ of error," as in saying that error lies; that a judgment may be reversed on error.

Assignment of Errors

In practice. The statement of the plaintiff's or defendant's case, or of the errors complained of; corresponding with the declaration in an ordinary action. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1168; 3 Steph. Comm. 644. Wells v. Martin, 1 Ohio St. 358; Lamy v. Lamy, 4 N. M. (Johns.) 48, 12 Pac. 650. A specification of the errors upon which the appellant will rely, with such fullness as to give aid to the court in the examination of the transcript. Squires v. Foorman, 10 Cal. 298; Underwood v. Hogg (Tex. Civ. App.) 201 S. W. 556, 558; Streeter v. State, 59 Fla. 400, 104 So. 858, 859; Benavides v. Garcia (Tex. Civ. App.) 293 S. W. 611, 614; Salene v. Isherwood, 74 Or. 35, 144 P. 1175, 1176; Helms v. Cook, 62 Ind. App. 629, 111 N. E. 632, 633; Wine v. Jones, 183 Iowa, 1166, 168 N. W. 318, 320; State v. Reifsteck, 317 Mo. 265, 295 S. W. 741, 742.

Clerical Error

See Clerical.
Common Error
(Lat. communis error, q. v.) An error for which there are many precedents. "Common error goeth for a law." Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, no. 54. "Common errors" are that the declaration is insufficient in law to maintain the action, and that judgment was given for plaintiff instead of defendant, or vice versa. Margolies v. Goldberg, 101 N. J. Law, 75, 127 A. 271, 272.

Cross-Errors
Errors assigned by the respondent in a writ of error, or appellee.

Error Apparent of Record

Error Coram Nobis
Error committed in the proceedings "before us;" i. e., error assigned as a ground for reviewing, modifying, or vacating a judgment in the same court in which it was rendered.

Error Coram Vobis
Error in the proceedings "before you;" words used in a writ of error directed by a court of review to the court which tried the cause.

Error in Fact
In judicial proceedings, error in fact occurs when, by reason of some fact which is unknown to the court and not apparent on the record (e. g., the coverture, intentacy, or death of one of the parties), it renders a judgment which is void or voidable. Cruger v. McCraaken, 87 Tex. 584, 39 S. W. 537; Kihlholtz v. Wolff, 8 Ill. App. 371; Kasson v. Mills, 8 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 379; Tanner v. Marsh, 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 440.

Error in Law
An error of the court in applying the law to the case on trial, e. g., in ruling on the admission of evidence, or in charging the jury. McKenzie v. Blumarck Water Co., 6 N. D. 364, 71 N. W. 608; Scherrer v. Hale, 9 Mont. 68, 22 Pac. 151; Campbell v. Patterson, 7 Vt. 89.

Error Nominal
Error of name. A mistake of detail in the name of a person; used in contradistinction to error de persona, a mistake as to identity.

Error of Law
He is under an error of law who is truly informed of the existence of facts, but who draws from them erroneous conclusions of law. Clv. Code La. art. 1822. Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 360, 19 Am. Dec. 508.

Error of Fact

Error, Writ of See Writ of Error.

Errors Excepted
A phrase appended to an account stated, in order to excuse slight mistakes or oversights.

Fundamental Error

Harmful Error
Error which more probably than improbably affected the verdict or judgment prejudicially to the party complaining. Ashby v. Virginala Ry. & Power Co., 138 Va. 310, 122 S. E. 104, 110.

Harmless Error
In appellate practice. An error committed in the progress of the trial below, but which was not prejudicial to the rights of the party assigning it, and for which, therefore, the court will not reverse the judgment, as, where the error was neutralized or corrected by subsequent proceedings in the case, or where, notwithstanding the error, the particular issue was found in that party's favor, or where, even if the error had not been committed, he could not have been legally entitled to prevail.

Invited Error
In appellate practice. The principle of "invited error" is that if, during the progress of a cause, a party requests or moves the court to make a ruling which is actually erroneous, and the court does so, that party cannot take advantage of the error on appeal or review.
Gresham v. Harecourt, 93 Tex. 149, 53 S. W. 1019.

Judicial Errors

Errors into which the court itself falls. State v. District Court of Second Judicial District in and for Silver Bow County, 55 Mont. 324, 176 P. 608, 609.

Reversible Error

In appellate practice. Such an error as warrants the appellate court in reversing the judgment before it; substantial error, that which reasonably might have prejudiced the party complaining. Condello v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 297 F. 200, 201; Shinn v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 248 Mo. 173, 154 S. W. 103, 105; New Mexican R. Co. v. Hendricks, 6 N. M. 611, 30 Pac. 961.

Technical Error

In appellate practice. A merely abstract or theoretical error, which is practically not injurious to the party assigning it. Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 530, 1 N. E. 491.

Error fucatus nuda veritate in multis est probabilior; et sapenamero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully disguised [or colored] is, in many instances, more probable than naked truth; and frequently error overwhelsms truth by [its show of] reasons. 2 Coke, 73.

Error juris nocet. Error of law injures. A mistake of the law has an Injuurous effect; that is, the party committing it must suffer the consequences. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 178; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 139, note.

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. A mistake in the name of a thing is never prejudicial, if it be clear as to the identity of the thing itself, [where the thing intended is certainly known.] 1 Duer. Ins. 171. This maxim is applicable only where the means of correcting the mistake are apparent on the face of the instrument to be construed. Id.

Error qui non resistitur approbatur. An error which is not resisted or opposed is approved. Doct. & Stud. c. 40.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere. To refer errors to their sources is to refute them. 3 Inst. 15. To bring errors to their beginning is to see their last.

Errores scribendi nocere non debent. The mistakes of the writer ought not to harm. Jenk. Cent. 324.

ERTHMIOTUM. In old English law. A meeting of the neighborhood to compromise differences among themselves; a court held on the boundary of two lands.

Erubescit lax filios castigare parentes. 8 Coke, 118. The law blushes when children correct their parents.

ESBRANCATURA. In old law. A cutting off the branches or boughs of trees. Cowell; Spelman.

ESCALDARE. To scald. It is said that to scald hogs was one of the ancient tenures in serjeanty. Wharton.

ESCABIO. In old English law. A writ of exchange. A license in the shape of a writ, formerly granted to an English merchant to draw a bill of exchange on another in foreign parts. Reg. Orig. 194.

ESCAMBIO. An old English law term, signifying exchange.

ESCAPE. The departure or deliverance out of custody of a person who was lawfully imprisoned, before he is entitled to his liberty by the process of law. The voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 917.

Escapes are either voluntary or negligent. The former is the case when the keeper voluntarily concedes to the prisoner any liberty not authorized by law. The latter is the case when the prisoner contrives to leave his prison by forcing his way out, or any other means, without the knowledge or against the will of the keeper, but through the latter's carelessness or the insecurity of the building. Cortis v. Dailey, 47 N. Y. 454, 21 App. Div. 1; Lansing v. Foster, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 5; 1 Am. Dec. 142; Atkinson v. Jameson, 5 Term, 25; Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 258; Martin v. State, 32 Ark. 124; Adams v. Turrentine, 30 N. C. 147; In re Rigg, 95 N. J. Eq. 341, 123 A. 243, 244; State v. Cahill, 196 Iowa, 486, 194 N. W. 191, 193; U. S. v. Hoffman (D. Ct.) 13 F. (2d) 209, 270; Whitaker v. Commonwealth, 185 Ky. 95, 221 S. W. 215, 216, 10 A. L. R. 145; State v. Pace, 192 N. C. 750, 136 S. E. 11, 12; People v. Quijeda, 53 Cal. App. 39, 199 P. 864; Brady v. Hughes, 181 N. C. 234, 106 S. E. 829, 830; Heffer v. Hunt, 120 Me. 10, 112 A. 675, 677; Ex parte Eley, 9 Ohi. Cr. 76, 130 P. 821, 823.

To flee from; to avoid; to get out of the way, as to flee to avoid arrest. Love v. Bass, 145 Tenn. 522, 238 S. W. 94, 96.

ESCAPE FROM PRISON. A prisoner serving a sentence of imprisonment in a state prison is, in contemplation of law, a prisoner therein, as well when at work outside under the surveillance of prison guards as when confined within its walls, so that if he escapes when outside he escapes from a prison within Pen. Code, §§ 106, 757. Bradford v. Glenn, 188 Cal. 330, 205 P. 449; People v. Vanderburg, 67 Cal. App. 217, 227 P. 621.

ESCAPE WARRANT. In English practice. This was a warrant granted to retake a prisoner committed to the custody of the king's prison who had escaped therefrom. It was obtained on affidavit from the judge of the court in which the action had been brought, and was directed to all the sheriffs throughout England, commanding them to retake the prisoner and commit him to goal when and where taken, there to remain until the debt was satisfied. Jacob; Brown.

ESCAPIO QUIETUS. In old English law. Delivered from that punishment which by the laws of the forest lay upon those whose beasts were found upon forbidden land. Jacob.

ESCAPIUM. That which comes by chance or accident. Cowell.

ESCEPPA. A measure of corn. Cowell.

Eschatas derivatur a verbo Gallico escohir, quod est accidere, qua accident domino ex eventu et ex insperato. Co. Litt. 93. Escheat is derived from the French word "eschoir," which signifies to happen, because it falls to the lord from an event and from an unforeseen circumstance.

Eschatas vulgo dicuntur quae decidentibus ila quae de rege tenant, cum non existit ratione sanguinis hares, ad flaccum relabuntur. Co. Litt. 13. Those things are commonly called "escheats" which revert to the exchequer from a failure of issue in those who hold the king, when there does not exist any heir by consanguinity.

ESCHEAT. In Feudal Law

Escheat is an obstruction of the course of descent, and consequent determination of the tenure, by some unforeseen contingency, in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor, or lord of the fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 15; Wallace v. Harmstad, 44 Pa. 501; Marshall v. Lovelass, 1 N. C. 445; In re Mahtic, 160 N. Y. S. 339, 342, 102 Misc. 575; Kavanaugh v. Cohoes Power & Light Corporation, 187 N. Y. S. 216, 231, 114 Misc. 590.

It is the usual descent, in the nature of forfeiture, of lands and tenements within his manor, to a lord, either on failure of issue of the tenant dying seised or on account of the felony of such tenant. Jacob.

Also the land or fee itself, which thus fell back to the lord. Such lands were called "escedentiae," or "terra escendentiales." Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Co. Litt. 13a.

In American Law

Escheat signifies a reversal of property to the state in consequence of a want of any individual competent to inherit. The state is deemed to occupy the place and hold the rights of the feudal lord. See 4 Kent, Comm. 423, 424. Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 17; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 70, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 3575 (Civ. Code 1910, § 4155); Center v. Kramer, 112 Ohio St. 269, 147 N. E. 602, 604.

"Escheat at feudal law was the right of the lord of a fee to re-enter upon the same when it became vacant by the extinction of the blood of the tenant. This extinction might either be per defectum sanguinis or else per defectum tenentes, where the course of descent was broken by the corruption of the blood of the tenant. As a fee might be held either of the crown or from some inferior lord, the escheat was not always to the crown. The word 'escheat,' in this country, at the present time, merely indicates the preferable right of the state to an estate left vacant, and without there being any one in existence able to make claim thereto." 28 Am. Dec. 222, note.

In General

—Single escheat. When all a person's moveables fall to the crown, as a casualty, because of his being declared rebel. Wharton.

ESCHEATOR. In English law. The name of an officer who was appointed in every county to look after the escheats which fell due to the king in that particular county, and to certify the same into the exchequer. An escheator could continue in office for one year only, and was not re-eligible until three years. There does not appear to exist any such officer at the present day. Brown. See 10 Vin. Abr. 158; Co. Litt. 13b.

ESCHECCUM. In old English law. A Jury or Inquisition.

ESCHIPARE. To build or equip. Du Cange.

ESCOT. A tax formerly paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called "scot and lot."

ESCRIBANO. In Spanish law. An officer, resembling a notary in French law, who has authority to set down in writing, and verify by his attestation, transactions and contracts between private persons, and also judicial acts and proceedings.

ESCRITURA. In Spanish law. A written instrument. Every deed that is made by the hand of a public escribano, or notary of a corporation or council (concejo,) or sealed with the seal of the king or other authorized persons. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 7, c. 5.

ESCRUQUERIE. Fr. Fraud, swindling, cheating.

ESCROW. A scroll, writing, or deed, delivered by the grantor into the hands of a third person, to be held by the latter until the happening of a contingency or performance of a

The state or condition of a deed which is conditionally held by a third person, or the possession and retention of a deed by a third person pending a condition; as when an instrument is said to be delivered "in escrow." This use of the term, however, is a perversion of its meaning.

A grant may be deposited by the grantor with a third person, to be delivered on the performance of a condition, and on delivery the depositary it will take effect. While in the possession of the third person, and subject to condition, it is called an "escrow." Civil Code Cal. § 367; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6498; Comp. Laws S. D. 1913, § 527.

ESCROW. In old English law. An escrow; a scroll. "And deliver the deed to a strangr, as an escrowl." Perk. c. 1, § 9; Id. c. 2, §§ 137, 138.

ESCUCAGE. Service of the shield. One of the varieties of tenure in knight’s service, the duty imposed being that of accompanying the king to the wars for forty days, at the tenant’s own charge, or sending a substitute. In later times this service was commuted for a certain payment in money, which was then called “escuage certain.” See 2 Bl. Comm. 74, 75.

ESCURARE. To scour or cleanse. Cowell.

ESGLISE, or EGLISE. A church. Jacob.

ESKETORES. Robbers, or destroyers of other men’s lands and fortunes. Cowell.

ESKIPPMAMENTUM. Tackle or furniture; outfit. Certain towns in England were bound to furnish certain ships at their own expense and with double skippage or tackle. Cowell.

ESKIPPER, ESKIPPMARE. To ship.

ESKIPPSON. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled, also, "skippson." Cowell.

ESLISORS. See Elisors.

ESNE. In old law. A hireling of servile condition.

ESNECY. Seniority: the condition or right of the eldest; the privilege of the eldest-born. Particularly used of the privilege of the eldest among copartners to make a first choice of purparts upon a voluntary partition.

ESPEDIENT. In Spanish law. A junction of all the separate papers made in the course of any one proceeding and which remains in the office at the close of it. Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black 109, 17 L. Ed. 360.

ESPERA. A period of time fixed by law or by a court within which certain acts are to be performed, e. g., the production of papers, payment of debts, etc.

ESPERONS. L. Fr. Spurs.

ESPLEES. An old term for the products which the ground or land yields; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of arable fields, rent and services, etc. The word has been anciently applied to the land itself. Jacob; Fosgate v. Hydraulic Co., 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 255.

ESPOUSALS. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time. It differs from a marriage, because then the contract is completed. Wood, Inst. 57.

ESPURIO. Span. In Spanish law. A spurious child; one begotten on a woman who has promiscuous intercourse with many men. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 2, § 1.

ESQUIRE. In English law. A title of dignity next above gentleman, and below knight. Also a title of office given to sheriffs, sergeants, and barristers at law, justices of the peace, and others. 1 Bl. Comm. 406; 3 Steph. Comm. 15, note; Tomlins. On the use of this term in American law, particularly as applied to justices of the peace and other inferior judicial officers, see Call v. Foresman, 5 Watts (Pa.) 331; Christian v. Ashley County, 24 Ark. 151; Com. v. Vance, 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 37.

ESSARTER. L. Fr. To cut down woods to clear land of trees and underwood; properly to thin woods, by cutting trees, etc., at intervals. Spelman. See Assart.

ESSARTUM. Woodlands turned into tillage by uprooting the trees and removing the underwood.

ESSENCE. That which is indispensable. Pittsburgh Iron & Steel Foundries Co. v. Seaman-Sleeth Co. (D. C.) 236 F. 756, 757.
ESSENCE OF THE CONTRACT. Any condition or stipulation in a contract which is mutually understood and agreed by the parties to be of such vital importance that a sufficient performance of the contract cannot be had without exact compliance with it is said to be "of the essence of the contract." Flattow, Riley & Co. v. Roy Campbell Co. (Tex. Com. App.) 280 S. W. 517, 520; Dayvault & New- some v. Townsend (Tex. Civ. App.) 244 S. W. 1108, 1110.

ESSENDI QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ to be quitt of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town who, by charter or prescription, ought to be exempted from toll, where the same is exacted of them. Reg. Orig. 258.

ESSOIN, v. In old English practice. To present or offer an excuse for not appearing in court on an appointed day in obedience to a summons; to cast an essoin. Spelman. This was anciently done by a person whom the party sent for that purpose, called an "essoiner."

ESSOIN, n. In old English law. An excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the process. Presentation of such excuse. Spelman; 1 Sel. Pr. 4; Com. Dig. "Exoin," B 1. Essoin is not now allowed at all in personal actions. 2 Term, 16; 16 East, 7a; 3 Bl. Comm. 278, note.

--- Essoin Day. Formerly the first general return-day of the term, on which the courts sat to receive essoins, t. e., excuses for parties who did not appear in court, according to the summons of writs. 3 Bl. Comm. 278; Boote, Suit at Law, 180; Gilb. Com. Pl. 13; 1 Tidd, Pr. 107. But, by St. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, § 6, these days were done away with, as a part of the term.

--- Essoin de male ville is when the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, etc., cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village, that he cannot come pro lucrari and pro per- dere; and this will be admitted, for it lieth on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoin is true or not. Jacob.

--- Essoin roll. A roll upon which essoins were formerly entered, together with the day to which they were adjourned. Boote, Suit at Law, 180; Rose. Real Act. 102, 103; Gilb. Com. Pl. 13.

ESSOINIATOR. A person who made an essoin.

Est aliquid quod non oporet eliam si licet; quicquid vero non licet certe non oporet. Hob. 159. There is that which is not proper, even though permitted; but whatever is not permitted is certainly not proper.

EST ASCAVOR. It is to be understood or known; "it is to-wit." Litt. §§ 9, 45, 46, 57, 59. A very common expression in Littleton, especially at the commencement of a section; and, according to Lord Coke, "it ever teacheth us some rule of law, or general or sure leading point." Co. Litt. 16.

Est autem jus publicum et privatum, quod ex naturalibus praecipitis aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural precepts, on the one hand of nations, on the other of citizens; and that which in the civil law is called "jus," that, in the law of England, is said to be right. Co. Litt. 593.

Est autem vis legem simulans. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox. The voice of the legislators themselves is like the living voice; that is, the language of a statute is to be understood and interpreted like ordinary spoken language. 10 Coke, 101b.

Est quiddam perfectius in rebus licitis. Hob. 159. There is something more perfect in things allowed.

ESTABLISH. This word occurs frequently in the constitution of the United States, and it is there used in different meanings: (1) To settle firmly, to fix unalterably; as to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the constitution. (2) To make or form; as to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies, which evidently does not mean that these laws shall be unalterably established as justice. (3) To found, to create, to regulate; as: "Congress shall have power to establish post-roads and post-offices." (4) To found, recognize, confirm, or admit; as: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." (5) To create, to ratify, or confirm; as: "We, the people," etc., "do ordain and establish this constitution." 1 Story, Const. § 454. And see Dickey v. Turnpike Co., 7 Dana (Ky.) 125; Ware v. U. S., 4 Wall. 632, 1 S. L. Ed. 389; U. S. v. Smith, 4 N. J. Law, 33.

To settle or fix firmly; place on a permanent footing; found; create; put beyond doubt or dispute; prove; convince. Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 230; State v. Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, 129 Tenn. 279, 164 S. W. 1151, 1170; Rowley v. Braly (Tex. Civ.
ESTABLISHMENT, ETABLISSEMENT

ESTABLISHMENT, ETABLISSEMENT. An ordinance or statute. Especially used of those ordinances or statutes passed in the reign of Edw. I. 2 Inst. 156; Britt. c. 21.

Establishment is also used to denote the settlement of dower by the husband upon his wife. Brit. c. 102.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DOWER. The assurance of dower made by the husband, or his friends, before or at the time of the marriage. Brit. cc. 102, 103.

ESTACHE. A bridge or tank of stone or timber. Cowell.

ESTADAL. In Spanish law. In Spanish America, a measure of land of sixteen square varas, or yards. 2 White, Recop. 139.

ESTADIA (or sobrestadia). In Spanish law. Delay in a voyage, or in the delivery of cargo, caused by the charterer or consignee, for which demurrage is payable. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

ESTANDARD. L. Fr. A standard (of weights and measures.) So called because it stands constant and immovable, and hath all other measures coming towards it for their conformity. Termes de la Ley.

ESTANQUES. Wears (weirs) or kiddies in rivers.

ESTATE. The interest which any one has in lands, or in any other subject of property. 1 Prest. Est. 20. And see Van Rensselaer v. Poucher, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 40; Beall v. Holmes, 6 Har. & J. (Md.) 208; Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 103; Robertson v. VanCleave, 129 Ind. 217, 22 N. E. 899, 29 N. E. 751, 15 L. R. A. 68; Ball v. Chadwick, 46 Ill. 31; Cutts v. Com., 2 Mass. 289; Jackson v. Parker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 51. An estate in lands, tenements, and hereditaments signifies such interest as the tenant has therein. 2 Bl. Comm. 103. The condition or circumstance in which the owner stands with regard to his property. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 2, § 942. In this sense, "estate" is constantly used in conveyances in connection with the words "right," "title," and "interest," and is, in a great degree, synonymous with all of them. See Co. Litt. 345.

The degree, quality, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real property is usually referred to as an estate, and it varies from absolute ownership down to naked possession. Nicholson Corporation v. Ferguson, 243 Pa. 260, 114 Okl. 19.

Classification. Estates, in this sense, may be either absolute or conditional. An absolute estate is a full and complete estate (Cooper v. Cooper, 56 N. J. Eq. 48, 38 A. 198) or an estate in lands not subject to be defeated upon any condition. In this phrase the word "absolute" is not used legally to distinguish a fee from a life-estate, but a qualified or conditional fee from a fee simple. Greenawalt v. Greenawalt, 71 Pa. 483. A conditional estate is one, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl. Comm. 151. Estates are also classed as executed or executory. The former is an estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called "estates in possession." 2 Bl. Comm. 162. An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An executory estate is an estate or interest in lands, the vesting or enjoyment of which depends upon some future contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remainder, which is the same as a contingent remainder, because no present interest passes. Further, estates may be legal or equitable. The former is that kind of estate which is properly cognizable in the courts of common law, though noticed, also, in the courts of equity. 1 Steph. Comm. 217. And see Snyre v. Mooney, 30 Or. 238, 47 P. 197; In re Qualifications of Electors, 19 R. I. 387, 35 A. 213. An equitable estate is an estate an interest in which can only be enforced in a court of chancery. Aver v. Dufrees, 9 Ohio, 145. That is properly an equitable estate or interest for which a court of equity affords the only remedy; and of this nature, especially, is the benefit of every trust, express or implied, which is not converted into a legal estate by the statute of uses. The rest are equities of redemption, constructive trusts, and all equitable charges. Y. Part Comp. c. 8. Brown v. Freed, 43 Ind. 253; In re Qualifications of Electors, 19 B. L. 387, 35 A. 213. “Equitable estates” are in equity what legal estates are in law; the ownership of the equitable estate is regarded by equity as the real ownership, and the legal estate is, as has been said, no more than the shadow always following the “equitable estate,” which is the substance. Town of Cascade v. Cascade County, 75 Mont. 304, 243 P. 806, 808.

—Other descriptive and compound terms. A contingent estate is one which depends for its effect upon an event which may or may not happen, as, where an estate is limited to a person not yet born. Conventional estates are those freeholds not of inheritance or estates for life, which are created by the express acts of the parties, in contradistinction to those which are legal and arise from the operation of law. A dominant estate, in the law of easements, is the estate for the benefit of which the easement exists, or the tenement whose owner, as such, enjoys an easement over an adjoining estate. An expectant estate is one which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time; a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. Examples are remainders and reversions. A future estate is an estate which is not now vested in the grantee, but is to commence in possession at some future time. It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in future without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of chattel interests. See 2 Bl. Comm. 165. An estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time. Real Property Law N. Y. (Consol. Laws, c. 50) § 37; Personal Property Law (Consol. Laws, c. 41) § 11. See In re McQueen’s Will, 165 N. Y. 527, 529, 59 Misc. 155; Griffin v. Shepard, 124 N. Y. 70, 26 N. E. 339; Sablewsky v. Arbuckle, 50 Minn. 475, 52 N. W. 920; Ford v. Ford, 70 Wis. 19, 25 N. W. 188, 5 Am. St. Rep. 117. A particular estate is a limited estate which is taken out of the fee, and which precedes a remainder; as an estate for years to A., remainder to B., for life; or an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the “particular estate,” and the tenant of such estate is called the “particular tenant.” 2 Bl. Comm. 165; Hunting v. Speck, 41 Kmn. 424, 21 P. 288, 3 L. R. A. 690. A servient estate, in the law of easements, is the estate upon which the easement is imposed or against which it is enjoyed; an estate subjected to a burden or servitude for the benefit of another estate. Walker v. Clifford, 128 Ala. 67, 29 So. 558, 86 Am. St. Rep. 74; Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 330; Dillman v. Hoffman, 38 Wis. 572. A settled estate, in English law, is one created or limited under a settlement; that is, one in which the powers of alienation, devising, and transmission according to the ordinary rules of descent are restrained by the limitations of the settlement. Micklethwait v. Micklethwait, 4 C. B. (N. S.) 855. A vested estate is one in which there is an immediate right of present enjoyment or a present fixed right of future enjoyment; an estate as to which there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession upon the ceasing of some Intermediate or precedent estate. Taylor v. Gould, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 388; Flanner v. Fellows, 206 Ill. 136, 68 N. E. 1057.

Original and derivative estates. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent. Prest. Est. 125.

For the names and definitions of the various kinds of estates in land, see the different titles below.

In another sense, “estate” designates the property (real or personal) in which one has a right or interest; the subject-matter of ownership; the corpus of property. Thus, we speak of a “valuable estate,” “all my estate,” “separate estate,” “trust estate,” etc. This, also, is its meaning in the classification of property into “real estate” and “personal estate.” Connell v. Concannon, 122 Or. 387, 259 P. 290, 292; Moseley v. Bogey, 272 Mo. 319, 198 S. W. 547, 548; 8 Vae. 504; Jackson v. Robins, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 357; Bates v. Sparrell, 10 Mass. 223; Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pett. 588, 7 Id. 272; Donovan’s Lessee v. Donovan, 11 Harr. (Del.) 177; Andrews v. Brumfield, 32 Miss. 107; Blewer v. Brightman, 4 McCord (S. C.) 60; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. Law, 63.

The word “estate” is a word of the greatest extension, and comprehends every species of property, real and personal. It describes both the corpus and the extent of interest. Deering v. Tucker, 55 Mo. 284; Pearce v. Pearce, 74 So. 582, 584, 119 Ala. 481. When used in some connections, it signifies everything of which riches or fortune may consist. Williams v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 156 S. W. 64, 66, 160 Mo. App. 468.

“Estate” comprehends everything a man owns, real and personal, and ought not to be limited in its construction, unless connected with some other word which must necessarily have that effect. Pulliam v. Pulliam (C. C.) 30 F. 40; Noblett v. Smith, 142 Va. 540, 128 S. E. 247, 258; Weber v. Bardon, 52 N. J. Eq. 190, 111 A. 649, 650; Black v. Sylvania Producing Co., 190 Ohio St. 346, 137 N. E. 964, 965.

It means, ordinarily, the whole of the property owned by any one, the reality as well as the personality. Hunter v. Husted, 45 N. C. 141; Lewis v. Gar-—Landed estate or property. A colloquial or popular phrase to denote real property. Landed estate ordinarily means an interest in and pertaining to lands. Police Jury of Parish of St. Mary v. Harris, 10 La. Ann. 670. In a tax law it "clearly embraces not only the land, but all houses, fixtures, and improvements of every kind thereon, and all machinery, neat cattle, horses, and mules, when attached to and used on a plantation or farm." A person holding such an estate is termed a landed proprietor. 10 La. Ann. 676. A devise of "all my landed property" carries the fee; Fogg v. Clark, 1 N. H. 163; and so does "my landed estate"; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602.
ESTATE

—Real estate. Landed property, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. Wharton.

As to "Homestead," "Movable," "Residuary," "Separate," and "Trust" estate, see those titles.

In a wider sense, a man's whole financial status or condition,—the aggregate of his interests and concerns, so far as regards his situation with reference to wealth or its objects, including debts and obligations, as well as possessions and rights.

Here not only property, but indebtedness, is part of the idea. The estate does not consist of the assets only. If it did, such expressions as "insolvent estate" would be misnomers. Debts and assets, taken together, constitute the estate. It is only by regarding the demands against the original proprietor as constituting, together with his resources available to satisfy them, one entirety, that the phraseology of the law governing what is called "settlement of estates" can be justified. Abbott. See Davis's Heirs v. Elkins, 9 La. 125.

Also, the aggregate of a man's financial concerns (as above) personified. Thus, we speak of "debts due the estate," or say that "A's estate is a stockholder in the bank." In this sense it is a fictitious or juridical person, the idea being that a man's business status continues his existence, for its special purposes, until its final settlement and dissolution. See Morgannell's Estate v. City of Derby, 105 Conn. 545, 135 A. 911; In re Watson, 86 Misc. 588, 148 N. Y. S. 902, 908.

There is no such legal entity as an "estate." It is a convenient phrase, to identify the subject of litigation in the orphans' court, and in proceedings in rem it may be treated as harmless superficially, but as a designation of a party to be served with a writ it is unknown to the law. It cannot be made the plaintiff in an action, as it is not a person and cannot sue or be sued. In re Harrisburg Trust Co., 89 Pa. Super. Ct. 585.

In its broadest sense, the social, civic, or political condition or standing of a person; or a class of persons considered as grouped for social, civic, or political purposes; as in the phrases, "the third estate," "the estates of the realm." See 1 Bl. Comm. 163.

"Estate" and "degree," when used in the sense of an individual's personal status, are synonymous, and indicate the individual's rank in life. State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 122.

ESTATE AD REMANENTIAM. An estate in fee-simple. Glan. l. 7, c. 1.

ESTATE AT SUFFERANCE. The interest of a tenant who has come rightfully into possession of lands by permission of the owner, and continues to occupy the same after the period for which he is entitled to hold by such permission. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 392; 2 Bl. Comm. 150; Co. Litt. 57b.

ESTATE AT WILL. A species of estate less than freehold, where lands and tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor; and the tenant by force of this lease obtains possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 145; 4 Kent, Comm. 110; Litt. § 68; Co. Litt. 55a; Tuden. L. Cas. R. P. 10, 14. Or it is where lands are let without limiting any certain and determinate estate. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 403, § 1543.

ESTATE BY ELEIGIT. See Eleigit.

ESTATE BY STATUTE MERCHANT. An estate whereby the creditor, under the custom of London, retained the possession of all his debtor's lands until his debts were paid. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 515. See Statute Merchant.

ESTATE BY STATUTE STAPLE. See Staple.

ESTATE BY THE CURTESY. Tenant by the curtesy of England is where a man survives a wife who was seised in fee-simple or fee-tail of lands or tenements, and has had issue male or female by her born alive and capable of inheriting the wife's estate as heir to her; in which case he will, on the decease of his wife, hold the estate during his life as tenant by the curtesy of England. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. § 1074; Co. Litt. 30a; 2 Bla. Comm. 126; 4 Kent 29; Leach v. Leach, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 381; Cromley v. Deake, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 361; Carter v. Dale, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 710, 31 Am. Rep. 600; McKee v. Cattle, 6 Mo. App. 416; Tremmel v. Kielpoldt, 6 Mo. App. 549; [1882] 2 Ch. 336.
Estate in Coparcenary. An estate which several persons held as one heir, whether male or female. This estate has the three unities of time, title, and possession; but the interests of the coparceners may be unequal.

ESTATE IN DOWER. A species of life-estate which a woman is, by law, entitled to claim on the death of her husband, in the lands and tenements of which he was seised in fee during the marriage, and which her issue, if any, might by possibility have inherited. 1 Steph. Comm. 249; 2 Bl. Comm. 129; Cruise, Dig. tit. 6; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 124, § 1117; 4 Kent, Comm. 35. See Dower.

ESTATE IN EXPECTANCY. One which is not yet in possession, but the enjoyment of which is to begin at a future time; an estate giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. One in which the right to pernancy of the profits is postponed to some future period. Such are estates in remainder and reversion. Lawrence v. Bayard, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 70, 76; Underhill v. R. Co., 20 Barb. 455; Fenton v. Miller, 108 Mich. 246, 65 N. W. 966; In re Mericlo, 63 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 66; Greyston v. Clark, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 130; Ayers v. Trust Co., 187 Ill. 42, 58 N. E. 318.

ESTATE IN FEE-SIMPLE. The estate which a man has where lands are given to him and to his heirs absolutely without any end or limit put to his estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 106; Plowd. 557; 1 Prost. Est. 425; Litt. § 1. The word “fee,” used alone, is a sufficient designation of this species of estate, and hence “simple” is not a necessary part of the title, but it is added as a means of clearly distinguishing this estate from a fee-tail or from any variety of conditional estates.

ESTATE IN FEE-TAIL, generally termed an “estate tail.” An estate of inheritance which a man has, to hold to him and the heirs of his body, or to him and particular heirs of his body. 1 Steph. Comm. 228. An estate of inheritance by force of the statute De Domis, limited and restrained to some particular heirs of the donee, in exclusion of others. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. pp. 22, 23, § 971; Cruise, Dig. tit. 2, e, 1, § 12. See Tail; Fee-Tail.

ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY. An estate in lands or tenements granted to two or more persons, to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. 2 Bl. Comm. 150; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 933. An estate acquired by two or more persons in the same land, by the same title, (not being a title by descent,) and at the same period; and without any limitation by words importing that they are to take in distinct shares. 1 Steph. Comm. 312. The most remarkable incident or consequence of this kind of estate is that it is subject to survivorship.

ESTATE IN POSSESSION. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency. 2 Bl. Comm. 163. An estate where the tenant is in actual permancy, or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 968, § 2932; Eberts v. Fisher, 44 Mich. 551, 7 N. W. 211; Sage v. Wheeler, 3 App. Div. 38, 37 N. Y. S. 1107; Campeu v. Campau, 19 Mich. 116; Valle v. Clemens, 18 Mo. 486.

ESTATE IN REMAINDER. An estate limited to take effect in possession, or in enjoyment, or in both, subject only to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene, immediately after the regular expiration of a particular estate of freehold previously created together with it, by the same instrument, out of the same subject of property. 2 Fearne, Rem. § 159; 2 Bl. Comm. 163; 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 701.

ESTATE IN REVERSION. A species of estate in expectancy, created by operation of law, being the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. 2 Bl. Comm. 175; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 975, § 2945. The residue of an estate left in the grantor or his heirs, or in the heirs of a testator, commencing in possession on the determination of a particular estate granted or devised. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 718, (723) § 12. An estate in reversion is where any estate is derived, by grant or otherwise, out of a larger one, leaving in the original owner an ulterior estate immediately expectant on that which is so derived; the latter interest being called the “particular estate,” (as being only a small part or particula of the original one,) and the ulterior interest, the “reversion.” 1 Steph. Comm. 290. See Reversion.

ESTATE IN SEVERALTY. An estate held by a person in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest, during his estate. This is the most common and usual way of holding an estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 179; Cruise, Dig. tit. 18, c, 1, § 1.

ESTATE IN VADO. An estate in gage or pledge. 2 Bl. Comm. 157; 1 Steph. Comm. 282. See Mortgage.

ESTATE LESS THAN FREEHOLD. An estate for years, estate at will, or estate at sufferance. Fowler v. Marion & Pittsburg Coal Co., 315 Ill. 312, 146 N. E. 318, 319. See Estate of Freehold.

ESTATE OF FREEHOLD (or Frank-tenement). An estate in land or other real property, of uncertain duration; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of the tenant at the least, (as distinguished from a leasehold;) and held by a free tenure, (as distinguished from copyhold or vilennage.) Any estate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, existing in or arising from real property of free tenure. 2 Bla. Comm. 104.
Freehold in deed is the real possession of land or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right to such tenements before entry. The term has also been applied to those offices which a man holds in fee or for life. Mozl. & W. Dict.; 1 Washb. R. P. 71, 637. See Gage v. Scales, 100 Ill. 221; State v. Bagland, 75 N. C. 12, 1 L. R. 11 Eq. 454; Liberrum Tenementum.

ESTATE OF INHERITANCE. An estate which may descend to heirs. 1 Washb. R. P. 51. A species of freehold estate in lands, otherwise called a "fee," where the tenant is not only entitled to enjoy the land for his own life, but where, after his death, it is cast by the law upon the persons who successively represent him in perpetuum, in right of blood, according to a certain established order of descent. 1 Steph. Comm. 218; Litt. § 1; Nellis v. Munson, 108 N. Y. 458, 15 N. E. 739; Rouselton v. Hall, 66 Ark. 305, 50 S. W. 690, 74 Am. St. Rep. 97; Ipswich v. Topsfield, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 351; Brown v. Freed, 43 Ind. 256.

Estates of freeholds are divided into those of inheritance and those not of inheritance. All estates of inheritance in tenements are freehold; but, since freeholds embrace estates for life and those of indefinite duration which may endure for life, all freeholds are not "estates of inheritance." Beir v. Columbia County, 73 Or. 167, 144 P. 467, 470; Crabb, R. P. § 945.

Estate pur autre vie. Estate for another's life. An estate in lands which a man holds for the life of another person. 2 Bl. Comm. 120; Litt. § 56.

Estate Tail. See Estate in Fee-Tail.

Estate Tail, Quasi. When a tenant for life grants his estate to a man and his heirs, as these words, though apt and proper to create an estate tail, cannot do so, because the grantor, being only tenant for life, cannot grant in perpetuum, therefore they are sold to create an estate tail quasi, or improper. Brown.

Estate Upon Condition. An estate in lands, the existence of which depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, or enlarged, or finally defeated. 2 Bl. Comm. 151; 1 Steph. Comm. 276; Co. Litt. 201a. An estate having a qualification annexed to it, by which it may, upon the happening of a particular event, be created, or enlarged, or destroyed. 4 Kent, Comm. 121.

Estate upon Condition expressed. An estate granted, either in fee-simple or otherwise, with an express qualification annexed, whereby the estate granted shall either commence, be enlarged, or be defeated upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition. 2 Bl. Comm. 154. An estate which is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. 1 Steph. Comm. 278.

Estate Upon Condition Implied. An estate having a condition annexed to it inseparably from its essence and constitution, although no condition be expressed in words. 2 Bl. Comm. 122; 4 Kent, Comm. 121.

Estates of the Realm. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Bl. Comm. 153. Sometimes called the "three estates." Inasmuch as the lords spiritual have no separate assembly or negative in their political capacity, some authorities reduce the estates in Great Britain to two, the lords and commoners. Webster, Dict.

Generally in feudal Europe there were three estates, the clergy, nobles, and commons. In England (until about the 14th century) the three estates of the realm were the clergy, barons, and knights. In legal practice the lords spiritual and lords temporal are usually collectively designated under the one name lords. Webster, Dict.

Estendard, Estendard, or Standard. An ensign for horsemen in war.

Estier in Judgment. L. Fr. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant. Kelham.

Estimate. A valuing or rating by the mind, without actually measuring, weighing, or the like. City of Tulsa v. Weston, 102 Okl. 222, 229 P. 106, 122. A rough or approximate calculation only. Bair v. Montrose, 58 Utah, 398, 199 P. 667, 669; Branting v. Salt Lake City, 153 P. 905, 906, 47 Utah, 296; P. M. Hennessy Const. Co. v. Hart, 141 Minn. 449, 170 N. W. 579, 598. Thus, a census is a finding of the population, not an "estimate." State ex rel. Reynolds v. Jost, 265 Mo. 51, 175 S. W. 591, 597, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 1102.

This word is used to express the mind or judgment of the speaker or writer on the particular subject under consideration. It implies a calculation or computation, as to estimate the gain or loss of an enterprise. People v. Clark, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 203.

As used in a contract for the sale of an estimated quantity of goods, "estimated" may mean practically the same as "more or less." Robbins v. Hill (Tex. Civ. App.) 292 S. W. 1112, 1115. Generally, the word "estimated" indicates that a statement of quantity is a matter of description, and not of the essence of the contract. Bigitone v. Bruno, 192 Cal. 167, 213 P. 69, 70.

Estop. To stop, bar, or impede; to prevent; to preclude. Co. Litt. 352a; Olsgard v. Lemke, 32 N. D. 551, 156 N. W. 102, 103. See Estoppel.

Estoppel. A bar or impediment raised by the law, which precludes a man from alleging or from denying a certain fact or state of facts, in consequence of his previous allegation or denial or conduct or admission, or in

A preclusion, in law, which prevents a man from alleging or denying a fact. In consequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial of a contrary tenor. Steph. Pl. 239; Hodde v. Hahn, 283 Mo. 320, 222 S. W. 790, 801.

The preclusion of a person from asserting a fact, by previous conduct inconsistent therewith, on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to call in question. Erickson v. Wiper, 33 N. D. 193, 157 N. W. 592, 595.

An admission of so conclusive a nature that the party whom it affects is not permitted to aver against it or offer evidence to controvert it. 2 Smith, Lead Cas. 778. A man's act or acceptance which stops or closes his mouth to allege or prove the truth. Houston Nat. Bank of Dothan v. Eldridge, 17 Ala. App. 235, 84 So. 430, 431; George v. Ford, 153 Ky. 808, 211 S. W. 436, 440; Doerstler v. First Nat. Bank, 82 Okl. 92, 161 P. 386, 389; Armfield v. Moore, 44 N. C. 157.

Estoppels are sometimes said to be of three kinds: (1) by deed; (2) by matter of record; (3) by matter in pais. The first two are also called legal estoppels, as distinguished from the last kind, known as equitable estoppels. See Equitable estoppel; Legal estoppel, infra.

Synonyms

An "election" differs from an "estoppel in pais" in that in order to be effective it need not be acted upon by the other party by way of a detrimental change of his position; provided the election is a decisive one. Phillips v. Rooker, 134 Tenn. 457, 134 S. W. 12, 14.

A distinction exists between the "ratification" of a contract by a principal and estoppel in pais; ratification following the unauthorized act, and estoppel being based on the principal's inducement to another to act to his prejudice. Depot Realty Syndicate v. Enterprise Brewing Co., 87 Or. 560, 171 P. 223, 224, L. R. A. 1915C, 1001. "Ratification," on the other hand requires no change of position or prejudice. Texas & Pacific Coal & Oil Co. v. Kirtley (Tex. Civ. App.) 288 S. W. 619, 622. Ratification is retroactive and validates all of the act involved, while estoppel extends only to so much of the act as is affected by the conduct working the estoppel. Woodworth v. School Dist. No. 2, Stevens County, 92 Wash. 458, 150 P. 757, 780. Generally speaking, "ratification" applies to a formal declaration of the approval of another's act, whereas "estoppel" is where the party is bound by his own act, but the legal effect is the same. Zenos v. Britten-Cook Land & Live Stock Co., 75 Cal. App. 299, 242 P. 914, 917; Marion Sav. Bank v. Leahy, 200 Iowa, 220, 204 N. W. 456, 458.

"Waiver" means an intentional relinquishment of a known right, and "estoppel" means that a party is precluded by his own acts from asserting a right to the detriment of another who, entitled to rely on such conduct, has acted thereon. Krivitsky & Cohen v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 120 Misc. 451, 221 N. Y. S. 525, 528.

In General

-Equitable estoppel (or estoppel by conduct, or in pais). This is the species of estoppel which equity puts upon a person who has made a false representation or a concealment of material facts, with knowledge of the facts, to a party ignorant of the truth of the matter, with the intention that the other party should act upon it, and with the result that such party is actually induced to act upon it, to his damage. Bigelow, Estop. 484. And see Louisville Banking Co. v. Asher, 65 S. W. 833, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1661; Bank v. Marston, 85 Me. 488, 27 A. 529; Richman v. Baldwin, 21 N. J. Law, 403; Railroad Co. v. Perdue, 40 W. Va. 442, 21 S. E. 755; Advance Thresher Co. v. Fishback, 157 Ky. 427, 163 S. W. 228, 230; Baker-McGregor Co. v. Union Seed & Fertilizer Co., 125 Ark. 146, 188 S. W. 571, 572; Maxwell v. Dimond, 83 Wash. 30, 145 P. 77, 78; De Lashtum v. Tector, 261 Mo. 412, 169 S. W. 34, 41; L. J. Upton & Co. v. Ferebee, 175 N. C. 194, 100 S. E. 310, 311; Cannon v. Baker, 87 S. C. 116, 81 S. E. 478, 482; Canadian Northern R. Co. v. Northern Mississippi R. Co. (C. C. A.) 209 P. 753, 763; New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. City of Buffalo, 85 Misc. 78, 147 N. Y. S. 209, 211; Maryland Casualty Co. v. Gates (C. C. A.) 290 F. 65, 69; Lackworth State Bank v. Baker (Tex. Civ. App.) 284 S. W. 566, 569; Chambers v. Besent, 17 N. M. 487, 134 P. 237, 239; Peters Trust Co. v. Cranmore, 114 Neb. 491, 208 N. W. 635, 637; American Mut. Liability Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 145 Va. 391, 135 S. E. 21, 25; Rice v. Washington County Building & Loan Ass'n, 145 Miss. 1, 110 So. 831, 834. "Equitable estoppel" is the effect of the voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is absolutely precluded, both at law and in equity, from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed either of property, of contract, or of remedy, as against another person who has in good faith relied upon such conduct and has been led thereby to change his position for the worse, and who on his part acquires some corresponding right, either of property, contract, or remedy. Baird v.
Stephan, 52 N. D. 563, 204 N. W. 188, 195; City of Bayonne v. Passaic Consol. Water Co., 98 N. J. Eq. 174, 130 A. 530, 531. An "equitable estoppel" or "estoppel in pais" arises when one represents by word of mouth, conduct, or silent acquiescence that a certain state of facts exists, thus inducing another to act in reliance upon the supposed existence of such facts, so that if the party making the representation were not estopped to deny its truth, the party relying thereon would be subjected to loss or injury. Graves v. Gross & L. Peace, 192 Ala. 164, 68 So. 297, 298. "Equitable estoppel" arises from conduct, including spoken or written words, positive acts, silence, or omission. Smith v. Williams, 141 S. C. 265, 139 S. E. 625, 630, 54 A. L. R. 904. While an "estoppel in pais" is called an equitable estoppel, it is a legal estoppel as well, and is not treated as a distinctively equitable defense and can be pleaded in any case. Weber v. Hartzell (C. C. A.) 230 F. 965, 967.

—Estoppel by conduct. That which arises where a party is induced by the conduct of another to do, or forbear doing, something he would not, or would have done but for such conduct of the other. Big Vein Pocalhontas Co. v. Browning, 137 Va. 34, 120 S. E. 247, 256. Also called "equitable estoppel" (q. v.).

—Estoppel by deed. Such as arises from the provisions of a deed. Erickson v. Wiper, 33 N. D. 193, 157 N. W. 592, 598; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; Green v. Clark, 13 Vt. 358; Douglass v. Scott, 5 Ohio, 198; Bennett v. Conant, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 163; Reinhard v. Min. Co., 107 Mo. 616, 10 S. W. 17, 25 Am. St. Rep. 441; Carson v. Cochran, 52 Minn. 67, 53 N. W. 1130; Craig v. Reeder, 3 McCord (S. C.) 411. A preclusion against the competent parties to a valid sealed indenture and their privies to deny its force and effect by any evidence of inferior solemnity. Hart v. Anaconda Copper Mining Co., 69 Mont. 354, 222 P. 419, 421. Such an estoppel occurs where a party has executed a deed, that is, a writing under seal (as a bond) reciting a certain fact, and is thereby precluded from afterwards denying, in any action brought upon that instrument, the fact so recited. Steph. Plt. 197. A man shall always be estopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove anything in contradiction to what he has once solemnly and deliberately avowed. 2 Bl. Comm. 295; Plowd. 434; Hudson v. Winslow Tp., 35 N. J. Law, 441; Taggart v. Risley, 4 Or. 242; Appeal of Waters, 35 Pa. 326, 78 Am. Dec. 354.

—Estoppel by election. An estoppel predicated on a voluntary and intelligent action or choice of one of several things which is inconsistent with another, the effect of the estoppel being to prevent the party so choosing from afterwards reversing his election or disputing the state of affairs or rights of others resulting from his original choice. Yates v. Hurd, 8 Colo. 348, 8 Pac. 575.

—Estoppel by judgment. The estoppel raised by the rendition of a valid judgment by a court having jurisdiction, which prevents the parties to the action, and all who are in privity with them, from afterwards disputing or drawing into controversy the particular facts or issues on which the judgment was based or which were or might have been litigated in the action. 2 Bl. Judgm. § 504; State v. Torinus, 28 Minn. 175, 9 N. W. 725. An "estoppel by judgment" is that which results from a former adjudication between the same parties on the same cause of action, and is conclusive as to every issue which was or might have been litigated; "estoppel by verdict," on the other hand, is that which results from a judgment between the same parties, on a different cause of action and is conclusive as to the facts actually decided or, in absence of evidence thereof, as to pleaded issues necessarily determined. State ex rel. Gott v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Baltimore, Md., 317 Mo. 1078, 298 S. W. 58, 83. See, also, Estoppel by verdict.

—Estoppel by laches. A neglect to do something which one should do, or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time. Jett v. Jett, 171 Ky. 548, 188 S. W. 669, 672. A species of "equitable estoppel" or "estoppel by matter in pais." See those titles.

—Estoppel by matter in pais. An estoppel by the conduct or admissions of the party; an estoppel not arising from deed or matter of record. Steph. Plt. 197; Strong v. Ellsworth, 29 Vt. 366, 373. And see West Winstead Sav. Bank v. Ford, 27 Conn. 290, 71 Am. Dec. 66; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 38, 55 Am. Dec. 157; Bank v. Dean, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 299, 17 N. Y. Supp. 375; Coogler v. Rogers, 25 Fla. 583, 7 South. 391; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 645, 19 L. Ed. 1068; Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. 336; Barnard v. Seminary, 40 Mich. 441, 13 N. W. 511; Lawson v. Edwards (Mo. App.) 293 S. W. 704, 705; California Prune & Peach Growers v. El Reno Wholesale Grocery Co. (C. C. A.) 15 F. (2d) 339. A right arising from acts, admissions, or conduct which have induced a change of position. Citizens' Bank of Senath v. Douglass, 178 Mo. App. 664, 161 S. W. 601, 606. An "estoppel in pais" arises whenever one, by his conduct, affirmative or negative, intentionally or through culpable negligence induces another to believe and have confidence in certain material facts, and the latter, having the right to so relies and acts thereon, and is, as a reasonable and inevitable consequence, misled to his injury. Shapera v. Fargo, 240 Ill. App. 145. Estoppel by matters in pais is an indisputable admission arising from circumstances that party claiming benefit of it has in good faith been induced to change his position to his substantial prejudice by voluntary intelligent action by party against whom it is alleged. First Lutheran Church of Pontiac v. Rooks Creek Evangelical
The phrase "estoppel by negligence" has been characterized as "an expression usual but not accurate, since negligence prevents a right of action accruing, estoppel a right that has accrued from being set up"; 2 Beven, Negl. 1332. See a discussion of the doctrine, with critical examination of the English cases, in 15 L. Q. R. 384.

—ESTOPPEL by verdict. This term is sometimes applied to the estoppel arising from a former adjudication of the same fact or issue between the same parties or their privies. Chicago Theological Seminary v. People, 189 Ill. 439, 59 N. E. 977; Swank v. Railway Co., 61 Minn. 423, 63 N. W. 1088. But this use is not correct, as it is not the verdict which creates an estoppel, but the judgment, and it is immaterial whether a jury participated in the trial or not. The doctrine of estoppel by verdict is but another branch of the doctrine of res judicata. Hoffman v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 205 Ill. App. 197, 198; Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. National Storage Co., 260 Ill. 485, 108 N. E. 227, 231. See, however, Coffman v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 71 W. Va. 57, 51 S. E. 575. See, also, Estoppel by Judgment.

—ESTOPPEL by warranty. An estoppel based on the principle of giving effect to the manifest intent of a grantor and of preventing the grantor from derogating or destroying his own grant by subsequent act. Lewis v. King, 157 La. 718, 103 So. 22. See Estoppel by deed.

—Judicial estoppel. One arising from sworn statements made in the course of judicial proceedings, generally in a former litigation, in absence of any showing that statement was made inadvertently or through mistake; it is based on public policy and not on prejudice to adverse party by reason thereof, as in case of equitable estoppel. Sartain v. Dixie Coal & Iron Co., 150 Tenn. 633, 266 S. W. 313, 316.

—Quasi estoppel. The principle which precludes a party from asserting, to another's disadvantage, a right inconsistent with a position previously taken by him. Philadelphia County v. Sheehan, 263 Pa. 449, 107 A. 14, 16; Riley v. Brown, 72 Cal. App. 463, 237 P. 383, 887. A term used by Bigelow to cover a group of cases in which a party is precluded from occupying inconsistent positions, either in litigations or in ordinary dealings; Big. Est. (6th ed.) 732. For some illustrative cases, see 31 Ch. D. 466; 2 Atk. 88; Pickett v. Bank, 32 Ark. 346; Robinson v. Pembrook, 71 Ala. 240; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119, 15 N. W. 42; Wood v. Seely, 32 N. Y. 105; The Water Witch, 1 Black, 494, 17 L. Ed. 155; Vose v. Cockcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Sherman v. McKeon, 38 N. Y. 296; Cloud v. Coleman, 1 Bush (Ky.) 548; City of Burlington v. Gilbert, 31 Iowa, 356, 7 Am. Rep. 145; Appeal of Ferson, 96 Pa. 140. It is to be noted that in the cases grouped under this title the courts have generally used the simple term "estoppel" which, though it has been suggested, is a questionable use of terms, since many of the cases are mere instances of ratification or acquiescence; Big. Est. 755.

BL.LAW DICT.(3D ED.)

In Pleading

A plea, replication, or other pleading, which, without confessing or denying the matter of fact adversely alleged, relies merely on some matter of estoppel as a ground for excluding the opposite party from the allegation of the fact. Steph. Pl. 219; 3 Bl. Comm. 308.

A plea which neither admits nor denies the facts alleged by the plaintiff, but denies its right to allege them. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 39.

A special plea in bar, which happens where a man has done some act or executed some deed which precludes him from averring anything to the contrary. 3 Bl. Comm. 308.

Estoveria sunt arendi, arandi, constructi et claudendi. 13 Coke, 68. Estovers are of fire-bote, plow-bote, house-bote, and hedge-bote.

ESTOVERII HABENDIS. A writ for a wife judicium separated to recover her allimony or estovers. Obsolete.

ESTOVERS. An allowance made to a person out of an estate or other thing for his or her support, as for food and raiment.

An allowance (more commonly called "allimony") granted to a woman divorced a mensa et thoro, for her support out of her husband’s estate. 1 Bl. Comm. 441.

The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; Woodf. Landl. & Ten. 232; Zimmerman v. Shreve, 59 Md. 363; Lawrence v. Hunter, 9 Watts (Pa.) 78; Livingston v. Reynolds, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 159; Van Rensselaar v. Radcliffe, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 26 Am. Dec. 352; Gardner v. Dering, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 578.

There is much learning in the old books relative to the creation, apportionment, suspension, and extinguishment of these rights, very little of which, however, is applicable to the condition of things in this country, except perhaps in New York, where the grants of the manors-lands have led to some litigation on the subject. 9 Wash. C. C. 412; 4 L. & Eng. Comm. 237; 2 Iredale, 47; 3 Iredale, 247; Faden v. Smedley, 7 Bing. 569; Palford v. Palford, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 123; Richardson v. York, 14 Me. 221; Dalton v. Dalton, 42 N. C. 197; Owen v. Hyde, 6 Term. (Tenn.) 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467; Loomis v. Wilbur, 5 Mass. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 8,486.

Common of Estovers

A liberty of taking necessary wood for the use or furniture of a house or farm from off another’s estate, in common with the owner or with others. 2 Bl. Comm. 35.

ESTRAY. Cattle whose owner is unknown. 2 Kent, Comm. 359; Spelman. Any beast, not wild, found within any lordship, and not owned by any man. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 297. These belonged to the lord of the soil. Britt. c. 17. An animal that has strayed away and lost itself; a wandering beast which no one seeks, follows, or claims. Campbell v. Hamilton, 172 N. W. 810, 42 N. D. 218.

Estray must be understood as denoting a wandering beast whose owner is unknown to the person who takes it up. An estray is an animal that has escaped from its owner, and wanders or strays about; usually defined, at common law, as a wandering animal whose owner is unknown. An animal cannot be an estray when on the range where it was raised, and permitted by its owner to run, and especially when the owner is known to the party who takes it up. The fact of its being breachy or vicious does not make it an estray. Walters v. Glaz, 29 Iowa, 439; Roberts v. Barnes, 27 Wis. 456; Kinney v. Roe, 70 Iowa, 509, 30 N. W. 776; Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 203; Yrfaceburn v. Cape, 60 Cal. App. 374, 212 P. 588, 590; Lyman v. Gipson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 435; but see Worthington v. Brent, 69 Mo. 255; State v. Aple, 14 Tex. 421.

The term is used of fotsam at sea. 15 L. Q. R. 357.

ESTREAT, v. To take out a forfeited recognizance from the records of a court, and return it to the court of exchequer, to be prosecuted. See Estray, n.

A forfeited recognizance taken out from among the other records for the purpose of being sent up to the exchequer, that the parties might be sued thereon, was said to be estreated. 4 Bl. Comm. 233. And see Louisiana Society v. Cagle, 45 La. Ann. 1204, 14 South. 422.

There is no "estreat" or taking a judgment of forfeiture of a bail recognizance from the records and sending it up to the exchequer for suit thereon in Louisiana, since the same court which renders a judgment executes it, and the same officers who are charged with procuring it to be rendered are also charged with procuring it to be executed. State v. Johnson, 122 La. 11, 60 So. 702, 703.

ESTREAT, n. (From Lat. 'extractum.') In English law. A copy or extract from the book of estreats, that is, the rolls of any court, in which the amercements or fines, recogniz-ances, etc., imposed or taken by that court upon or from the accused, are set down, and which are to be levied by the bailiff or other officer of the court. Cowell; Brown. A true copy or note of some original writing or record, and especially of fines and amercements imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them. Fitzh. N. B. 57, 70.

ESTRECIATUS. Straightened, as applied to roads. Cowell.

ESTREPE. To strip; to despoil; to lay waste; to commit waste upon an estate, as by cutting down trees, removing buildings, etc. To injure the value of a reversionary interest by stripping or spoiling the estate.

ESTREPEMENT. A species of aggravated waste, by stripping or devastation the land, to the injury of the reversioner, and especially pending a suit for possession.

ESTREPEMENT, WRIT OF. This was a common-law writ of waste, which lay in particular for the reversioner against the tenant for life. In respect of damage or injury to the land committed by the latter. As it was only auxiliary to a real action for recovery of the land, and as equity afforded the same relief by injunction, the writ fell into disuse in England, and was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. In Pennsylvania, by statute, the remedy by estrepelement is extended for the benefit of specified persons. See 10 Viner, Abr. 497; Woodf. Landl. & T. 447; Arch. Civ. Pl. 17; 7 Com. Dig. 659; Irwin v. Covode, 24 Pa. 162; Byrne v. Boyle, 37 Pa. 260.

ET. And. The introductory word of several Latin and law French phrases formerly in common use.

ET ADJOURNATUR. And it is adjourned. A phrase used in the old reports, where the argument of a cause was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had. 1 Kebr. 662, 774, 775.

ET ALII É CONTRA. And others on the other side. A phrase constantly used in the Year Books, in describing a joinder in issue. P. 1 Edw. II. Prist; et alii é contra, et sic ad patriam: ready; and others, é contra, and so to the country. T. 3 Edw. III. 4.

ET ALIUS. And another. The abbreviation et al. (sometimes in the plural written et ale.) is often affixed to the name of the person first mentioned, where there are several plaintiffs, grantees, persons addressed, etc. See In re McGovern’s Estate, 77 Mont. 182, 250 P. 812, 815; Anderson v. Hans, 160 Ga. 420, 128 S. E. 178, 179; Conery v. Webb, 12 La. Ann. 282; Lyman v. Milton, 41 Cal. 630.

ET ALLOCATUR. And it is allowed.

ET CETERA (or ET CETERA). And others; and other things; and others of the like kind; and the rest; and so on; and so forth. Muir v. Kay, 66 Utah, 550, 244 P. 901, 904; Soule v. Northern Const. Co., 33 Cal. App. 300, 165 P. 21, 23; Osterberg v. Section 30 Development Co., 160 Minn. 497, 200 N. W. 738, 739; Duroff v. Commonwealth, 192 Ky. 31, 252 S. W. 47, 48; State on Inf. Haw v. Three States Lumber Co., 274 Mo. 361, 202 S. W. 1083, 1084; Stansberry v. First Methodist Episcopal Church, 79 Or. 155, 154 P. 887, 892; Gallop v. Elizabeth City Milling Co., 178 N. C. 1, 100 S. E. 130; Wagner v. Brady, 130 Tenn. 554, 171 S. W. 1719. In its abbreviated form (etc.) this phrase is frequently added to one of a series of articles or names to show that others are intended to follow or understood to be included. So, after reciting the initiatory words of a set formula, or a clause already given in full, etc. is added, as an abbreviation, for the sake of convenience. See Lathers v. Keogh, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 579; Com. v. Ross, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 428; In re Schouler, 134 Mass. 426; High Court v. Schweltzer, 70 Ill. App. 143; Agate v. Lowenheim, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 62; Hayes v. Wilson, 105 Mass. 21; Gray v. R. Co., 11 Hun (N. Y.) 70; Cooper v. Conklin, 189 N. Y. S. 532, 197 App. Div. 203; O’Connor v. City of New York, 105 N. Y. S. 625, 629, 178 App. Div. 550; Morton v. Young, 173 Ky. 301, 180 S. W. 1090; Becker v. Hopper, 22 Wyo. 237, 185 P. 178, 189, Ann. Cas. 1818D, 1041.

ET DECEO SE METTENT EN LE PAYS. L. Fr. And of this they put themselves upon the country.

ET DE HOC PONIT SE SUPER PATRIAM. And of this he puts himself upon the country. The formal conclusion of a common-law plea in bar by way of traverse. See 3 Bl. Comm. 313. The literal translation is retained in the modern form.

ET EI LEGITUR IN HEC VERBA. L. Lat. And it is read to him in these words. Words formerly used in entering the prayer of over on record.

ET HABEAS IBI TUNC HOC BREVE. And have you then there this writ. The formal words directing the return of a writ. The literal translation is retained in the modern form of a considerable number of writs.

ET HABUIT. And he had it. A common phrase in the Year Books, expressive of the allowance of an application or demand by a party. Pau. demanda la view. Et habuit, etc. M. 6 Edw. III. 49.

ET HOC PARATUS EST VERIFICARE. And this he is prepared to verify. The Latin form of concluding a plea in confession and avoidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plaintiff has set forth, and has pleaded new matter in avoidance. 1 Salk. 2.

These words were used, when the pleadings were in Latin, at the conclusion of any pleading which contained new affirmative matter. They expressed the willingness or readiness of the party so pleading to establish by proof the matter alleged in his pleading. A pleading which concluded in that manner was technically said to "conclude with a verification," in contradistinction to a pleading which simply denied matter alleged by the opposite party, and which for that reason was said to "conclude to the country," because the party merely put himself upon the country, or left the matter to the jury. Brown.

ET HOC PETIT QUOD INQUIRATUR PER PATRIAM. And this he prays may be inquired of by the country. The conclusion of a plaintiff's pleading, tendering an issue to the country. 1 Salk. 6. Literally translated in the modern forms.

ET INDE PETIT JUDICIUM. And thereupon [or thereof] he prays judgment. A clause at the end of pleadings, praying the judgment of the court in favor of the party pleading. It occurs as early as the time of Bracton, and is literally translated in the modern forms. Bract. fol. 57b; Crabb, Eng. Law, 217.

ET INDE PRODUCIT SECTAM. And thereupon he brings suit. The Latin conclusion of a declaration, except against attorneys and other officers of the court. 3 Bl. Comm. 265.

ET MODO AD HUNC DIEM. Lat. And now at this day. This phrase was the formal beginning of an entry of appearance or of a continuance. The equivalent English words are still used in this connection.

ET NON. Lat. And not. A technical phrase in pleading, which introduces the negative averments of a special traverse. It has the same force and effect as the words abaque hoc, "without this," and is occasionally used instead of the latter.

ET SEQ. An abbreviation for et sequentes (masculine and feminine plural) or et sequentia (neuter), "and the following." Thus a reference to "p. 1, et seq." means "page first and the following pages." Also abbreviated "et sqq.," which is preferred by some authorities.

ET SIC. And so. In the Latin forms of pleading these were the introductory words of a special conclusion to a plea in bar, the object being to render it positive and not argumentative; as et sic nil debet.

ET SIC AD JUDICIUM. And so to judgment. Yearb. T. 1 Edw. II. 10.

ET SIC AD PATRIAM. And so to the country. A phrase used in the Year Books, to record an issue to the country.

ET SIC FECIT. And he did so. Yearb. P. 9 Hen. VI. 17.

ET SIC PENDET. And so it hangs. A term used in the old reports to signify that a point was left undetermined. T. Raym. 168.

ET SIC ULERIUS. And so on; and so further; and so forth. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 50, § 27.

ET UX. An abbreviation for et uxor,—"and wife." Where a grantor's wife joins him in the conveyance, it is sometimes expressed (in abstracts, etc.) to be by "A. B. et ux."

ETCHING. Strictly, the art of using acid to bite a design on metal; in a broader sense, the word includes the sand-blast process, which uses no acid, but relies on abrasion by sand, emery, or a like substance. Graphic Arts Co. v. Photo-Chromotype Engraving Co. (C. C. A.) 231 F. 146, 148.

ETHICS, LEGAL. That branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client.

ETIQUETTE OF THE PROFESSION. The code of honor agreed on by mutual understanding and tacitly accepted by members of the legal profession, especially by the bar. Wharton.

Eun qui nocentem infamat, non est aequum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim noncentum nota esse oportet et expedit. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. Dig. 47, 10, 17; 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

EUNDO, MORANDO, ET REDEUNDO. Lat. Going, remaining, and returning. A person who is privileged from arrest (as a witness, legislator, etc.) is generally so privileged eundo, morando, et redeundo; that is, on his way to the place where his duties are to be performed, while he remains there, and on his return journey.

EUNOMY. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.

EUNCH. A male of the human species who has been castrated. See Domat, liv. prél. tit. 2, § 1, n. 10. Eckert v. Van Pelt, 69 Kan. 337, 76 Pac. 969, 46 L. R. A. 265.

EVASION. A subtle endeavoring to set aside truth or to escape the punishment of the law. Thus, if one person says to another that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of Evasion to strike first, and, accordingly, the latter strikes, the returning the blow is punishable; and, if the person first striking is killed, it is murder, for no man shall evade the justice of the law by such a pretense. 1 Hawk. P. C. 81; Bac. Abr. Fraud, A. So no one may plead ignorance of the law to evade it. Jacob.

In a general way the words "suppression," "evasion," and "concealment" mean to avoid by some device or strategy or the concealment or intentional withholding some fact which ought in good faith to be communicated. Murray v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 189 Iowa, 628, 183 N. W. 431, 433.

Evasive. Tending or seeking to evade; elusive; shifting; as an evasive argument or plea.

Evasive Answer. One which consists in refusing either to admit or to deny a matter as to which the defendant is necessarily presumed to know. Knowledge. For example, where a defendant is alleged to be a corporation, an answer denying, for want of sufficient information, either to admit or to deny such an averment would be evasive. Raleigh & Gaston Ry. Co. v. Pullman Co., 122 Ga. 700, 50 S. E. 1008. But an answer distinctly denying an allegation that the defendant is a corporation, although it may be false, is not evasive. Gaynor v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 12 Ga. App. 601, 77 S. E. 1072, 1073.

Eve. The period immediately preceding an important event. Jarvis v. Jarvis, 286 Ill. 478, 122 N. E. 121, 123.

Evening. The period between sunset or the evening meal and ordinary bedtime. City of Albany v. Black, 216 Ala. 4, 112 So. 438; State v. Foley, 89 Vt. 193, 94 A. 841, 842.

Evenings. In old English law. The delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass, or corn, etc., to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement. Kennett, Gloss.

Event. The consequences of anything, the issue, conclusion, end; that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminate. See Bates, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 473.

In reference to judicial and quasi judicial proceedings, "event" means the conclusion, end, or final outcome or result of a litigation; as, in the phrase "abide the event," speaking of costs or of an agreement that one suit shall be governed by the determination in another. Reeves v. McGregor, 9 Adol. & El. 576; Benjamin v. Ver Nooy, 168 N. Y. 578, 61 N. E. 971; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Scammon, 35 Ill. App. 690; Gordon v. Krellman, 216 N. Y. S. 778, 779, 217 App. Div. 477.

Eventus est qui ex causis sequitur; et dictum eventus quia ex causis event. 9 Coke, 81. An event is that which follows from the cause, and is called an "event" because it eventuates from causes.

Every. Each one of all; all the separate individuals who constitute the whole, regarded one by one. Geary v. Parker, 65 Ark. 521, 47 S. W. 238; Purdy v. People, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 413; State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 221; Smith v. Hall, 217 Ky. 615, 290 S. W. 480, 482; Salo v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., 95 Wash. 109, 163 P. 384, 385, L. R. A. 1917D, 613. The term is sometimes equivalent to "all"; Erskine v. Fyle, 51 S. D. 262, 213 N. W. 500, 502; and sometimes to "each"; Miller v. Rodd, 285 Pa. 16, 131 A. 482, 483.

Every man must be taken to contemplate the probable consequences of the act he does. Lord Ellenborough, 9 East. 277. A fundamental maxim in the law of evidence. Best, Pres. § 16; 1 Phill. Ev. 444. (Every man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own voluntary acts. 1 Greenl. Evid. § 18; 9 B. & C. 643; 3 Maule & S. 11; Webb, Poll. Torts 35.)

Eves-Droppers. See Eaves-Droppers.

Evit. In the Civil Law
To recover anything from a person by virtue of the judgment of a court or judicial sentence.

At Common Law
To dispossess, or turn out of the possession of lands by process of law. Also to recover land by judgment at law. "If the land is evicted, no rent shall be paid." 10 Coke, 128 a.

In Kentucky, an "eviction" is dispossession under judgment, though it need not be by force of process under judgment. Edgmont Coal Co. v. Asher (D. C.) 258 F. 399; Walker v. Robinson, 163 Ky. 618, 174 S. W. 653, 655.

Originally and technically, the dispossession must be by judgment of law; if otherwise, it was an ouster; Lausing v. Van Alstyne, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 553, note; Webb v. Alexander, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 286; but the necessity of legal process was long ago abandoned in England; 4 Term 617; and in this country also it is settled that there need not be legal process; Greenvault v. Davis, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 645; Grist v. Hodges, 14 N. C. 290; Green v. Irving, 54 Miss. 450, 28 Am. Rep. 300; Thomas v. Becker, 190 Iowa, 237, 180 N. W. 285, 286. Any actual entry and dispossession, adversely and lawfully made under paramount title, will be an eviction. Rawle, Civ. § 133; Gallison v. Downing, 244 Mass. 33, 138 N. E. 315, 318.

An "eviction" is a disturbance in the grantee's possession, by the assertion of a title paramount to which a party has been compelled by law or satisfactory proof of genuineness to submit. Musgrove v. Cordova Coal, Land & Improvement Co., 67 So. 582, 583, 191 Ala. 419.

"Eviction" is anything of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord or those acting under his authority with the intent and effect to deprive the tenant of the use, occupation, and enjoyment of the premises or part thereof, or the establishment or assertion against the tenant of a title paramount to the landlord. Blomberg v. Evans, 194 N. C. 113, 138 S. E. 253, 354, 33 A. L. R. 56; Albright v. Thiemer, 27 N. J. Law, 103, 115 A. 276, 277; Lorenz v. McCloskey, 135 A. 530, 5 N. J. Misc. 27; National Furniture Co. v. Inhabitants of Cumberland County, 113 Md. 175, 33 A. 79, 71; Arugila v. Cavalcia, 259 Mass. 261, 138 N. E. 253, 254, L. R. A. 1923C, 59; De Fries v. Scott (C. C. A.) 258 F. 932, 936.

To constitute "eviction," the act need not be of a permanent character, but it is sufficient that it deprive the tenant of the free enjoyment of the premises or some part thereof or appurtenances thereto. Hotel Marion Co. v. Water, 77 Or. 458, 160 P. 855, 858.

Originally an eviction was understood to be a dispossession of the tenant by some act of his landlord or the failure of his title. Of later years it has come to include any wrongful act of the landlord which may result in an interference with the tenant's possession in whole or in part. The act may be one of omission as well as one of commission. Holden v. Tidwell, 37 Okl. 553, 33 P. 54, 55, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 329, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 324.

Eviction implies an entry under paramount title, so as to interfere with the rights of the grantee. The object of the party making the entry is immaterial, whether it be to take all or a part of the land itself or merely an incorporeal right. Phrases equivalent in meaning are "oust by paramount title," "entry and disturbance," "possession under an elder title," and the like. Mitchell v. Warner, 8 Conn. 497.

In a more popular sense, the term denotes turning a tenant of land out of possession, either by re-entry or by legal proceedings, such as an action of ejectment. Sweet.

By a loose extension, the term is sometimes applied to the ousting of a person from the possession of chattels; but, properly, it applies only to realty.

In the Civil Law

The abandonment which one is obliged to make of a thing, in pursuance of a sentence by which he is commanded to do so. Poth. Contr. Sale, pt. 2, c. 1, § 2, art. 1, no. 83. The abandonment which a buyer is compelled to make of a thing purchased, in pursuance of a judicial sentence. Eviction is the loss suffered by the buyer of the totality of the thing sold, or of a part thereof, occasioned by the right or claims of a third person. Civil Code La. art. 2500.

In General

Actual eviction is an actual expulsion of the tenant out of all or some part of the demised premises; a physical ouster or dispossession from the very thing granted or some substantial part thereof. Knotts v. McGregor, 47 W. Va. 566, 39 S. E. 699; Talbott v. English, 156 Ind. 290, 59 N. E. 857; Seigel v. Neary, 77 N. Y. 854, 38 Misc. Rep. 297; Pendleton v. Dyett, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 581, 585; Friedman-White Realty Co. v. Garage Development Corp., 223 N. Y. S. 839, 841, 130 Misc. 266.

Constructive eviction, as the term is used with reference to breach of the covenants of warranty and of quiet enjoyment, means the inability of the purchaser to obtain possession by reason of a paramount outstanding title. Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 368, 18 N. W. 94. With reference to the relation of landlord and tenant, there is a "constructive eviction" when the former, without intent to oust the latter, does some act which deprives the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises or materially impairs such enjoyment. Realty Co. v. Fuller, 67 N. Y. S. 1443. 53 Minn. Rep. 910. The Hotel Marion Co. v. Water, 77 Or. 458, 160 P. 855, 858; General Industrial & Mfg. Co. v. American Garment Co., 76 Ind. App. 629, 128 N. E. 454, 455; Santrizos v. Public Drug Co., 143 Minn. 222, 173 N. W. 563, 564. Any disturbance of the tenant's possession by the landlord whereby the premises are rendered unfit or unsuitable for occupancy in whole or in substantial part for the purposes for which they were leased amounts to a constructive eviction, if the tenant so elects and surrenders his possession. Vossey v. Moriyama, 184 Cal. 802, 165 P. 662, 663; Murry v. Merchants' Southwest Transfer & Storage Co., 88 Okl. 270, 225 P. 547, 549.

Partial eviction. That which takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of his rights in the premises.

Total eviction. That which occurs when the possessor is wholly deprived of his rights in the premises.

That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon the questions in dispute or issue, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argument. 1 Starkie, Ev. pt. 1, § 2.
EVIDENCE

That which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or to influence the belief respecting it. Belief is produced by the consideration of something presented to the mind. The matter thus presented, in whatever shape it may come, and through whatever material organ it is derived, is evidence. Parker, Lectures on Medical Jurisprudence, in Dartmouth College.

That which furnishes or tends to furnish proof. It is that which brings to the mind a just conviction of the truth or falsehood of any substantive proposition which is asserted or denied. Wong Yee Toon v. Stump (C. C. A.) 223 F. 194, 198; Ex parte Lam Ful (D. C.) 217 F. 465, 467. The evidence which establishes, makes clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other. Leonard v. State, 100 Ohio St. 456, 127 N. E. 464, 469; Lynch v. Rosenberger, 121 Kan. 601, 249 P. 662, 663, 60 A. L. R. 376.

The word "evidence," in legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 1 Greenl, Ev. c. 1, § 1; Latkows v. State, 88 So. 45, 47, 17 Ala. App. 592.

Synonyms distinguished.

The term "evidence" is to be distinguished from its synonyms "proof" and "testimony." "Proof" is the logically sufficient reason for ascertaining to the truth of a proposition advanced. In its juridical sense it is a term of wide import, and comprehends everything that may be adduced at a trial, within the legal rules, for the purpose of producing conviction in the mind of judge or jury, aside from mere argument. That is, everything that has a probative force intrinsically, and not merely as a deduction from, or combination of, original probative facts. But "evidence" is a narrower term, and includes only such kinds of proof as may be legally presented at a trial, by the act of the parties, and through the use of such concrete facts as witnesses, records, or other documents. Thus, to urge a presumption of law in support of one's case is adding proof, but it is not offering evidence. "Testimony," again, is a still more restricted term. It properly means only such evidence as is delivered by a witness on the trial of a case, either orally or in the form of affidavits or depositions. Thus, an ancient deed, when offered under proper circumstances, is evidence, but it could not strictly be called testimony. "Belief" is a subjective condition resulting from proof. It is a conviction of the truth of a proposition, existing in the mind, and induced by persuasion, proof, or argument addressed to the judgment.

Testimony is one species of evidence. But the word "evidence" is a generic term which includes every species of it. Gazette Printing Co. v. Morss, 80 Ind. 597. Testimony is the evidence given by witnesses. Evidence is whatever may be given to the jury as tending to prove a case. It includes the testimony of witnesses, documents, admissions of parties, etc. Mann v. Higgins, 83 Cal. 66, 23 P. 206; Carroll v. Bancker, 43 La. Ann. 1097, 10 South. 192; Columbia Nat. Bank v. German Nat. Bank, 56 Neb. 385, 77 N. W. 446; Harris v. Tumlinson, 135 Ind. 428, 30 N. E. 214; Jones v. Gregory, 45 N. J. 220; Industrial Commission v. Jasionowski, 24 Ohio App. 159, 159 N. E. 616, 618. What is sworn is testimony; what is the truth deduced therefrom is "evidence." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Rogers, 21 Ga. App. 254, 24 S. E. 231, 232; Mck v. Mart (N. J. Ch.) 65 A. 893.

The word "proof" seems proper to mean anything which serves, either immediately or mediate-ly, to convince the mind of the truth or falsehood of a fact or proposition. It is also applied to the conviction generated in the mind by proof properly so called. The word "evidence" signifies, in its original sense, the state of being evident, i.e., plain, apparent, or notorious. But by an almost peculiar infusion of its language, it is applied to that which tends to render evident or to generate proof. Best, Ev. §§ 20, 21; Du Pont v. Pelletier, 120 Me. 114, 113 A. 11, 12. "Evidence" differs from "proof" in that former may be false and of no probative value. State v. Howard, 162 La. 729, 111 So. 72, 75.

Proof in a strictly accurate and technical sense is the result or effect of evidence, while evidence is the medium or means by which a fact is proved or disproved, but the words "proof" and "evidence" may be used interchangeably. Walker v. State, 128 Ark. 317, 212 S. W. 319, 324; Latkows v. State, 27 Ala. App. 592, 88 So. 45, 47.

While the "facts" and the "evidence" are quite different since the facts can neither be added to nor taken from, while evidence may be added to, weakened, or even destroyed, it sometimes may happen that they constitute one and the same thing. Gates v. Haw, 150 Ind. 370, 50 N. E. 269.

Classification
There are many species of evidence, and it is susceptible of being classified on several different principles. The more usual divisions are indicated below.

Evidence is either judicial or extrajudicial. Judicial evidence is the means, sanctioned by law, of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact. (Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1933;) while extrajudicial evidence is that which is used to satisfy private persons as to facts requiring proof.

Evidence is either primary or secondary. Primary evidence is that kind of evidence which, under every possible circumstance, affords the greatest certainty of the fact in question. Thus, a written instrument is itself the best possible evidence of its existence and contents. Secondary evidence is that which is inferior to primary. Thus, a copy of an instrument, or oral evidence of its contents, is secondary evidence of the instrument and contents. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. §§ 1829, 1830. In other words, primary evidence means original or first-hand evidence; the best evidence that the nature of the case admits of; the evidence which is required in the first instance, and which must fail before secondary evidence can be admitted. That evidence which the nature of the case or ques-
Intrinsic evidence is that which is derived from a document without anything to explain it. Extrínsc evidence is external evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like. Extrínsc evidence is also said to be evidence not legitimately before the tribunal in which the determination is made. Baldwin v. City of Buffalo, 35 N. Y. 375, 382.

Compound and Descriptive Terms

- Admínairel evidence. Auxiliary or supplementary evidence, such as is presented for the purpose of explaining and completing other evidence. (Chiefly used in ecclesiastical law.)

- Best evidence. Primary evidence, that is, the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3053; Steph. Ev. 67; Scott v. State, 3 Tex. App. 103, 104. As used in the rule that where the "best evidence" the case will admit of cannot be had, the "best evidence" that can be had shall be allowed, it means that if the best legal evidence cannot be produced, the best legal evidence that can be had should be admitted. Gray v. Pentland, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 23, 34. See definitions of primary evidence under the heading "Classification. supra."

- Circumstantial evidence. The proof of various facts or circumstances which usually attend the main fact in dispute, and therefore tend to prove its existence, or to sustain, by their consistence, the hypothesis claimed. Or as otherwise defined, it consists in reasoning from facts which are known or proved to establish such as are conjectured to exist. See, further, Circumstantial Evidence.

- Competent evidence. That which the very nature of the thing to be proven requires, as, the production of a writing where its contents are the subject of inquiry. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2; Chapman v. McAdams, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 500, 504; Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 242, 249; Hill v. Hill, 216 Ala. 455, 115 So. 306, 308; Porter v. Valentine, 18 Misc. 213, 41 N. Y. S. 507, 508; Goltra v. Penland, 45 Or. 254, 77 P. 120, 133. Also, generally, admissible or relevant, as the opposite of "incompetent." (see infra.) State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476 (Gib. 378), 98 Am. Dec. 241; Ryan v. Town of Bristol, 63 Conn. 264, 27 A. 309, 312; Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 5729; Pen. Code Ga. 1910, § 1009; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13; 1 Stark. Ev. 19; Taryl. Ev. 84. Indirect or circumstantial evidence is that which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed. Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 5729; Pen. Code Ga. 1910, § 1009; U. S. v. Greene (D. C.) 146 F. 908, 821. Indirect evidence consists of both inferences and presumptions. Lake County v. Nelson, 44 Or. 14, 74 P. 212, 214.

Evidence is either intrinsic or extrinsic.
EVIDENCE

—Cumulative evidence. Additional or corroborative evidence to the same point. That which goes to prove what has already been established by other evidence. Glidden v. Dunlap, 28 Me. 383; Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 248; Waller v. Graves, 20 Conn. 310; Roe v. Kalb, 37 Ga. 459; Purcell Envelope Co. v. United States, 48 Ct. Cl. 66, 73. All evidence material to the issue, after any such evidence has been given, is in a certain sense cumulative; that is, is added to what has been given before. It tends to sustain the issue. But cumulative evidence, in legal phrase, means evidence from the same or a new witness, simply repeating, in substance and effect, or adding to, what has been before testified to. Parshall v. Kline, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 232. Evidence is not cumulative merely because it tends to establish the same ultimate or principally controverted fact. Cumulative evidence is additional evidence of the same kind to the same point. Able v. Frazier, 43 Iowa, 177; Harlan v. Texas Fuel & Supply Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 160 S. W. 1142, 1146; Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 5729; Pen. Code Ga. 1910, § 1009.

—Documentary evidence. Evidence supplied by writings and documents of every kind in the widest sense of the term; evidence derived from conventional symbols (such as letters) by which ideas are represented on material substances.

—Evidence allude. Evidence from outside, from another source. In certain cases a written instrument may be explained by evidence alluded, that is, by evidence drawn from sources exterior to the instrument itself, e. g., the testimony of a witness to conversations, admissions, or preliminary negotiations.

—Expert evidence. Testimony given in relation to some scientific, technical, or professional matter by experts, or persons qualified to speak authoritatively by reason of their special training, skill, or familiarity with the subject.

—Extraneous evidence. With reference to a contract, deed, will, or any writing, extraneous evidence is such as is not furnished by the document itself, but is derived from outside sources; the same as evidence allude. (See supra.)

—Hearsay evidence. Evidence not proceeding from the personal knowledge of the witness, but from the mere repetition of what he has heard others say. That which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weak-ness, and it is admitted only in specified cases from necessity. Code Ga. 1882, § 3770 (Civil Code 1910, § 5762); 1 Phl. Ev. 158; State v. Ah Lee, 18 Or. 540, 23 P. 424, 425; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 4 S. Ct. 202, 205, 28 L. Ed. 262; Morell v. Morell, 157 Ind. 178, 60 N. E. 1092, 1093; Dixon v. Labry (Ky.) 29 S. W. 21, 22; Shaw v. Ferguson (N. Y.) 5 Thomp. & C. 439, 2 Cow. Cr. R. 290, 294; People v. Smith (N. D.) 191 Cal. App. 224, 233 P. 816, 818; State v. D'Adame, 84 N. J. Law. 386, 86 A. 414, 417; Young v. Stewart, 191 N. C. 297, 131 S. E. 733, 737. Hearsay evidence is second-hand evidence, as distinguished from original evidence; it is the repetition at second-hand of what would be original evidence if given by the person who originally made the statement. Literally, it is what the witness says he heard another person say. Stockton v. Williams, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 546, 570 (citing 1 Sparkle, Ev. 229). Evidence, oral or written, is hearsay when its probative force depends in whole or in part on the competency and credibility of a person other than the witness. King v. Bynum, 137 N. C. 491, 49 S. E. 956, 956; State v. Levy, 188 Mo. 521, 88 S. W. 692, 695 (citing 3 Rice, Ev. 324). Hearsay is a statement made by a person not called as a witness, received in evidence on the trial. People v. Kraft, 36 N. Y. S. 1094, 1095, 91 Hun. 474. The term is sometimes used synonymously with "report"; State v. Vetere, 76 Mont.
Evidence

574, 248 P. 178, 183; and with "rumor";
Gaffney v. Royal Neighbors of America, 41
Idaho, 549, 174 P. 1014, 1017.

—incompetent evidence. Evidence which is not admissible under the established rules of evidence; evidence which the law does not permit to be presented at all, or in relation to the particular matter, on account of lack of originality or of some defect in the witness, the document, or the nature of the evidence itself. Texas Brewing Co. v. Dickey (Text. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 578; Bell v. Bumstead, 14 N. Y. S. 697, 60 Hun, 580; Atkins
v. Elwell, 45 N. Y. 757; People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 23 P. 229, 17 Am. St. Rep. 229;
Texas Brewing Co. v. Dickey (Text. Civ. App.)
43 S. W. 577, 578.

—inculpatory evidence. Criminitive evidence; that which tends, or is intended, to establish the guilt of the accused.

—indispensable evidence. That without which a particular fact cannot be proved. Code Civ.
Proc. Cal. 1903, § 1386; Ballinger’s Ann.
Codes & St. Or. 1901, § 689 (Code 1939, § 9 113).

—legal evidence. A broad general term meaning all admissible evidence, including both oral and documentary, but with a further importation that it must be of such a character as tends reasonably and substantially to prove the point, not to raise a mere suspicion or conjecture. Lewis v. Clyde S. S. Co., 132 N.
C. 904, 44 S. E. 666; Curtis v. Bradley, 65
Conn. 99, 31 A. 891, 28 L. R. A. 143, 48 Am.
St. Rep. 177; West v. Hayes, 51 Conn. 533;
Curtis v. Bradley, 65 Conn. 99, 31 A. 591, 594, —material evidence. Such as is relevant and goes to the substantial matters in dispute, or has a legitimate and effective influence or bearing on the decision of the case. Porter

v. Valentine, 41 N. Y. S. 507, 18 Misc. 213.
“Materiality,” with reference to evidence does not have the same significance as “relevan-
W. 72, 73.

—mathematical evidence. Demonstrative evidence; such as establishes its conclusions with absolute necessity and certainty. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

—moral evidence. As opposed to “mathematical” or “demonstrative” evidence, this term denotes that kind of evidence which, without developing an absolute and necessary certainty, generates a high degree of probability or persuasive force. It is founded upon analogy or induction, experience of the ordinary course of nature or the sequence of events, and the testimony of men.

—newly-discovered evidence. Evidence of a new and material fact, or new evidence in relation to a fact in issue, discovered by a party to a cause after the rendition of a verdict or judgment therein. In re McManus, 72
Newman, 75 Va. 816; People v. Priori, 164
N. Y. 459, 58 N. E. 668. Testimony discovered after trial, not discoverable before trial by exercise of due diligence. Mode v. State, 169 Ark. 356, 275 S. W. 700, 701; State v. Black-tood, 105 Wash. 529, 175 P. 168, 169; Adam Roth Grocery Co. v. Hotel Monticello Co., 183
Mo. App. 429, 166 S. W. 1125, 1127; Murphy Any evidence newly discovered, whether the facts existed at the time of the trial or not.
In re Wood, 140 Minn. 130, 167 N. W. 358, 359.
For the requirements which such evidence must meet before a new trial will be granted, see Vickers v. Phillip Carey Co., 49 Okl. 231, 151 P. 1023, 1024, L. R. A. 1916C, 1155; State
v. Luttrel, 28 N. M. 393, 212 P. 739, 741; Sanchez v. State, 190 Ind. 235, 157 N. E. 1, 3;
Gonlenkri v. American Steel & Wire Co., 106
Conn. 1, 131 A. 26, 28.

—opinion evidence. Evidence of what the witness thinks, believes, or infers in regard to facts in dispute, as distinguished from his personal knowledge of the facts themselves; not admissible except (under certain limitations) in the case of experts. See Lipscomb
v. State, 75 Misc. 599, 23 So. 240; Brit v.
Carolina Northern R. Co., 148 N. C. 37, 61 S.
E. 601, 603. That which is given by a person of ordinary capacity who has by opportunity for practice acquired special knowledge outside limits of common observation, of value in illuduating a matter under consideration.
Crosby v. Wells, 73 N. J. Law, 790, 67 A. 295, 296.

—oral evidence. Evidence given by word of mouth; the oral testimony of a witness.

—original evidence. An original document, writing, or other material object introduced in evidence as distinguished from a copy of or from extraneous evidence of its content or purport. Or. Laws, 1929, § 691 (Code 1930, § 9—106).

—parol evidence. Oral or verbal evidence; that which is given by word of mouth; the ordinary kind of evidence, given by witnesses in court. 3 Bl. Comm. 369. In a particular sense, and with reference to contracts, deeds, wills, and other writings, parol evidence is the same as extraneous evidence or evidence altundis. (See supra.)

—partial evidence. That which goes to establish a detached fact, in a series tending to the fact in dispute. It may be received, subject to be rejected as incompetent, unless connected with the fact in dispute by proof of other facts; for example, on an issue of title to real property, evidence of the continued possession of a remote occupant is partial, for it is of a detached fact, which may or may not be afterwards connected with the fact in dis-

EVIDENCE

—Positive evidence. Direct proof of the fact or point in issue; evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth or falseshood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst. no. 3057; Cooper v. Holmes, 71 Md. 20, 17 A. 711; Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 259; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 310, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

—Preponderance of evidence. Greater weight of evidence, or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind. Button v. Metcalf, 80 Wis. 193, 49 N. W. 809; Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 150, 73 N. E. 117. That which best accords with reason and probability. U. S. v. McCaskill (D. C.) 200 F. 332. The word "preponderance" means something more than "weight"; it denotes a superiority of weight, or outweighing. The words are not synonymous, but substantially different. There is generally a "weight" of evidence on each side in case of contested facts. But juries cannot properly act upon the weight of evidence, in favor of the one having the onus, unless it overbear, in some degree, the weight upon the other side. Shinn v. Tucker, 37 Ark. 588. And see Hoffman v. Loud, 111 Mich. 158, 60 N. W. 251; Wills v. Hillies, 100 Tenn. 524, 35 S. W. 751, 66 Am. St. Rep. 761; Mortimer v. McMullen, 202 Ill. 413, 67 N. E. 20; Bryan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa, 464, 19 N. W. 265. Preponderance of evidence may not be determined by the number of witnesses, but by the greater weight of all evidence, which does not necessarily mean the greater number of witnesses, but opportunity for knowledge, information possessed, and manner of testifying determines the weight of testimony. Garver v. Garver, 52 Colo. 227, 121 P. 165, 166, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 674.

—Presumptive evidence. This term has several meanings: (1) Any evidence which is not direct and positive; the proof of minor or other facts incidental to or usually connected with the fact sought to be proved which, when taken together, inferentially establish or prove the fact in question to a reasonable degree of certainty; evidence drawn by human experience from the connection of cause and effect and observation of human conduct; the proof of facts from which, with more or less certainty, according to the experience of mankind of their more or less universal connection, the existence of other facts can be deduced. In this sense the term is nearly equivalent to "circumstantial" evidence. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 558; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 673; Davis v. Curry, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 259; Horbach v. Miller, 4 Neb. 44; State v. Miller, 9 Hoast (Del.) 594, 32 A. 157; State v. Kornstett, 62 Kan. 221, 61 P. 805, 808; Bazzard v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 7 F. (2d) 908, 910; Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 3729; Pen. Code Ga. 1910, § 1009.

1 Wig. Ev. § 25, n. 3. Best says presumptive evidence is as original as direct, and that presumption of a fact is as good as any other proof when it is legitimate. Jones v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co., 90 Me. 49, 37 A. 326, 328. "Circumstantial evidence" is sometimes used as synonymous with presumptive evidence, but not with strict accuracy; for presumptive evidence is not necessarily and in all cases what is usually understood by circumstantial evidence. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 478; Whart. Ev. 1, 2, 15. The word presumption imports an inference from facts known, based upon previous experience of the ordinary connection between the two, and, the word itself implies a certain relation between fact and inference. Circumstances, however, generally but not necessarily lead to particular inference; for the facts may be indisputable, and yet their relation to the principal fact may be only apparent, not real; and even where the connection is real, the deduction may be erroneous. Circumstantial and presumptive evidence differ therefore as genus and species. Will, Cir. Ev. 17. (2) Evidence which must be received and treated as true and sufficient until rebutted by other testimony; as, where a statute provides that certain facts shall be presumptive evidence of guilt of title, etc. State v. Mitchell, 119 N. C. 784, 25 S. E. 783; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 89 Me. 57, 12 A. 794. (3) Evidence which admits of explanation or contradiction by other evidence, as distinguished from conclusive evidence. Durrill, Cir. Ev. 89. "Presumptive evidence" is synonymous with prima facie evidence. State v. Simon, 163 Minn. 317, 203 N. W. 989, 999; Watson v. Rollins, 18 Ala. 123; App. 125, 90 So. 69, 61. See, also, Presumption.

—Prima facie evidence. Evidence good and sufficient on its face; such evidence as, in the judgment of the law, is sufficient to establish a given fact, or the group or chain of facts constituting the party's claim or defense, and which if not rebutted or contradicted, will warrant a verdict. Craner v. Murs, 6 Pet. 611, 8 L. Ed. 514; State v. Burlingame, 146 Mo. 297, 48 S. W. 72; State v. Roten, 86 N. C. 701; Blough v. Parry, 144 Ind. 463, 43 N. E. 569; Hamilton v. Blakeney, 65 Okl. 154, 105 P. 141; Mayo v. Overstreet, 107 Okl. 223, 227 P. 396; Atlantic Land & Improvement Co. v. Lee, 98 Fla. 579, 112 So. 549, 551. Evidence which suffices for the proof of a particular fact until contradicted and overcome by other evidence. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 1833; Dodson v. Watson, 110 Tex. 355, 220 S. W. 771, 772, 11 A. L. R. 583. Evidence which, standing alone and unexplained, would maintain the proposition and warrant the conclusion to support which it is introduced. Emmons v. Bank, 97 Mass. 250; Gilmore v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 186 Mo. App. 445, 171 S. W. 629, 632. An inference or presumption of law, affirmative or negative of a fact, in the absence of proof, or until proof can be obtained or produced to overcome the inference. People v. Thacher, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 167. A litigating party is said to have a prima facie case when the evidence in his favor is sufficiently strong for his opponent to be called on to answer it. A prima facie case, then, is one which is established by sufficient evidence, and can be overthrown only by rebutting evidence adduced on the other side. Mosley & Whitely. And see State v. Hardiein, 169 Mo. 579, 70 S. W. 130; State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 9 N. W. 698. A "prima facie case" is one which is apparently established by evidence adduced by plaintiff in support of his case up to the time such evidence stands unexplained and uncontradicted. Morrison v. Flowers, 308 Ill. 189, 139 N. E. 10, 12. A "prima facie case" is one in which the evidence in favor of a proposition is sufficient to support a finding in its favor, if all of the evidence to the contrary be disregarded. Schallert v. Boggs (Tex. Civ. App.) 204 S. W. 1061, 1062.

—Probable evidence. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability.

—Proper evidence. Such evidence as may be presented under the rules established by law and recognized by the courts. The Betsay, 49 Ct. Cl. 125, 131.

—Real evidence. Evidence furnished by things themselves, on view or inspection, as distinguished from a description of them by the mouth of a witness; e. g., the physical appearance of a person when exhibited to the jury, marks, scars, wounds, finger-prints, etc., also the weapons or implements used in the commission of a crime, and other inanimate objects, and evidence of the physical appearance of a place (the scene of an accident or of the commission of a crime or of property to be taken under condemnation proceedings) as obtained by a jury when they are taken to view it. See Chamb. Best. Ev. 16; Riggie v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 95 Vt. 282, 107 A. 129, 127.

—Rebutting evidence. Evidence given to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence by the adverse party. Davis v. Humbelin, 51 Md. 539; Railway Co. v. Wales, 5 O. C. D. 170; State v. Martinez, 43 Idaho, 180, 250 P. 229, 244; People v. Page, 1 Idaho, 195; State v. Fouchy, 51 La. Ann. 228, 25 So. 109. Also evidence given in opposition to a presumption of fact or a prima facie case; in this sense, it may be not only countering evidence, but evidence sufficient to counteract, that is, conclusive. Pain v. Cornett, 25 Ga. 186.

—Relevant evidence. Such evidence as relates to, or bears directly upon, the point or fact in issue, and proves or has a tendency to prove the proposition alleged; evidence which conduces to prove a pertinent theory in a case. Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 35; Levy v. Campbell (Tex.) 20 S. W. 196; State v. O'Neill, 13 Or. 183, 9 P. 286; Moran v. Abbey, 58 Cal. 163, 165. 1 Whart. Ev. § 20. It does not mean evidence addressed with positive directness to the point but that which according to the common course of events either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present or future existence or nonexistence of the other. Seller v. Jenkins, 97 Ind. 430, 438 (quoting Steph. Ev. art. 1, and Best, Principles of Ev. 127 n.); Plumb v. Curtis, 33 A. 998, 1000, 66 Conn. 154; Buckwalter v. Arnett (Ky.) 34 S. W. 238, 241. See, also, Relevancy.

—Satisfactory evidence. Such evidence as is sufficient to produce a belief that the thing is true; credible evidence; such evidence as, in respect to its amount or weight, is adequate or sufficient to justify the court or jury in adopting the conclusion in support of which it is adduced. Walker v. Collins, 59 F. 74, 8 C. C. A. 1; U. S. v. Lee (D. C.) 118 F. 457; People v. Stewart, 80 Cal. 129, 22 P. 121; Pittman v. Pittman, 72 Ill. App. 503. "Satisfactory evidence," which is sometimes called "sufficient evidence," means that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt. Thayer v. Boyle, 30 Me. 475, 481 (citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2); Chapman v. McAlmonds, 69 Tenn. (1 Lea) 509, 504; Territory v. Bannigan, 46 N. W. 367, 368, 1 Dak. 451; State v. Bineen, 10 Minn. 407, 416 (Gil. 325, 335); White v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 47 N. W. 146, 149, 1 S. D. 233, 9 L. R. A. 824; West v. West, 90 Iowa, 41, 57 N. W. 639, 649; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Trammel (C. C.) 53 F. 196, 201; Brewer v. Doose (Tex. Civ. App.) 146 S. W. 233, 234 (citing 7 Words and Phrases, p. 635); Cole v. McClure, 88 Ohio St. 1, 102 N. E. 264, 266; Shriver v. Union Stockyards Nat. Bank, 117 Kan. 638, 232 P. 1062, 1066; Fish v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cust. App. 307, 313; Hyndshaw v. Mills, 108 Neb. 250, 187 N. W. 750, 751; Moy Guey Lum v. United States (C. C. A.) 211 F. 91, 94; Louie Dai v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 228 F. 68, 71; State v. Moss, 93 Or. 616, 188 P. 702, 704.

—Second-hand evidence. Evidence which has passed through one or more media before reaching the witness; hearsay evidence.

—State's evidence. A popular term for testimony given by an accomplice or joint participant in the commission of a crime tending to criminate or convict the others, and given under an actual or implied promise of immunity for himself.
EVIDENCE

Substantive evidence. That adduced for the purpose of proving a fact in issue, as opposed to evidence given for the purpose of discrediting a witness, (i.e., showing that he is unworthy of belief,) or of corroborating his testimony. Best, Ev. 246, 773, 803.

Substitutionary evidence. Such as is admitted as a substitute for what would be the original or primary instrument of evidence; as where a witness is permitted to testify to the contents of a lost document.

Sufficient evidence. Adequate evidence; such evidence, in character, weight, or amount, as will legally justify the judicial or official action demanded; according to circumstances, it may be "prima facie" or "satisfactory" evidence, according to the definitions of those terms given above. Moore v. Stone (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. 319; People v. Stern, 33 Misc. Rep. 443, 68 N. Y. S. 732; Mallery v. Young, 94 Ga. 804, 22 S. E. 142; Parker v. Overman, 18 How. 141, 15 L. Ed. 318; State v. Newton, 33 Ark. 284. Sufficient evidence is that which is satisfactory for the purpose; Civ. Code Ga. 1910, § 5729; Pen. Code Ga. 1910, § 1009; Mallery v. Young, 94 Ga. 804, 22 S. E. 142, 143; that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind, beyond a reasonable doubt; Cole v. McClure, 88 Ohio St. 1, 102 N. E. 264, 266. The term is not synonymous with "conclusive." Pensa- cola & A. R. Co. v. State, 5 So. 383, 386, 25 Fla. 319, 3 L. R. A. 601. But it may be used interchangeably with the term "weight of evidence." Waldron v. New York Cent. Ry. Co., 106 Ohio St. 371, 140 N. E. 151, 163; Britain v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, 55 Ohio St. 391, 116 N. E. 110.

Traditory evidence. Evidence derived from tradition or reputation or the statements formerly made by persons since deceased, in regard to questions of pedigree, ancient boundaries, and the like, where no living witnesses can be produced having knowledge of the facts. Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 554.

Weight of evidence. The balance of preponderance of evidence; the inclination of the greater amount of credible evidence, offered in a trial, to support one side of the issue rather than the other. The "weight" or "preponderance of proof" is a phrase constantly used, the meaning of which is well understood and easily defined. It indicates clearly to the jury that the party having the burden of proof will be entitled to their verdict, if, on weighing the evidence in their minds, they shall find the greater amount of credible evidence sustains the issue which is to be established before them. Haskins v. Haskins, 9 Gray (Mass.) 393. Weight is not a question of mathematics, but depends on its effect in inducing belief. It often happens that an uncorroborated witness may tell a story so natural and reasonable, and in manner so sincere and honest, as to com-

EVIDENCE OF DEBT. A term applied to written instruments or securities for the payment of money, importing on their face the existence of a debt. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 599, § 55.

EVIDENCE OF TITLE. A deed or other document establishing the title to property, especially real estate.

A constitutional provision forbidding bail in capital cases when the proof is "evident," means that, if the evidence is such as to lead a dispassionate mind to the conclusion that the accused is guilty, and that if the law is properly administered a conviction would be had of a capital offense, bail should be denied. Ex parte Hickox, 90 Tex. Cr. R. 129, 233 S. W. 306; Ex parte Vermillion, 102 Tex. Cr. R. 590, 236 S. W. 771; Ex parte Hill, 85 Tex. Cr. R. 146, 201 S. W. 996; Ex parte Bates, 90 Tex. Cr. R. 405, 236 S. W. 879, 883.

Proof Evidence

See Proof.

EVIDENTIA. L Evidence. See Preuve.

EVIDENTIARY. Having the quality of evidence; constituting evidence; evidencing. A term introduced by Bentham, and, from its convenience, adopted by other writers.

EVOCATION. In French law. The withdrawal of a cause from the cognizance of an inferior court, and bringing it before another court or judge. In some respects this process resembles the proceedings upon cor- tiorari.

EWAGE. (L. Fr. Ewe, water.) In old English law. Toll paid for water passage. Cowell. The same as aquage or aquagium. Tomlins.

EWBRICE. Adultery; spouse-breach; marriage-breach. Cowell; Tomlins.

EWRY. An office in the royal household where the table linen, etc., is taken care of. Wharton.

EX. A Latin preposition meaning from, out of, by, on, on account of, or according to. A prefix, denoting removal or cessation. Prefixed to the name of an office, relation, status, etc. It denotes that the person spoken of once occupied that office or relation, but does so no longer, or that he is now out of it. Thus, ex-mayor, ex-partner, ex-judge.

A prefix which is equivalent to “without,” “reserving,” or “excepting.” In this use, probably an abbreviation of “except.” Thus, ex-interest, ex-coupons.

"A sale of bonds ‘ex. July coupons’ means a sale reserving the coupons; that is, a sale in which the seller reserves, in addition to the purchase price, the benefit of the coupons, which benefit he may realize either by detaching them or receiving from the buyer an equivalent consideration.” Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 445.

Also used as an abbreviation for “exhibit.” See Dugan v. Trisler, 69 Ind. 555.

EX ABUNDANTI. Out of abundance; abundantly; superfluously; more than sufficient. Calvin.

EX ABUNDANTI CAUTELA. Lat. Out of abundant caution. “The practice has arisen abundanti cautela.” 8 East, 326; Lord Ellenborough, 4 Maule & S. 514.

EX ADVERSO. On the other side. 2 Show. 461. Applied to counsel.

EX AQUEITATE. According to equity; in equity. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

EX AQUEO ET BONO. A phrase derived from the civil law, meaning, in justice and fairness; according to what is just and good; according to equity and conscience. 3 Bl. Comm. 163.

EX ALTERA PARTE. Of the other part.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation [of a part of an instrument] is made from the antecedents and the consequents, [from the preceding and following parts.] 2 Inst. 317. The law will judge of a deed or other instrument, consisting of divers parts or clauses, by looking at the whole; and will give to each part its proper office, so as to ascertain and carry out the intention of the parties. Broom, Max. *577. The whole instrument is to be viewed and compared in all its parts, so that every part of it may be made consistent and effectual. 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

EX ARBITRIO JUDICIS. At, in, or upon the discretion of the judge. 4 Bl. Comm. 394. A term of the civil law. Inst. 4, 6, 31.

EX ASSENSU SUO. With his assent. Formal words in judgments for damages by default. Comb. 220.

EX BONIS. Of the goods or property. A term of the civil law; distinguished from in bonis, as being descriptive of or applicable to property not in actual possession. Calvin.

EX CATHEDRA. From the chair. Originally applied to the decisions of the popes from their cathedra, or chair. Hence, authoritative; having the weight of authority.

EX CAUSA. L. Lat. By title.

EX CERTA SCIENTIA. Of certain or sure knowledge. These words were anciently used in patents, and imported full knowledge of the subject-matter on the part of the king. See 1 Coke, 40b.

EX COLORE. By color; under color of; under pretense, show, or protection of. Thus, ex colore officii, under color of office.

EX COMITATE. Out of comity or courtesy.

EX COMMODO. From or out of loan. A term applied in the old law of England to a right of action arising out of a loan. (commodatum.) Gianv. lib. 10, c. 13; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 106.

EX COMPARATIONE SCRIPTORUM. By a comparison of writings or handwritings. A term in the law of evidence. Best, Pres. 218.

EX CONCESSIS. From the premises granted. According to what has been already allowed.

EX CONSULTO. With consultation or deliberation.

EX CONTINENTI. Immediately; without any interval or delay; incontinently. A term of the civil law. Calvin.

EX CURIA. Out of court; away from the court.

EX DEBITO JUSTITIÆ. From or as a debit of justice; in accordance with the requirement of justice; of right; as a matter of right. The opposite of ex gratia, (q. v.) 3 Bl. Comm. 45, 67.
EX DEFECTU SANGUINIS. From failure of blood; for want of issue.

Ex delicto non ex supplicio emergit infamia. Infamy arises from the crime, not from the punishment.

EX DEMISSIONE (commonly abbreviated ex dem.). Upon the demise. A phrase forming part of the title of the old action of ejectment.

EX DIRECTO. Directly; immediately. Story, Bills, § 190.

Ex diuturnitate temporis, omnia prasumuntur solemniter esse acta. From length of time (after lapse of time) all things are presumed to have been done in due form. Co. Litt. 65; Best, Ev. Introd. § 43; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 20.

EX DOLO MALO. Out of fraud; out of deceitful or tortious conduct. A phrase applied to obligations and causes of action vitiated by fraud or deceit.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. Out of fraud no action arises; fraud never gives a cause of action. No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act. Cwmp. 342; Broom, Max. 729.

Ex donationibus autem foeda militaria vel magnum serjeantium non continentibus oritur nobis quoddam nomem generale, quod est socagium. Co. Litt. 86. From grants not containing military fees or grand serjeancy, a kind of general name is used by us, which is "socage."

EX EMPTO. Out of purchase; founded on purchase. A term of the civil law, adopted by Bracton. Inst. 4, 6, 28; Bract. fol. 102. See Actio ex Empto.

EX FACIE. From the face; apparently; evidently. A term applied to what appears on the face of a writing.

EX FACTO. From or in consequence of a fact or action; actually. Usually applied to an unlawful or tortious act as the foundation of a title, etc. Sometimes used as equivalent to "de facto." Bract. fol. 172.

Ex facto jus ortur. The law arises out of the fact. Broom, Max. 102. A rule of law continues in abraction and theory, until an act is done on which it can attach and assume as it were a body and shape. Beal, Ev. Introd. § 1.

EX FICTIONE JURIS. By a fiction of law.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur pena. 2 Inst. 479. Punishment increases with increasing crime.

EX GRATIA. Out of grace; as a matter of grace, favor, or indulgence; gratuitous. A term applied to anything accorded as a favor; as distinguished from that which may be demanded ex debito, as a matter of right.

EX GRAVI QUERELA. (From or on the grievous complaint.) In old English practice. The name of a writ (so called from its initial words) which lay for a person to whom any lands or tenements in fee were devised by will, (within any city, town, or borough wherein lands were deviseable by custom,) and the heir of the deviser entered and detained them from him. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 198, I, et seq.; 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, 49. Abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 39.

EX HYPOTHESI. By the hypothesis; upon the supposition; upon the theory or facts assumed.

EX INDUSTRIA. With contrivance or deliberation; designedly; on purpose. See 1 Kent, Comm. 318; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 394, 4 L. Ed. 27.

EX INTEGRIO. Anew; afresh.

EX JUSTA CAUSA. From a just or lawful cause; by a just or legal title.

EX LEGE. By the law; by force of law; as a matter of law.

EX LEGIBUS. According to the laws. A phrase of the civil law, which means according to the intent or spirit of the law, as well as according to the words or letter. Dig. 50, 16, 6. See Calvin.

EX LICENTIA REGIS. By the king's license. 1 Bl. Comm. 168, note.

EX LOCATU. From or out of lease or letting. A term of the civil law, applied to actions or rights of action arising out of the contract of locatum, (q. v.) Inst. 4, 6, 28. Adopted at an early period in the law of Eng-
EX MALEFICIO. Growing out of, or found ed upon, misdoing or tort. This term is frequently used in the civil law as the synonym of "ex delicto," (q.v.) and is thus contrasted with "ex contractu." In this sense it is of more rare occurrence in the common law, though found in Bracton (fols. 99, 101, 102.)

EX maleficio non oritur contractus. A contract cannot arise out of an act radically vicious and illegal. 1 Term. 734; 3 Term. 422; Broom. Max. 734.

EX malis moribus bona leges natae sunt. 2 Inst. 161. Good laws arise from evil morals, i.e., are necessitated by the evil behavior of men.

EX MALITIA. From malefic; maliciously. In the law of libel and slander, this term imports a publication that is false and without legal excuse. Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. 179.

EX MERO MOTU. Of his own mere motion; of his own accord; voluntarily and without prompting or request. Royal letters patent which are granted at the crown's own instance, and without request made, are said to be granted ex mero motu. When a court interferes, of its own motion, to object to an irregularity, or to do something which the parties are not strictly entitled to, but which will prevent injustice, it is said to act ex mero motu, or ex proprio motu, or sua sponte, all these terms being here equivalent.

EX MORA. From or in consequence of delay. Interest is allowed ex mora; that is, where there has been delay in returning a sum borrowed. A term of the civil law. Story, Bailm. § 84.

EX MORE. According to custom. Calvin.

EX multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera. From a great number of signs or marks, true identity is gathered or made up. Bac. Max. 103, in regula 25. A thing described by a great number of marks is easily identified, though, as to some, the description may not be strictly correct. Id.

EX MUTUO. From or out of loan. In the old law of England, a debt was said to arise ex mutuo when one lent another anything which consisted in number, weight, or measure. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 159; Bract. fol. 99.

EX NECESSITATE. Of necessity. 3 Rep. Ch. 123.

EX NECESSITATE LEGIS. From or by necessity of law. 4 Bl. Comm. 394.

EX NECESSITATE REI. From the necessity or urgency of the thing or case. 2 Pow. Dev. (by Jarman,) 308.

EX aude pacto non oritur [nascitur] actio. Out of a nude or naked pact [that is, a bare parol agreement without consideration] no action arises. Bract. fol. 90; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 3; Plowd. 305. Out of a promise neither attended with particular solemnity (such as belongs to a specialty) nor with any consideration no legal liability can arise. 2 Steph. Comm. 113. A parol agreement, without a valid consideration, cannot be made the foundation of an action. A leading maxim both of the civil and common law. Cod. 2, 3, 10; Id. 5, 14, 1; 2 Bl. Comm. 445; Smith, Cont. 85, 86.

EX OFFICIO. From office; by virtue of the office; without any other warrant or appointment than that resulting from the holding of a particular office. Powers may be exercised by an officer which are not specifically conferred upon him, but are necessarily implied in his office; these are ex officio. Thus, a judge has ex officio the powers of a conservator of the peace. Courts are bound to notice public statutes judicially and ex officio. King v. Physicians' Casualty Ass'n of America. 97 Neb. 637, 150 N. W. 1010, 1011; Lobrano v. Police Jury of Parish of Plaquemines, 150 La. 14, 90 So. 423, 424; Allin v. Mercer County, 174 Ky. 566, 102 S. W. 635, 640.

EX OFFICIO INFORMATION. In English law. A criminal information filed by the attorney general ex officio on behalf of the crown, in the court of king's bench, for offenses more immediately affecting the government, and to be distinguished from informations in which the crown is the nominal prosecutor. Moyle & Whitley; 4 Steph. Comm. 372-378.

EX OFFICIO OATH. An oath taken by offending priests; abolished by 13 Car. II. St. 1, c. 12.

EX OFFICIO SERVICES. Services which the law annexes to a particular office and requires the incumbent to perform. Macon County v. Abercrombie, 181 Ala. 283, 63 So. 985; City of Birmingham v. Hawkins, 208 Ala. 79, 94 So. 62, 64; Macon County v. Abercrombie, 9 Ala. App. 147, 62 So. 449, 450; Nichols v. Galveston County, 111 Tex. 50, 228 S. W. 547, 548.

Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illegal contract an action does not arise. Broom. Max. 742. See 7 Clark & F. 729.

EX PARTE. On one side only; by or for one party; done for, in behalf of, or on the application of, one party only. A judicial proceeding, order, injunction, etc., is said to be ex parte when it is taken or granted at the instance and for the benefit of one party only, and without notice to, or contestation

"Ex parte," in the heading of a reported case, signifies that the name following is that of the party upon whose application the case is heard.

In its primary sense, ex parte, as applied to an application in a judicial proceeding, means that it is made by a person who is not a party to the proceeding, but who has an interest in the matter which entitles him to make the application. Thus, in a bankruptcy proceeding or an administration action, an application by A. B., a creditor, or the like, would be described as made "ex parte A. B.," i.e., on the part of A. B.

In its more usual sense, ex parte means that an application is made by one party to a proceeding in the absence of the other. Thus, an ex parte injunction is one granted without the opposite party having had notice of the application. It would not be called "ex parte" if he had proper notice of it, and chose not to appear to oppose it. Sweet.

EX PARTE MATERNA. On the mother's side; of the maternal line.

EX PARTE PATERNA. On the father's side; of the paternal line.

The phrases "ex parte materna" and "ex parte paterna" denote the line or blood of the mother or father, and have no such restricted or limited sense as from the mother or father exclusively. Banta v. Demarest, 24 N. J. Law, 431.

EX PARTE TALIS. A writ that lays for a bailiff or receiver, who, having auditors appointed to take his accounts, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 129.

Ex paucis dictis intendere plurima possit. Litt. § 384. You can imply many things from few expressions.

Ex paucis plurima concepit ingenium. Litt. § 550. From a few words or hints the understanding conceives many things.

EX POST FACTO. After the fact; by an act or fact occurring after some previous act or fact, and relating thereto; by subsequent matter; the opposite of ab initio. Thus, a deed may be good ab initio, or, if invalid at its inception, may be confirmed by matter ex post facto.

EX POST FACTO LAWS. A law passed after the occurrence of a fact or commission of an act, which retrospectively changes the legal consequences or relations of such fact or deed. By Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, the states are forbidden to pass "any ex post facto law." In this connection the phrase has a much narrower meaning than its literal translation would justify, as will appear from the extracts given below.

The phrase "ex post facto," in the constitution, extends to criminal and not to civil cases. And under this head is included: (1) Every law that makes an action, done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. (2) Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when committed. (3) Every law that changes the punishment, inflicts a greater punishment for an act than the law annexed to the crime when committed. (4) Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense, in order to convict the offender. All these, and similar laws, are prohibited by the constitution. But a law may be ex post facto, and still not amenable to this constitutional inhibition; that is, provided it modifies, instead of aggravating, the rigor of the criminal law. Boston v. Cummins, 16 Ga. 202, 60 Am. Dec. 717; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 278, 7 L. Ed. 123; U. S. v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 356, Fed. Cas. No. 15,255; Woart v. Winnick, 3 N. H. 473, 14 Am. Dec. 384; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dell. 390, 1 L. Ed. 648; 2 Story, Const. 232; State v. Lopeman, 224 P. 454, 143 Wash. 199; State v. Malloy, 96 S. C. 441, 78 S. E. 995, 997, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 653; Commonwealth v. Kaick, 229 Pa. 583, 97 A. 61, 62; Malloy v. South Carolina, 237 U. S. 180, 35 S. Ct. 507, 608, 59 L. Ed. 905; Tucker v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 54, 167 P. 337, 638; People v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 231 Ill. 536, 154 N. E. 463; Jones v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 645, 123 P. 249, 322; Higginsbooth v. State, 88 Pn. 25, 101 So. 283, 285; Fitzh. v. Centannal, 138 La. 183, 101 So. 221, 222; State ex rel. Jones v. Mallinekrod Chemical Works, 240 Mo. 702, 196 S. W. 826, 975; Butcher v. Maybury (D. C.) 8 F. (2d) 135, 139; In re Jamestown Caucuses Law, 43 R. I. 421, 112 A. 909, 962; State v. Lyons, 183 Wis. 107, 197 N. W. 578, 581; People v. Campolingo, 69 Cal. App. 465, 231 P. 601, 603; State v. Teasley, 194 Ala. 574, 45 So. 725, 725, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 347; Plachy v. State, 240 Ill. 383, 93 L. Ed. 979; State v. Slusser, 119 Or. 141, 225 P. 355, 356; Cain v. State, 105 Tex. Cr. 246, 287 S. W. 862, 863; Hanzell v. State of Ohio, 209 U. S. 107, 46 S. Ct. 68, 70 L. Ed. 213; Commonwealth v. United Cigarette Mach. Co., 120 Va. 825, 89 S. E. 901, 902; People ex rel. Liebowitz v. New York Court of Penitentiary, 174 N. Y. S. 823, 824, 183 App. Div. 730; Armstrong v. Commonwealth, 177 Ky. 690, 198 S. W. 24, 25.

An ex post facto law is one which renders an act punishable, in a manner in which it was not punishable when committed. Such a law may not impose penalties on the person, or pecuniary penalties which swell the public treasury. The legislature is therefore prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate, or any part of it, shall be seized for a crime, which was not declared, by some previous law, to render him liable to such punishment. Fletcher v. Peek, 5 Granch. 87, 183, 3 Ed. 196.

The plain and obvious meaning of this prohibition is that the legislature shall not pass any law, after a fact done by any citizen, which shall have relation to that fact, so as to punish that which was innocent when done; or to add to the punishment of that which was criminal; or to increase the malignity of a crime; or to retrace the rules of evidence, so as to make conviction more easy. This definition of an ex post facto law is sanctioned by long usage. Strong v. State, 1 Black. (Fed.) 136.

The term "ex post facto law," in the United States constitution, cannot be construed to include and to prohibit the enacting any law after a fact, nor even to prohibit the depriving a citizen of a vested right to property. Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. Ed. 468.

BL. LAW DICT. (26 Ed.)

"Ex post facto" and "retroactive" are not convertible terms. The latter is a term of wider signification than the former and includes it. All ex post facto laws are necessarily retrospective, but not e converso. A curing or confirmatory statute is retrospective, but not ex post facto. Constitutions of nearly all the states contain prohibitions against ex post facto laws, but only a few forbid retrospective legislation in specific terms. Black, Conz. Probl. §§ 170, 172, 222.

Retrospective laws directing vested rights are impolitic and unjust; but they are not "ex post facto laws," within the meaning of the constitution of the United States, nor repugnant to any other of its provisions; and, if not repugnant to the state constitution, a court cannot pronounce them to be void, merely because in their judgment they are contrary to the principles of natural justice. Abbe v. May, 2 Paule, 74 Fed. Cas. No. 134.

Every retrospective act is not necessarily an ex post facto law. That phrase embraces only such laws as impose or affect penalties or forfeitures. Locke v. New Orleans, 4 Wall. 172, 18 L. Ed. 334.

Retrospective laws which do not impair the obligation of contracts, or affect vested rights, or partake of the character of ex post facto laws, are not prohibited by the constitution. Bay v. Gage, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 447.

Ex praedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatione, 1 Roll. 374. The best interpretation is made from the context.

EX PROPRIO MOTU. Of his own accord.

EX PROPRIO VIGORE. By their or its own force. 2 Kent, Comm. 457.

EX PROVISIONE HOMINIS. By the provision of man. By the limitation of the party, as distinguished from the disposition of the law. 11 Coke, 805.

EX PROVISIONE MARITI. From the provision of the husband.

EX QUASI CONTRACTU. From quasi contract. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60.

EX RELATIONE. Upon relation or information. Legal proceedings which are instituted by the attorney general (or other proper person) in the name and behalf of the state, but on the information and at the instigation of an individual who has a private interest in the matter, are said to be taken "on the relation" (ex relatione) of such person, who is called the "relator." Such a cause is usually entitled thus: "State ex rel. Doe v. Roe.

In the books of reports, when a case is said to be reported ex relatione, it is meant that the reporter derives his account of it, not from personal knowledge, but from the relation or narrative of some person who was present at the argument.

EX RIGORE JURIS. According to the rigor or strictness of law; in strictness of law. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

EX SCRIPTIS OLIM VISIS. From writings formerly seen. A term used as descriptive of that kind of proof of handwriting where the knowledge has been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers, producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party. 5 Adol. & E. 730.

EX SHIP. See Ship.

EX STATUTO. According to the statute. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 11, § 1.

EX STIPULATUS ACTIO. In the civil law. An action of stipulation. An action given to recover marriage portions. Inst. 4, 6, 29.

EX TEMPORE. From or in consequence of time; by lapse of time. Bract. fols. 51, 52. Ex diuturno tempore, from length of time. Id. fol. 51b.

Without preparation or premeditation.

EX TESTAMENTO. From, by, or under a will. The opposite of ab intestato (q. v.).

Ex tota materia emergat resolutio. The explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter; the exposition of a statute should be made from all its parts together. Wing. Max. 238.

Ex turpi causa non oritur actu. Out of a base [illegal, or immoral] consideration, an action does [can] not arise. 1 Selw. N. P. 63; Broom, Max. 730, 732; Story, Ag. § 195.

Ex turpi contractu actio non oritur. From an immoral or iniquitous contract an action does not arise. A contract founded upon an illegal or immoral consideration cannot be enforced by action. 2 Kent, Comm. 406; Dig. 2, 14, 27, 4.

EX UNA PARTE. Of one part or side; on one side.

Ex uno disce omnes. From one thing you can discern all.

EX UTRAQUE PARTE. On both sides. Dyer, 126b.

EX UTRISQUE PARENTIBUS CONJUNCTI. Related on the side of both parents; of the whole blood. Hale, Com. Law, c. 11.

EX VI TERMINI. From or by the force of the term. From the very meaning of the expression used. 2 Bl. Comm. 109, 118.
EX VISICERIBUS. From the bowels. From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. 10 Coke, 249; Homer v. Shelton, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 218. Ex visceribus verbarum, from the mere words and nothing else. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 960; Fisher v. Fields, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 495.

EX VISITATIONE DEI. By the dispensation of God; by reason of physical incapacity. Anciently, when a prisoner, being arraigned, stood silent instead of pleading, a jury was impaneled to inquire whether he obstinately stood mute or was dumb ex visitatione Dei. 4 Steph. Comm. 394.

Also by natural, as distinguished from violent, causes. When a coroner's inquest finds that the death was due to disease or other natural cause, it is frequently expressed "ex visitatione Dei."

EX VISU SCRIPITIONIS. From sight of the writing; from having seen a person write. A term employed to describe one of the modes of proof of handwriting. Best, Pres. 218.

EX VOLUNTATE. Voluntarily; from free-will or choice.

EXACTION. The wrongful act of an officer or other person in compelling payment of a fee or reward for his services, under color of his official authority, where no payment is due.

Between "exaction" and "extraction" there is this difference: that in the former case the officer extorts more than his due, when something is due, or when something due is due, in the latter, he exacts what is not his due, when there is nothing due to him. Co. Litt. 388.

EXACTLY ALIKE. Representation that the living apartment on the first floor was exactly like the living apartment on the second floor is specific and definite; exactly alike meaning not absolutely identical, but substantially so in size, design, finish, and fixtures. Lipsher v. Resnikoff, 30 Conn. 13, 120 A. 653.

EXACTOR. In the Civil Law

A gatherer or receiver of money; a collector of taxes. Cod. 10, 19.

In Old English Law

A collector of the public moneys; a tax gatherer. Thus, exactor regis was the name of the king's tax collector, who took up the taxes and other debts due the treasury.

EXALTARE. In old English law. To raise; to elevate. Frequently spoken of water, &c., to raise the surface of a pond or pool.

EXAMINATION. An investigation; search; interrogating.

In Trial Practice

The examination of a witness consists of the series of questions put to him by a party to the action, or his counsel, for the purpose of bringing before the court and jury in legal form the knowledge which the witness has of the facts and matters in dispute, or of probing and sifting his evidence previously given.

In Criminal Practice

An investigation by a magistrate of a person who has been charged with crime and arrested, or of the facts and circumstances which are alleged to have attended the crime and to fasten suspicion upon the party so charged, in order to ascertain whether there is sufficient ground to hold him to bail for his trial by the proper court. U. S. v. Stanton, 17 C. C. A. 475, 76 P. 580; State v. Conrad, 95 N. C. 689.

In General

Cross-examination. In practice. The examination of a witness upon a trial or hearing, or upon taking a deposition, by the party opposed to the one who produced him, upon his evidence given in chief, to test its truth, to further develop it, or for other purposes.

Direct examination. In practice. The first interrogation or examination of a witness, on the merits, by the party on whose behalf he is called. This is to be distinguished from an examination in pais, or on the voir dit, which is merely preliminary, and is had when the competency of the witness is challenged; from the cross-examination, which is conducted by the adverse party; and from the redirect examination which follows the cross-examination, and is had by the party who first examined the witness.

Examination de bene esse. A provisional examination of a witness; an examination of a witness whose testimony is important and might otherwise be lost, held out of court and before the trial, with the proviso that the deposition so taken may be used on the trial in case the witness is unable to attend in person at that time or cannot be produced.

Examination of a long account. This phrase does not mean the examination of the account to ascertain the result or effect of it, but the proof by testimony of the correctness of the items composing it. Magown v. Sinclair, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 63.

Examination of bankrupt. This is the interrogation of a bankrupt, in the course of proceedings in bankruptcy, or prior to the adjudication (Cameron v. United States, 34 S. Ct. 244, 231 U. S. 710, 53 L. Ed. 448; In re Fleischer, 151 F. 81), concerning the conduct of his business, the cause of his bankruptcy, his dealings with his creditors and other persons, the amount, kind, and whereabouts of his property, and all matters which may affect the administration and settlement of his estate. This is authorized by Bankruptcy Act § 7, 30 Stat. 548 (11 USCA § 29). The bankrupt’s wife or any other person may also be examined concerning the bankrupt’s acts, conduct, or property. Bankruptcy Act, § 21, 30 Stat. 551, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 7, 32 Stat. 788 (11 USCA § 44). In re Horgan, 39 C. C. A. 118, 98 F. 414; In re Fowler, 93 F. 417; In re Mayer, 97 F. 328.

—Examination of invention. An inquiry made at the patent-office, upon application for a patent, into the novelty and utility of the alleged invention, and as to its interfering with any other patented invention. Rev. St. U. S. § 4893 (35 USCA § 36).

—Examination of title. An investigation made by or for a person who intends to purchase real estate, in the offices where the public records are kept, to ascertain the history and present condition of the title to such land, and its status with reference to liens, incumbrances, clouds, etc.

—Examination of wife. See Private examination, infra.

—Examination pro interesse suo. When a person claims to be entitled to an estate or other property sequestered, whether by mortgage, judgment, lease, or otherwise, or has a title paramount to the sequestration, he should apply to the court to direct an inquiry whether the applicant has any, and what interest in the property; and this inquiry is called an “examination pro interesse suo.” Krippendorf v. Hyde, 4 S. Ct. 27, 110 U. S. 276, 28 L. Ed. 145; Hitz v. Jenks, 22 S. Ct. 598, 185 U. S. 155, 46 L. Ed. 851.

—Preliminary examination. The examination of a person charged with crime, before a magistrate, as above explained. See In re Dolph, 17 Colo. 35, 28 P. 470; Van Buren v. State, 65 Neb. 223, 91 N. W. 201.

—Private examination. An examination or interrogation, by a magistrate, of a married woman who is granitor in a deed or other conveyance, held out of the presence of her husband, for the purpose of ascertaining whether her will in the matter is free and unconstrained. Muir v. Galloway, 61 Cal. 506; Hadley v. Geiger, 9 N. J. Law, 293.

—Re-examination. An examination of a witness after a cross-examination, upon matters arising out of such cross-examination.

—Separate examination. The interrogation of a married woman, who appears before an officer for the purpose of acknowledging a deed or other instrument, conducted by such officer in private or out of the hearing of her husband, in order to ascertain if she acts of her own will and without compulsion or constraint of the husband. Also the examination of a witness in private or apart from, and out of the hearing of, the other witnesses in the same cause.

EXAMINED COPY. A copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original. 1 Campb. 469.

EXAMINER. In English Law

A person appointed by a court to take the examination of witnesses in an action, i. e., to take down the result of their interrogation by the parties or their counsel, either by written interrogatories or o visu et o voce. An examiner is generally appointed where a witness is in a foreign country, or is too ill or infirm to attend before the court, and is either an officer of the court, or a person specially appointed for the purpose. Sweet.

In New Jersey

An examiner is an officer appointed by the court of chancery to take testimony in causes depending in that court. His powers are similar to those of the English examiner in chancery.

In the Patent-Office

An officer in the patent-office charged with the duty of examining the patentability of inventions for which patents are asked.

In General

—Examiner in chancery. An officer of the court of chancery, before whom witnesses are examined, and their testimony reduced to writing, for the purpose of being read on the hearing of the cause. Cowell.

—Examiners. Persons appointed to question students of law in order to ascertain their qualifications before they are admitted to practice.

—Special examiner. In English law. Some person, not one of the examiners of the court of chancery, appointed to take evidence in a particular suit. This may be done when the state of business in the examiner’s office is such that it is impossible to obtain an appointment at a conveniently early day, or when the witnesses may be unable to come to London. Hunt. Eq. pt. I. c. 5, § 2.

EXANNUAL ROLL. In old English practice. A roll into which (in the old way of exhibiting sheriffs’ accounts) the illegible fines and desperate debts were transcribed, and which was annually read to the sheriff upon his accounting, to see what might be gotten. Cowell.

EXCAMB. In Scotch law. To exchange. 6 Bell, App. Cas. 19, 22.

EXCAMBIATOR. An exchanger of lands; a broker. Obsolete.

EXCAMBIUM. An exchange; a place where merchants meet to transact their business; also an equivalent in recompense; a recompense in lieu of dower ad ostium ecclesiae.

EXCELLENCY.

In English Law
The title of a viceroy, governor general, ambassador, or commander in chief.

In America
The title is sometimes given to the chief executive of a state or of the nation.

EXCEPT. To take or leave out of consideration, to exclude from a statement, or to omit or withhold. The expression "except for" is synonymous in many cases with "but for" and "only for." Rickman v. Commonwealth, 195 Ky. 715, 243 S. W. 929.

EXCEPTIO.

In Roman Law
An exception. In a general sense, a judicial allegation opposed by a defendant to the plaintiff's action. Calvini.

A stop or stay to an action opposed by the defendant. Cowell.

Answering to the "defense" or "plea" of the common law. An allegation and defense of a defendant by which the plaintiff's claim or complaint is defeated, either according to strict law or upon grounds of equity.

In a stricter sense, the exclusion of an action that lay in strict law, on grounds of equity, (actionis jure stricto competens ob equitatem exclusio.) Heinece. A kind of limitation of an action, by which it was shown that the action, though otherwise just, did not lie in the particular case. Calvini. A species of defense allowed in cases where, though the action as brought by the plaintiff was in itself just, yet it was unjust as against the particular party sued. Inst. 4, 13, pr.

In Modern Civil Law
A plea by which the defendant admits the cause of action, but alleges new facts which, provided they be true, totally or partially answere the allegations put forward on the other side; thus distinguished from a mere traverse of the plaintiff's averments. Tomkins & J.: Mod. Rom. Law, 90. In this use, the term corresponds to the common-law plea in confession and avoidance.

EXCEPTIO DILATORIA. A dilatory exception; called also "temporalia," (temporary:) one which defeated the action for a time, (quia ad tempus nocet,) and created delay, (et temporalis dilatationem tribuit:) such as an agreement not to sue within a certain time, as five years. Inst. 4, 13, 10. See Dig. 44, 1, 3.

EXCEPTIO DOLI MALL. An exception or plea of fraud. Inst. 4, 13, 1, 9; Bract. fol. 100b.

EXCEPTIO DOTIS CAUTÆ NON NUMERATÆ. A defense to an action for the restitution of a dowry that it was never paid, though promised, available upon the dissolution of the marriage within a limited time. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 463.

EXCEPTIO IN FACTUM. An exception on the fact. An exception or plea founded on the peculiar circumstances of the case. Inst. 4, 13, 1.

EXCEPTIO IN PERSONAM. A plea or defense of a personal nature, which may be alleged only by the person himself to whom it is granted by the law. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 217.

EXCEPTIO IN REM. A plea or defense not of a personal nature, but connected with the legal circumstances on which the suit is founded, and which may therefore be alleged by any party in interest, including the heirs and sureties of the proper or original debtor. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 217.

EXCEPTIO JURISJURANDI. An exception of oath; an exception or plea that the matter had been sworn to. Inst. 4, 13, 4. This kind of exception was allowed where a debtor, at the instance of his creditor, (creditore deferente,) had sworn that nothing was due the latter, and had notwithstanding been sued by him.

EXCEPTIO METUS. An exception or plea of fear or compulsion. Inst. 4, 13, 1, 9; Bract. fol. 1000. Answering to the modern plea of duress.

EXCEPTIO NON ADMIPLETI CONTRACTUS. An exception in an action founded on a contract involving mutual duties or obligations, to the effect that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue because he has not performed his own part of the agreement. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 394.

EXCEPTIO NON SOLUTÆ PECUNIÆ. A plea that the debt in suit was not discharged by payment (as alleged by the adverse party) notwithstanding an acquittance or receipt given by the person to whom the payment is stated to have been made. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 534.

EXCEPTIO PACTI CONVENTI. An exception of compact; an exception or plea that the plaintiff had agreed not to sue. Inst. 4, 13, 3.

EXCEPTIO PECUNIÆ NON NUMERATÆ. An exception or plea of money not paid; a defense which might be set up by a party who was sued on a promise to repay money which he had never received. Inst. 4, 13, 2.
EXCEPTIO PEREMPTORIA. A peremptory exception; called also "peremptam," (perpetual;) one which forever destroys the subject-matter or ground of the action, (qua semper rem de qua agitur perimit;) such as the exceptio dolii mali, the exceptio metus, etc. Inst. 4, 13, 9. See Dig. 44, 1, 3.

EXCEPTIO REI JUDICATÆ. An exception or plea of matter adjudged; a plea that the subject-matter of the action had been determined in a previous action. Inst. 4, 13, 9. This term is adopted by Bracton, and is constantly used in modern law to denote a defense founded upon a previous adjudication of the same matter. Bract. fols. 100b., 177; 2 Kent, Comm. 120. A plea of a former recovery or judgment.

EXCEPTIO REI VENDITÆ ET TRADITÆ. An exception or plea of the sale and delivery of the thing. This exception presumes that there was a valid sale and a proper tradition; but though, in consequence of the rule that no one can transfer to another a greater right than he himself has, no property was transferred, yet because of some particular circumstance the real owner is estopped from contesting it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 299.

EXCEPTIO SENATUSCONSULTI MACEDONIANI. A defense to an action for the recovery of money loaned, on the ground that the loan was made to a minor or person under the paternal power of another; so named from the decree of the senate which forbade the recovery of such loans. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 432.

EXCEPTIO SENATUSCONSULTI VELLEIANI. A defense to an action on a contract of suretyship, on the ground that the surety was a woman and therefore incapable of becoming bound for another; so named from the decree of the senate forbidding it. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 455.

EXCEPTIO TEMPORIS. An exception or plea analogous to that of the statute of limitations in our law; viz., that the time prescribed by law for bringing such actions has expired. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 213.

Exceptio ejus rei cuius petitur dissolutio nulla est. A plea of that matter the dissolution of which is sought [by the action] is null, [or of no effect.] Jenk. Cent. 97, case 71.

Exemptio falsi omnium ultima. A plea denying a fact is the last of all.

Exception firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. An exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exception nulla est versus actionem quam exceptionem perimit. There is [can be] no plea against an action which destroys the matter of the plea. Jenk. Cent. 106, case 2.

Exception probat regulam. The exception proves the rule. 11 Coke, 41; 3 Term, 722. Sometimes quoted with the addition "de rebus non exceptis," ("so far as concerns the matters not excepted.")

Exception quæ firmat legem, exponeit legem. An exception which confirms the law explains the law. 2 Bulst. 189.

Exception quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exception semper ultimo ponenda est. An exception should always be put last. 9 Coke, 53.

EXCEPTION. In Practice

A formal objection to the action of the court, during the trial of a cause, in refusing a request or overruling an objection; implying that the party excepting does not acquiesce in the decision of the court, but will seek to procure its reversal, and that he means to save the benefit of his request or objection in some future proceeding. Snelling v. Yetter, 25 App. Div. 590, 49 N. Y. S. 917; People v. Torres, 38 Cal. 142; Norton v. Livingston, 14 S. C. 175; Kline v. Wynne, 10 Ohio St. 228; Morgan v. Gould, 96 Vt. 275, 119 A. 617, 619; United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 35 S. Ct. 298, 305, 253 U. S. 512, 59 L. Ed. 636; In re Moore, 113 Me. 185, 93 A. 180, 181; Lampton v. Johnson, 40 Okl. 492, 129 P. 528, 527; Liquid Carbonic Co. v. Rodman, 52 Okl. 211, 152 P. 439; Brown v. State, 51 Fla. 662, 34 So. 582, 594; State v. Laundry, 105 Or. 443, 206 P. 250; In re Thompson, 271 Pa. 225, 114 A. 774, 775; Nelen v. Cowell (R. I.) 124 A. 237, 258; State ex rel. Brockman Mfg. Co. v. Miller (Mo. Sup.) 241 S. W. 920, 922; State v. Poree, 138 La. 939, 68 So. 83.

It is also somewhat used to signify other objections in the course of a suit; for example, exception to bail is a formal objection that special bail offered by defendant are insufficient. 1 Tidd, Pr. 255.

An exception is an objection upon a matter of law to a decision made, either before or after judgment, by a court, tribunal, judge, or other judicial officer, in an action or proceeding. The exception must be taken at the time the decision is made. Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 646.

In Admiralty and Equity Practice

An exception is a formal allegation tendered by a party that some previous pleading or proceeding taken by the adverse party is insufficient. Peck v. Osteen, 37 Fla. 427, 20 So. 549; Arnold v. Slaughter, 36 W. Va. 589, 15 S. E. 259.
EXCEPTION

In Statutory Law

An exception in a statute is a clause designed to reserve or except some individuals from the general class of persons or things to which the language of the act in general attaches. People v. Bailey, 163 Misc. 366, 171 N.Y. S. 394, 397.

An exception differs from an explanation, which, by the use of a videlicet, proviso, etc., is allowed only to explain doubtful clauses precedent, or to separate and distribute general terms into particulars. Cutler v. Tufts, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 272.

In Contracts

In the Civil Law

An exceptio or plea. Used in this sense in Louisiana.

Declinatory exceptions are such dilatory exceptions as merely decline the jurisdiction of the judge before whom the action is brought. Code Frac. La. 334.

Dilatory exceptions are such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.

Peremptory exceptions are those which tend to the dismissal of the action.

In General

—Exception to bail. An objection to the special bail put in by the defendant to an action at law made by the plaintiff on grounds of the insufficiency of the bail. 1 Tidd, Pr. 255.

EXCEPTIS EXCIPIENDIS. Lat. With all necessary exceptions.

EXCEPTOR. In old English law. A party who entered an objection or plea.

EXCERPTA, or EXCERPTS. Extracts.

EXCESS. When a defendant pleaded to an action of assault that the plaintiff trespassed on his land, and he would not depart when ordered, whereupon he, moliert manum inposuit, gently laid hands on him, the replication of excess was to the effect that the defendant used more force than necessary. Wharton.

Degree or amount by which one thing or number exceeds another, and the remainder or the difference between two numbers is the excess of one over the other. In re Buice's Estate, 100 Misc. 355, 165 N.Y. S. 420.

EXCESSIVE. Tending to or marked by excess, which is the quality or state of exceeding the proper or reasonable limit or measure. Railway Co. v. Johnston, 106 Ga. 130, 32 S. E. 78; Morrow v. Missouri Gas & Electric Service Co. 315 Mo. 367, 286 S. W. 106, 111; U. S. v. Ogleby Grocery Co. (D. C.) 264 F. 691, 695.

EXCESSIVE BAIL. Bail in a sum more than will be reasonably sufficient to prevent evasion of the law by flight or concealment; bail which is per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved, or shown to be so by the special circumstances of the particular case. In re Los-asso, 35 Colo. 182, 24 P. 1080, 10 L. R. A. 547; Ex parte Ryan, 44 Cal. 558; Ex parte Duncan, 53 Cal. 410; Blydenburgh v. Miles, 39 Conn. 490.

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES. See Damages.

EXCESSIVE OR INTEMPERATE USE OF INTOXICANTS. In benefit certificate. Habitual indulgence in intoxicating liquors to such extent as to impaly health or otherwise render insurance risk more hazardous. Wising v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 132 Minn. 303, 156 N. W. 247, 248, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 621.

EXCESSIVE TAX. One that exceeds what the tax would be if correctly calculated at the legal rate on the valuation as finally fixed by the county authorities. Pocono Stone Co. v. City of New Bern, 172 N. C. 258, 90 S. E. 202, 203.

Excessivism in jury reprobatum. Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatum commun. Co. Litt. 44. Excess in law is reprehended. Excess in anything is reprehended at common law.

EXCHANGE.

In Conveyancing

In Commercial Law
A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage. Nicely v. Bank, 15 Ind. App. 563, 44 N. E. 572, 57 Am. St. Rep. 245; Smith v. Kendall, 9 Mich. 241, 30 Am. Dec. 83; Iowa State Sav. Bank of Fairfield v. City Nat. Bank, 133 Iowa, 1347, 108 N. W. 148, 149, L. R. A. 1913F, 160. The process of settling accounts or debts between parties residing at a distance from each other, without the intervention of money, by exchanging orders or drafts, called bills of exchange; the payment of debts in different places by an exchange or transfer of credits. Webster, Diet.

The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place. The term is commonly used in this sense by French writers. Hall, Emerig, Mar. Loans, 568.

A public place where merchants, brokers, factors, etc., meet to transact their business.

In the Law of Personal Property
Exchange of goods is a commutation, transmutation, or transfer of goods for other goods, as distinguished from sale, which is a transfer of goods for money. 2 Bl. Comm. 446; 2 Steph. Comm. 129; Elwell v. Chamberlin, 31 N. Y. 824; Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 418; Preston v. Reene, 14 Pet. 157, 10 L. Ed. 357.

Exchange in contract that the parties mutually give, or agree to give, one thing for another, neither thing, or both things, being money only. Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6003; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 965; Civ. Code La. art. 2660.

The distinction between a sale and exchange of property is rather one of shadow than of substance. In both cases the title to property is absolutely transferred; and the same rules of law are applicable to the transaction, whether the consideration of the contract is money or by way of barter. It can make no essential difference in the rights and obligations of parties that goods and merchandise are transferred and paid for by other goods and merchandise instead of by money, which is but the representative of value or property. Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 387.

In General
Arbitration of exchange. The business of buying and selling exchange (bills of exchange) between two or more countries or markets, and particularly where the profits of such business are to be derived from a calculation of the relative value of exchange in the two countries or markets, and by taking advantage of the fact that the rate of exchange may be higher in the one place than in the other at the same time.

Dry exchange. In English law. A term formerly in use, said to have been invented for the purpose of disguising and covering usury; something being pretended to pass on both sides, whereas, in truth, nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called "dry." Cowell; Blount.

Exchange, bill of. See Bill of Exchange.

Exchange broker. One who negotiates bills of exchange drawn on foreign countries or on other places in the same country; one who makes and concludes bargains for others in matters of money or merchandise. Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 444; Portland v. O'Neil, 1 Or. 219.
EXCHANGE

—Exchange of livings. In ecclesiastical law. This is effected by resigning them into the bishop's hands, and each party being indueled into the other's benefice. If either die before both are indueled, the exchange is void.

—First of exchange, Second of exchange. See First.

—Owlely of exchange. See Owlely.

EXCHEQUER. That department of the English government which has charge of the collection of the national revenue; the treasury department.

It is said to have been so named from the chequered cloth, resembling a chess-board, which ancienly covered the table there, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

—Court of exchequer, Court of exchequer chamber. See those titles.

—Exchequer division. A division of the English high court of justice, to which the special business of the court of exchequer was specially assigned by section 34 of the Judicature Act of 1873. Merged in the queen's bench division from and after 1851, by order in council under section 31 of that act. Wharton.

EXCISE. An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and frequently upon the retail sale. 1 Bl. Comm. 318; Story, Const. § 950; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 346, 23 L. Ed. 99; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 S. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713; Portland Bank v. Apthorp, 12 Mass. 256; Union Bank v. Hill, 3 Cold. (Tenn.) 328.

The words “tax” and “excise,” although often used as synonymous, are to be considered as having entirely distinct and separate significations, under Const. Mass. c. 1, § 1, art. 4. The former is a charge apportioned either among the whole people of the state or those residing within certain districts, municipalities, or sections. It is required to be imposed, so that, if levied for the public charges of government, it shall be shared according to the estate, real and personal, which each person may possess; or, if raised to defray the cost of some local improvement of a public nature, it shall be borne by those who will receive some special and peculiar benefit or advantage which an expenditure of money for a public object may cause to those upon whom the tax is assessed. An excise, on the other hand, is of a different character. It is based on no rule of apportionment or equality whatever. It is a fixed, absolute, and direct charge laid on merchandise, products, or commodities, without any regard to the amount of property belonging to those on whom it may fall, or to any supposed relation between money expended for a public object and a special benefit occasioned to those by whom the charge is to be paid. Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 368.

In English Law

The name given to the duties or taxes laid on certain articles produced and consumed at home, among which spirits have always been the most important; but, exclusive of these, the duties on the licenses of auctioneers, brewers, etc., and on the licenses to keep dogs, kill game, etc., are included in the excise duties. Wharton.

EXCISE LAW. A law imposing excise duties on specified commodities, and providing for the collection of revenue therefrom. In a more restricted and more popular sense, a law regulating, restricting, or taxing the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors.

EXCLUSIA. In old English law. A sluice to carry off water; the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice. Cowell.

EXCLUSION. Denial of entry. Ex parte Domingo Corypus (D. C.) 6 F. (2d) 336.

EXCLUSIVE. Shutting out; debarring from interference or participation; vested in one person alone. An exclusive right is one which only the grantee thereof can exercise, and from which all others are prohibited or shut out. A statute does not grant an “exclusive” privilege or franchise, unless it shuts out or excludes others from enjoying a similar privilege or franchise. In re Union Ferry Co., 98 N. Y. 151; Sunnyside Land & Investment Co. v. Dernier, 119 Wash. 359, 205 P. 1041, 1042, 20 A. L. R. 1261; Free Sewing Mach. Co. v. Bry-Block Mercantile Co. (D. C.) 204 F. 652, 657; Toten v. Stuart, 143 Va. 201, 129 S. E. 217, 218.

EXCOMMENGER. Excommunication, (q. v.). Co. Litt. 134a.

EXCOMMUNICATION. A sentence of censure pronounced by one of the spiritual courts for offenses falling under ecclesiastical cognizance. It is described in the books as twofold: (1) The lesser excommunication, which is an ecclesiastical censure, excluding the party from the sacraments; (2) the greater, which excludes him from the company of all Christians. Formerly, too, an excommunicated man was under various civil disabilities. He could not serve upon juries, or be a witness in any court; neither could he bring an action to recover lands or money due to him. These penalties are abolished by St. 63 Geo. III. c. 127. 3 Steph. Comm. 721.

EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO. In ecclesiastical law. A writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop’s certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, and requiring the sheriff to arrest and imprison him, returnable to the king’s bench. 4 Bl. Comm. 415; Bac. Abr. “Excommunication,” E.

EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO. A writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicated person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 63.

Excommunicatio interdicitur omnis actus legitimus, Ipsa quod agere non potest, nec aliqua convenire, licet ipse ab aliis possit venire. Co. Litt. 133. Every legal act is forbidden an excommunicated person, so that he cannot act, nor sue any person, but he may be sued by others.

EXCOMMUNICATO RECAPIENDO. A writ commanding that persons excommunicated, who for their obstinacy had been committed to prison, but were unlawfully set free before they had given caution to obey the authority of the church, should be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.

EXCULPATION, LETTERS OF. In Scotch law. A warrant granted at the suit of a prisoner for citing witnesses in his own defense.

EXCUSABLE. Admitting of excuse or palliation. As used in the law, this word implies that the act or omission spoken of is on its face unlawful, wrong, or liable to entail loss or disadvantage on the person chargeable, but that the circumstances attending it were such as to constitute a legal “excuse” for it, that is, a legal reason for withholding or foregoing the punishment, liability, or disadvantage which otherwise would follow.

EXCUSABLE ASSAULT. One committed by accident or misfortune in doing any lawful act by lawful means, with ordinary caution and without any unlawful intent. People v. O’Connor, 81 N. Y. S. 555, 82 App. Div. 55.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE. See Homicide.

EXCUSABLE NEGLIGENCE. In practice, and particularly with reference to the setting aside of a judgment taken against a party through his “exusable neglect,” this means a failure to take the proper steps at the proper time, not in consequence of the party’s own carelessness, inattention, or willful disregard of the process of the court, but in consequence of some unexpected or unavoidable hindrance or accident, or reliance on the care and vigilance of his counsel or on promises made by the adversary party. See 1 Bl. Judgm. § 340; Brothers v. Brothers, 71 Mont. 378, 230 P. 60, 61; Jones-Onslow Land Co. v. Wooten, 177 N. C. 248, 98 S. E. 706; Beauford County Lumber Co. v. Cottingham, 173 N. O. 323, 92 S. E. 9, 11; Westbrook v. Rice, 28 N. D. 324, 148 N. W. 827, 828; Gutierrez v. Romero, 24 Ariz. 882, 210 P. 470, 471; Boise Valley Trac-Exequat aut exequias delictum in capitalibus quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Bac. Max. r. 15. That may excuse or palliate a wrongful act in capital cases which would not have the same effect in civil injuries. See Broom, Max. 324.

EXCUSATIO. In the civil law. An excuse or reason which exempts from some duty or obligation.

EXCUSATOR. In English Law

An excuse.

In Old German Law

A defendant; he who utterly denies the plaintiff's claim. Du Cange.

Exequatur quis quod clamet non opposuerit, ut si tene tempore litigii fuit ultra mare quaunque occasione. Co. Litt. 260. He is excused who does not bring his claim, if, during the whole period in which it ought to have been brought, he has been beyond sea for any reason.

EXCUSE. A reason alleged for doing or not doing a thing. Worcester; State v. Weagley, 290 Mo. 677, 228 S. W. 817, 820; State v. Saffron, 143 Wash. 34, 254 P. 483.

A matter alleged as a reason for relief or exemption from some duty or obligation.

EXCUSS. To seize and detain by law.

EXCUSSION. In the Civil Law

A diligent prosecution of a remedy against a debtor; the exhausting of a remedy against a principal debtor, before resorting to his sureties. Translated "discussio" (q. v.).

In Old English Law

Rescue or rescusc. Spelman.

EXEAT. A permission which a bishop grants to a priest to go out of his diocese; also leave to go out generally.

Ne Exeat

A writ which forbids the person to whom it is addressed to leave the country, the state, or the jurisdiction of the court; available in some cases to keep a defendant within the reach of the court's process, where the ends of justice would be frustrated if he should escape from the jurisdiction.

EXECUTE. To finish, accomplish, make complete, fulfill. To perform; obey the injunctions of.

To make; as to execute a deed, which includes signing, sealing, and delivery; performance of all necessary formalities. Hein-EXECUTED TRUST. See Trust.

EXECUTED USE. See Use.

EXECUTED WRIT. In practice. A writ carried into effect by the officer to whom it is directed. The term "executed," applied to a writ, has been held to mean "used." Amb. 61.

EXECUTIO. Lat. The doing or following up of a thing; the doing a thing completely or thoroughly; management or administration.

In Old Practice
Execution; the final process in an action.

EXECUTIO BONORUM. In old English law. Management or administration of goods. Ad ecclesiam et ad amicos pertinenti et executio bonorum, the execution of the goods shall belong to the church and to the friends of the deceased. Bract. fol. 60b.

EXECUTIO est executio juris secundum judicium. 3 Inst. 212. Execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment.

EXECUTIO est finis et fructus legis. Co. Litt. 259. Execution is the end and fruit of the law.

EXECUTIO juris non habet iuriam. 2 Roll. 301. The execution of law does no injury.

EXECUTION. The completion, fulfillment, or perfecting of anything, or carrying it into operation and effect. The signing, sealing, and delivery of a deed. The signing and publication of a will. The performance of a contract according to its terms.

In Practice

Also the name of a writ issued to a sheriff, constable, or marshal, authorizing and requiring him to execute the judgment of the court. Raulerson v. Peeples, 51 Fla. 296, 87 So. 629, 630.

At common law, executions are said to be either final or quoque; the former, where complete satisfaction of the debt is intended to be procured by this process; the latter, where the execution is only a means to an end, as, where the defendant is arrested on ca. so.

EXECUTION

In Criminal Law
The carrying into effect the sentence of the law by the infliction of capital punishment. 4 Bl. Comm. 463; 4 Steph. Comm. 470.

In French Law
A method of obtaining satisfaction of a debt or claim by sale of the debtor's property privately, i.e., without judicial process, authorized by the deed or agreement of the parties or by custom; as, in the case of a stockbroker, who may sell securities of his customer, bought under his instructions or deposited by him, to indemnify himself or make good a debt. Arg. Fr. Mercia. Law, 557.

In General
—Attachment execution. See Attachment.
—Dormant execution. See Dormant.
—Equitable execution. This term is sometimes applied to the appointment of a receiver with power of sale. Hatch v. Van Dervoort, 54 N. J. Eq. 611, 54 A. 538.
—Execution creditor. See Creditor.
—Execution of decree. Sometimes from the neglect of parties, or some other cause, it became impossible to carry a decree into execution without the further decree of the court upon a bill filed for that purpose. This happened generally in cases where, parties having neglected to proceed upon the decree, their rights under it became so embarrassed by a variety of subsequent events that it was necessary to have the decree of the court to settle and ascertain them. Such a bill might also be brought to carry into execution the judgment of an inferior court of equity, if the jurisdiction of that court was not equal to the purpose; as in the case of a decree in Wales, which the defendant avoided by fleeing into England. This species of bill was generally partly an original bill, and partly a bill in the nature of an original bill, though not strictly original. Story Eq. Pl. 342; Daniell, Ch. Pr. 1429.

—Execution of deeds. The signing, sealing, and delivery of them by the parties, as their own acts and deeds, in the presence of witnesses.

—Execution parée. In French law. A right founded on an act passed before a notary, by which the creditor may immediately, without citation or summons, seize and cause to be sold the property of his debtor, out of the proceeds of which to receive his payment. It imports a confession of judgment, and is not unlike a warrant of attorney. Code Proc. L. art. 732; 6 Toullier, no. 208; 7 Toullier, no. 99.

—Execution sale. A sale by a sheriff or other ministerial officer under the authority of a writ of execution which he has levied on prop-
EXECUTION 718

-General execution. A writ commanding an officer to satisfy a judgment out of any personal property of the defendant. If authorizing him to levy only on certain specified property, the writ is sometimes called a "special" execution. Pracht v. Pister, 60 Kan. 568, 1 P. 638.

-Junior execution. One which was issued after the issuance of another execution, on a different judgment, against the same defendant.

-Special execution. A copy of a judgment with a direction to the sheriff indorsed thereon to execute it. Crumble v. Little, 47 Minn. 551, 50 N. W. 823. One that directs a levy upon some special property. Oklahoma Salvage & Supply Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 122 Okl. 128, 251 P. 1006, 1007.

-Testatum execution. See Testatum.

EXECUTIONE FACIENDA IN WITHERNIUM. A writ that lay for taking cattle of one who has conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replcy them. Reg. Orig. 82.

EXECUTIONE JUDICII. A writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 29.

EXECUTIONER. The name given to him who puts criminals to death, according to their sentence; a hangman.

EXECUTIVE. As distinguished from the legislative and judicial departments of government, the executive department is that which is charged with the detail of carrying the laws into effect and securing their due observance. The word "executive" is also used as an impersonal designation of the chief executive officer of a state or nation. Comm. v. Hall, 9 Gray (Mass.) 267, 69 Am. Dec. 285; In re Railroad Comrs', 15 Neb. 679, 59 N. W. 276; In re Davies, 188 N. Y. 89, 61 N. E. 118, 56 L. R. A. 855; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 21 N. E. 252, 4 L. R. A. 79.

EXECUTIVE ADMINISTRATION, or MINISTRY. A political term in England, applicable to the higher and responsible class of public officials by whom the chief departments of the government of the kingdom are administered. The number of these amounts to fifty or sixty persons. Their tenure of office depends on the confidence of a majority of the house of commons, and they are supposed to be agreed on all matters of general policy except such as are specifically left open questions. Cab. Lawy.

EXECUTIVE OFFICER. An officer of the executive department of government; one in whom resides the power to execute the laws; one whose duties are to cause the laws to be executed and obeyed. Thorne v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 146; People v. Salisbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 939; Pettersen v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 58 S. W. 100. An administrative officer. Sheely v. People, 54 Colo. 136, 129 P. 201, 203.

EXECUTOR. A person appointed by a testator to carry out the directions and requests in his will, and to dispose of the property according to his testamentary provisions after his decease. Scott v. Guernsey, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 175; In re Lamb's Estate, 122 Mich. 239, 80 N. W. 1081; Compton v. McMahen, 19 Mo. App. 505; Kellogg v. White, 103 Misc. 167, 169 N. Y. S. 899, 991; In re Stipchee's Estate, 180 Wis. 504, 193 N. W. 385, 387; Ricks v. Johnson, 134 Miss. 676, 99 So. 142, 146; McGehee v. McGehee, 190 N. C. 478, 130 S. E. 115, 116.

One to whom another man commits by his last will the execution of that will and testament. 1 Bl. Comm. 503. A person to whom a testator by his will commits the execution, or putting in force, of that instrument and its cedillas. Fowl. 207.

Executors are classified according to the following several methods:
They are either general or special. The former term denotes an executor who is to have charge of the whole estate, wherever found, and administer it to a final settlement; while a special executor is only empowered by the will to take charge of a limited portion of the estate, or such part as may lie in one place, or to carry on the administration only to a prescribed point.

They are either instituted or substituted. An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition; while a substituted executor is one named to fill the office in case the person first nominated should refuse to act.

In the phraseology of ecclesiastical law, they are of the following kinds:
Executor à lege constitutus, an executor appointed by law; the ordinary of the diocese.
Executor ab episcopo constitutus, or executor datus, an executor appointed by the bishop; an administrator to an intestate.
Executor à testatorc constitutus, an executor appointed by a testator. Otherwise termed "executor testamentarius," a testamentary executor.

An executor to the tenor is one who, though not directly constituted executor by the will, is therein charged with duties in relation to the estate which can only be performed by the executor.
In the Civil Law

A ministerial officer who executed or carried into effect the judgment or sentence in a cause.

In General

Executor creditor. In Scotch law. A creditor of a decedent who obtains a grant of administration on the estate, at least to the extent of so much of it as will be sufficient to discharge his debt, when the executor named in the will has declined to serve, as also those other persons who would be preferentially entitled to administer.

Executor daive. In Scotch law. One appointed by the court; equivalent to the English “administrator with the will annexed.”

Executor de son tort. Executor of his own wrong. A person who assumes to act as executor of an estate without any lawful warrant or authority, but who, by his meddling, makes himself liable as an executor to a certain extent. If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority, (as by Intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, and many other transactions,) he is called in law an “executor of his own wrong,” de son tort. 2 Bl. Comm. 507. Allen v. Hurst, 120 Ga. 703, 48 S. E. 341; Noon v. Finnegan, 29 Minn. 418, 13 N. W. 197; Brown v. Leavitt, 26 N. H. 405; Hinds v. Jones, 49 Me. 349; In re Pedrol’s Estate, 47 Nev. 313, 21 P. 211, 212, 21 A. L. R. 541; Mink v. Walker, 81 N. J. Eq. 112, 83 A. 372; Walker v. Portland Savings Bank, 113 Me. 353, 93 A. 1025, L. R. A. 1915E, 540, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1; Johnston v. Thomas, 93 Flan. 67, 111 So. 541, 546; Shawnee Nat. Bank v. Van Zant, 84 Okl. 107, 202 P. 285, 288, 26 A. L. R. 1349.

Executor lucratus. An executor who has assets of his testator who in his life-time made himself liable by a wrongful interference with the property of another. 6 Jur. (N. S.) 543.

General executor. One whose power is not limited either territorially or as to the duration or subject of his trust.

Joint executors. Co-executors; two or more who are joined in the execution of a will.

Limited executor. An executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator’s effects or limitation in point of time. 1 Williams, Ex’rs, 240, et seq.

Special executor. One whose power and office are limited, either in respect to the time or place of their exercise, or restricted to a particular portion of the decedent’s estate.

EXECUTORY. That which is yet to be executed or performed; that which remains to be carried into operation or effect; incomplete; depending upon a future performance or event. The opposite of executed.

EXECUTORY CONSIDERATION. A consideration which is to be performed after the contract for which it is a consideration is made.

EXECUTORY FINES. These are the fines sur cognizance de droit tantaum; sur concessit; and sur done, grant et render. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

EXECUTORY INTERESTS. A general term, comprising all future estates and interests in land or personality, other than reversions and remainders.

EXECUTORY LIMITATION. A limitation of a future interest by deed or will; if by will, it is also called an "executor devise."

EXECUTORY PROCESS. A process which can be resorted to in the following cases, namely: (1) When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; (2) when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. Code Prac. La. art. 782; Marin v. Lalley, 17 Wall. 14, 21 L. Ed. 596.

EXECUTRESS. A female executor. Hardr.’ 165, 473.

EXECUTRIX. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or testament.

EXECUTRY. In Scotch law. The movable estate of a person dying, which goes to his nearest of kin. So called as falling under the distribution of an executor. Bell.

Exempi illustrant non restringunt legem. Co. Litt. 240. Examples illustrate, but do not restrain, the law.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. See Damages.

EXEMPLI GRATIA. For the purpose of example, or for instance. Often abbreviated “ex. gr.” or “e. g.”

EXEMPLICATION. An official transcript of a document from public records, made in form to be used as evidence, and authenticated as a true copy.

EXEMPLICATIONE. A writ granted for the exemplification or transcript of an original record. Reg. Orig. 290.
EXEMPLUM. In the civil law. Copy; a written authorized copy. This word is also used in the modern sense of "example"—ad exemplum constituti singularis non trahi, exceptional things must not be taken for examples. Calvin.

EXEMPT, n. To relieve, excuse, or set free from a duty or service imposed upon the general class to which the individual exempted belongs; as to exempt from militia service. Jones v. Wells Fargo Co. Express, 83 Misc. 508, 145 N. Y. S. 601, 602. See 1 St. at Large, 272.

To relieve certain classes of property from liability to sale on execution.

EXEMPT, n. One who is free from liability to military service; as distinguished from a detail, who is one belonging to the army, but detached or set apart for the time to some particular duty or service, and liable, at any time, to be recalled to his place in the ranks. In re Strawbridge, 39 Ala. 379. See Exempts.

A privilege allowed by law to a judgment debtor, by which he may hold property to a certain amount, or certain classes of property, free from all liability to levy and sale on execution or attachment. Turrill v. McCarthy, 114 Iowa, 681, 87 N. W. 667; Williams v. Smith, 117 Wis. 142, 93 N. W. 461; In re Trammell (D. C.) 5 F. (2d) 326, 327.

EXEMPTION LAWS. Laws which provide that a certain amount or proportion of a debtor's property shall be exempt from execution.

EXEMPTION, WORDS OF. It is a maxim of law that words of exemption are not to be construed to import any liability; the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius, or its converse, exclusio unius inclusio alterius, not applying to such a case. For example, an exemption of the crown from the bankruptcy act 1898, in one specified particular, would not infeudantly subject the crown to that act in any other particular. Brown.

EXEMPTS. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

EXENNIUM. In old English law. A gift; a new year's gift. Cowell.

EXEOVATUR. Lat. Let it be executed. In French practice, this term is subscribed by judicial authority upon a transcript of a judgment from a foreign country, or from another part of France, and authorizes the execution of the judgment within the jurisdiction where it is so indorsed.

In International Law

A certificate issued by the foreign department of a state to a consul or commercial agent of another state, recognizing his official character, and authorizing him to fulfill his duties.

EXERCITALIS. A soldier; a vassal. Spelman.

EXERCITOR NAVIS. Lat. The temporary owner or charterer of a ship. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 512; The Phebe, 19 Fed. Cas. 418.

EXERCITORIA ACTIO. In the civil law. An action which lay against the employer of a vessel (exercitor navi) for the contracts made by the master. Inst. 4, 7, 2; 3 Kent, Comm. 161; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 512.

EXERCITORIAL POWER. The trust given to a ship-master.

EXERCITAL. In old English law. A heriot paid only in arms, horses, or military accouterments.

EXERCITUS. In old European law. An army; an armed force. The term was absolutely indefinite as to number. It was applied, on various occasions, to a gathering of forty-two armed men, of thirty-five, or even of four. Spelman.

EXETER DOMESDAY. The name given to a record preserved among the muniments and charters belonging to the dean and chapter of Exeter Cathedral, which contains a description of the western parts of the kingdom, comprising the counties of Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. The Exeter Domesday was published with several other surveys nearly contemporary, by order of the commissioners of the public records, under the direction of Sir Henry Ellis, in a volume supplementary to the Great Domesday, folio, London, 1816. Wharton.

EXFESTUGARE. To abdicate or resign; to resign or surrender an estate, office, or dignity, by the symbolical delivery of a staff or rod to the allenece.

EXFREDIARE. To break the peace; to commit open violence. Jacob.

EXHEREDITATIO. In the civil law. Distinctively; disinherit. The formal method of excluding an indefeasible (or forced) heir from the entire inheritance, by the testator's express declaration in the will that such person shall be exheres. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 711.

EXHÆRES. In the civil law. One disinhерited. Vicit; Dub Cange.

EXHEREDATE. In Scotch law. To disinherit; to exclude from an inheritance.

EXHIBERE. To present a thing corporeally, so that it may be handled. Vicit. To appear personally to conduct the defense of an action at law.

EXHIBIT, v. To show or display; to offer or present for inspection. To produce anything in public, so that it may be taken into possession. Dig. 10, 4, 2.

To present; to offer publicly or officially; to file of record. Thus we speak of exhibiting a charge of treason, exhibiting a bill against an officer of the king's bench by way of proceeding against him in that court. In re Wittse, 5 Misc. 105, 25 N. Y. Supp. 737; Newell v. State, 2 Comm. 10; Comm. v. Alsop, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 345.

To administer; to cause to be taken; as medicines.

EXHIBIT, n. A paper or document produced and exhibited to a court during a trial or hearing, or to a commissioner taking depositions, or to auditors, arbitrators, etc., as a voucher, or in proof of fact, or as otherwise connected with the subject-matter, and which, on being accepted, is marked for identification and annexed to the deposition, report, or other principal document, or filed of record, or otherwise made a part of the case.

A paper referred to in and filed with the bill, answer, or petition in a suit in equity, or with a deposition. Brown v. Redwyne, 16 Ga. 68.

EXHIBITANT. A complainant in articles of the peace. 12 Adol. & E. 590.

EXHIBICIO BILIAE. Lat. Exhibition of a bill. In old English practice, actions were instituted by presenting or exhibiting a bill to the court, in cases where the proceedings were by bill; hence this phrase is equivalent to "commencement of the suit."

EXHIBITION.

In Scotcht Law

An action for compelling the composition of writings.

In Ecclesiastical Law

An allowance for meat and drink, usually made by religious appropriators of churches to the vicar. Also the benefaction settled for the maintaining of scholars in the universities, not depending on the foundation. Paroch. Anthq. 301.

EXIGENTER

In Theatrical Usage

A "show" or "exhibition" is commonly understood to be something that one views, or at which one looks, and at the same time hears. Longwell v. Kansas City, 130 Mo. App. 480, 203 S. W. 657, 659.

EXHIBITION VALUE. "Minimum sale" or "exhibition value" is interchangeably used with term "price expectancy" in moving picture industry, denoting minimum receipts which distributors expect to realize from exhibition of pictures. Export & Import Film Co. v. B. P. Schulberg Productions, 125 Misc. 736, 211 N. Y. S. 838, 839.

EXHUMATION. Disinterment; the removal from the earth of anything previously buried therein, particularly a human corpse.

EXIGENCE, or EXIGENCY. Demand, want, need, imperativeness; urgency, something arising suddenly out of the current of events; any event or occasional combination of circumstances, calling for immediate action or remedy; a pressing necessity; a sudden and unexpected happening or an unforeseen occurrence or condition. United States v. Atlantic Coast Line Co. (D. C.) 224 F. 160, 162.

EXIGENCE OF A BOND. That which the bond demands or exacts, i.e., the act, performance, or event upon which it is conditioned.

EXIGENCE OF A WRIT. The command or imperativeness of a writ; the directing part of a writ; the act or performance which it commands.

EXIGENDARY. In English law. An officer who makes out exigrants. See Exigenter.

EXIGENT, or EXIGI FACIAS. L. Lat. In English practice. A judicial writ made use of in the process of outlawry, commanding the sheriff to demand the defendant, (or cause him to be demanded, exigi facias,) from county court to county court, until he be outlawed; or, if he appear, then to take and have him before the court on a day certain in term, to answer to the plaintiff's action. 1 Tidd, Pr. 132; 3 Bl. Comm. 283, 284; Archb. N. Pr. 485. Now regulated by St. 2 Wm. IV. c. 30. See Allocato Comkatu; Allocatur Exigent.

EXIGENT LIST. A phrase used to indicate a list of cases set down for hearing upon various incidental and ancillary motions and rules.

EXIGENTER. An officer of the English court of common pleas, whose duty it was to make out the exigents and proclamations in the process of outlawry. Cowell. Abolished by St. 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 30. Holt-House.
EXIGI FACIAS. That you cause to be demanded. The emphatic words of the Latin form of the writ of exigent. They are sometimes used as the name of that writ.

EXIGIBLE. Demandable; requirable.

EXILE. Banishment; the person banished.

EXILIUM. Lat. In old English law. (1) Exile; banishment from one’s country. (2) Driving away; despoiling. The name of a species of waste, which consisted in driving away tenants or vassals from the estate; as by demolishing buildings, and so compelling the tenants to leave, or by enfranchising the bond-servants, and unlawfully turning them out of their tenements. Picta, I. 1; c. 9.

Exilium est patria privatio, natalis soli mutatio, legum nativarum amissio. 7 Coke, 20. Exile is a privation of country, a change of native soil, a loss of native laws.

EXIST. To live; to have life or animation; to be in present force, activity, or effect at a given time; as in speaking of “existing” contracts, creditors, debts, laws, rights, or liens. Merritt v. Grover, 57 Iowa, 403, 10 N. W. 879; Whitaker v. Rice, 9 Minn. 13 (Gill. 1), 86 Am. Dec. 78; Wing v. Slater, 19 R. I. 597, 25 Atl. 302, 33 L. R. A. 566; Lawrie v. State, 5 Ind. 526; Godwin v. Banks, 57 Md. 425, 40 Atl. 258; Poe v. Poe, 125 Ark. 391, 188 S. W. 1190; In re Havel’s Estate, 150 Minn. 233, 194 N. W. 633, 34 A. L. R. 1300.

See also, Existing.

EXISTIMATIO. In the civil law. The civil reputation which belonged to the Roman citizen, as such. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 135. Called a state or condition of unimpeached dignity, or character, or (dignitas inaequalis status) the highest standing of a Roman citizen. Dig. 50, 13, 5, 1. Also the decision or award of an arbiter.

EXISTING. The force of this word is not necessarily confined to the present. Thus a law for regulating “all existing railroad corporations” extends to such as are incorporated after as well as before its passage, unless exception is provided in their charters; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Blackman, 63 Ill. 117; Lawrie v. State, 5 Ind. 525; Fox v. Edwards, 38 Iowa, 215. “Existing liabilities” embrace conditional or contingent obligations, which may or may not in the future result in indebtedness. Daniels v. Goff, 192 Ky. 15, 252 S. W. 66, 67. “Existing equity” implies an existing right to future payment, and including a contingent liability, as distinguished from an “existing debt,” implying a present, enforceable liability. Sallaska v. Fletcher, 73 Wash. 598, 132 P. 648, 650, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 320, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 760; Berkeley v. Kerfoot, 77 Wash. 550, 137 P. 1046, 1047; State v. Smith, 107 Ohio St. 1, 140 N. E. 737, 788.

A child conceived, but not born, is to be deemed an “existing person” so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth. Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 4237; 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

EXIT. Lat. It goes forth. This word is used in docket entries as a brief mention of the issue of process. Thus, “exit a. fa.” denotes that a writ of flori facias has been issued in the particular case. The “exit of a writ” is the fact of its issuance.

EXIT WOUND. A term used in medical jurisprudence to denote the wound made by a weapon on the side where it emerges, after it has passed completely through the body, or through any part of it.

EXITUS. Children; offspring. The rents, issues, and profits of lands and tenements. An export duty. The conclusion of thepleadings.

EXLEGALITAS. In old English law. Outlawry. Spelman.

EXLEGALITUS. He who is prosecuted as an outlaw. Jacob.

EXLEGARE. In old English law. To outlaw; to deprive one of the benefit and protection of the law, (exuere aliquem beneficio legis). Spelman.

EXLEX. In old English law. An outlaw; qui est extra legem, one who is out of the law’s protection. Bract. fol. 123. Qui benefici futuro legis privatur. Spelman.

EXOINE. In French law. An act or instrument in writing which contains the reasons why a party in a civil suit, or a person accused, who has been summoned, agreeably to the requisitions of a decree, does not appear. Poth. Proc. Crim. § 3, art. 3. The same as “Essoin,” (q. v.)

EXONERATION. The removal of a burden, charge, or duty. Particularly, the act of relieving a person or estate from a charge or liability by casting the same upon another person or estate. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Comm., 114 Ky. 757, 71 S. W. 916; Bannon v. Burns (C. C.) 39 Fed. 896.

A right or equity which exists between those who are successively liable for the same debt. “A surety who discharges an obligation is entitled to look to the principal for reimbursement, and to invoke the aid of a court of equity for this purpose, and a subsequent surety who, by the terms of the contract, is responsible only in case of the default of the principal and a prior surety, may claim exoneraton at the hands of either.” Blag. Eq. § 331.

In Scotch Law

A discharge; or the act of being legally disburdened of, or liberated from, the performance of a duty or obligation. Bell.

Bl. Law Dict. (3d Ed.)
EXONERATIONE SECTÆ. A writ that lay for the crown's ward, to be free from all suit to the county court, hundred court, leet, etc., during wardship. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 158.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ AD CURIAM BARON. A writ of the same nature as that last above described, issued by the guardian of the crown's ward, and addressed to the sheriffs or stewards of the court, forbidding them to restrain him, etc., for not doing suit of court, etc. New Nat. Brev. 532.

EXONERRETUR. Lat. Let him be relieved or discharged. An entry made on a bail-place, whereby the surety is relieved or discharged from further obligation, when the condition is fulfilled by the surrender of the principal or otherwise.

EXORBITANT. Deviating from the normal or customary course, or going beyond the rule of established limits of right or propriety. U. S. v. Oglesby Grocery Co. (D. C.) 264 F. 691, 695.

EXORDIUM. The beginning or introductory part of a speech.

EXPATRIATION. The voluntary act of abandoning one's country, and becoming the citizen or subject of another. Ludlam v. Ludlam, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 489. See Emigration; Ex parte Griffin (D. C.) 237 F. 445, 450; Reynolds v. Haskins (C. C. A.) 8 F.(2d) 473, 475, 45 A. L. R. 759; 1 Barton, Conv. 31, note; Vaugh. 227, 281; 7 Co. 16; Dy. 2, 224, 2969, 3909; 2 P. Wms. 124; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 68; 1 Wood, Conv. 382; West. Priv. Int. Law; Story, Confi. Laws; Cockburn, Nationality.

EXPECT. To await; to look forward to something intended, promised, or likely to happen. Atchison, etc. R. Co. v. Hamlin, 67 Kan. 476, 73 P. 58; Kronenburg v. Whale, 21 Ohio App. 322, 153 N. E. 302, 308. The word has also a secondary meaning, in which it implies a demand rather than anticipation, as where a person, in negotiating a contract, says he will "expect" to write half the fire insurance. Stillman v. Spokane Savings & Loan Soc, 103 Wash. 619, 175 P. 296, 297.

EXPECTANCY. That which is expected or hoped for. The condition of being deferred to a future time, or of dependence upon an expected event; contingency as to possession or enjoyment. With respect to the time of their enjoyment, estates may either be in possession or in expectancy; and of expectancies there are two sorts,—one created by the act of the parties, called a "remainder;" the other by act of law, called a "reversion." 2 Bl. Comm. 103.

EXPECTANCY OF LIFE. In the doctrine of life annuities, the share or number of years of life which a person of a given age may, upon an equality of chance, expect to enjoy. Wharton.

EXPECTANT. Contingent as to enjoyment. Having relation to, or dependent upon, a contingency.

EXPECTANT ESTATES. See Estate in Expectancy.

EXPECTANT HEIR. A person who has the expectation of inheriting property or an estate, but small present means. The term is chiefly used in equity, where relief is afforded to such persons against the enforcement of "catching bargains." (q. v.) Jeffers v. Lampson, 10 Ohio St. 106; Whelen v. Phillips, 151 Pa. 312, 25 A. 44; In re Robbins' Estate, 199 Pa. 500, 49 A. 233. "The phrase is used not in its literal meaning, but as including every one who has either a vested remainder, or a contingent remainder in a family property, including a remainder in a portion, as well as a remainder in an estate, and every one who has the hope of succession to the property of an ancestor, either by reason of his being the heir-apparent or presumptive, or by reason, merely, of the expectation of a devise or bequest on account of the supposed or presumed affection of his ancestor or relation. More than this, the doctrine as to expectant heirs has been extended to all reversions and remaindermen. So that the doctrine not only included the class mentioned, who in some popular sense might be called 'expectant heirs,' but also all remaindermen and rever- sioners." Jessel, M. R.

EXPECTANT RIGHT. A contingent right, not vested; one which depends on the continued existence of the present condition of things until the happening of some future event. Peursall v. Great Northern R. Co., 161 U. S. 646, 16 S. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838; Pollock v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. (C. C. A.) 233 F. 861, 888; Avery v. Curtiss, 108 Okl. 154, 235 P. 195, 197. A right is contingent, not vested, when it comes into existence only on an event or condition which may not happen. Wirtz v. Nestos, 51 N. D. 603, 200 N. W. 524, 530.

EXPECTATION OF LIFE. See Expectancy of Life.

EXPEDIENT. Pertaining to whatever is suitable and appropriate in reason for the accomplishment of a specified object. Eustace v. Dickey, 240 Mass. 55, 132 N. E. 882, 882.

EXPEDIENTE. In Mexican law, a term including all the papers or documents constituting a grant or title to land from government. Vanderslice v. Hanks, 3 Cal. 27, 38.

EXPEDIENT. The whole of a person's goods and chattels, bag and baggage. Wharton.

Exedit reiublicae ne sua re quis male utatur. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not enjoy his own property improperly (to the injury of others). Inst. 1, § 2.
EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES

Expedit reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It is for the advantage of the state that there be an end of suits; it is for the public good that actions be brought to a close. Co. Litt. 3039; Broom, Max. 365–6; Belcher v. Farrar, 8 Allen (Mass.) 329. This maxim belongs to the law of all countries: 1 Phill. Int. L. 553; French v. Shotwell, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 555, 558.

EXPEDITAÆ ARBORES. Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots. Fleta, I. 2, c. 41.

EXPEDITION. In old forest law. A cutting off the claws or ball of the forefeet of mastiffs or other dogs, to prevent their running after deer;—a practice for the preservation of the royal forests. Cart. de For. c. 17; Spelman; Cowell.

EXPEDITIO. An expedition; an irregular kind of army. Spelman.

EXPEDITIO BREVIS. In old practice. The service of a writ. Townsh. Pl. 43.

EXPEDITIOUS. Possessed of, or characterized by, expedition or efficiency and rapidity in action; performed with, or acting with, expedition; quick; speedy. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ridley, 119 Okl. 138, 249 P. 289, 290.

EXPEL. In regard to trespass and other torts, this term means to eject, to put out, to drive out, and generally with an implication of the use of force. Perry v. Fitzhew, 8 Q. B. 779; Smith v. Leo, 92 Hun, 242, 36 N. Y. Supp. 949.

EXPEND. To pay out, use up, consume. Adams v. Prather, 176 Cal. 33, 167 P. 534, 538; 3 A. L. R. 528; School Dist. No. 24 of Marion County v. Smith, 82 Or. 443, 161 P. 705, 708.

EXPENDITORS. Paymasters. Those who expend or disburse certain taxes. Especially the sworn officer who supervised the repairs of the canals in Romney Marsh. Cowell.

EXPENDITURE. An expending, a laying out of money; disbursement—it is not the same as an “appropriation,” the setting apart or assignment to a particular person or use, in exclusion of all others. Grout v. Gates, 97 Vt. 434, 124 A. 76, 80.

EXPENSE/LITIS. Costs or expenses of the suit, which are generally allowed to the successful party.

EXPENSE. That which is expended, laid out or consumed; an outlay; charge; cost; price. Rowley v. Clarke, 162 Iowa, 732, 144 N.W. 908, 911.

CURRENT EXPENSES

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire upon those who held lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 201.

EXPERIENCE. A word implying skill, facility, or practical wisdom gained by personal knowledge, feeling, and action, and also the course or process by which one attains knowledge or wisdom. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co. v. Gorman, 38 Ind. App. 381, 106 N. E. 597, 598.

Experientia et per varios actus legem facit. Magna rerum experientia. Co. Litt. 60; Branch, Princ. Experience by various acts makes law. Experience is the mistress of things.

EXPERIMENT. In patent law, either a trial of an uncompleted mechanical structure to ascertain what changes or additions may be necessary to make it accomplish the design of the projector, or a trial of a completed machine to test or illustrate its practical efficiency. In the former case, the inventor's efforts, being incomplete, if they are then abandoned, will have no effect upon the right of a subsequent inventor; but if the experiment proves the capacity of the machine to effect what its inventor proposed, the law assigns to him the merit of having produced a complete invention. Northwestern Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Philadelphia Fire Extinguisher Co., 10 Phila. 227, 18 Fed. Cas. 394.

EXPERIMENTAL TESTIMONY. That of some witness who, after the commission of the crime, makes experiments for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of a certain act under certain conditions, and swears to such experiments. State v. Harlan (Mo. Sup.) 240 S. W. 197, 201.

EXPERTS. Persons examined as witnesses in a cause, who testify in regard to some professional or technical matter arising in the case, and who are permitted to give their opinions as to such matter on account of their special training, skill, or familiarity with it. Persons selected by the court or parties in a cause, on account of their knowledge or skill, to examine, estimate, and ascertain things and make a report of their opinions. Merlin, Répert.
by paying the debt in the decree of adjudication. Bell; 3 Jurid. Styles, 2d ed. 1167.

EXPLEES. See Esplees.

EXPLETA, EXPLETIA, or EXPLECIA. In old records. The rents and profits of an estate.

EXPLICATIO. In the civil law. The fourth pleading; equivalent to the surrejoinder of the common law. Calvin.

EXPLORATION. In mining law. The examination and investigation of land supposed to contain valuable minerals, by drilling, boring, sinking shafts, driving tunnels, and other means, for the purpose of discovering the presence of ore and its extent. Calvin v. Weimer, 61 Minn. 37, 65 N. W. 1079.

EXPLORATOR. A scout, huntsman, or chaser.

EXPOSITION. A sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report. United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Poote, 22 Ohio St. 348, 10 Am. Rep. 735; New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. v. Rupard, 157 Ky. 671, 220 S. W. 585, 542. In the common acceptance of the term, it includes the sudden bursting or breaking up from an internal or other force, and is not limited to cases caused by combustion or fire. American Paper Products Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 208 Mo. App. 87, 225 S. W. 1029, 1030. The ordinary idea is that the explosion is the cause, while the rupture is the effect. Evans v. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 151, 4 Am. Rep. 650; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 42, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 46 L. Ed. 74.

The word "explosion" is variously used in ordinary speech, and is not one that admits of exact definition. Every combustion of an explosive substance, whereby other property is ignited and consumed, would not be an "explosion," within the ordinary meaning of the term. It is not used as a synonym of "combustion." An explosion may be described generally as a sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report. But the rapidity of the combustion, the violence of the expansion, and the vehemence of the report vary in intensity as often as the occurrences multiply. Hence an explosion is an idea of degrees; and the true meaning of the word, in each particular case, must be settled, not by any fixed standard or accurate measurement, but by the common experience and notions of men in matters of that sort. Insurance Co. v. Poote, 22 Ohio St. 348, 10 Am. Rep. 735. And see Insurance Co. v. Doremy, 85 Md. 81, 40 Am. Rep. 403; Mitchell v. Insurance Co., 16 App. D. C. 270; Louisville Underwriters v. Durland, 123 Ind. 544, 24 N. E. 221, 7 L. R. A. 399.

EXPLOSIVE. Any substance whose decomposition or combustion is generated with such rapidity that it can be used for blasting or for firearms.—Anchor Life Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 61 Ind. App. 35, 111 N. E. 458, 457.
EXPORT, v. To send, take, or carry an article of trade or commerce out of the country. To transport merchandise from one country to another in the course of trade. To carry out or convey goods by sea. State v. Turner, 5 Har. (Del.) 501.

While the word export technically includes the landing in as well as the shipment to a foreign country, it is often used as meaning only the shipment from this country. U. S. v. Chavez, 228 U. S. 525, 33 S. Ct. 895, 57 L. Ed. 959.

EXPORTATION. The act of sending or carrying goods and merchandise from one country to another.

EXPOSE, v. To show publicly; to display; to offer to the public view; as, to "expose" goods to sale, to "expose" a tariff or schedule of rates, to "expose" the person. Boyton v. Page, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 432; Comm. v. Byrnes, 158 Mass. 172, 33 N. E. 343; Adams Exp. Co. v. Schlessinger, 75 Pa. 216; Centre Turnpike Co. v. Smith, 12 Vt. 218. To "expose for sale" means to keep and show for the purpose of selling. State v. Hogan, 212 Mo. App. 473, 252 S. W. 90.

To place in a position where the object spoken of is open to danger, or where it is near or accessible to anything which may affect it detrimentally; as, to "expose" a child, or to expose oneself or another to a contagious disease or to danger or hazard of any kind. In re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 40 N. E. 497, 28 L. R. A. 820, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769; Davis v. Insurance Co., 81 Iowa, 496, 46 N. W. 1075, 10 L. R. A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 509; Miller v. Insurance Co., 39 Minn. 548, 40 N. W. 839; Eau Claire Sand & Gravel Co. v. Industrial Commission of Wisconsin, 173 Wis. 601, 181 N. W. 718. To cast out to chance, to place abroad, or in a situation unprotected. Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 90.

EXPOSÉ. Fr. A statement; account; recital; explanation. The term is used in diplomatic language as descriptive of a written explanation of the reasons for a certain act or course of conduct.

EXPOSITIO. Lat. Explanation; exposition; interpretation.

Expositio quam ex visceribus causae nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege. That kind of interpretation which is born [or drawn] from the bowels [or vitals] of a cause is the aptest and most forcible in the law. 10 Coke, 24b.

EXPOSITION. Explanation; interpretation.

EXPOSITION DE PART. In French law. The abandonment of a child, unable to take care of itself, either in a public or private place.

EXPOSITORY STATUTE. One the office of which is to declare what shall be taken to be the true meaning and intent of a statute previously enacted. Black, Const. Law. (3d ed.) 89. And see Lindsay v. United States Sav. & Loan Co., 120 Ala. 159, 24 So. 171, 42 L. R. A. 783; Washington, A. & G. R. Co. v. Martin, 7 D. C. 120; Dequindre v. Williams, 31 Ind. 441; People v. Board of Sup'mrs, 16 N. Y. 424.

They are often expressed thus: "The true intent and meaning of an act passed * * * be and is hereby declared to be," "the provisions of the act shall not hereafter extend"; or "are hereby declared and enacted not to apply," and the like. This is a common mode of legislation.

EXPOSURE. The act or state of exposing or being exposed. See Expose.

—Exposure of child. Placing it (with the intention of wholly abandoning it) in such a place or position as to leave it unprotected against danger and jeopardize its health or life or subject it to the peril of severe suffering or serious bodily harm. Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 90.

—Exposure of person. In criminal law. Such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body or the private parts as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals of the community. Gilmore v. State, 118 Ga. 299, 45 S. E. 226.

—Indecent exposure. The same as exposure of the person, in the sense above defined. State v. Baugness, 106 Iowa, 107, 75 N. W. 503.

EXPRESS. Made known distinctly and explicitly, and not left to inference or implication. Declared in terms; set forth in words. Manifested by direct and appropriate language, as distinguished from that which is inferred from conduct. The word is usually contrasted with "implied." State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 21 N. E. 274, 4 L. R. A. 65. Clear, definite, plain, direct. State v. Zangere, 101 Ohio St. 235, 128 N. E. 165, 167.

EXPRESS ABROGATION. Abrogation by express provision or enactment; the repeal of a law or provision by a subsequent one, referring directly to it.

EXPRESS ASSUMPSIT. An undertaking to do some act, or to pay a sum of money to another, manifested by express terms.

EXPRESS AUTHORITY. That which the principal directly grants to an agent. Dispatch Printing Co. v. National Bank of Commerce, 109 Minn. 440, 124 N. W. 236, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 74. That which confers power to do a particular identical thing set forth and declared exactly, plainly, and directly with well-defined limits; an authority given in direct terms, definitely and explicitly, and not left to inference or implication, as distinguished from authority which is general, implied, or not directly stated or given. Fergus v. Bracy, 277 Ill. 272, 115 N. E. 396, 396, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 220.

EXPRESS COLOR. An evasive form of special pleading in a case where the defendant ought to plead the general issue. Abolished by the common-law procedure act, 1852, (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 64).

EXPRESS COMPANY. A firm or corporation engaged in the business of transporting parcels or other movable property, in the capacity of common carriers, and especially undertaking the safe carriage and speedy delivery of small but valuable packages of goods and money. Alsop v. Southern Exp. Co., 104 N. C. 278, 10 S. E. 297, 6 L. R. A. 271; Pfister v. Central Pac. Ry. Co., 70 Cal. 169, 11 P. 868, 59 Am. Rep. 404; American Ry. Exp. Co. v. Wright, 128 Miss. 593, 91 So. 342, 343, 23 A. L. R. 127. A common carrier that carries at regular and stated times, over fixed and regular routes, money and other valuable packages, which cannot be conveniently or safely carried as common freight; and also other articles and packages of any description which the shipper desires or the nature of the article requires should have safe and rapid transit and quick delivery, transporting the same in the immediate charge of its own messenger on passenger steamers and express and passenger railway trains, which it does not own or operate, but with the owners of which it contracts for the carriage of its messengers and freights. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Selbert (C. C.) 44 P. 310.

EXPRESS CONSIDERATION. A consideration which is distinctly and specifically named in the written contract or in the oral agreement of the parties.

EXPRESS EMANCIPATION. That which results when parent and child voluntarily agree that the child, able to take care of himself, may go out from his home and make his own living, receive his own wages, and spend them as he pleases. Nichols v. Harvey & Hancock, 206 Ky. 112, 266 S. W. 870, 871.

EXPRESS INVITATION. An express or expressed invitation upon premises arises when the owner in terms invites another to come upon the premises and make use of them or something thereon. Robinson v. Leighton, 122 Me. 309, 119 A. 809, 810, 30 A. L. R. 1386.

EXPRESS REQUEST. That which occurs when one person commands or asks another to do or give something, or answers affirmatively when asked whether another shall do a certain thing. Zeldeer v. Goelzer, 191 Wis. 378, 211 N. W. 140, 144.

Express a nocent, non expressa non nocent. Things expressed are [may be] prejudicial; things not expressed are not. Express words are sometimes prejudicial, which, if omitted, had done no harm. Dig. 35, 1, 52; 1d. 50, 17, 105. See Calvin.

Expressa non prosunt quae non expressa proderant. 4 Coke, 73. The expression of things of which, if unexpressed, one would have the benefit, is useless. Thing expressed may be prejudicial which when not expressed will profit.

Expresio eorum quae tacite insunt nihil operatur. The expression or express mention of those things which are tacitly implied avails nothing. 2 Inst. 365. A man's own words are void, when the law speaketh as much. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 5, no. 26. Words used to express what the law will imply without them are mere words of abundance. 5 Coke, 11; Broom, Max. 660, 753; 2 Pars. Contr. 28; 4 Co. 73; Andr. Steph. Pl. 306; Hob. 170; 3 Atkins 158; 11 M. & W. 599; 7 Exch. 26.

Expressio unius personam est exclusio alterius. Co. Litt. 210. The mention of one person is the exclusion of another. See Broom, Max. 651.

Expressum facti cessare tacitum. That which is expressed makes that which is implied to cease, [that is, supersedes it, or controls its effect.] Thus, an implied covenant in a deed is in all cases controlled by an express covenant. 4 Coke, 80; Broom, Max. 651; 5 Bingh. N. C. 185; 6 B. & C. 609; 2 C. & M. 459; 2 E. & B. 556; Andover & Medford Turnpike Corp. v. Hay, 7 Mass. 106; Gage v. Tirrell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 306; Weston v. Davis, 24 Me. 374; Scott v. Fields, 7 Watts (Pa.) 301; Galloway
EXPRESS REQUEST

Expressum servitium regat vel declarat taetum. Let service expressed rule or declare what is silent.

EXPROMISSIO. In the civil law. The species of novation by which a creditor accepts a new debtor, who becomes bound instead of the old, the latter being released. 1 Bouv. Inst. no. 562.

EXPROMISSOR. In the civil law. A person who assumes the debt of another, and becomes solely liable for it, by a stipulation with the creditor. He differs from a surety, inasmuch as this contract is one of novation, while a surety is jointly liable with his principal. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 538; Dig. 12, 4, 4; 16, 1, 13; 24, 3, 64, 4; 38, 1, 67, 8.

EXPROMITTERE. In the civil law. To undertake for another with the view of becoming liable in his place. Calvin.

EXPROPRIATION. This word primarily denotes a voluntary surrender of rights or claims; the act of divesting oneself of that which was previously claimed as one's own, or renouncing it. In this sense it is the opposite of "appropriation." But a meaning has been attached to the term, imported from its use in foreign jurisprudence, which makes it synonymous with the exercise of the power of eminent domain, i.e., the compulsory taking from a person, on compensation made, of his private property for the use of a railroad, canal, or other public work. Brownsville v. Pauzanos, 2 Woods 293, Fed. Cas. No. 2043. In Louisiana expropriation is used as is taking under eminent domain in most of the other states. In England "compulsory purchase" is used; Halsbury, Laws of England.

In French Law

Expropriation is the compulsory realization of a debt by the creditor out of the lands of his debtor, or the usufruct thereof. When the debtor is cotenant with others, it is necessary that a partition should first be made. It is confined, in the first place, to the lands (if any) that are in hypothèque, but afterwards extends to the lands not in hypothèque. Moreover, the debt must be of a liquidated amount. Brown.

EXPULSION. A putting or driving out. Ejectment; banishment; a cutting off from the privileges of an institution or society permanently. John B. Stetson. University v. Hunt, 58 Fla. 510, 102 So. 637, 639. The act of depriving a member of a corporation, legislative body, assembly, society, commercial organization, etc., of his membership in the same, by a legal vote of the body itself, for breach of duty, improper conduct, or other sufficient cause. New York Protective Ass'n v. McGrath (Super. Ct.) 5 N. Y. S. 10; Falmeth to Lodge v. Hubbell, 2 Strob. (S. C.) 462, 49 Am. Dec. 604. Also, in the law of torts and of landlord and tenant, an eviction or forcible putting out. See Expel.

"Separation" from a church by reason of a schism is not like "expulsion" or "excommunication," which terms necessarily involve involuntary and compulsory separation of members. Lindstrom v. Tell, 181 Minn. 203, 24 N. W. 969, 971.

EXPUNGE. To blot out; to efface designedly; to obliterate; to strike out wholly. Webster. See Cancel.

EXPURGATION. The act of purging or cleansing, as where a book is published without its obscene passages.

EXPURGATOR. One who corrects by expurgation.

EXQUESTOR. In Roman law. One who had filled the office of questor. A title given to Tribonian. Inst. procem. § 3. Used only in the ablative case, (exquestore).

EXROGARE. (From ex., from, and rogare, to pass a law.) In Roman law. To take something from an old law by a new law. Tayl. Civil Law, 135.

To "extend" a lease or contract is not necessarily the same as "renew," for a stipulation to renew requires the making of a new lease, while one to extend does not. Sanders v. Wender, 265 Ky. 432, 265 S. W. 989, 941. See, also, Nemazi v. Rochester Silver Corporation, 45 N. Y. 41, 226 P. 1105, 1106; Livingston Waterworks v. City of Livingston, 53

In English Practice

To value the lands or tenements of a person bound by a statute or recognizance which has become forfeited, to their full extended value. 3 Bl. Comm. 420; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 131. To execute the writ of extendi facias (q. v.). 2 Tidd, Pr. 1043, 1044.

In Taxation

Extending a tax consists in adding to the assessment roll the amount due from each person whose name appears thereon. "The subject of taxation having been properly listed, and a basis for apportionment established, nothing will remain to fix a definite liability but to extend upon the list or roll the several proportionate amounts, as a charge against the several taxable." Cooley, Tax'n (2d Ed.) 423.

EXTENDI FACIAS. Lat. You cause to be extended. In English practice. The name of a writ of execution; (derived from its two emphatic words;) more commonly called an "exten." 2 Tidd, Pr. 1043; 4 Steph. Comm. 45.

EXTENSION.

In Mercantile Law

An allowance of additional time for the payment of debts. An agreement between a debtor and his creditors, by which they allow him further time for the payment of his liabilities. A creditor's indulgence by giving a debtor further time to pay an existing debt. State v. Mastayer, 144 Ta. 601, 80 So. 591, 892. Among the French, a similar agreement is known by the name of attermoiment. Merlin, Répert. mot Attermoiment.

In Patent Law

An extension of the life of a patent for an additional period of seven years, formerly allowed by law in the United States, upon proof being made that the inventor had not succeeded in obtaining a reasonable remuneration from his patent-right. This is no longer allowed, except as to designs. See Rev. St. U. S. § 4924.

EXTENSIVE. Widely extended in space, time, or scope; great or wide or capable of being extended. American Cannel Coal Co. v. Indiana Cotton Mills, 78 Ind. App. 113, 134 N. E. 591, 593.

EXTENSORES. In old English law. Extenders or appraisers. The name of certain officers appointed to appraise and divide or appportion lands. It was their duty to make a survey, schedule, or inventory of the lands, to lay them out under certain heads, and then to ascertain the value of each, as preparatory to the division or partition. Bract. fols. 72b, 75; Britt. c. 71.

EXTENT.

In English Practice

A writ of execution issuing from the exchequer upon a debt due the crown, or upon a debt due a private person, if upon recognizance or statute merchant or staple, by which the sheriff is directed to appraise the debtor's lands, and, instead of selling them, to set them off to the creditor for a term during which the rental will satisfy the judgment. Hackett v. Amsden, 56 Vt. 201; Nason v. Fowler; 70 N. H. 263, 47 A. 263. It is so called because the sheriff is to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff. Fitzh. N. B. 131. The term is sometimes used in the various states of the United States to denote writs which give the creditor possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid. Roberts v. Whiting, 13 Mass. 180.

In Scots Practice

The value or valuation of lands. Bell. The rents, profits, and issues of lands. Skene.

In General

—Extent in aid. That kind of extent which issues at the instance and for the benefit of a debtor to the crown, for the recovery of a debt due to himself. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1045; 4 Steph. Comm. 47. This writ was much abused, owing to some peculiar privileges possessed by crown-debtors, and its use was regulated by stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 117. See 3 Bin. Comm. 419.

—Extent in chief. The principal kind of extent, issuing at the suit of the crown, for the recovery of the crown's debt. 4 Steph. Comm. 47. An adverse proceeding by the king, for the recovery of his own debt. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1045.

—Manorial extent. A survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due. These manorial extents "were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services are not due, that the customary tenants, even though they be unfree men, owe these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants are not bound to do services of a particular kind are not very uncommon"; 1
EXTENTA MANERII. (The extent or survey of a manor.) The title of a statute passed 4 Edw. I. St. 1: being a sort of direction for making a survey or terrier of a manor, and all its appendages. 2 Reeve, Eng. Law, 140.

EXTENUATE. To lessen; to palliate; to mitigate. Connell v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 259, 81 S. W. 748.

EXTENUATING CIRCUMSTANCES. Such as render a delict or crime less aggravated, heinous, or reprehensible than it would otherwise be, or tend to palliate or lessen its guilt. Such circumstances may ordinarily be shown in order to reduce the punishment or damages.

EXTENUATION. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be without it. It is opposed to aggravation.

EXTERIOR. The phrase "exterior of the building" as used in a lease of a building adjacent to another building, each having its own wall, the two against each other forming a solid double wall, means more extensive with its external parts and including the four walls. B. Siegel Co. v. Codd, 183 Mich. 145, 149 N. W. 1015, 1017.

EXTERRITORIALITY. The privilege of those persons (such as foreign ministers) who, though temporarily resident within a state, are not subject to the operation of its laws. The exemption from the operation of the ordinary laws of the state accorded to foreign monarchs temporarily within the state and their retinue, to diplomatic agents and the members of their household, to consuls in non-Christian states, and to foreign men of war in port. 1 Opp. 460-469. See Capitulation.

EXTERUS. Lat. A foreigner or alien; one born abroad. The opposite of civis.

Exterus non habet terras. An alien holds no lands. Tray. Lat. Max. 203.

EXTINCT. Extinguished. A rent is said to be extinguished when it is destroyed and put out. Co. Litt. 147b. See Extinction.

Existece subjecte, tollitur adjunctum. When the subject [or substance] is extinguished, the incident [or adjunct] ceases. Thus, when the business for which a partnership has been formed is completed, or brought to an end, the partnership itself ceases. Inst. 3, 26, 6; 3 Kent, Comm. 52, note; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 492.

EXTINGUISHMENT. The destruction or cancellation of a right, power, contract, or estate. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. Prest. Merg. 9. For the distinction between an extinguishment and passing a right, see 2 Shars. Bl. Comm. 325, note.

"Extinguishment" is sometimes confused with "merger," though there is a clear distinction between them. "Merger" is only a mode of extinguishment, and applies to estates only under particular circumstances; but "extinguishment" is a term of general application to rights, as well as estates. 2 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 367, § 148.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. Loss of the right to have common. This may happen from various causes. 2 Steph. Com. 41; Co. Litt. 250; 1 Bacon, Abr. 628; Cro. Eliz. 594.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPYHOLD. In English law. A copyhold is said to be extinguished when the freehold and copyhold interests unite in the same person and in the same right, which may be either by the copyhold interest coming to the freehold or by the freehold interest coming to the copyhold. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 670, § 584; Hutten 81; Cro. Eliz. 21; Wms. R. P. 257.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF DEBTS. This takes place by payment; by accord and satisfaction; by novation, or the substitution of a new debtor; by merger, when the creditor recovers a judgment or accepts a security of a higher nature than the original obligation; by a release; by the marriage of a feme sole creditor with the debtor, or of an obligee with one of two joint obligors; and where one of the parties, debtor or creditor, makes the other his executory.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF LEGACY. This occurs in case the identical thing bequested is not in existence, or has been disposed of so that it does not form part of the testator's estate, at the time of his death. Welch v. Welch, 147 Miss. 728, 113 So. 197, 198. See Ademption.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF RENT. If a person have a yearly rent of lands, and afterwards purchase those lands, so that he has as good an estate in the land as in the rent, the rent is extinguished. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Co. Litt. 147. Rent may also be extinguished by conjunction of estates, by confirmation, by grant, by release, and by surrender. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. pp. 210-213, § 209.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. This is usually effected by unity of possession. As if a man have a way over the close of another, and he purchase that close, the way is extinguished. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 341, § 384; 2 Washb. Real Prop.

EXTRIPATION. In English law. A species of destruction or waste, analogous to estrepe- ment. See Estrempation.
EXTIRPATION. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lay against a person who, when a verdict was found against him for land, etc., maliciously overthrew any house or extirpated any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13, 56.

EXTOCARE. In old records. To grub wood-land, and reduce it to arable or meadow; "to stock up." Cowell.

EXTORSIVELY. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

It is a sufficient averment of a corrupt intent, in an indictment for extortion, to allege that the defendant "extorsively" took the unlawful fee. Leeman v. State, 35 Ark. 433, 37 Am. Rep. 44. When a person is charged with extorting a way, the very import of the word shows that he is not acquiring posession of his own; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 377. In North Carolina the crime may be charged without using this word; State v. Dickens, 2 N. C. 405.

EXTORT. To compel or coerce, as a confession or information by any means serving to overcome one's power of resistance, or making the confession or admission involuntary. Sutton v. Commonwealth, 207 Ky. 597, 299 S. W. 754, 757.

To gain by wrongful methods, to obtain in an unlawful manner, to compel payments by means of threats of injury to person, property, or reputation. McKenzie v. State, 113 Neb. 576, 204 N. W. 60, 61; State v. Richards, 97 Wash. 587, 167 P. 47, 48. To take from unlawfully; to exact something wrongfully by threats or putting in fear. State v. Adams (Del.) 106 A. 287, 238, 7 Boyce, 338. See Extortion.

The natural meaning of the word "extort" is to obtain money or other valuable thing either by compulsion, by actual force, or by the force of motives applied to the will, and often more over-powering and irresistible than physical force. Com. v. O'Brien, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 30.

Exortio est crimen quando quis coloro officii extorquet quod non est debitum, vel supra debitum, vel ante tempus quod est debitum. 10 Coke, 102. Extortion is a crime when, by color of office, any person extorts which is not due, or more than is due, or before the time when it is due.

EXTORTION. At common law, any oppression by color or pretense of right, and particularly and technically the extaction by an officer of money, by color of his office, either when none at all is due, or not so much is due, or when it is not yet due. Preston v. Bacon, 4 Conn. 480; 1 Hawk. P. Q. (Curw. Ed.) 418. See People v. Barondess, 16 N. Y. S. 456, 61 Hun. 571; Wharton Cr. L. 833.

The unlawful taking by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due. 4 Bia. Comm. 141; Com. v. Saulsbury, 162 Pa. 554, 25 A. 610; 1 Russa Cr. * 144; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 809; U. S. v. Deaver (D. C.) 14 F. 385; Bush v. State, 15 Ariz. 195, 152 P. 503, 505; Code Ga. 1882, § 4507 (Pen. Code 1910, § 304).

The corrupt demanding or receiving by a person in office of a fee for services which should be performed gratuitously; or, where, compensation is permissible, of a larger fee than the law justifies, or a fee not due. 2 Dish. Crim. Law, § 586.

The distinction between "liberty" and "extortion" seems to be this: the former offense consists in the offering a present, or receiving one, if offered; the latter, in demanding a fee or present, by color of office. Jacob.

The exactness of money by reason of oppressive conditions or circumstances. People v. Wellier, 237 N. Y. 318, 143 N. E. 205, 206, 38 A. L. R. 618.

The taking or obtaining of anything from another by means of illegal compulsion or oppressive exaction; Daniels v. U. S. (O. C. A.) 17 F.(2d) 338, 342; State v. Kramer, 115 A. 8, 11, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 454; whether by an officer or otherwise; United States v. Dunkley (D. C.) 235 F. 1000, 1001.

To constitute "extortion," the wrongful use of fear must be the operating cause producing consent. People v. Biggs, 176 Cal. 79, 172 P. 152, 153.

For the distinction between "extortion" and "exactation," see Exactation.

EXTRA. A Latin preposition, occurring in many legal phrases, and meaning beyond, except, without, out of, outside.

EXTRA ALLOWANCE. In New York practice. A sum in addition to costs, which may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed to the successful party in cases of unusual difficulty. See Hascall v. King, 54 App. Div. 441, 66 N. Y. S. 1112.

EXTRA COSTS. In English practice. Those charges which do not appear upon the face of the proceedings, such as witnesses' expenses, fees to counsel, attendances, court fees, etc., an affidavit of which must be made, to warrant the master in allowing them upon taxation of costs. Wharton.

EXTRA FEDUM. Out of his fee; out of the seigniory, or not holden of him that claims it. Co. Litt. 1b; Reg. Orig. 97b.

EXTRA JUDICIM. Extrajudicial; out of the proper cause; out of court; beyond the jurisdiction. See Extrajudicial.
EXTRA JUS. Beyond the law; more than the law requires. In jure, vel extra ius. Bract. fol. 1498.

EXTRA LEGEM. Out of the law; out of the protection of the law.

Extra legem positus est civili mortuus. Co. Litt. 130. He who is placed out of the law is civilly dead. A bankrupt is, as it were, civilly dead. International Bank v. Sherman, 101 U. S. 406, 25 L. Ed. 866.

EXTRA PRÆSENTIAM MARITI. Out of her husband’s presence.

EXTRA QUÁTUOR MARIA. Beyond the four seas; out of the kingdom of England. 1 Bl. Comm. 457.

EXTRA REGNUM. Out of the realm. 7 Coke, 196; 2 Kent, Comm. 442, note.

EXTRA SERVICES, when used with reference to officers, means services incident to the office in question, but for which compensation has not been provided by law. Miami County v. Blake, 21 Ind. 32.

EXTRA TERRITORIUM. Beyond or without the territory. 6 Bin. 353; 2 Kent, Comm. 407. Outside the territorial limits of a state. Milne v. Moreton, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 353, 6 Am. Dec. 466.

Extra territorium jus dicenti impune non paretur. One who exercises jurisdiction out of his territory is not obeyed with impunity. Dig. 2, 1, 20; Branch, Prin.; 10 Coke, 77; Story, Confi. Laws, § 539. He who exercises judicial authority beyond his proper limits cannot be obeyed with safety.

EXTRA VIAM. Outside the way. Where the defendant in trespass pleaded a right of way in justification, and the replication alleged that the trespass was committed outside the limits of the way claimed, these were the technical words to be used. 16 East, 343, 349.

EXTRA VIRES. Beyond powers. See Ultra Vires.

EXTRA WORK. The term “extra work” in a construction contract applies to work of a character not contemplated by the parties and not controlled by the contract, while “additional work” is such as may fairly be presumed to arise in the construction, and is within the contract, although not included in the plans and specifications. Wilson v. Salt Lake City, 52 Utah, 506, 174 P. 847, 850. But in a sewer construction contract providing that the city engineer might make such changes in the lines, grades, and dimensions which do not entail any extra expense to the contractor, the word “extra” was deemed equivalent to additional work which was required in the performance of the contract, and not necessary to such performance in the sense that the contract could not have been carried out without it, but necessary in the sense that by means of it the contract could be more conveniently and beneficially performed in the interest of both parties thereto, and did not include work arising out of and entirely independent of the contract, something not required in its performance. City of Richmond v. Burton, 115 Va. 206, 75 S. E. 560, 563. See, also, Fetterolf v. S. & L. Const. Co., 175 App. Div. 177, 181 N. Y. S. 549, 550; McHugh v. City of Tacoma, 76 Wash. 127, 135 P. 1011, 1015.

EXTRACT, v. To draw out or forth; to pull out from a fixed position. Webster. To “extract” one within the meaning of a royalty provision in a mining lease contemplates not only the removal of the ore from the mine and throwing it on a dump, but also the separation of the ore from the dirt and refuse in which it was found on the dump. Giersa v. Creech (Mo. App.) 151 S. W. 358, 359.

EXTRACT, n. A portion or fragment of a writing. In Scotch law, the certified copy, by a clerk of a court, of the proceedings in an action carried on before the court, and of the judgment pronounced; containing also an order for execution or proceedings thereupon. Jacob; Whishaw.

EXTRACTA CURÆ. In old English law. The issues or profits of holding a court, arising from the customary fees, etc.

EXTRADITION. The surrender of a criminal by a foreign state to which he has fled for refuge from prosecution to the state within whose jurisdiction the crime was committed, upon the demand of the latter state, in order that he may be dealt with according to its laws. Extradition may be accorded as a mere matter of comity, or may take place under treaty stipulations between the two nations. It also obtains as between the different states of the American Union. Tarlinden v. Ames, 184 U. S. 270, 22 S. Ct. 484, 46 L. Ed. 594; Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 13 S. Ct. 1016, 37 L. Ed. 905.

Extradition between the states must be considered and defined to be a political duty of imperfect obligation, founded upon compact, and requiring each state to surrender one who, having violated the criminal laws of another state, has fled from its justice, and is found in the state from which he is demanded, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled. Abbott.

EXTRA-DOTAL PROPERTY. In Louisiana this term is used to designate that property which forms no part of the dower of a woman, and which is also called “paraphernal property.” Civ. Code La. art. 2355. Fietas v. Richardson, 147 U. S. 550, 13 S. Ct. 495, 37 L. Ed. 276.

EXTRAHAZARDOUS. In the law of insurance. Characterized or attended by circumstances or conditions of special and unusual danger. Reynolds v. Insurance Co., 47 N. Y.
EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES

597; Russell v. Insurance Co., 71 Iowa, 69; 32 N. W. 58.

EXTRAHURA. In old English law. An animal wandering or straying about, without an owner; an estray. Spelman.

EXTRAJUDICIAL. That which is done, given, or effected outside the course of regular judicial proceedings; not founded upon, or unconnected with, the action of a court of law; as extrajudicial evidence, an extrajudicial oath.

That which, though done in the course of regular judicial proceedings, is unnecessary to such proceedings, or interpolated, or beyond their scope; as an extrajudicial opinion, dictum.

That which does not belong to the judge or his jurisdiction, notwithstanding which he takes cognizance of it.

EXTRAJUDICIAL CONFESSION. One made by the party out of court, or to any person, official or otherwise, when made not in the course of a judicial examination or investigation. State v. Stevenson, 38 Or. 285, 183 P. 1030, 1032; Mays v. State, 19 Okl. Cr. 102, 197 P. 1064, 1070; Waido v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 165, 102 P. 1133, 1142; State v. Alexander, 109 La. 557, 33 So. 690; U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. 643.

EXTRAJUDICIAL OATH. One taken not in the course of judicial proceedings, or taken without any authority of law, though taken formally before a proper person. State v. Scatena, 84 Minn. 251, 87 N. W. 764.

EXTRALATERAL RIGHT. In mining law. The right of the owner of a mining claim duly located on the public domain to follow, and mine, any vein or lode the apex of which lies within the boundaries of his location on the surface, notwithstanding the course of the vein on its dip or downward direction may so far depart from the perpendicular as to extend beyond the planes which would be formed by the vertical extension downwards of the side lines of his location. See Rev. Stat. U. S. § 2922 (50 USCA § 26).

EXTRAMURAL. As applied to the powers of a municipal corporation, its “extramural” powers are those exercised outside the corporate limits, as distinguished from “intra-mural” powers. State v. Port of Astoria, 79 Or. 1, 154 P. 399, 404.

EXTRANEUS.

In Old English Law
One foreign born; a foreigner. 7 Coke, 16.

In Roman Law
An heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as silenus. Vicat; Du Cange.

Extraneus est substitutus qui extra terram, i. e., potestatem regis natus est. 7 Coke, 16. A foreigner is a subject who is born out of the territory, i. e., of the government of the king.

EXTRRORDINARY. Out of the ordinary; exceeding the usual, average, or normal measure or degree; beyond or out of the common order or rule; not usual, regular, or of a customary kind; remarkable; uncommon; rare. Ten Eyck v. Episcopal Church, 29 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 154, 29 N. Y. S. 157; The Titania, 19 F. 163; Puget Sound Traction, Light & Power Co. v. Reynolds (D. C.) 223 F. 371, 378. The word is both comprehensive and flexible in meaning. Zollman v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 70 Ind. App. 385, 121 N. E. 135, 140.

EXTRRORDINARY AVERAGE. A contribution by all the parties concerned in a mercantile voyage, either as to the vessel or cargo, toward a loss sustained by some of the parties in interest for the benefit of all. Wilson v. Cross, 33 Cal. 69.

EXTRRORDINARY CARE. Synonymous with greatest care, utmost care, highest degree of care. Railroad Co. v. Baddeley, 54 Ill. 24, 5 Am. Rep. 71; Railway Co. v. Causer, 97 Ala. 235, 12 So. 439. See Care; Diligence; Negligence.

EXTRORDINARY CASE. “The extraordinary motions or cases contemplated by the statute are such as do not ordinarily occur in the transaction of human affairs; as, when a man has been convicted of murder, and it afterwards appears that the supposed deceased is still alive, or where one is convicted on the testimony of a witness who is subsequently found guilty of perjury in giving that testimony, or where there has been some providential cause, and cases of like character.” Herrington v. State, 32 Ga. App. 83, 123 S. E. 147, 148; Farmers’ Union Warehouse of Metter v. Boyd, 31 Ga. App. 104, 119 S. E. 542.

EXTRORDINARY DANGER. In the law of master and servant, one not ordinarily incident to the service. Flockowski v. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Co., 190 Mo. App. 597, 176 S. W. 298, 299.

EXTRORDINARY EXPENSES. This term in a constitutional provision that the state may incur indebtedness for extraordinary expenses, means other than ordinary expenses and such as are incurred by the state for the promotion of the general welfare, compelled by some unforeseen condition which is not regularly provided for by law, such as flood, famine, fire, earthquake, pestilence, war, or any other condition that will compel the state to put forward its highest endeavors to protect the people, their property, liberty, or lives. State v. Davis, 113 Kan. 4, 213 P. 111, 112.
EXTRAORDINARY FLOOD. One of those unexplained visitations whose coming are not foreshadow by the usual course of nature, and whose magnitude and destructive ness could not have been anticipated or provided against by the exercise of ordinary foresight. Elikland v. Casey (C. C. A.) 266 F. 821, 823, 12 A. L. R. 179; Clements v. Phoenix Utility Co., 119 Kan. 190, 287 P. 1062, 1063. One of such unusual occurrence that it could not have been foreseen by men of ordinary experience and prudence. Soules v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 34 N. D. 7, 157 N. W. 823, 830, L. R. A. 1917A, 501. A flood is not extraordinary which is such as residents of the neighborhood might expect from their observation. City of Richmond v. Cheatwood, 130 Va. 76, 107 S. E. 830, 833.

EXTRAORDINARY RAINFALL. Not such a downpour of rain as may not have been known to occur, but only such rainfall that is so unusual and extraordinary that men of ordinary prudence would not have anticipated and provided for. City of Portsmouth v. Weiss, 145 Va. 94, 133 S. E. 781, 787.

EXTRAORDINARY REMEDIES. The writs of mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and some others are sometimes called "extraordinary remedies," in contradistinction to the ordinary remedy by action. Receivership is also said to be an "extraordinary remedy." Prudential Securities Co. v. Three Forks, H. & M. V. R. Co., 49 Mont. 567, 144 P. 158, 159.

EXTRAORDINARY REPAIRS. Within the meaning of a lease, such as are made necessary by some unusual or unforeseen occurrence which does not destroy the building but merely renders it less suited to the use for which it was intended. Nixon v. Gammon, 191 Ky. 175, 229 S. W. 75, 77.

EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES. As applied to the care and attention of an old and infirm person, such services as are unusual, extra, or above those generally required or to be anticipated in usual course of things, not such services as are rendered to an old and feeble person, even though sick, which are not different from those usually required by such persons in similar circumstances. Allen v. Smith, 205 Ky. 207, 270 S. W. 732, 733.

EXTRAPAROCHIAL. Out of a parish; not within the bounds or limits of any parish. 1 Bl. Comm. 113, 284.

EXTRATERRITORIALITY. The extraterritorial operation of a law; that is, the operation upon persons, rights, or jural relations, existing beyond the limits of the enacting state, but still amendable to its laws. A term used, especially formerly, to express, in lieu of the word "extraterritoriality" (q. v.), the exemption from the obligation of the laws of a state granted to foreign diplomatic agents, warships, etc. Wheaton, § 224. The term is used to indicate jurisdiction exercised by a nation in other countries, by treaty, as, by the United States in China or Egypt; or by its own ministers or consuls in foreign lands. Crime is said to be extraterritorial when committed in a country other than that of the forum in which the party is tried. See 2 Moore, Int. L. Dig.; U. S. v. Lucas (D. C.) 6 F.(2d) 327, 328.

EXTRAVAGANTES. In canon law. Those decretal epistles which were published after the Clementines. They were so called because at first they were not digested or arranged with the other papal constitutions, but seemed to be, as it were, detached from the canon law. They continued to be called by the same name when they were afterwards inserted in the body of the canon law. The first extravagantes are those of Pope John XXII, successor of Clement V. The last collection was brought down to the year 1483, and was called the "Common Extravagantes," notwithstanding that they were likewise incorporated with the rest of the canon law. Frenc. Lond.

EXTREME. At the utmost point, edge, or border; most remote. Last; conclusive. Greatest, highest, strongest, or the like. Immoderate; violent. Webster.

EXTREME CASE. An extreme case, in which an injunction granted inadvertently or improvidently may be dissolved ex parte, means one in which the injunction was manifestly granted improperly, and its continuance until hearing in due course might cause great injury. Teacle v. Hughes, 116 La. 168, 33 So. 457, 458.

EXTREME HAZARD. To constitute extreme hazard, the efusion of a vessel must be such that there is imminent danger of her being lost, notwithstanding all the means that can be applied to get her off. King v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 421.

EXTREMIS. When a person is sick beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

Extremis probatis, pressumuntur media. Extremes being proved, intermediate things are presumed. Tray. Lat. Max. 207.

EXTRINSIC. Foreign; from outside sources; dehors. As to extrinsic evidence, see Evidence.

EXUERE PATRIAM. To throw off or renounce one's country or native allegiance; to expatriate one's self. Philim. Dom. 18.

EXULARE. In old English law. To exile or banish. Nullus liber homo, exuletur, nisi, etc., no freeman shall be exiled, unless, etc. Magna Charta, c. 29; 2 Inst. 47.

EXUPERARE. To overcome; to apprehend or take. Leg. Edm. c. 2.

EY. A watery place; water. Co. Litt. 6.

EYDÈ. Aid; assistance; relief. A subsidy.

EYOTT. A small island arising in a river. Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § b; Bract. l. 2, c. 2.

EYRE. A journey; a court of itinerant justices. Justices in eyre were judges commissioned in Anglo-Norman times in England to travel systematically through the kingdom, once in seven years, holding courts in specified places for the trial of certain descriptions of causes.

EYERER. L Fr. To travel or journey; to go about or itinerate. Brit. c. 2. See Eyre.

EZARDAR. In Hindu law. A farmer or renter of land in the districts of Hindoostan, FABRIC LANDS. In English law. Lands given towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairing of cathedral and other churches. Cowell; Blount. Called by the Saxons timber-lands. Spelman.

It was the custom, says Cowell, for almost every one to give by will more or less to the fabric of the cathedral or parish church where he lived. These lands so given were called fabric lands, because given ad fabricam ecclesiae reparandum (for repairing the fabric of the church).

FABRICA. In old English law. The making or coining of money.

FABRICARE. Lat. To make. Used in old English law of a lawful coining, and also of an unlawful making or counterfeiting of coin. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading; 1 Salk. 341.

FABRICATE. To invent; to devise falsely. Invent is sometimes used in a bad sense, but fabricate never in any other. To fabricate a story implies that it is so contrary to probability as to require the workman to induce belief in it. Crabbe, Syn. The word implies fraud or falsehood; a false or fraudulent concoction, knowing it to be wrong. L. R. 10 Q. B. 102.

To fabricate evidence is to arrange or manufacture circumstances or indicia, after the fact committed, with the purpose of using them as evidence, and of deceitfully making them appear as if accidental or un-designed; to devise falsely or contrive by artifice with the intention to deceive. Such evidence may be wholly forged and artificial, or it may consist in so warping and distorting real facts as to create an erroneous impression in the minds of those who observe them and then presenting such impression as true and genuine.

FABRICATED EVIDENCE. Evidence manufactured or arranged after the fact, and either wholly false or else warped and discolored by artifice and contrivance with a deceitful intent. See supra.

FABRICATED FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact existing only in statement, without any foundation in truth. An actual or genuine fact to which a false appearance has been designedly given; a physical object placed in a false connection with another, or with a person on whom it is designed to cast suspicion.

FABULA. In old European law. A contract or formal agreement; particularly used in the Lombardic and Visigothic laws to denote a marriage contract or a will. Burrill.
FACE. The outward appearance or aspect of a thing.

—Face amount. The "face amount" of an instrument is that shown by the mere language employed, and excludes any accrued interest. Burns v. Corn Exch. Nat. Bank of Omaha, Neb., 33 Wyo. 474, 240 P. 683, 687. See Face of instrument.

—Face of book. Under an act providing that a public or private statute or the proceedings of any legislative body purporting on the face of the book to be printed by authority of the government of the state are evidence without further proof, the "face of the book" and the "title page" need not colude, as "face" is used in contradistinction to "cover." Pennacola, St. A. & G. S. S. Co. v. Brooks, 14 Ala. App. 364, 70 So. 985, 970.

—Face of instrument. That which is shown by the mere language employed, without any explanation, modification, or addition from extrinsic facts or evidence. Adopted in Re Stoneman (Sur.) 146 N. Y. S. 172, 175. Thus, if the express terms of the paper disclose a fatal legal defect, it is said to be "void on its face." Regarded as an evidence of debt, the face of an instrument is the principal sum which it expresses to be due or payable, without any additions in the way of interest or costs. Osgood v. Brinngolf, 32 Iowa, 265. See also, State v. Newby, 169 Wis. 205, 31 N. W. 933, 954.

—Face of judgment. The sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest. Osgood v. Brinngolf, 32 Iowa, 265. See also, Face of instrument.

—Face of policy. A phrase which, as used in a statute forbidding life insurance policies to contain provision for any mode of settlement at maturity of less value than the amount insured on the "face of the policy," does not mean merely the first page, but denotes the entire insurance contract contained in the policy, including a rider attached and referred to on the first page. Julius v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 269 Ill. 343, 132 N. E. 435, 437, 17 A. L. R. 886.

—Regular on its face. Process is "regular on its face" when it proceeds from a court, officer, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature, and is legal in form and contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise any one that it is issued without authority. Pankiewicz v. Jess, 27 Cal. App. 340, 149 P. 997, 998. See also, Allen v. Cooling, 161 Minn. 10, 200 N. W. 849, 851 (promissory note).

FACERE. Lat. To do; to make. Thus, facere defultum, to make default; facere duellum, to make the duel, or make or do battle; facere finem, to make or pay a fine; facere legem, to make one's law; facere sacramentum, to make oath.

FACIAS. That you cause. Occurring in the phrases "suoque facias," (that you cause to know,) "ieri facias," (that you cause to be made,) etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Comm. 444. See Facio ut des; Facio ut facias.

FACIENDO. In doing or paying; in some activity.

FACIES. Lat. The face or countenance; the exterior appearance or view; hence, contemplation or study of a thing on its external or apparent side. Thus, prima facie means at the first inspection, on a preliminary or exterior scrutiny. When we speak of a "prima facie case," we mean one which, on its own showing, on a first examination, or without investigating any alleged defenses, is apparently good and maintainable.

FACILE. In Scotch law. Easily persuaded; easily imposed upon. Bell.

FACILITIES. That which promotes the ease of any action, operation, transaction, or course of conduct. Webster. In a statute giving the Public Service Commission control over the service and facilities of public service companies, "facilities" means something owned by or under the control of a public utility. Borough of Swarthmore v. Public Service Commission, 277 Pa. 472, 121 A. 488, 489. The term denotes inanimate means rather than human agencies. Stoss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Smith, 153 Ala. 607, 64 So. 337, 338.

Also, a name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

FACILITY. In Scotch law. Placquency of disposition. Bell.

Facinus quos inquinat equat. Guilt makes equal those whom it stains.

FACIO UT DES. (Lat. I do that you may give.) A species of contract in the civil law (being one of the innominate contracts) which occurs when a man agrees to perform anything for a price either specifically mentioned or left to the determination of the law to set a value on it; as when a servant hires himself to his master for certain wages or an agreed sum of money. 2 Bl. Comm. 445. Also, the consideration of that species of contract.

FACIO UT FACIAS. (Lati. I do that you may do.) The consideration of that species of contract in the civil law, or the contract itself (being one of the imnominate contracts), which occurs when I agree with a man to do his work for him if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together, or to do any other positive acts on both sides; or it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other. 2 Bl. Comm. 444.

FACSIMILE. An exact copy, preserving all the marks of the original.

FACSIMILE PROBATE. In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in facsimile, as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator. 1 Williams, Esq's (7th Ed.) 331, 386, 389.

FACT. A thing done; an action performed or an incident transpiring; an event or circumstance; an actual occurrence. An actual happening in time or space or an event mental or physical. Fowler-Curtis Co. v. Dean, 203 App. Div. 317, 196 N. Y. S. 750, 754; German-American Ins. Co. v. Huntley, 62 Okl. 39, 161 P. 815, 817. That which has taken place, not what might or might not have taken place. Churchill v. Meade, 92 Or. 626, 182 P. 368, 371.

A fact is either a state of things, that is, an existence, or a motion, that is, an event. 1 Bent. Jud. Ev. 48.

Fact (factum, fait) stands in lawbooks for: 1. An act; 2. For a completed and operative transaction brought about by sealing and executing a certain sort of writing, and so for the instrument itself, a deed (factum); 3. As designating what exists, in contradistinction to what should exist (de facto as contrasted with de jure); 4. As indicating things, events, actions, conditions, as happening, existing, really taking place. Thayer, Evid. 290.

"Fact" was formerly used almost exclusively in the sense of "action" or "deed." This usage survives in phrases such as "accessory before the fact."

In the Law of Evidence

A circumstance, event or occurrence as it actually takes or took place; a physical object or appearance, as it actually exists or existed. An actual and absolute reality, as distinguished from mere supposition or opinion; a truth, as distinguished from fiction or error. Burcill, Circ. Ev. 218. "Facts" and "evidence" are sometimes used interchangeably. Mackey v. First Nat. Bank (Mo. App.) 293 S. W. 60, 71.

"Fact" is very frequently used in opposition or contrast to "law." Thus, questions of fact are for the jury; questions of law for the court. So an attorney at law is an officer of the courts of justice; an attorney in fact is appointed by the written authorization of a principal to manage business affairs usually not professional. Fraud in fact consists in an actual intention to defraud, carried into effect; while fraud imputed by law arises from the man's conduct in its necessary relations and consequences.

The word is much used in phrases which contrast it with law. Law is a principle; fact is an event. Law is conceived; fact is actual. Law is a rule of duty; fact is that which has been according to or in contravention of the rule. The distinction is well illustrated in the rule that the existence of foreign laws is matter of fact. Within the territory of its jurisdiction, law operates as an obligatory rule which judges must recognize and enforce; but, in a tribunal outside that jurisdiction, it loses its obligatory force and its claim to judicial notice. The fact that it exists, if important to the rights of parties, must be alleged and proved the same as the actual existence of any other institution. Abbott.

The terms "fact" and "truth" are often used in common parlance as synonymous, but, as employed in reference to pleading, they are widely different. A fact in pleading is a circumstance, act, event, or incident; a truth is the legal principle which declares or governs the facts and their operative effect. Admitting the facts stated in a complaint, the truth may be that the plaintiff is not entitled, upon the face of his complaint, to what he claims. The modus in which a defendant sets up that truth for his protection is a demurrer. Drake v. Cockcroft, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 37.

In General

Collateral facts. Such as are outside the controversy or are not directly connected with the principal matter or issue in dispute. Summerour v. Felker, 102 Ga. 254, 29 S. E. 448; Garner v. State, 76 Miss. 525, 25 South. 563.

Dispositive facts. See that title.

Evidentiary facts. Those which have a legitimate bearing on the matter or question in issue and which are directly (not inferentially) established by the evidence in the case. Woodfill v. Patton, 76 Ind. 579, 40 Am. Rep. 299. Those furnishing evidence of some other fact. Maeder Steel Products Co. v. Zanello, 109 Or. 562, 220 P. 155, 158; Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 94 Or. 549, 184 P. 487, 489. Facts which can be directly established by testimony or evidence;—distinguished from "ultimate facts." Real Estate Title, Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lederer (D. C.) 229 F. 709, 804.

BL. LAW DISTR. (3D ED.)
—Fact material to risk. See Material fact, infra.

—Finding of fact. In this phrase, the term "fact" denotes the inferences drawn by the trier from ascertained facts. Porter v. Industrial Commission of Wisconsin, 173 Wis. 267, 181 N. W. 317, 318.

—Immaterial facts. Those which are not essential to the right of action or defense.

—Inferential facts. Such as are established not directly by testimony or other evidence, but by inferences or conclusions drawn from the evidence. Railway Co. v. Miller, 141 Ind. 538, 37 N. E. 343.

—Jurisdictional facts. Those matters of fact which must exist before the court can properly take jurisdiction of the particular case, as, that the defendant has been properly served with process, that the amount in controversy exceeds a certain sum, that the parties are citizens of different states, etc. Noble v. Railroad Co., 147 U. S. 165, 13 S. Ct. 271, 37 L. Ed. 123.

—Material fact. (In contracts.) One which constitutes substantially the consideration of the contract, or without which it would not have been made. Lyons v. Stephens, 45 Ga. 143. (In pleading and practice.) One which is essential to the case, defense, application, etc., and without which it could not be supported. Adams v. Way, 32 Conn. 168; Sundheger v. Hoseny, 26 W. Va. 223; Davidson v. Hackett, 49 Wis. 186, 5 N. W. 459; Hansen v. Sandvik, 128 Wash. 202, 222 P. 205, 207. One which tends to establish any of issues raised. Shrewsbury Bros. v. Yellow Cab Co. of Philadelphia, 245 Pa. 488, 129 A. 563, 564. The "material facts" of an issue of fact are such as are necessary to determine the issue. Woolman Const. Co. v. Sampson, 219 Mich. 125, 188 N. W. 420, 422. (In insurance.) A fact which, if communicated to the agent or insurer, would induce him either to decline the insurance altogether, or not accept it unless a higher premium is paid. Faber v. American Automobile Ins. Co., 191 Mo. App. 307, 177 S. W. 675, 681; Berry v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 283 S. W. 884, 886; Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Dosselt (Tex. Civ. App.) 265 S. W. 254, 257; Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Dosselt (Tex. Civ. App.) 265 S. W. 259, 262. One which necessarily has some bearing on the subject-matter. Wittel's Loan & Mercantile Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 273 S. W. 1084, 1096. A fact which increases the risk, or which, if disclosed, would have been a fair reason for demanding a higher premium; any fact the knowledge or ignorance of which would naturally influence the insurer in making or refusing to contract, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate. Boggs v. Insurance Co., 30 Mo. 68; Clark v. Insurance Co., 40 N. H. 338, 77 Am. Dec. 721; Murphy v. Insurance Co., 205 Pa. 444, 55 A. 19; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 72 F. 413, 19 C. C. A. 266, 35 L. R. A. 33.

—Principal fact. In the law of evidence. A fact sought and proposed to be proved by evidence of other facts (termed "evidentiary facts") from which it is to be deduced by inference. A fact which is the principal and ultimate object of an inquiry, and respecting the existence of which a definite belief is required to be formed. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 3; Burrrill, Circ. Ev. 3, 119.

—Ultimate fact. The final or resulting fact reached by processes of legal reasoning from the detached or successive facts in evidence, and which is fundamental and determinative of the whole case. Leving v. Rovegno, 71 Cal. 276, 12 P. 161; Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 2 Utah, 371; Caywood v. Farrell, 175 Ill. 480, 51 N. E. 775; Maeder Steel Products Co. v. Zanello, 109 Or. 562, 220 P. 155, 159. The final resulting effect reached by processes of legal reasoning from the evidentiary facts. Oregon Home Builders v. Montgomery Inv. Co., 81 Or. 349, 184 P. 457, 459. See also, Ultimate facts.

FACTA. In old English law. Deeds. Facta armorum, deeds or feasts of arms; that is, jousts or tournaments. Cowell.

Facts. Facta et casus, facts and cases. Bract. fol. 1b.

Facta sunt potentiora verbis. Deeds [or facts] are more powerful than words.

Facta tenent multa qua fieri prohibentur. 12 Coke, 124. Deeds contain many things which are prohibited to be done.

FACTIO TESTAMENTI. In the civil law. The right, power, or capacity of making a will; called "factio activa." Inst. 2, 10, 6.

The right or capacity of taking by will; called "factio passiva." Inst. 2, 10, 6; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACTO. In fact; by an act; by the act or fact. Ipsa facio, by the act itself; by the mere effect of a fact, without anything superadded, or any proceeding upon it to give it effect. 3 Kent, Comm. 53, 55.

FACTOR. A commercial agent, employed by a principal to sell merchandise consigned to him for that purpose, for and in behalf of the principal, but usually in his own name, being intrusted with the possession and control of the goods, and being remunerated by a commission, commonly called "factorage." Howland v. Woodruff, 60 N. Y. 50; In re Rabenau (D. C.) 118 F. 474; Lawrence v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 527; Graham v. Duckwall, 6 Bush (Ky.) 17; Pal. Ag. 13; Soto. Ag. § 33; Com. Dig. Merchant, B; Malynes, Lex Merc. 81; Beuves, Lex Merc. 44; 3 Chit.
Com. L. 193; 2 Kent 622; 1 Bell, Comm. 385, § 408; 2 B. & Ald. 143.

An agent who, in the pursuit of an independent calling, is employed by another to sell property for him, and is vested by the latter with the possession or control of the property, or authorized to receive payment therefrom from the purchaser. Civ. Code Cal. § 3092; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6045; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 1288; Leland v. Oliver, 82 Cal. App. 474, 255 P. 775, 777.

In the old law, one to whom goods are consigned to sell by a merchant at a distance from the place of sale. Eames v. H. B. Cadlin Co. (C. C. A.) 298 P. 631, 636.

Classification

Factors are called "domestic" or "foreign" according as they reside and do business in the same state or country with the principal, or in a different state or country. A domestic factor is sometimes called a "home" factor. Ruffner v. Hewitt, 7 W. Va. 555; 1 Term 112; 4 McCall & S. 576.

A "foreign factor," as understood in marine matters, was a person who had charge of the cargo to handle it, dispose of it, convert it into money, or exchange it for other property, but who had nothing to do with the management of the boat when he sailed thereon, at which time he was called a "supercargo," Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Worthington & Sill, 133 App. Div. 250, 154 N. Y. S. 81, 83; Beawes, Lex Merc. 44; Limer. Ag. 69; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 16, § 3, art. 2.

Synonyms

A factor differs from a "broker" in that he is intrusted with the possession, management, and control of the goods, (which gives him a special property in them,) while a broker acts as a mere intermediary without control or possession of the property; and further, a factor is authorized to buy and sell in his own name, as well as in that of the principal, which a broker is not. Commercial Inv. Trust v. Stewart, 235 Mich. 502, 209 N. W. 660, 661; Sutton & Cummins v. Kiel Cheese & Butter Co., 135 Ky. 465, 139 S. W. 950, 953; Lawrence Gas Co. v. Hawkeye Oil Co., 182 Iowa, 179, 165 N. W. 445, 446, 8 S. L. R. 192; Edwards v. Hoeflinghoff (C. C.) 38 F. 641; DeLafield v. Smith, 101 Wis. 604, 78 N. W. 170, 70 Am. St. Rep. 938; Graham v. Duck-wall, 8 Bush (Ky.) 12; Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. 339, 23 L. Ed. 143. Factors are also frequently called "commission merchants;" and it is said that there is no difference in the use of these terms, the latter being perhaps more commonly used in America. Thompson v. Wooster. 7 Ohio. 410; Duguid v. Edwards, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 288; Lyon v. Alford, 18 Conn. 80. Where an owner of goods to be shipped by sea consigns them to the care of an agent, who sails on the same vessel, has charge of the cargo on board, sells it abroad, and buys a return cargo out of the proceeds, such agent is strictly and properly a "factor," though in maritime law and usage he is commonly called a "supercargo." Beawes, Lex Merc. 44, 47; Limer. Ag. 69, 70.

A factor or commission merchant is one who has the actual or technical possession of goods or wares of another for sale. A "merchandise broker" is one who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control. He is simply an agent with very limited powers; J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Cotton Factory, 124 Ky. 435, 99 S. W. 305, 102 S. W. 809, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

Although a "factor" is in the last analysis an agent, the agency is a limited one. Falls Rubber Co. v. La Fon (Tex. Civ. App.) 296 S. W. 577, 579.

In General

-Factors' acts. The name given to several English statutes (6 Geo. IV. c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39) by which a factor is enabled to make a valid pledge of the goods, or of any part thereof, to one who believes him to be the bona fide owner of the goods. Similar legislation is not uncommon in the United States.

In some of the states, the person who is elsewhere called "garnishee" or "trustee." See Factorizing Process.

In Scotch law, a person appointed to transact business or manage affairs for another, but more particularly an estate-agent or one intrusted with the management of a landed estate, who finds tenants, makes leases, collects the rents, etc.

-Judicial factor. In Scotch law. A factor appointed by the courts in certain cases where it becomes necessary to intrust the management of property to another than the owner, as, where the latter is insane or incapable or the infant heir of a decedent.

FACTORAGE. The wages, allowance, or commission paid to a factor for his services. Winne v. Hammond, 37 Ill. 105; State v. Thompson, 23 S. W. 346, 120 Mo. 12.

FACTORIZING PROCESS. In American law. A process by which the effects of a debtor are attached in the hands of a third person. A term peculiar to the practice in Vermont and Connecticut. Otherwise termed "trustee process," "garnishment," and proc-
 FACTUM

A species of contract or employment which falls under the general designation of "agency," but which partakes both of the nature of a mandate and of a bailment of the kind called "locatio ad operandum." 1 Bell, Comm. 259.

FACTORY ACTS. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the sanitary condition, and preserving the health and morals, of the employés, and promoting the education of young persons employed at such labor.

FACTORY PRICES. The prices at which goods may be bought at the factories, as distinguished from the prices of goods bought in the market after they have passed into the hands of third persons or shopkeepers.

FACTUM. Lat.

In Old English Law

A deed; a person's act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. Anything stated or made certain; a deed of conveyance; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. Spelman: 2 Bla. Comm. 295.

A fact; a circumstance; particularly a fact in evidence. Bract. fol. 1b. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved). 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

In Testamentary Law

The execution or due execution of a will. The factum of an instrument means not barely the signing of it, and the formal publication or delivery, but proof that the party well knew and understood the contents thereof, and did give, will, dispose, and do, in all things, as in the said will is contained. Weatherhead v. Baskerville, 11 How. 354, 13 L. Ed. 717.

In the Civil Law

Fact; a fact; a matter of fact, as distinguished from a matter of law. Dig. 11, 2, 1, 3.

In French Law

A memoir which contains conclusively set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party. Vicat.
FACTUM

In Old European Law
A portion or allotment of land; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc. Spelman.

Factum a judice quod ad ejus officium non spectat non ratum est. An action of a judge which relates not to his office is of no force. Dig. 50, 17, 170; 10 Coke, 76; Broom, Max. 33, n.

Factum cuique suum non adversario, nescere debet. Dig. 50, 17, 155. A party’s own act should prejudice himself, not his adversary.

Factum infectum fieri nequit. A thing done cannot be undone. 1 Kames, Eq. 96, 259.

FACTUM JURIDICUM. A juridical fact. Denotes one of the factors or elements constituting an obligation.

Factum negantis nulla probatio sit. Cod. 4, 19, 23. There is no proof incumbent upon him who denies a fact.

“Factum” non dicitur quod non perseverat. That is not called a “deed” which does not continue operative. That is not said to be done which does not last. 5 Coke, 96; Shep. Trench., Preston ed. 391.

FACTUM PROBANDUM. Lat. In the law of evidence. The fact to be proved; a fact which is in issue, and to which evidence is to be directed. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

FACTUM PROBANS. A probative or evidentiary fact; a subsidiary or connected fact tending to prove the principal fact in issue; a piece of circumstantial evidence.

Factum unius alteri necesse non debet. Co. Litt. 152. The deed of one should not hurt another.

Facultas probationum non est angustanda. The power of proofs [right of offering or giving testimony] is not to be narrowed. 4 Inst. 279.

FACULTIES. In the law of divorce. The capability of the husband to render a support to the wife in the form of alimony, whether temporary or permanent, including not only his tangible property, but also his income and his ability to earn money. 2 Bish. Mar. & Dtv. § 446; Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 763; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168; Fowler v. Fowler, 61 Okl. 280, 161 P. 227, 230, 1 L. R. A. 1917 C, 89. SeeAllocation of Faculties.

FACULTIES, COURT OF. In English ecclesiastical law. A jurisdiction or tribunal belonging to the archbishop. It does not hold pleas in any suits, but creates rights to pews, monuments, and particular places, and modes of burial. It has also various powers under 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, in granting licenses of different descriptions, as a license to marry, a faculty to erect an organ in a parish church, to level a church-yard, to remove bodies previously buried. 4 Inst. 337.

FACULTIES, MASTER OF THE. An official in the archdiocese of Canterbury who granted dispensations. 4 Inst. 337. See Arches Court.

FACULTY.

In Ecclesiastical Law
A license or authority; a privilege granted by the ordinary to a man by favor and indulgence to do that which by law he may not do; e.g., to marry without banns, to erect a monument in a church, etc. Termes de la Ley.

Faculties are of two kinds: first, when the grant is to a man and his heirs in gross; second, when it is to a person and his heirs as appurtenant to a house which he holds in the parish; 1 Term 492, 492; 12 Co. 106.

In Scotch Law
A power founded on consent, as distinguished from a power founded on property. 2 Kames, Eq. 266.

FACULTY OF A COLLEGE. The corps of professors, instructors, tutors, and lecturers. To be distinguished from the board of trustees, who constitute the corporation.

FACULTY OF ADVOCATES. The college or society of advocates in Scotland.

FADERFIUM. In old English law. A marriage gift coming from the father or brother of the bride. Spelman.

FÆDER-FEOH. In old English law. The portion brought by a wife to her husband, and which reverted to a widow, in case the heir of her deceased husband refused his consent to her second marriage; i.e., it reverted to her family in case she returned to them. Wharton.

FÆSTING-MEN. Approved men who were strong-armed; habentes homines or rich men, men of substance; pledges or bondsmen, who, by Saxon custom, were bound to answer for each other’s good behavior. Cowell; Du Cange.

FAGGOT. A badge worn in popish times by persons who had recanted and abjured what was then adjudged to be heresy, as an emblem of what they had merited. Cowell.

FAGGOT VOTE. A term applied to votes manufactured by nominally transferring land to persons otherwise disqualified from voting for members of parliament. A faggot vote occurs where a man is formally possessed of a right to vote for members of parliament, without possessing the substance which the vote should represent; as if he is enabled to buy a property, and at the same moment mortgage it to its full value for the mere sake of the vote. See 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 25, § 7. Wharton.

FAIDA. In Saxon law. Maile; open and deadly hostility; deadly feud. The word designed the enmity between the family of a murdered man and that of his murderer, which was recognized, among the Teutonic peoples, as justification for vengeance taken by any one of the former upon any one of the latter. Du Cange; Spelman.

The difference between "fail" and "refuse" is that the latter involves an act of the will, while the former may be an act of inevitable necessity. Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat. 344, 6 L. Ed. 161. See Stailings v. Thomas, 55 Ark. 326, 18 S. W. 184; Telegraph Co. v. Irvin, 57 Ind. App. 52, 106 N. E. 327; Persons v. Hight, 4 Ga. 457.

The words "fail to comply," however, have in general the same operation in law as the words "refuse to comply." Ginnoco v. Hydraulic Press Brick Co. (D. C.) 266 F. 564, 569. And an allegation in an indictment that defendant "failed and refused" to comply with a statute should not be expanded to carry the implication that there was a deliberate, intentional, and inexcusable refusal, especially where the indictment is not good without such expansion. Mackey v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 200 F. 15, 21.

Involuntarily to fail short of success or the attainment of one’s purpose. See Colb v. Morrison, 197 Ala. 559, 73 So. 42; Pennsylvania Co. v. Good, 56 Ind. App. 562, 103 N. E. 672, 673.

To lapse, as a legacy which has never vested or taken effect. Sherman v. Richmond Hose Co., No. 2, 230 N. Y. 462, 130 N. E. 613, 615.

To become insolvent and unable to meet one’s obligations as they mature. Davis v. Campbell, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 321; Mayer v. Hermann, 16 Fed. Cas. 12-424.

FAILING CIRCUMSTANCES. Insolvency, that is, the lack of sufficient assets to pay one’s debts. Brown v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 353, 162 S. W. 339, 346. A person (or a corporation or institution) is said to be in failing circumstances when he is about to fail, that is, when he is actually insolvent and is acting in contemplation of giving up his business because he is unable to carry it on. Appeal of Millard, 62 Conn. 184, 25 A. 658; Utley v. Smith, 24 Conn. 310, 63 Am. Dec. 105; Dodge v. Mastin (C. C.) 17 F. 663.

FAILING OF RECORD. When an action is brought against a person who alleges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record, but the plaintiff saith aut tien record, viz., denies there is any such record, upon which the defendant has a day given him by the court to bring it in, if he fail to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff is entitled to sign judgment. Termes de la Ley.

FAILLITE. In French law. Bankruptcy; failure; the situation of a debtor who finds himself unable to fulfill his engagements. Code de Com. arts. 442, 580; Civil Code Lu. art. 3556, No. 11; 3 Massé, Droit Comm. 171; Guyot, Répert.

FAILURE. In a general sense, deficiency, want, or lack; ineffectualness; inefficiency as measured by some legal standard; an unsuccessful attempt. White v. Pettjohn, 23 N. C. 55; State v. Butler, 51 Minn. 105, 53 N. W. 483; Andrews v. Keep, 28 Ala. 317; In re Moore, 70 Ind. App. 470, 138 N. E. 783.

In legal parlance, the neglect of any duty may be a "failure." See Christlif v. City of Baltimore, 12 Md. 344, 126 A. 927, 928; Washington v. State, 22 Okl. Cr. 69, 259 P. 967, 968. Compare, however, In re Green, 192 Cal. 714, 211 P. 938, 945. But to constitute a statutory offense, such as the failure to work on public roads, the term may imply willfulness and the absence of sufficient excuse. Jones v. State, 7 Ala. App. 180, 62 So. 308, 307.

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. As applied to notes, contracts, conveyances, etc., this term does not mean a want of consideration, but implies that a consideration, originally existing and good, has since become worthless or has ceased to exist or been extinguished, partially or entirely. Shirk v. Nebble, 156 Ind. 66, 59 N. E. 281, 83 Am. St. Rep. 150; Crouch v. Davis, 23 Grat. (Va.) 75; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 920.

FAILURE OF EVIDENCE. Judicially speaking, a total "failure of evidence" means not only the utter absence of all evidence, but it also means a failure to offer proof, either positive or inferential, to establish one or more of the many facts, the establishment of all of which is indispensable to the finding of the issue for the plaintiff. Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 28.

FAILURE OF ISSUE. The failure at a fixed time, or the total extinction, of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise. A definite failure of issue is when a precise time is fixed by the will for the failure of issue, as in the case where there is a devise to one, but if he dies without issue or lawful issue living at the time of his death, etc. An indefinite failure of issue is the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no

FAILURE OF JUSTICE. The defeat of a particular right, or the failure of reparation for a particular wrong, from the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy for the enforcement of the one or the redress of the other. The term is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense.

FAILURE OF PROOF. In this phrase, the word “failure” is of broader significance than either “want” or “lack.” State v. Davis, 154 La. 295, 97 So. 449, 456. As used in a statute authorizing dismissal of suit without prejudice on account of failure of proof, the term does not mean failure to convince the court by preponderance of evidence, but failure to make prima facie case. Crim v. Thompson, 112 Or. 396, 229 P. 916, 920; Wolke v. Schmidt, 112 Or. 60, 229 P. 921, 922. Under a statute pertaining to variance, a “failure of proof” results when the evidence offered so far departs from the cause of action pleaded that it may be said fairly that the allegations of the pleading in their general scope and meaning are unproved. E. B. Ryan Co. v. Russell, 52 Mont. 396, 161 P. 307, 308; Chealey v. Purdy, 54 Mont. 459, 171 P. 926, 927; Nelson v. Dowgiallo, 73 Or. 342, 143 P. 924, 925.

FAILURE OF RECORD. Failure of the defendant to produce a record which he has alleged and relied on in his plea.

See Failing of Record.

FAILURE OF TITLE. The inability or failure of a vendor to make good title to the whole or a part of the property which he has contracted to sell. See Alger-Sullivan Lumber Co. v. Union Trust Co., 207 Ala. 138, 92 So. 254, 257.

FAILURE OF TRUST. The lapsing or unfitness of a proposed trust, by reason of the defect or insufficiency of the deed or instrument creating it, or on account of illegality, indefiniteness, or other legal impediment.

FAINT (or FEIGNED) ACTION. In old English practice. An action was so called where the party bringing it had no title to recover, although the words of the writ were true; a false action was properly where the words of the writ were false. Litt. § 689; Co. Litt. 351.

FAINT PLEADER. A fraudulent, false, or colloquial manner of pleading to the deception of a third person.

FAIR, adj. In English law. A greater species of market; a privileged market. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict. It is an incorporeal hereditament, granted by royal patent, or established by prescription presupposing a grant from the crown.

A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bla. Comm. 274.

Though etymologically signifying a market for buying and selling exhibited articles, it includes a place for the exhibition of agricultural and mechanical products. State v. Long, 45 Ohio St. 696, 28 N. E. 1038.

A fair is usually attended by a greater concourse of people than a market, for the amusement of whom various exhibitions are gotten up. McCulloch, Comm. Dict.; Wharton, Dict.

A fair is a franchise which is obtained by a grant from the crown. 2 Inst. 220; 3 Mod. 128; 1 Ed. Raym. 341; 2 Saund. 172; 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Tomlin; Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the earlier English law, the franchise to hold a fair conferred certain important privileges; and fairs, as legally recognized institutions, possessed distinctive legal characteristics. Most of these privileges and characteristics, however, are now obsolete. In America, fairs, in the ancient technical sense, are unknown, and, in the modern and popular sense, they are entirely voluntary and non-legal, and transactions arising in or in connection with them are subject to the ordinary rules governing sales, etc.

FAIR, adj. Just; equitable; even-handed; equal, as between conflicting interests.

FAIR ABRIDGMENT. In copyright law. An abridgment consisting not merely in the arrangement of excerpts, but one involving real and substantial condensation of the materials by the exercise of intellectual labor and judgment. Folesom v. Marsh, 9 Fed. Cas. 343.

FAIR AND FULL EQUIVALENT FOR LOSS. The same as a full and perfect equivalent. Ponticello Mineral Springs Co. v. City of Richmond, 147 Va. 355, 137 S. E. 458, 460.

FAIR AND PROPER LEGAL ASSESSMENT. Such as places the value of property on a fair, equal, and uniform basis with other property of like character and value throughout the county and state. Edward Hines Yellow Pine Trustees v. Knox, 144 Miss. 560, 108 So. 907, 911.

FAIR AND REASONABLE CONTRACT. One which, when made with an infant, must not be one wasting the infant's estate, but must be a provident one, advantageous to the minor. Berglund v. American Multigraph Sales Co., 135 Minn. 67, 160 N. W. 101, 183.

FAIR AND REASONABLE VALUE. This phrase in a statute imposing a tax on property means the best price obtainable at a voluntary sale, to be paid at once in money, and excluding any additional amount that might be had were credit or terms allowed. State v. Woodward, 208 Ala. 31, 98 So. 826.

FAIR CASH VALUE. Ordinarily the "fair cash value," of property, as the basis for an assessment for taxation, is the fair market value of the property at the time of the assessment, expressed in the price which some one will pay for it in open market. Donovan v. City of Haverhill, 217 Mass. 69, 141 N. E. 564, 565, 50 A. L. R. 385. It is ascertained by a consideration of all elements making it attractive for valuable use to one under no compulsion to purchase, but yet willing to buy for a fair price, attributing to each element of value the amount it adds to the price likely to be offered by such a buyer. Massachusetts General Hospital v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 223 Mass. 190, 124 N. E. 21, 26. The phrase is practically synonymous with "reasonable value," and "actual cash value," meaning the fair or reasonable cash price for which the property can be sold on the market. Montesano Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Portland Iron Works, 94 Or. 677, 186 P. 428, 432; State v. Woodward, 208 Ala. 31, 95 So. 826, 827.

FAIR COMMENT. A term used in the law of libel, applying to statements made by a writer in an honest belief of their truth, relating to official acts, even though the statements are not true in fact. People v. Hubbard, 96 Misc. 617, 162 N. Y. S. 80, 92. In a privileged communication the words used, if defamatory and libellous, are excused, while in "fair comment" the words are not a defamation and not libellous. Van Lonkhuyzen v. Daily News Co., 203 Mich. 576, 170 N. W. 93, 99.

FAIR CONSIDERATION. In bankruptcy law. One which is honest or free from suspicion, or one actually valuable, but not necessarily adequate or a full equivalent. Myers v. Fultz, 124 Iowa, 457, 100 N. W. 351.

FAIR DAMAGES are something more than nominal damages; and are even more than such damages as would compensate for injury suffered. Gurfein v. Howell, 142 Va. 197, 128 S. E. 644, 646.

FAIR HEARING. Fair hearing of an alien's right to enter the United States means a hearing before the Immigration officers in accordance with the fundamental principles that inhere in due process of law, and implies that the alien not only have a fair opportunity to present evidence in his favor, but shall be apprised of the evidence against him, so that at the conclusion of the hearing he may be in a position to know all of the evidence on which the matter is to be decided; it being not enough that the Immigration officials meant to be fair. Ex parte Petkos (D. C.) 213 F. 275, 277. See, also, Ex parte Kelsuuki Sata (D. C.) 215 F. 173, 176.

FAIR KNOWLEDGE OR SKILL. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 382.

FAIR ON ITS FACE. A process fair on its face does not mean that it must appear to be perfectly regular or in all respects in accord with proper practice and after the most approved form, but that it shall apparently be process lawfully issued and such as the officer may lawfully serve, and a process is fair on its face which proceeds from a court, magistrate, or body having authority of law to issue process of that nature and which is legal in form and on its face contains nothing to notify or fairly apprise the officer that it is issued without authority. Brown v. Hadwin, 182 Mich. 491, 148 N. W. 693, L. R. A. 1915B, 565.

FAIR-PLAY MEN. A local irregular tribunal which existed in Pennsylvania about the year 1760, as to which see Serg. Land Laws Pa. 77; 2 Smith, Laws Pa. 195.

FAIR PLEADER. See Beau-pleader.

FAIR PREPONDERANCE. In the law of evidence. Such a superiority of the evidence on one side that the fact of its outweighing the evidence on the other side can be perceived if the whole evidence is fairly considered. Bryan v. Railroad Co., 63 Iowa, 464, 19 N. W. 295; State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 225, 13 N. W. 140; City Bank's Appeal, 54 Conn. 274, 7 A. 548. A "clear" preponderance. M. E. Smith & Co. v. Kinble, 38 S. D. 511, 162 N. W. 162, 163. The probability of truth; in re Oliver's Will, 126 Misc. 511, 214 N. Y. S. 154, 166; not necessarily the largest number of witnesses; Schargel v. United Electric Light & Power Co., 127 Misc. 24, 215 N. Y. S. 217, 218; Verdi v. Donahue, 31 Conn. 448, 50 A. 1041, 1043.

FAIR SALE. In foreclosure and other judicial proceedings, this means a sale conducted with fairness and impartiality as respects the rights and interests of the parties affected. Lalor v. McCarthy, 21 Minn. 419. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required.
FAIR TRIAL. One conducted according to due course of law; a trial before a competent and impartial jury. Railroad Co. v. Cook, 37 Neb. 455, 55 N. W. 943; Railroad Co. v. Gardner, 19 Minn. 136 (Gill, 99), 18 Am. Rep. 334. Defendant has a "fair and impartial trial" where opportunity is given to object and except to what is done to his prejudice upon the trial. State v. Burns, 181 Iowa, 1098, 165 N. W. 346, 347. A fair and impartial trial by a jury of one's peers contemplates counsel to look after one's defense, compulsory attendance of witnesses, if need be, and a reasonable time in the light of all prevailing circumstances to investigate, properly prepare, and present the defense. Christie v. State, 94 Fla. 469, 114 So. 450, 451. A full and fair trial, required in order that a foreign judgment against a citizen be accorded credit in the courts of the United States, means not a summary proceeding, though sanctioned by the law of the forum, but an opportunity to be heard on the proof, where it is apparent that the cause involves questions of fact, and to have it considered by an unprejudiced court. Banco Minero v. Ross, 172 S. W. 711, 714, 106 Tex. 522.

FAIR VALUATION. The term "fair valuation" as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 644 (11 USCA § 1 et seq.), means the present market value of property and the value that the debtor might realize thereon if permitted to continue in business. Arnold v. Knapp, 75 W. Va. 504, 84 S. E. 898, 899. The fair market value, or the value that can be made promptly effective by the owner of the property for payment of debts; In re Sedalia Farmers' Co-op. Packing & Produce Co. (D. C.) 268 F. 898, 900; or the fair cash value of the property as between one who wants to sell and one who wants to buy, Grandison v. National Bank of Commerce of Rochester (C. C. A.) 251 F. 900, 904. Where no definite market value can be established and expert testimony must be relied on, fair valuation is the amount which the property ought to give to a going concern as a fair return, if sold to some one who is willing to purchase under ordinary selling conditions. In re Kobre (D. C.) 224 F. 106, 117. The term is not synonymous with "salable value." In re Crystal Ice & Fuel Co. (D. C.) 283 F. 1007, 1009.

FAIR VALUE. The "fair value" of a public utility's physical property, for rate purposes, is the cost of reproduction, less depreciation, at time in question, whether more or less than original cost. Citizens' Gas Co. of Hannibal v. Public Service Commission of Missouri (D. C.) 5 F.2d 632, 633. In determining depreciation, "fair value" implies consideration of all factors material in negotiating sale and purchase of property, such as wear, decay, devaluation, obsolescence, inadequacy, and redundancy. Idaho Power Co. v. Thompson (D. C.) 19 F.2d 547, 566. A "fair value" for rate making is not the value for exchange, but such a value found after considering all relevant facts as will give the public utility a reasonable return and the public a reasonable rate. It is one which will enable the public utility to realize the expense of operating and keeping up its road and meeting its financial obligations for investments with a reasonable excess for dividends and ordinary contingencies. City of Rochester v. New York State Rys., 127 Misc. 766, 217 N. Y. S. 452, 458. Within a Revenue Act levying an excise tax on corporations measured by the fair value of their capital stock, "fair value" is the exact equivalent of "actual value." Central Union Trust Co. of New York v. Edwards (C. C. A.) 287 F. 324, 327. In a contract by a city to purchase a waterworks plant at "fair and equitable value," the amount is to be determined not by capitalization of the earnings nor limited to the cost of reproducing the plant, but allowance should be made for the additional value created by connection with and supply of buildings, although the company did not own the connections. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 10 C. C. A. 633, 62 F. 583.

"Fairly" is not synonymous with "truly," and "truly" should not be substituted for it in a commissioner's oath to take testimony fairly. Language may be truly, yet unfairly, reported; that is, an answer may be truly written down, yet in a manner conveying a different meaning from that intended and conveyed. And language may be fairly reported, yet not in accordance with strict truth. Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234.

FAIRWAY. The middle and deepest or most navigable channel. Water on which vessels of commerce habitually move; Horst v. Columbia Contract Co., 39 Or. 344, 174 F. 101, 103; the word "fairway," from which it is apparently derived, having reference more particularly to navigable channels as boundaries; Johnsson v. American Tugboat Co., 82 Wash. 212, 147 P. 1147. See Thalweg.

FAIT ENROLLE. A deed enrolled, as a bargain and sale of freeholds. 1 Keb. 568.

FAIT JURIDIQUE. In French law. A juridical fact. One of the factors or elements constitutive of an obligation.

FAITH. Confidence; credit; reliance. Thus, an act may be said to be done "on the faith" of certain representations.
Belief; credence; trust. Thus, the constitution provides that “full faith and credit” shall be given to the judgments of each state in the courts of the others.

Purpose; intent; sincerity; state of knowledge or design. This is the meaning of the word in the phrases “good faith” and “bad faith.”

In Scotch Law
A solemn pledge; an oath. “To make faith” is to swear, with the right hand uplifted, that one will declare the truth. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 4, p. 235.

FAITHFULLY. Truthfully, sincerely, accurately. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co., of Texas, v. Whittington & Sweeney (Tex. Civ. App.) 133 S. W. 689, 690. As used in bonds of public and private officers, this term imports not only honesty, but also a punctilious discharge of all the duties of the office, requiring competence, diligence, and attention, without any malfeasance or nonfeasance, aside from mere mistakes. State v. Chadwick, 10 Or. 408; Hoboken v. Evans, 31 N. J. Law, 243; Harris v. Hanson, 11 Me. 245; American Bank v. Adams, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 306; Union Bank v. Cloossey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 273. Diligently, and without unnecessary delay—not synonymous with “fairly” or “impartially.” Den v. Thompson, 16 N. J. Law, 72, 73.

FAITOURS. Idle persons; idle liens; vagabonds. Terms de la Ley; Cowell; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FAKE. To make or construct. A “faked alibi” is a made, manufactured, or false alibi. 1 S. v. Heitler (D. C.) 274 F. 401, 409.

FAKIR. A term applied among the Mohammedans to a kind of religious ascetic or beggar, whose claim is that he “is in need of mercy, and poor In the sight of God, rather than in need of worldly assistance.” Hughes, Dict. of Islam. Sometimes spelled Faquee or Fakieer. It is commonly used in English to designate a person engaged in some useless or dishonest business. Fake is also so used and also to designate the quality of such business.

A street peddler who disposes of worthless wares, or of any goods above their value, by means of any false representation, trick, device, lottery, or game of chance. Mills’ Ann. St. Colo. § 140 (Comp. Laws 1821, § 6881).

FALANG. In old English law. A jacket or close coat. Blount.

FALCARE. In old English law. To mow. Falcare prata, to mow or cut grass in meadows laid in for hay. A customary service to the lord by his inferior tenants. Kennett, Gloss.

Falcata, grass fresh mown, and laid in swaths. That which was mowed. Kennett, Gloss; Cowell; Jacobs.

Falcatio, a mowing. Bract. fols. 35b, 290.

FALCATOR. A mower; a servile tenant who performed the labor of mowing.

Falcatura, a day’s mowing. Falcatura una. Once mowing the grass. Jus falcandi, the right of cutting wood. Bract. fol. 231.

FALCIDIA. In Spanish law. The Falcidian portion; the portion of an inheritance which could not be legally bequeathed away from the heir, viz., one-fourth.

FALCIDIAN LAW. In Roman law. A law on the subject of testamentary disposition, enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, in the year of Rome 714, on the proposition of the tribune Falcidius. By this law, the testator’s right to burden his estate with legacies was subjected to an important restriction. It prescribed that no one could bequeath more than three-fourths of his property in legacies, and that the heir should have at least one-fourth of the estate, and that, should the testator violate this prescription, the heir may have the right to make a proportional deduction from each legatee, so far as necessary. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 771; Inst. 2, 22.

A similar principle exists in Louisiana. See Legitime. In some of the states the statutes authorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

FALCIDIAN PORTION. That portion of a testator’s estate which, by the Faldelian law, was required to be left to the heir, amounting to at least one-fourth.

FALD, or FALDA. A sheep-fold. Cowell.

FALDA. Span. In Spanish law. The slope or skirt of a hill. Fossat v. United States, 2 Wall. 673, 17 L. Ed. 793.

FALDE/ CURSUS. In old English law. A fold-course; the course (going or taking about) of a fold. Spelman.

A sheep walk, or feed for sheep. 2 Vent. 139.

FALDAGE. The privilege which ancienly several lords reserved to themselves of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, the better to manure them, and this not only with their own but their tenants’ sheep. Called, variously, “septa faldare,” “fold-course,” “free-fold,” “faldapli.” Cowell; Spelman; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALDATA. In old English law. A flock or fold of sheep. Cowell.

FALDFEY. Sax. A fee or rent paid by a tenant to his lord for leave to fold his sheep on his own ground. Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALDISDORY. In ecclesiastical law. The bishop’s seat or throne within the chancel.
FALDSOCA. Sax. The liberty or privilege of foldage.

FALDSSTOOL. A place at the south side of the altar at which the sovereign kneels at his coronation. Wharton. A folding seat similar to a camp stool, made either of wood or metal, sometimes covered with silk or other material. It was used by a bishop when officiating in other than his own cathedral church. Encyc. Dict.

FALDWORTH. In Saxon law. A person reckoned old enough to become a member of the decennary, and so subject to the law of frank-pledge. Spelman; Du Fresne.

FALERAE. In old English law. The tackle and furniture of a cart or wain. Blount.

Falesia. In old English law. A hill or down by the sea-side. Co. Litt. 5b; Domesday.

Falk-land. See Folk-Land.

Fall, n. One of the four seasons of the year, embracing the three months commencing with the 1st of September and terminating with the last day of November. Roseau v. Lansing, 113 Or. 638, 232 P. 448; Horn v. State, 19 Ala. App. 572, 99 So. 55; Arrington v. Blackwell, 207 Ala. 314, 92 So. 902, 903. But a finding that certain persons occupied a house until the fall of each year has been held ambiguous, since “fall” covers a period of time of upward of three months. Clegg v. Bishop, 105 Conn. 564, 136 A. 102, 104.

Fall, v. In Scotch law. To lose or lose. To fall from a right is to lose or forfeit it. 1 Kames, Eq. 228.

Fall of Land. In English law. A quantity of land six ells square superficial measure.

Falloon. In Spanish law. The final decree or judgment given in a controversy at law.

Fallopian tube. An essential part of the female reproductive system, consisting of a narrow conduit, some four inches in length, that extends on each side of a woman’s body from the base of the womb to the ovary upon that side. Smith v. Board of Examiners of Feeble-Minded, 85 N. J. Law, 46, 88 A. 936, 965.

Fallow-land. Land plowed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time after successive crops; land left unfilled for a year or more.

FALLUM. In old English law. An unexplained term for some particular kind of land. Cowell; Jacob, L. Dict.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet, cum de corpore (persona) constat. False description does not injure or vitiate, provided the thing or person intended has once been sufficiently described. Mere false description does not make an instrument inoperative. Broom, Max. 629; 6 Term. 676; 11 Mees. & W. 189; Cleaveland v. Smith, 2 Story, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 2,874. See 1 Greenleaf, Evidence, § 301; 2 Pars. Contr. 62; n.; 4 C. B. 328; 14 C. B. 122; Sargent v. Adams, 3 Gray (Mass.) 78, 63 Am. Dec. 718; American Bible Soc. v. Pratt, 9 Allen (Mass.) 113; Milliken v. Starling’s Lessee, 16 Ohio, 64.

Falsa demonstratione legatum non perimi. A bequest is not rendered void by an erroneous description. Inst. 2, 20, 30; Broom, Max. 645; Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum v. Emmons, 3 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 144, 149.

Falsa grammatica non vitiat concessionem. False or bad grammar does not vitiate a grant. Shep. Touch. 55; 9 Coke, 48a. Neither false Latin nor false English will make a deed void when the intent of the parties doth plainly appear. Shep. Touch. 87.

Falsa Moneta. In the civil law. False or counterfeit money. Cod. 9, 24.

Falsa orthographia non vitiat chartam, concessions. False spelling does not vitiate a deed. Shep. Touch. 55, 87; 9 Coke, 48a; Wing. Max. 10; Bart. Max. 164.

Falsare. In old English law. To counterfeit. Quia falsavit sigillum, because he counterfeited the seal. Bract. fol. 276b.

The word “false” has two distinct and well-recognized meanings: (1) intentionally or knowingly or negligently untrue; (2) untrue by mistake or accident, or honestly after the exercise of reasonable care. In jurisprudence, "false" and "falsey" are often used to characterize a wrongful or criminal act, such as involves an error or untruth, intentionally or knowingly put forward. A thing is called "false" when it is done, or made, with knowledge, actual or constructive, that it is untrue or illegal, or is said to be done falsely when the meaning is that the party is in fault for its error. Fouts v. State, 113 Ohio St. 450, 149 N. E. 551, 554; Monahan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 192 Wis. 102, 212 N. W. 369, 371.

FALSE ACTION. See Feigned Action.

FALSE ANSWER. In pleading. A sham answer; one which is false in the sense of being a mere pretense set up in bad faith and without color of fact. Howe v. Elwell, 57 App. Div. 307, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1108; Farnsworth v. Halstead (Sup.) 10 N. Y. Supp. 763.

FALSE CHARACTER. Personating the master or mistress of a servant, or any representative of such master or mistress, and giving a false character to the servant is an offense punishable in England with a fine of £20. St. 32 Geo. III. c. 56.

FALSE CLAIM. In the forest law, was where a man claimed more than his due, and was amerced and punished for the same. Manw. c. 22; Tomlins. As used in a statute making it a felony to present to any state, county, or city board or officer a false or fraudulent claim, a "false claim" is something more than a merely excessive claim. Burke v. Knox, 39 Utah, 506, 206 P. 711, 714. The act of knowingly making untruthful statements of material facts in "reasons for refund" of excise taxes, supported by fictitious copies of letters and cards attached thereto, constitutes "false claim" against government, within Criminal Code, § 35 (18 USCA §§ 36, 52–54). Evans v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 11 F. (2d) 37, 38.

FALSE DECREETS. A collection of canon law, dated about the middle of the 9th century, probably by a Frankish ecclesiastic who called himself Isadon. It continued to be the chief repertory of the canon law till the 15th century when its untrustworthy nature was demonstrated.

FALSE ENTRY. In banking law. An entry in the books of a bank which is intentionally made to represent what is not true or does not exist, with intent either to deceive its officers or a bank examiner or to defraud the bank. Agnew v. U. S., 165 U. S. 36, 17 Sup. Ct. 235, 41 L. Ed. 624; U. S. v. Peters (C. C.) 87 Fed. 984. See, also, Fricke v. State, 112 Neb. 767, 201 N. W. 667, 670. An untrue statement of items of account by written words, figures, or marks. United States v. Herrig (D. C.) 204 F. 124, 125. One making an original false entry makes a false entry in every book which is made up in regular course from the entry or entries from the original book of entry. State v. Davidson, 46 N. D. 564, 180 N. W. 51, 32.

FALSE FACT. In the law of evidence. A feigned, simulated, or fabricated fact; a fact not founded in truth, but existing only in assertion; the deceitful semblance of a fact.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. See Imprisonment.

FALSE INSTRUMENT. A counterfeit; one made in the similitude of a genuine instrument and purporting on its face to be such. U. S. v. Howell, 11 Wall. 435, 20 L. Ed. 195; U. S. v. Owens (C. C.) 37 Fed. 115; State v. Willson, 28 Minn. 52, 9 N. W. 23.

FALSE JUDGMENT. In old English law. A writ which lay when a false judgment had been pronounced in a court not of record, as a county court, court baron, etc. Fitzh. Nat. Brav. 17, 18. In old French law. The defeated party in a suit had the privilege of accusing the judges of pronouncing a false or corrupt judgment, whereupon the issue was determined by his challenging them to the combat or duel. This was called the "appeal of false judgment." Montesq. Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 27.

FALSE LATIN. When law proceedings were written in Latin, if a word were significant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. (5 Coke, 121; 2 Nels. 830.) Wharton.

FALSE LIGHTS AND SIGNALS. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger. See stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 47; 18 USCA § 488.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, still seems to be a misdemeanor, under St. 3 Edw. I. c. 34. Steph. Cl. Dig. § 95.

FALSE OATH. See Perjury.

FALSE PAPER. In a statute defining an offense of willfully and knowingly subscribing to "false papers" to deceive bank examiners, the term refers not to one which is forged or spurious, but to a paper duly subscribed by the person purporting to sign it, and containing an untrue statement in the body of the instrument. State v. Pierson, 101 Wash. 318, 172 P. 236, 238.
FALSE PERSONATION. The criminal offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others, and thereby gain some profit or advantage, or enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated, or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability. See 4 Steph. Comm. 151, 200.

FALSE PLEA. See Sham Plea.

FALSE PRETENCES. In criminal law. False representations and statements, made with a fraudulent design to obtain money, goods, wares, or merchandise, with intent to cheat. 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 2208. Such a fraudulent representation of fact by one who knows it not to be true as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value. Jackson v. People, 126 Ill. 139, 18 N. E. 286; Fisher v. State, 161 Ark. 383, 256 S. W. 588, 586; People v. Kahler, 26 Cal. App. 449, 147 P. 228, 229; State v. Tanner, 22 N. M. 493, 164 P. 821, 822; L. R. A. 1917E, 549; State v. Luff, 74 A. 1070, 1080, 1 Bouv. (Del.) 152. Any misrepresentation of past fact by a party, knowingly made to induce another to part with his property. People v. Schneider, 327 Ill. 370, 158 N. E. 448, 450. A representation of a material fact, calculated to deceive, which is not true. Commonwealth v. Jacobson, 290 Mass. 311, 157 N. E. 583, 585; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 184; State v. Grant, 86 Iowa, 216, 53 N. W. 129. False statements or representations made with intent to defraud, for the purpose of obtaining money or property. A pretense is the holding out or offering to others something false and forged. This may be done either by words or actions, which amount to false representations. In fact, false representations are inseparable from the idea of a pretense. Without a representation which is false there can be no pretense. State v. Joseph, 13 Iowa, 123. False pretenses consist in making a representation of an existing fact, which the party making it knows to be false at the time, with the intent that the party to whom it is made should act upon it, and the party must act upon it to his detriment. Griffith v. State, 93 Ohio St. 294, 112 N. E. 1017, 1018. See, further, Motzing v. Sink, 168 S. C. 545, 54 S. E. 847, 850; State v. Hathaway, 168 Wis. 518, 170 N. W. 654, 656; State v. Whitney, 43 Idaho, 745, 254 P. 325, 326; People v. Neetens, 42 Cal. App. 506, 134 P. 27, 28; Smith v. State, 74 Fla. 594, 77 So. 274, 276.

The distinction between "larceny" and "false pretenses" is that in larceny the owner of a thing has no intention to part with his property, although he may intend to part with possession, while in false pretenses the owner does intend to part with the property but it is obtained from him by fraud. People v. Shwartz, 43 Cal. App. 694, 135 P. 686, 687. See, also, Roberts v. State, 181 Ind. 620, 104 N. E. 570, 571; Crosby v. Paine, 170 Minn. 43, 211 N. W. 577, 578; State v. Paul, 41 S. D. 49, 168 N. W. 728, 731; State v. Ewing (Mo. App.) 270 S. W. 116, 117; State v. Martin, 105 W. Va. 446, 137 S. E. 885, 886. The distinction between "obtaining money by false pretenses" and forgery is that in the former, the acquisition of the money is the principal thing, while in forgery the making, altering, uttering, or publishing of the written instrument is the principal part, and money need not necessarily be obtained. State v. Hobl, 166 Kan. 261, 194 P. 521, 524.

FALSE REPRESENTATION. A representation which is untrue, wilfully made to deceive another to his injury. Also, a representation of what is true, which nevertheless creates an impression which is false. Newark Trust Co. v. Lackawanna Inv. Co., 88 N. J. Eq. 541, 103 A. 168, 169; See, further, Way v. Bronston, 91 Kan. 446, 138 P. 601, 602; International Milling Co. v. Priem, 179 Wis. 622, 192 N. W. 88. See Fraud; Deceit.

A "false representation" may be made scleriter, so as to afford a right of action in damages, in any of the following ways: (1) With actual knowledge of its falsity; (2) without knowledge either of its truth or falsity; or (3) under circumstances in which the person making it ought to have known if he did not know of its falsity. Horton v. Tyree, 104 W. Va. 228, 135 S. E. 737, 738. But see Sebastian County Bank v. Gunn, 121 Ark. 145, 189 S. W. 744, 755.

FALSE RETURN. See Return.

FALSE SWARING. The misdemeanor committed in English law by a person who swears falsely before any person authorized to administer an oath upon a matter of public concern, under such circumstances that the false swearing would have amounted to perjury if committed in a judicial proceeding; as where a person makes a false affidavit under the bills of sale acts. Steph. Cr. Dig. p. 84. And see O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. App. 539, 11 S. W. 443; In Texas, it is not necessary, to complete the offense, that the affidavit be used for the purpose for which it was intended. Welch v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 17, 157 S. W. 948. Under the Texas and Kentucky statutes, however, "false swearing" is distinct from the common-law crime of perjury; Commonwealth v. Hinkle, 177 Ky. 22, 197 S. W. 455, 456; Shipp v. State, 81 Tex. Cr. R. 228, 196 S. W. 840, 842; Inasmuch as "false swearing" consists in making a false oath on a subject about which the party could legally be sworn, and before a person legally authorized to administer the oath; Commonwealth v. Bradshaw, 210 Ky. 405, 276 S. W. 124, 125; It not being necessary, as in perjury, that the testimony be material; Sullivan v. Commonwealth, 158 Ky. 536, 165 S. W. 690, 691.

FALSE TOKEN. In criminal law. A false document or sign of the existence of a fact,—in general used for the purpose of fraud. See 3 Term 98; 2 Starkie, Ev. 563; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 585; People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 570, 28 Am. Dec. 530; People v. Stone, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 565; State v. Paul, 41 S. D. 49, 168 N. W. 729, 730; State v. Ewing (Mo. App.) 270 S. W. 116, 117; State v. Martin, 105 W. Va. 446, 137 S. E. 885, 886. The distinction between "obtaining money by false pretenses" and forgery is that in the former, the acquisition of the money is the principal thing, while in forgery the making, altering, uttering, or publishing of the written instrument is the principal part, and money need not necessarily be obtained. State v. Hobl, 166 Kan. 261, 194 P. 521, 524.
FALSE VERDICT. See Verdict.

FALSE WEIGHTS. False weights and measures are such as do not comply with the standard prescribed by the state or government, or with the custom prevailing in the place and business in which they are used. Pen. Code Cal. § 552; Pen. Code Idaho, 1901, § 5003 (Code 1922, § 17—3920).

FALSE WITNESS. One who is intentionally rather than merely mistakenly false. State v. Weston, 109 Or. 19, 219 P. 150, 189.

FALSE WORDS, which may be eliminated from descriptions in wills, deeds, etc., are misdescriptions of property that are not applicable to any property owned or intended to be devised or conveyed. Brown v. Ray, 314 Ill. 370, 145 N. E. 676, 679; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 327 Ill. 55, 158 N. E. 558, 559.

FALSIFIED. In Spanish law. Falsity; an alteration of the truth. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 26, l. 1.

Deception; fraud. Id. pt. 3, tit. 32, l. 21.

FALSEHOOD. A statement or assertion known to be untrue, and intended to deceive. A willful act or declaration contrary to the truth. Putnam v. Osgood, 51 N. H. 207.

The term is perhaps generally used in the second sense here given. It is committed either by the willful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words.

Crabbie thus distinguishes between falsehood and untruth: "The latter is an untrue saying, and may be unintentional, in which case it reflects no disgrace on the agent. A falsehood and a lie are intentional false sayings, differing only in degree of the guilt of the offender; falsehood being not always for the express purpose of deceiving, but a lie always for the worst of purposes." See Rest. Cr Ev. § 82; Decedit; Fraud; Misrepresentation.

In Scotch Law

A fraudulent imitation or suppression of truth, to the prejudice of another. Bell, "Something used and published falsely." An old Scottish word juris. "Falsehood is undoubtedly a nominate crime, so much so that Sir George Mackenzie and our older lawyers used no other term for the falsification of writs, and the name 'forger' has been of modern introduction." "If there is any distinction to be made between 'forgery' and 'falsehood,' I would consider the latter to be more comprehensive than the former." 2 Broun, 77, 78.

FALSELY. Usually used in the sense of designedly untrue and deceitful, and as implying an intention to perpetrate some treachery or fraud. Fouts v. State, 113 Ohio St. 450, 149 N. E. 551, 554; State v. Merlo, 92 Or. 678, 173 P. 317, 319; McDonald v. McNeil, 92 Vt. 356, 104 A. 337, 339; Cro. Eliz. 201; 7 D. & R. 665. But see 1 Den. C. C. 157. The use of the word falsely in a statute (against counterfeiting) implies that there must be a fraudulent or criminal intent in the act; U. S. v. King, 5 McLean 208, Fed. Cas. No. 15,535. See, also, 4 B. & C. 329; 6 Com. Dig. 55; Stark, Cr. Pl. 58.

See False.

FALSI CRIMEN. Fraudulent subornation or concealment, with design to darken or hide the truth, and make things appear otherwise than they are. It is committed (1) by words, as when a witness swears falsely; (2) by writing, as when a person antedates a contract; (3) by deed, as selling by false weights and measures. Wharton. See Crimen Falsi.

FALSIFICATION. In equity practice. The showing an item in the debit of an account to be either wholly false or in some part erroneous. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 525. And see Phillips v. Belden, 2 Edw. Ch. 23; Pitt v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. Sr. 565; Kennedy v. Adickes, 37 S. C. 174, 15 S. E. 922; Tate v. Gairdner, 119 Ga. 133, 46 S. E. 73; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237, 6 L. Ed. 468.

FALSIFY. To disprove; to prove to be false or erroneous; to avoid or defeat; spoken of verdicts, appeals, etc. Co. Litt. 104B.

To counterfeit or forge; to make something false; to give a false appearance to anything. To make false by mutilation or addition; to tamper with; as, to falsify a record or document. Pon v. Ellis, 66 Fla. 358, 63 So. 721, 722.

To show, as in an accounting before a master in chancery, that a charge has been inserted which is wrong; that is, either wholly false or in some part erroneous. Pull. Accts. 162; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 525. See Shores-Mueller Co. v. Bell, 21 Ga. App. 109, 94 S. E. 83, 84; Falsification.

FALSIFYING A JUDGMENT. A term sometimes used for reversing a judgment. See 4 Steph. Com. 553.

Making or proving false.

FALSING OF DOOMS. In Scotch law. The proving the injustice, falsity, or error of the doom or sentence of a court. Tomlins; Jacob. The reversal of a sentence or judgment; an action to set aside a decree. Siene. Protest- ing against a sentence and taking an appeal to a higher tribunal. Bell, Diet.
FALSO RETORNO BREVIUM. In old English law. A writ which formerly lay against the sheriff who had execution of process for false returning of writs. Reg. Jud. 459; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALSONARIUS. A forger; a counterfeiter. Hov. 424.

FALSUM. Lat. In the civil law. A false or forged thing; a fraudulent simulation; a fraudulent counterfeit or imitation, such as a forged signature or instrument. Also falsification, which may be either by falsehood, concealment of the truth, or fraudulent alteration, as by cutting out or erasing part of a writing.

FALSUS. Lat. False; fraudulent; erroneous. Deceitful; mistaken.

In the sense of "deceiving" or "fraudulent," it is applied to persons in respect to their acts and conduct, as well as to things; and in the sense of "erroneous," it is applied to persons on the question of personal identity.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. False in one thing, false in everything. Commonwealth v. Billings, 97 Mass. 406; Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 445; State v. Williams, 47 N. C. 257. Where a party is clearly shown to have embezzled one article of property, it is a ground of presumption that he may have embezzled others also. The Boston, 1 Sumn. 328, 336; Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 359, 5 L. Ed. 451. This maxim is particularly applied to the testimony of a witness who, if he is shown to have sworn falsely in one detail, may be considered unworthy of belief as to all the rest of his evidence. Grimes v. State, 63 Ala. 168; Wilson v. Coulter, 29 App. Div. 85, 51 N. Y. S. 804; White v. Disher, 67 Cal. 402, 7 P. 826.

The maxim, "Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus," is a mere rule of evidence affirming a rebuttable presumption of fact, under which the jury must consider all the evidence of the witness, other than that which is found to be false, and it is their duty to give effect to so much of it, if any, as is relieved from the presumption against it and found to be true. Levine Bros. v. Mantell, 90 W. Va. 163, 111 S. E. 593, 594; Scheell v. United States (C. C. A.) 226 P. 184, 187.

FAMA. Lat. Fame; character, reputation; report of common opinion.

Fama, fides et oculus non patiuntur ludum. 3 Buist. 228. Fame, faith, and eyesight do not suffer a cheat.

Fama qua suspicione inducit, oriri debet apud bonos et graves, non quidem malevolos et maleficos, sed providas et fide dignas personas, non semel sed semper, quia clamor minus et defamatio manifestat. 2 Inst. 32. Report, which induces suspicion, ought to arise from good and grave men; not, indeed, from malevolent and malicious men, but from cautious and credible persons; not only once, but frequently; for clamor diminishes, and defamation manifests.

FAMACIDE. A killer of reputation; a slanderer.

FAMILIA. In Roman Law

A household; a family. On the composition of the Roman family, see Agnati; Cognati; and see Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 144. Family right; the right or status of being the head of a family, or of exercising the patria potestas over others. This could be a "man in his own right." (homo sui juris.) Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 123, 144.

In Old English Law

A household; the body of household servants; a quantity of land, otherwise called "mesne," sufficient to maintain one family. Du Cange; Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Creasy, Church Hist.

In Spanish Law

A family, which might consist of domestics or servants. It seems that a single person owning negroes was the "head of a family," within the meaning of the colonization laws of Coahuila and Texas. State v. Sullivan, 9 Tex. 156.

FAMILIÆ EMPTOR. In Roman law. An intermediate person who purchased the aggregate inheritance when sold per eam et libram, in the process of making a will under the Twelve Tables. This purchaser was merely a man of straw, transmitting the inheritance to the hares proper. Brown.

FAMILIÆ ERCISCUNDÆ. In Roman law. An action for the partition of the aggregate succession of a familia, where that devolved upon co-heirades. It was also applicable to enforce a contribution towards the necessary expenses incurred on the familia. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 499; Stair, Inst. I. 1, tit. 7, § 15.

FAMILY PURPOSE DOCTRINE

N. Y. S. 113, 115; Wilson v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 660, 98 Am. Dec. 558. The immediate members of one's household, as wife, children, brothers, and sisters or father and mother. Niemels v. Niemels, 97 Ohio St. 145, 119 N. E. 503, 500. Those members of the household who are dependent on the householders to whom he owes some duty. Brokaw v. Ogle, 170 Ill. 115, 48 N. E. 391; Cheshire v. Burlington, 21 Conn. 326. See, also, Gamble v. Love, 222 Ala. 326, 129 So. 122; Hall v. Meriden Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 103 Conn. 226, 150 A. 157, 161; Scott's Case, 177 Me. 434, 104 A. 794, 798. Those whom it is the natural or moral duty of one to support, or who are dependent on him for support. Finn v. Eminent Household of Columbia Woodmen, 103 Ky. 187, 173 S. W. 349, 350.

In a narrower sense, a father, mother, and children, whether living together or not. Higgin v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. of Baltimore, 127 Md. 171, 96 A. 322, 323.

In a broader sense, a group of blood-relatives; all the relations who descend from a common ancestor, or who spring from a common root. See Civil Code La. art. 3556, no. 12; 9 Ves. 226. The genealogical stock from which one derives and those related to him by blood have sprung. Albright v. Albright, 116 Ohio St. 688, 157 N. E. 704, 705.

The word "family" has no uniform, definite meaning. It is used to indicate, first, the whole body of persons who form one household, thus including also servants; second, the parents with their children, whether they dwell together or not; and third, the whole group of persons closely related by blood. First Catholic Slovak Ladies' Union of United States of America v. Florek, 210 Ill. App. 460, 472; Spencer v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 153.

A husband and wife living together may constitute a "family," within the meaning of homestead and exemption laws. Miller v. Finegan, 26 Fla. 27, 7 So. 140, 1 L. R. A. 323; Williams v. Young, 17 Cal. 469; Golf v. Myers, 43 Va. 685, 25 S. E. 218; Chafee v. Rainey, 21 S. C. 11; Dye v. Cooke, 58 Tenn. 276, 12 S. W. 631, 17 Am. St. Rep. 882; Trotter v. Dobbs, 38 Miss. 138; Cox v. Stafford, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 618; Pitchell v. Burgwin, 21 Ill. 45. See, also, In re Mansfield's Estate, 186 Iowa, 529, 170 N. W. 415, 416. With particular reference to homestead laws, one parent and his or her children; Carle v. Bamberger, 53 Okt. 777, 188 P. 699, 700; Solmar v. Solmar, 206 Iowa, 701, 216 N. W. 285, 290; and even a widow or widower, although without children; Somers v. Somers, 33 S. D. 551, 146 N. W. 715, 717; Coleman v. Bosworth, 130 Iowa, 975, 164 N. W. 258, 260; may constitute a "family." See, also, In re Hooper's Estate, 117 Wash. 463, 201 P. 746, 742.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT. A term denoting an agreement between a father and his children, or between the heirs of a deceased father, to dispose of property, or to partition it in a different manner than that which would result if the law alone directed it, or to divide up property without administration. In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the par-

FAMILY BIBLE. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family. As to its admissibility in evidence, see Wharton Ev. § 219; Tayl. Ev. 572; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Iowa, 501; Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 709.

FAMILY COUNCIL. See Family Arrangement; Family Meeting; Consell de famille.

FAMILY EXPENSES. Obligations incurred for something intended for the use or comfort of the collection spoken of as the family, as distinguished from individual or personal expenses. Vose v. Myott, 141 Iowa, 506, 120 N. W. 58, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277.

FAMILY GROUP, within the purview of the family care doctrine, is not confined to persons related to the owner of the car, but includes members of the collective body of persons living in his household for whose convenience the car is actually maintained and who have general authority to use it. Smart v. Bissonnette, 106 Conn. 447, 138 A. 365, 366. See Family Purpose Doctrine, infra.

FAMILY MEETING. An institution of the laws of Louisiana, being a council of the relatives (or, if there are no relatives, of the friends) of a minor, for the purpose of advising as to his affairs and the administration of his property. The family meeting is called by order of a judge, and presided over by a justice or notary, and must consist of at least five persons, who are put under oath. In re Bothick, 44 La. Ann. 1037, 11 So. 712; Civ. Code La. art. 305. It corresponds to the "conseil de famille" of French law, q. v. See Lemoine v. Ducote, 45 La. Ann. 857, 12 So. 693; Commaux v. Bauduin, 6 Mart. La. (N. S.) 455.

FAMILY PHYSICIAN. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family. Price v. Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 519 (Gill. 473), 10 Am. Rep. 106; Reid v. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. 424; Cromews v. Sovereign Camp, W. O. W. (Mo. App.) 247 S. W. 1083, 1084.

FAMILY PURPOSE DOCTRINE. A doctrine under which the owner of an automobile is held liable for damages resulting from its negligent operation by members of his family, whom he permits to use it. Schwartz v. Johnson, 152 Tenn. 556, 230 S. W. 32, 33, 47 A. L. R. 323. The doctrine, that the owner of an automobile purchased or maintained for the pleasure of his family is liable for in-
FAMILY RELATION

FAMILY RELATION. A relationship which may exist between one taken into the family by the head of the family, notwithstanding the absence of blood relationship or of legal adoption. Nelson v. Poorman’s Estate (Mo. App.) 215 S. W. 753, 754.

FAMILY SETTLEMENT. An agreement made between a father and his son or children or between brothers to dispose of property in a different manner from that which would otherwise take place. Peterson v. Hegna, 158 Minn. 259, 197 N. W. 484, 487. A term of practically the same significance as “family arrangement,” q. v. supra. See Wiley v. Hodge, 104 Wis. 81, 80 N. W. 75, 78 Am. St. Rep. 892.

FAMILY USE. That use ordinarily made by and suitable for the members of a household whether as individuals or collectively. Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 120. The supply of water in a municipal corporation for family use includes the supply of jails, hospitals, almhouses, schools, and other municipal institutions; id.

FAMOUSUS. In the civil and old English law. Relating to or affecting injuriously the character or reputation; defamatory; slanderous; scandalous.

FAMOUSUS LIBELLUS. A libelous writing. A term of the civil law denoting that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libel or slander.

FANAL. Fr. In French marine law. A large lantern, fixed upon the highest part of a vessel’s stern.

FANATIC. A religious enthusiast; a bigot; a person entertaining wild and extravagant notions, or affected by zeal or enthusiasm, especially upon religious subjects. Also, a person pretending to be inspired;—formerly applied to Quakers, Anabaptists, and all other sectaries, and factious dissenters from the Church of England. (St. 13 Car. II. c. 6) Jacob.

FANEGA. In Spanish law. A measure of land varying in different provinces, but in the Spanish settlements in America consisting of 6,400 square varas or yards. Diccionario de la Accad.; 2 White Recoup. 49; 138.

FAQUEER. See Fakir.

FARANDMAN. In Scotch law. A traveler or merchant stranger. Skene.

FARDEL OF LAND. In old English law. The fourth part of a yard-land. Spelman. Noy says an eighth only, because, according to him, two fardels make a nook, and four nooks a yard-land. Wharton. See Noy, Complete Lawyer 57; Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FARDELLA. In old English law. A bundle or pack; a fardel. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 10.

FARDING-DEAL. The fourth part of an acre of land. Spelman.

FARE. A voyage or passage by water; also the money paid for a passage either by land or by water. Cowell.

In case of a water company it means the tax or compensation which the company may charge for furnishing a supply of water. McNeil Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 616, 16 S. E. 857, 20 L. R. A. 748.

FARINAGIUM. A mill; a toll of meal or flour. Jacob; Spelman.

FARLEU (or FARLEY). Money paid by tenants in lieu of a heriot. It was often applied to the best chattel, as distinguished from heriot, the best beast. Cowell.

FARLINGARI. Whoremongers; adulterers.

FARM. n. A certain amount of provision reserved as the rent of a message. Spelman.

Rent generally which is reserved on a lease; when it was to be paid in money, it was called “blanche ferme.” Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 42.

A term, a lease of lands; a leasehold interest. 2 Bl. Comm. 17; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 301, note. The land itself, let to farm or rent. 2 Bl. Comm. 368.

Usually the chief message in a village or town whereunto belongs a great demesne of all sorts. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Terms de la Ley.

A large tract or portion of land taken by a lease under a yearly rent payable by the tenant. Tomlin, Law Dict.

A portion of land used for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part.

The original meaning of the word was “rent,” and by a natural transition it came to mean the land out of which the rent issued.

In Old English Law

A lease of other things than land, as of imposts. There were several of these, such as “the sugar farm,” “the silk farm,” and farms of wines and currants, called “petty farms.” See 2 How. State Tr. 1197-1206.

In American Law

“Farm” denotes a tract of land devoted in part, at least, to cultivation, for agricultural.

Bl. Law Dict. (3d Ed.)

The term does not necessarily include only the land under cultivation and within a fence. It may include all the land which forms part of the tract, and may also include several connected parcels under one control. Succession of Williams, 122 La. 866, 61 So. 852, 853.

Any tract of land used for raising crops or rearing animals. Gordon v. Buster, 113 Tex. 382, 257 S. W. 220.

A body of land under one ownership, devoted to agriculture, either to raising crops, or pasture, or both. Dorsett v. Watkins, 29 Okl. 198, 186 P. 698, 9 A. L. R. 278.

With the development particularly of the western states, a large part of whose wealth consists of cattle, the word "farm" has acquired a somewhat broader meaning, and in its generic sense is applicable to a stock farm as to one where grain is raised. Porter v. Yakima County, 71 Wash. 256, 137 P. 466, 467.

In General

-Farm crossing. A roadway over a railroad track at grade for the purpose of reaching tillage land cut off by the track. True v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 113 Me. 375, 94 A. 183, 184. See also, In re Colvin Street in City of Buffalo, 155 App. Div. 808, 140 N. Y. S. 882, 883.

A sheep herder is an "agricultural laborer" not entitled to compensation for injuries under the Industrial Act (Comp. Laws 1917, § 3110, as amended by Laws 1919, c. 63). Davis v. Industrial Commission, 59 Utah, 607, 206 P. 267, 268.

On the question whether the term as used in Workmen's Compensation Acts includes an employee on a corn husking or a grain threshing outfit, or the like, which goes from one farm to another for compensation, the decisions are conflicting. See State v. District Court of Washington County, 140 Minn. 398, 168 N. W. 130; L. R. A. 1918 P, 198; Slye v. Horn, 179 Iowa, 986, 162 N. W. 249, 252; 7 A. L. R. 1285. For cases contra, holding that such an employee is not a farm laborer, see Roush v. Heffelbower, 225 Mich. 684, 196 N. W. 185, 35 A. L. R. 136; In re Boyer, 65 Ind. App. 408, 117 N. E. 507, 508; Industrial Commission of State of Colorado v. Shadowen, 68 Colo. 69, 187 P. 926, 927, 13 A. L. R. 932; Vincent v. Taylor Bros., 180 App. Div. 818, 165 N. Y. S. 287, 288.

-Farm land. A term applicable to all the land contained in a farm, and not necessarily merely to land which has been plowed. De Wolfe v. Kupers, 106 Or. 176, 211 P. 927, 930.

-Farm utensils. A term which, in an insurance policy, is broader than the term garden tools, and includes any instrumentalities within the meaning of the word utensils made use of on a farm, including a stock scale or a new windmill not erected. Murphy v. Continental Ins. Co., 178 Iowa, 375, 157 N. W. 555, L. R. A. 1917B, 934.

-Farm wagon. This term in an exemption statute includes a farm wagon moved by mechanical as well as by animal power. People v. Corder, 82 Colo. 318, 259 P. 613.

FARM, n. To lease or let; to demise or grant for a limited term and at a stated rental.

-Farm let. Technical words in a lease creating a term for years. Co. Litt. 45 b; 1 Washb. R. Pr. Index, Lease. Operative words in a lease, which strictly mean to let upon payment of a certain rent in farm; i. e., in agricultural produce.

-Farm out. To let for a term at a stated rental. Among the Romans the collection of revenue was farmed out, and the same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been before that time abandoned in England. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold.

FARMER. The lessee of a farm. It is said that every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called "farmer." This word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandman. Cunningham; Cowell; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Comm. 318.

A husbandman or agriculturist; one who cultivates a farm, whether the land be his own or another's. One who resides on and cultivates a farm, mainly deriving his support therefrom. State v. Hines, 94 Or. 607, 180 P. 420, 422.

One who assumes the collection of the public revenues, taxes, excise, etc., for a certain commission or percentage; as a farmer of the revenues.

There may also be a farmer of other personal property as well as of revenue and of lands. Powell. 296; Cunn. Law Diet.

FARMER GENERAL. See Farm out.

FARO. An unlawful game of cards, in which all the other players play against the banker or dealer, staking their money upon the order in which the cards will lie and be dealt from the pack. Webster; Ward v. State, 22 Ala. 19; U. S. v. Smith, 27 Fed. Cas. 1149; Patterson v. State, 12 Tex. App. 224.

FARO LAY-OUT. A board commonly covered with green cloth to which the entire spade suit is affixed in a certain order. State v. Williams, 52 Mont. 369, 157 P. 557.

FARRIER. One who takes upon himself the public employment of shoeing horses. See 1 Bl. Comm. 451; 2 Salk. 440; Hanover, Horses 215.

FARTHING. The fourth part of an English penny.

FARTHING OF GOLD. An ancient English coin, containing in value the fourth part of a noble. 9 Hen. V. c. 7.

FARTHING OF LAND. A great quantity of land, differing much from farding-deal, q. e. v.

FARVAND. Standing by itself, this word signifies "passage by sea or water." In charter-parties, it means voyage or passage by water. 18 C. B. 880.

FARYNDON INN. The ancient designation of Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, London.

FAS. Lat. Right; justice; the divine law. 3 Bl. Comm. 2; Calvin.

In primitive times it was the will of the gods, embodied in rules regulating not only ceremonies but the conduct of all men. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 65.

FASIUUS. In old English law. A faggot of wood.

FAST BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. One which may be taken in Georgia in injunction suits and similar cases, at such time and in such manner as to bring the case up for review with great expedition. It must be certified within twenty days from the rendering of the decision. Sewell v. Edmonston, 66 Ga. 353.

FAST-DAY. A day of fasting and penitence, or of mortification by religious abstinence. As to counting it in legal proceedings, see 1 Chit. Archb. Pr. (12th Ed.) 169, et seq.

FAST ESTATE. See Estate.

FASTERMANS, FASTERMANNES, or FASTING-MEN. Men in repute and substance; pledges, sureties, or bondsmen, who, according to the Saxon polity, were fast bound to answer for each other's peaceable behavior. Speelman; Enc. Lond.

FASTI. In Roman law. Lawful. Dies fasti, lawful days; days on which justice could lawfully be administered by the praetor. See Dies Fasti.

FATAL INJURY. A term embracing injuries resulting in death, which, as used in accident and disability insurance policies is distinguished from "disability," which embraces injuries preventing the insured from performing the work in which he is usually employed, but not resulting in death. Provident Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 235 S. W. 650, 652.

Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit. He who flees judgment confesses his guilt. 3 Inst. 14; 5 Co. 1009. But see Best, Pres. § 248.

FATHER. The male parent. He by whom a child is begotten. As used in law, this term may (according to the context and the nature of the instrument) include a putative as well as a legal father, also a stepfather, an adoptive father, or a grandfather, but is not as wide as the word "parent," and cannot be so construed as to include a female. Lind v. Burke, 50 Neb. 785, 77 N. W. 444; Crook v. Webb, 125 Ala. 457, 28 So. 384; Cotheal v. Cotheal, 40 N. Y. 419; Lantzmeser v. State, 19 Tex. App. 322; Thornburg v. American Strawboard Co., 111 Ind. 443; 40 N. E. 1062, 50 Am. St. Rep. 334; In re Butler's Estate, 129 Misc. 396, 222 N. Y. S. 265, 266; McGaughey v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. of State of Minnesota, 145 Minn. 136, 180 N. W. 1001. The term may, however, be so limited as to mean only the father of a legitimate child. People v. Wolf, 216 App. Div. 771, 215 N. Y. S. 95, 96; Howard v. U. S. (D. C.) 2 F.(2d) 170, 173.

—Father-in-law. The father of one's wife or husband.

—Putative father. The alleged or reputed father of an illegitimate child. State v. Nestaval, 72 Minn. 415, 75 N. W. 725.

FATHOM. A nautical measure of six feet in length. Occasionally used as a superficial measure of land and in mining, and in that case it means a square fathom or thirty-six FATUA MULIER. A whore. Du Fresne.

FATUITAS. In old English law. Fatuity; idiocy. Reg. Orig. 298.

FATUM. Lat. Fate: a superhuman power; an event or cause of loss, beyond human foresight or means of prevention.

FATUOUS PERSON. In Scotch law. One entirely destitute of reason, is qui omnino desipit. Ersk. Inst. 1, 7, 48. An idiot. Jacob. One who is incapable of managing his affairs, by reason of a total defect of reason. He is described as having uniform stupidity and inattention of manner and childishness of speech. Bell's Law Dict.

FATUUM JUDICIIUM. A foolish judgment or verdict. As applied to the latter it is one rather false by reason of folly than criminally so, or as amounting to perjury. Bract. f. 288.

FATUUS. An idiot or fool. Bract. fol. 420b. Foolish; silly; absurd; indiscreet; or ill considered. See Fatuum judicium.

Fatuos, apud jurisconsultos nostros, accipitur pro non compos mentis; et fatuos dicitur, qui omnino desipit. 4 Coke, 128. Fatious, among our jurisconsults, is understood for a man not of right mind; and he is called "fatuo" who is altogether foolish.

Fatuo prasumitur qui in proprio nomine errat. A man is presumed to be simple who makes a mistake in his own name. Code, 6, 24, 14; Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 145, 161.

FAUBOURG. In French law, and in Louisiana. A district or part of a town adjoining the principal city: a suburb. See City Council of Lafayette v. Holland, 18 La. 286.

FAUCES TERRAE. (Jaws of the land.) Narrow headlands and promontories, inclosing a portion or arm of the sea within them. 1 Kent, Comm. 387, and note; Hale, De Jure Mar. 10; The Harriet, 1 Story, 251, 259; Fed. Cas. No. 6,000; 16 Yale L. J. 471.

FAULT. In the Civil Law

Negligence; want of care. An improper act or omission, injurious to another, and transpiring through negligence, rashness, or ignorance.

There are in law three degrees of faults,—the gross, the slight, and the very slight fault. The gross fault is that which proceeds from inexcusable negligence or ignorance: it is considered as nearly equal to fraud. The slight fault is that want of care which a prudent man usually takes of his business. The very slight fault is that which is excusable, and for which no responsibility is incurred. Civil Code La. art. 3558, par. 13.

In American Law

In Commercial Law

Defect; imperfection; blemish. See With All Faults.

In Mining Law

A dislocation of strata; particularly, a severance of the continuity of a vein or lode by the dislocation of a portion of it.

FAUTOR. In Old English Law

A favorer or supporter of others; an abettor. Cowell; Jacob. A partisan. One who encouraged resistance to the execution of process.

In Spanish Law

Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

FAUX. In Old English Law

In French Law

A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Biret.

"Faux may be understood in three ways. In its most extended sense it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with 'lying.' In a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutantio veritatis cum dolo facto. And lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law." Toullier, 5, 2, 183.
In the Civil Law

The fraudulent alteration of the truth. The same with the Latin falsum or crimen falsi.

FAVOR, n. Bias; partiality; leniency; prejudice. See Challenge.

FAVOR, v. To regard with favor; to aid or to have the disposition to aid; to show partiality or lean his bias towards;—practically synonymous with "support." United States v. Schulze (D. C.) 223 F. 377, 379. The word implies a mental attitude or intent. Schulze v. United States (C. C. A.) 259 F. 189, 190.

Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscous, dos, vita, libertas. Jenk. Cent. 91. Things favorably considered in law are the treasury, dower, life, liberty.

Favorabiliores rei, potius quam actores, habentur. The condition of the defendant must be favored, rather than that of the plaintiff. In other words, melior est conditio defendantis. Dig. 50, 17, 125; Broom, Max. 715. See Hunt v. Roumanier's Adm'r, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 195, 196, 5 L. Ed. 589.

Favorabilia sunt executiones allis processibus quibususque. Co. Litt. 289. Executions are preferred to all other processes whatever.

Favores ampliandi sunt; odia restringenda. Jenk. Cent. 186. Favors are to be enlarged; things hateful restrained.

FEAL. Faithful; truthful; true. Tenants by knight service swore to their lords to be feal and leal; i.e., faithful and loyal. Feal homager, faithful subject.

FEAL AND DIVOT. A right in Scotland, similar to the right of turbary in England, for fuel, etc. Wharton; Ersk. li. tit. ix. s. 17.

FEALTY. In feudal law. Fidelity; allegiance to the feudal lord of the manor; the feudal obligation resting upon the tenant or vassal by which he was bound to be faithful and true to his lord, and render him obedience and service. See De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 497, 57 Am. Dec. 470; Littleton §§ 117, 131; Wright, Ten. 35; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; 1 Pol. & Maill. 277-287; Stubbs, Const. Hist. § 462 n.; Co. Lit. 679; 8 Kent 510.

This fealty was of two sorts: that which is general, and is due from every subject to his prince; the other special, and required of such only as in respect of their fee are tied by this oath to their landords; 1 Bla. Comm. 367; Cowell.

Fealty signifies fidelity, the phrase "feal and leal" meaning simply "faithful and loyal." Tenants by knights' service and also tenants in socage were required to take an oath of fealty to the king or others, their immediate lords; and fealty was one of the conditions of their tenure, the breach of which operated a forfeiture of their estates. Brown.

Although foreign jurists consider fealty and hommage as convertible terms, because in some continental countries they are blended so as to form one engagement, yet they are not to be confounded in our country, for they do not imply the same thing, hommage being the acknowledgment of tenure, and fealty, the vassal oath of fidelity, being the essential feudal bond, and the animating principle of a feud, without which it could not subsist. Wharton.

FEAR. Apprehension of harm; dread; consciousness of approaching danger.

Apprehension of harm or punishment, as exhibited by outward and visible marks of emotion. An evidence of guilt in certain cases. See Burzill, Circ. Ev. 476.

FEASANCE. A doing; the doing of an act; a performing or performance. See Malafeasance; Misfeasance; Nonfeasance.

FEASANT. Doing, or making, as, in the term "damage feasant," (doing damage or injury,) spoken of cattle straying upon another's land.

FEASOR. Doer; maker. Feasors del estatute, makers of the statute. Dyer, 35. Also used in the compound term, "tort-feasor," one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

FEASTS. Certain established festivals or holidays in the ecclesiastical calendar. These days were anciently used as the dates of legal instruments, and in England the quarter-days, for paying rent, are four feast-days. The terms of the courts, in England, before 1875, were fixed to begin on certain days determined with reference to the occurrence of four of the chief feasts.

FECIAL LAW. The nearest approach to a system of international law known to the ancient world. It was a branch of Roman jurisprudence, concerned with embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace. It received this name from the feciales, (q. v.), who were charged with its administration.

FECIALES. Among the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring of war and peace. Calvin.; 1 Kent, Comm. 6.

FEDERAL.

In Constitutional Law

A term commonly used to express a league or compact between two or more states, to become united under one central government. Montana Auto Finance Corporation v. British & Federal Underwriters of Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc., 72 Mont. 69, 232 P. 195, 199, 38 A. L. R. 1495.

In American Law

Belonging to the general government or union of the states. Founded on or organized under the constitution or laws of the United States.

The United States has been generally styled, in American political and judicial writings, a "federal government. The term has not been imposed by any specific constitutional authority, but only expresses the general sense and opinion upon the nature of the form of government. In recent years, there is observable a disposition to employ the term "national" in speaking of the government of the Union. Neither word settles anything as to the nature or powers of the government, "Federal" is somewhat more appropriate if the government is considered a union of the states; "national" is preferable if the view is adopted that the state governments and the Union are two distinct systems, each established by the people directly, one for local and the other for national purposes. See United States v. Cruzank, 22 U. S. 545, 22 L. Ed. 588; Abbott; Mills, Representative Government 301; Freeman, Fed. Gov't.

FEDERAL CENSUS. A census of each state or territory or of a certain state or of any subdivision or portion of any state, provided it is taken by and under the direction and supervision of the Census Bureau of the United States, and approved and certified by it as the census of that state or subdivision. In re Cleveland's Claim, 72 Okl. 279, 150 P. 852, 885.

FEDERAL COURTS. The courts of the United States. See Courts of the United States.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. The system of government administered in a state formed by the union or confederation of several independent or quasi independent states; also the composite state so formed. In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a federal government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and independent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as external and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with respect to the confederation, and the central government acts upon them, not upon the individual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union,—not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasi sovereignty with respect to the administration of their purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true state or nation, possessing sovereignty both external and internal,—while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all, in their collective capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words "Staatenbund" and "Bundesstaat;" the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.

FEDERAL QUESTION. Cases arising under the constitution of the United States, acts of congress, or treaties, and involving their interpretation or application, and of which jurisdiction is given to the federal courts, are commonly described by the legal profession as cases involving a "federal question." In re Sneveres (D. C.) 91 F. 372; U. S. v. Douglas, 113 N. C. 190, 18 S. E. 292; Williams v. Bruffy, 102 U. S. 248, 26 L. Ed. 135; Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 190, 5 S. Ct. 407, 28 L. Ed. 908; In re Vadner (D. C.) 250 F. 614, 632; Masters v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 129 Misc. 133, 220 N. Y. S. 499, 500.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION. An administrative body created by statute, with only the duties and powers granted expressly or by fair implication. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. Federal Trade Commission (C. C. A.) 13 F.(2d) 675, 683. See 15 USCA §§ 41-51.

FEDERATED STATE. An independent central organization, having its own machinery absorbing, in view of international law, all the individual states associated together. Molina v. Comision Reguladora Del Mercado De Henequen, 91 N. J. Law, 382, 103 A. 397, 400.

FEE. A freehold estate in lands, held of a superior lord, as a reward for services, and on condition of rendering some service in return for it. The true meaning of the word "fee" is the same as that of "feud" or "diet," and in its original sense it is taken in contradistinction to "alodinum," which latter is defined as a man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without owing any rent or service to any superior. 2 Bl. Comm. 105. See Wendell v. Crandall, 1 N. Y. 491.

In modern English tenures, "fee" signifies an estate of inheritance, being the highest and most extensive interest which a man can have in a feud; and when the term is used simply, without any adjunct, or in the form "fee-simple," it imports an absolute inheritance clear of any condition, limitation, or restriction to particular heirs, but descendible to the heirs general, male or female, lineal or collateral. 2 Bl. Comm. 106; Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Co. Litt. 1 b; 1 Prest. Est. 420; 3 Kent 514.
In General

—Base fee. A determinable or qualified fee; an estate having the nature of a fee, but not a fee simple absolute. In re Douglass Estate, 94 Neb. 280, 143 N. W. 299, 302, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 447; Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 582, 589.

—Conditional fee. An estate restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral; or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion of heirs female, whether lineal or collateral. It was called a "conditional fee," by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donor died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. 2 Bl. Comm. 110; Willis v. Mutual Loan & Trust Co., 183 N. C. 267, 111 S. E. 163, 165; Yates v. Yates, 104 Neb. 678, 178 N. W. 262, 263; Sho pp v. Unknown Claimants, etc., 174 Iowa, 602, 156 N. W. 850, 851; Adams v. Vern er, 102 S. C. 7, 86 S. E. 211, 214; Kirk v. Fur gerson, 6 Cold. (Tenn.) 485; Simmons v. Au gustin, 5 Port. (Ala.) 69; Paterson v. Ellis, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 277; Moody v. Walker, 3 Ark. 196; Hal bert v. Hal bert, 21 Mo. 254. The term includes a fee that is either to commence or determine on some condition; 10 Co. 95 b; Prest. Est. 476; Pearne, Cont. Rem. 9; and is sometimes used interchangeably with “base fee,” that is, one to determine or be defeated on the happening of some contingent event or act. Citizens' Electric Co. v. Susquehanna Boom Co., 270 Pa. 517, 113 A. 559, 561; Glass v. Johnson, 297 Ill. 149. 130 N. E. 473, 474.

—Determinable fee. Also called a "base" or "qualified" fee. Stubbs v. Abel, 114 Or. 610, 233 P. 582, 589. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. Littleton § 254; Co. Litt. 27 a, 220; 1 Prest. Est. 449; 2 Bla. Comm. 109; Cruise, Dig. tit. 1, § 82. An estate in fee which is liable to be determined by some act or event expressed on its limitation to circumscribe its continuance, or inferred by law as having its extent. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 62; McLane v. Boyce, 35 Wis. 36. "Determinable fees" are interests which may continue forever, but which are liable to be determined by some act or event and are deemed fees because of the possibility of their enduring forever. Alfred v. Sylvester, 184 Ind. 542, 111 N. E. 914, 920.

—Fee damages. See Damages.

—Fee expectant. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also Frank-Marriage.

—Fee simple. See that title.

—Fee tail. See that title.

—Great fee. In feudal law, this was the designation of a fee held directly from the crown.

—Knight's fee. The determinate quantity of land, (held by an estate of inheritance,) or of annual income therefrom, which was sufficient to maintain a knight. Every man holding such a fee was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars for the space of forty days in the year, or pay a fine (called "escuage") for his non-compliance. The estate was estimated at £20 a year, or, according to Coke, 600 acres. See 1 Bl. Comm. 494, 419; 2 Bl. Comm. 62; Co. Litt. 69a.

—Limited fee. An estate of inheritance in lands, which is clogged or confined with some sort of condition or qualification. Such estates are base or qualified fees, conditional fees, and fee-tail. The term is opposed to "fee-simple." 2 Bl. Comm. 109; Lott v. Wyckoff, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 575; Paterson v. Ellis, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 259.

—Plowman's fee. In old English law, this was a species of tenure peculiar to peasants or small farmers, somewhat like gavelkind, by which the lands descended in equal shares to all the sons of the tenant.

—Qualified fee. In English law. A fee having a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end; otherwise termed a "base fee." 2 Bl. Comm. 109; 1 Steph. Comm. 225. An interest which may continue forever, but is liable to be determined, without the aid of a conveyance, by some act or event, circumscribing its continuance or extent. 4 Kent, Comm. 9; Moody v. Walker, 3 Ark. 200; U. S. v. Reese, 27 Fed. Cas. 743; Bryan v. Spieres, 3 Brew. (Tenn.) 553. An interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation. See Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 397, 24 A. 18.

—Quasi fee. An estate gained by wrong; for wrong is unlimited and unconfined within rules. Wharton. Also, the land which is held in fee. The compass or circuit of a manor or lordship. Cowell.

In American Law

An estate of inheritance without condition, belonging to the owner, and alienable by him, or transmissible to his heirs absolutely and simply. It is an absolute estate in perpetuity, and the largest possible estate a man can have, being, in fact, alodial in its nature. Earnest v. Little River Land, etc., Co., 109 Tenn. 427, 75 S. W. 1122; Phoenix v. Emigration Com's, 12 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 10; United States Pipe-Line Co. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 62 N. J. Law. 254, 41 A. 759, 42 L. R. A. 572; Glass v. Johnson, 297 Ill. 149. 130 N. E. 473, 474; Des Moines City R. Co. v. City of Des Moines, 158 Iowa 123. 150 N. W. 490, 452, L. R. A. 1918D, 839; Chance v. Weston, 90 Or. 390, 190 P. 155, 158.
An "estate in fee" is every estate which is not for life, for years or at will. Chance v. Weston, 96 Or. 390, 190 P. 155, 157.

The terms "fee," "fee-simple," and "fee simple absolute" are interchangeable. Walpole v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 62 Colo. 554, 163 P. 848, 850.

A reward, compensation, or wage given to one for the performance of official duties (clerk of court, sheriff, etc.) or for professional services, as in the case of an attorney at law or a physician;—frequently used in the plural form. See Alexander v. Walton, 151 Ga. 645, 107 S. E. 862; McRoberts v. Hoar, 28 Idaho, 163, 152 P. 1046, 1048. A recompense for an official or professional service or a charge or emolument or compensation for a particular act or service. Craig v. Shelton, 201 Ky. 790, 235 S.W. 934.

Fees differ from costs in this, that the former are a recompense to the officer for his services; and the latter, an indemnification to the party for monies laid out and expended in his suit; Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. (P. A.) 249; McClain v. Continental Supply Co., 66 Okl. 225, 165 P. 315, 317; Parks v. Sutton, 60 Utah, 356, 208 P. 511, 514. See Lyon v. McManus, 4 Hinn. (Pa.) 167. Fees are synonymous with charges; McPheters v. Morrill, 65 Me. 121; Hudson v. Bartsch, 38 Idaho, 52, 229 P. 108; and also with "percentage" or "commission": City of Pittsburgh v. Greent, 228 Pa. 527, 86 A. 462, 495; Brown v. City of Amarillo (Tex. Civ. App.) 189 S. W. 654, 658.

"Salary," as relating to the compensation of public officers, is generally regarded as a periodical payment dependent upon time, while "fees" depend on services rendered, the amount of which is fixed by law and payable when the judgment allowing them is entered. State v. Bland, 91 Kan. 169, 136 P. 947, 999.

—Contingent fee. A fee stipulated to be paid to an attorney for his services in conducting a suit or other forensic proceeding only in case he wins it; it may be a percentage of the amount recovered. Adopted in Gray v. Stern, 55 Wash. 645, 149 P. 26, 28. See, also, Miles v. Cheyenne County, 96 Neb. 703, 148 N. W. 956, 962, L. R. A. 1917D. 258; Modlin v. Smith, 13 Ga. App. 239, 79 S. E. 82.

—Docket fee. See Docket.

—Fee-bill. A schedule of the fees to be charged by clerks of courts, sheriffs, or other officers, for each particular service in the line of their duties. Also, the proper process to collect fees due to officers and witnesses against a party for whom services are rendered. Farr v. Smith, 150 Mo. App. 460, 166 S. W. 655, 656.

FEE AND LIFE-RENT. In Scotch law. Two estates in land—the first of which is the full right of proprietorship, the second the limited right of usufruct during life—may be held together, or may coexist in different persons at the same time. See Bell, Prin. § 1712; Ersk. Prin. 420; Fiar.

FEE-FARM. A species of tenure, where land is held of another in perpetuity at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. It corresponds very nearly to the "emphyteusis" of the Roman law. Cowell. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors. Spelman; Termes de la Ley.

Fee-farm is where an estate in fee is granted subject to a rent in fee of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands at the time of its reservation. Such rent appears to be called "fee-farm" because a grant of lands reserving so considerable a rent is indeed only letting lands to farm in fee-simple, instead of the usual method of life or years. 2 Bl. Comm. 45; 1 Steph. Comm. 476.

Fee-farms are lands held in fee to render for them annually the true value, or more or less; so called because a farm rent is reserved upon a grant in fee. Such estates are estates of inheritance. They are classed among estates in fee-simple. No reversionary interest remains in the lessor, and they are therefore subject to the operation of the legal principles which forbid restraints upon alienation in all cases where no feudal relation exists between grantor and grantee. De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 467, 495, 57 Am. Dec. 470.

FEE-FARM RENT. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be one-fourth the value of the land, according to Cowell; one-third, according to other authors. Spelman; Termes de la Ley; 2 Bl. Comm. 43. Fee-farm rent is a rent-charge issuing out of an estate in fee; a perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee. De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 467, 495, 57 Am. Dec. 470.

FEE-SIMPLE. In English Law

A freehold estate of inheritance, absolute and unqualified. It stands at the head of estates as the highest in dignity and the most ample in extent; since every other kind of estate is derivable therefrom, and mergeable therein. It may be enjoyed not only in land, but also in advowsons, commons, estovers, and other hereditaments, as well as in personality, as an annuity or dignity, and also in an upper chamber, though the lower buildings and soil belong to another. Wharton; Co. Litt. 1 b 2; Bla. Comm. 106.

In American Law

FEE-SIMPLE

Fee-simple signifies a pure fee; an absolute estate of inheritance; that which a person holds inheritable to him and his heirs general forever. It is called "fee-simple," that is, "pure," because clear of any condition or restriction to particular heirs, being descendent to the heirs general, whether male or female, lineal or collateral. It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land, being the entire property therein, and it confers an unlimited power of alienation. Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 698; Powers v. Trustees of Caledonia County Grammar School, 93 Vt. 229, 106 A. 859, 841; Smith v. Smith's Ex'r, 122 Va. 341, 129 S. E. 777, 779; Hays v. Walnut Creek Oil Co., 75 W. Va. 263, 83 S. E. 900, 903, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 802; Security Trust Co. v. Moberley, 139 Ky. 703, 151 S. W. 594, 665. But see Chase v. United States (C. C. A.) 223 F. 590, 598.

A fee-simple is the largest estate known to the law, and where no words of qualification or limitation are added, it means an estate in possession, and owned in severalty. It is undoubtedly true that a person may own a remainder or reversion in fee. But such an estate is not a fee-simple; it is a fee qualified or limited. So, when a person owns in common with another, he does not own the entire fee—a fee-simple; it is a fee divided or shared with another. Brackett v. Ridlon, 54 Me. 436.

The terms "fee," "fee simple," and "fee simple absolute" are interchangeable. Walpole v. State Board of Land Com'rs, 62 Colo. 554, 153 P. 548, 550; Jecko v. Tausig, 45 Mo. 170. And the term "absolute estate" is synonymous with "fee-simple estate." Bradford v. Martin, 199 Iowa, 259, 201 N. W. 574, 576; Middleton v. Dudding (Mo. Sup.) 182 S. W. 443, 444.

Absolute and Conditional

A fee simple absolute is an estate which is limited absolutely to a man and his heirs and assigns forever, without any limitation or condition. Frisby v. Ballance, 7 Ill. 144. At the common law, an estate in fee simple conditional was a fee limited or restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others. But the statute "De Donis" converted all such estates into estates tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 110.

FEE-TAIL. An estate tail; an estate of inheritance given to a man and his heirs of his body, or limited to certain classes of particular heirs. It corresponds to the feudaum talliatum of the feudal law, and the idea is believed to have been borrowed from the Roman law, where, by way of fidelitias commiseritas, lands might be entailed upon children and freedmen and their descendants, with restrictions as to alienation. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *96. For the varieties and special characteristics of this kind of estate, see Tail, Estate in.

FEED. To lend additional support; to strengthen ex post facto. "The interest when it accrues feeds the estoppel." Christmas v. Oliver, 5 Mood. & R. 202. Similarly, a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage."

The word is used in its ordinary sense with reference to cattle and hogs which are said to be made marketable by feeding. Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 102.

It is also used in the phrase feeding of a cow by and on the land to signify from the land while there is food on it, and with hay by the owner of the land at other times; 2 Q. B. Div. 49.

FEGANGI. In old English law. A thief caught while escaping with the stolen goods in his possession. Spelman.

FEHMGERICHT. The name given to certain secret tribunals which flourished in Germany from the end of the twelfth century to the middle of the sixteenth, usurping many of the functions of the governments which were too weak to maintain law and order, and inspiring dread in all who came within their jurisdiction. Enc. Brit. Such a court existed in Westphalia (though with greatly diminished powers) until finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811. See Hork, Geschichte der Westphalischen Fehmgerechte; Paul Wigand, Das Fehmgerecht Westphalens.

FEIGNED. Fictitious; pretended; supposititious; simulated.

FEIGNED ACCOMPlice. One who pretends to consult and act with others in the planning or commission of a crime, but only for the purpose of discovering their plans and confederates and securing evidence against them. State v. Verganadis, 50 Nev. 1, 248 P. 900, 903; People v. Bolanger, 71 Cal. 17, 11 Pac. 800.

FEIGNED ACTION. In practice. An action brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true. It differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. Co. Litt. 361.

FEIGNED DISEASES. Simulated maladies. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes,—fear, shame, or the hope of gain.

FEIGNED ISSUE. An issue made up by the direction of a court of equity, (or by consent of parties), and sent to a common-law court, for the purpose of obtaining the verdict of a jury on some disputed matter of fact which the court has not jurisdiction, or is unwilling to decide. It rests upon a supposititious wager between the parties. See 2 Bl. Comm. 452. Under the reformed codes of some states issues may be framed in certain exceptional cases. In England, the practice has been disused since the passing of the stat. 8 and 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 19, permitting any court to refer any question of fact to a jury in a direct form. The act 21 and 22 Vict. c. 27, provided for trial by jury in the court of chancery.

FELAGUS. In Saxon law. One bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the felagus of the slain, in default of parents or lord. Cunningham; Cowell; Du Cange.

FIELD. A field; in composition, wild.

FELE, FEAL. L. Fr. Faithful. See Feal.

FELLATIO, or FELLATION. The offense committed with the male sexual organ and the mouth. State v. Murry, 136 La. 253, 66 So. 963. See Sodomy.

FELLOW. A co-worker; a partner or sharer of; a companion; one with whom we consort; one joined with another in some legal status or relation; a member of a college or corporate body.

FELLOW-HEIR. A co-heir; partner of the same inheritance.

When servants are employed and paid by the same master, and their duties are such as to bring them into such relation that negligence of one in doing his work may injure other in performance of his, then they are engaged in the same common business, and are "fellow servants." Hercules Powder Co. v. Hamsack, 145 Miss. 301, 110 So. 675, 677.

Convicts in involuntary servitude, having no power to refuse to enter upon the service to which they have been hired out by the state, or to quit it, are not "fellow servants." Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. v. Weir, 170 Ala. 227, 70 So. 531, 533.

FELLOW-SERVANT RULE. The rule that the master is not liable for injuries to a servant, caused by the negligence of a fellow servant engaged in the same general business, where the master has exercised due care in selection of servants. Setzkorn v. City of Buffalo, 210 App. Div. 416, 219 N. Y. S. 351, 352.

FELO DE SE. A felon of himself; a suicide or murderer of himself. One who deliberately and intentionally puts an end to his own life, or who commits some unlawful or malicious act which results in his own death. Hale, P. C. 411; 4 Bl. Comm. 180; Life Ass'n v. Waller, 57 Ga. 536.

FELON. One who has committed felony; one convicted of felony.

But a person who has committed a felony, been convicted, served his sentence, and been discharged, may be deemed, at least for some purposes, to be no longer a felon; 3 Exch. Div. 352.

FELONIA. Felony. The act or offense by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Speelman: Calvin. Per feloniam, with a criminal intention. Co. Litt. 391.

Felonia implicatur in quoddam prudiones. 3 Inst. 45. Felony is implied in every treason.

FELONICE. Feloniously. Cunningham, Law Dict. Anciently an indispensable word in indictments for felony, and classed by Lord Coke among those voces artis (words of art) which cannot be expressed by any periphrasis or circumlocution. 4 Coke, 39; Co. Litt. 301b; 4 Bl. Comm. 307.

FELONIOUS ASSAULT. Such an assault upon the person as, if consummated, would subject the party making it, upon conviction, to the punishment of a felony, that is, to imprisonment in the penitentiary. Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 565, 21 S. E. 595.

FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. The offense of killing a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse. There are two degrees of this offense, manslaughter and murder. It may include killing oneself as well as any other person. 4 Bl. Comm. 188, 190; 4 Steph. Comm. 108, 111; State v. Symmes, 40 S. C. 323, 19 S. E. 16; Connor v. Com., 76 Ky. 718; State v. Miller, 9 Houst. (Del.) 564, 32 Atl. 137.

FELONY. In English Law

This term meant originally the state of having forfeited lands and goods to the crown upon conviction for certain offenses, and then, by transition, any offense upon conviction for which such forfeiture followed, in addition to capital or any other punishment prescribed by law; as distinguished from a "misdemeanor," upon conviction for which no forfeiture followed. All indictable offenses are either felonies or misdemeanors, but a material part of the distinction is taken away by St. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 25, which abolishes forfeiture for felony. Wharton; 4 Bla. Comm. 94; 1 Russ. Cr. 78; Co. Litt. 391; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 37; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 5 L. Ed. 57; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 616.

In American Law

The term has no very definite or precise meaning, except in some cases where it is defined by statute. For the most part, the state laws, in describing any particular offense, declare whether or not it shall be considered a felony. Apart from this, the word seems merely to imply a crime of a graver or more atrocious nature than those designated as "misdemeanors." U. S. v. Copper-smith (C. C.) 4 Fed. 203; Bannon v. U. S., 156 U. S. 464, 15 Sup. Ct. 467, 39 L. Ed. 494; Mitchell v. State, 42 Ohio St. 358; State v. Lincoln, 49 N. H. 469; People v. Van Steenburgh, 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 39; Matthews v. State, 4 Ohio St. 542. In general, what is felony under the English common law is such under ours; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 617; Clark, Cr. L. 33. A crime is not a felony unless so declared by statute, or it was such at the common law; State v. Murphy, 17 R. I. 698, 24 Atl. 473, 16 R. A. D. 590.

The word "felony" is a generic term, going to distinguish certain crimes, as murder, robbery, and larceny, from other minor offenses known as "misdemeanors." State v. Celsott, 138 La. 467, 79 So. 345, 346. At common law "felony" was any crime which occasioned the forfeiture of lands and goods, but the statutory division of crimes into felonies and misdemeanors is in no sense known to the common law, and is not based upon the same distinction. People v. Comors, 301 Ill. 112, 133 N. E. 639, 640.

The statutes or constitutions of many states define felony as any public offense on conviction of which the offender is liable to be sentenced to death or to imprisonment in a penitentiary or state prison. Code Ala. 1927, § 6756 (Code 1923, § 3574); Const. Colo. art. 18, § 4; Code Ga. 1852, § 3404 (Fen. Code 1910, § 2); Code Iowa, §§ 5088, 5074 (Code 1883, §§ 12890, 12891); Ky. St. § 1127; Rev. St. Me. 1916, c. 137, § 11 (Rev. St. 1930, c. 143, § 11); Rev. Laws Mass. c. 215, § 1 (G. L. [Ter. Ed.] c. 274, § 1); Rev. St. Mo. 1909, § 4923 (Mo. St. Ann. § 4171); Penal Law N. Y. (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 2; G. S. N. C. § 4171; Gen.
Code Ohio; § 12372; St. Wis. § 553.31. But see Dutton v. State, 128 Md. 373, 91 A. 417, 419, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 616. Under U. S. Cr. Code, § 335 (18 USCA § 541), offenses punishable by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year are felonies. Joplin Mercantile Co. v. United States (C. C. A.) 213 F. 926, 935, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 470; Hass v. United Generally, an offense is a felony, if it may be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, regard-lessly of what penalty actually is imposed. Seits v. Ohio State Medical Board, 24 Ohio App. 154, 157 N. E. 304, 305; Ferguson v. State, 101 Tex. Cr. R. 670, 57 S. W. 919, 929; People v. War, 29 Cal. 117; State v. Melton, 117 Me. 618, 23 S. W. 889. See Benton v. Com., 99 Va. 570, 36 S. E. 726; State v. Harr, 38 W. Va. 58, 37 S. E. 794; contra: Lamkin v. People, 94 Ill. 501.

In Feudal Law

An act or offense on the part of the vassal, which cost him his fee, or in consequence of which his fee fell into the hands of his lord; that is, became forfeited. (See Felonia.) Perfidy, ingratitude, or disloyalty to a lord.

In General

—Felony act. The statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, abolishing forfeitures for felony, and san-tonishing the appointment of interim curators and administrators of the property of felons.
Mozley & Whitley; 4 Steph. Comm. 10, 459.

—Felony, compounding of. See Compounding Felony.

—Misprision of felony. See Misprision.

—Reducible felony. A felony upon conviction of which the offender may be punished as for a misdemeanor, upon recommendation of the jury. Atkins v. State, 154 Ga. 540, 114 S.
E. 878.

FELTING. In the process of “felting,” as applied to the manufacture of fur felt hats, the fur fibers become interlocked with the wool fibers, or with other fibers of fur, for their whole length. Matteawan Mfg. Co. v. Em-mons Bros. Co. (C. C. A.) 250 F. 372, 375. See, also, Werk v. Parker (C. C. A.) 231 F. 121, 129.

FEMALE. The sex which conceives and gives birth to young. Also a member of such sex.
The term is generic, but may have the specific meaning of “woman,” if so indicated by the context. State v. Hemm, 82 Iowa, 609, 48
N. W. 917; State v. Phillips, 26 N. D. 206, Cas. 1916A, 529.

Unmarried Female

A term descriptive not only of those who have never married, but also of widows and divorced women. People v. Weinstock, 140
N. Y. S. 463, 465, 27 N. Y. Cr. R. 53.

FEME, FEMME. L. Fr. A woman. Also, a wife, as in the phrase “baron et feme” (q. v.).

FEME COVERT. A married woman. Generally used in reference to the legal disabilities of a married woman, as compared with the condition of a feme sole. Hoker v. Buggs, 43 Ill.
161.

FEME SOLE. A single woman, including those who have been married, but whose mar-rriage has been dissolved by death or divorce, and, for most purposes, those women who are judicially separated from their husbands.
Mozley & Whitley; 2 Steph. Comm. 250.
Kirkley v. Lacey, 7 Houst. (Del.) 213, 30 Atl.
984.

FEME SOLE TRADER. In English law. A married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called because, with respect to her trading, she is the same as a feme sole. Jacob; Cro. Car. 68. The term is applied also to women deserted by their husbands, who do business as feme sole.
Rhea v. Rheenner, 1 Pet. 105, 7 L. Ed. 72.
The custom was recognized as common law in South Carolina, but did not extend beyond trading in merchandise; McDaniel v. Cornwell, 1 Hill (S. C.) 429; Newbiggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay (S. C.) 154. By statute in several states a similar custom is recognized, as in Pennsylvania, by act of Feb. 22, 1785 (48 PS § 41).
Black v. Tricker, 59 Pa. 13; People’s Sav.

FEMICIDE. The killing of a woman. Wharton. One who kills a woman.

FEMININE. Of or belonging to females.

FENATIO (or Feonatio). In forest law.
the fawning of deer; the fawning season.
Spelman.

FENCE, v. In old Scotch law. To defend or protect by formalities. To “fence a court” was to open it in due form, and interdict all manner of persons from disturbing their proceedings. This was called “fencing,” q. d., de-defending or protecting the court. Pitcairn, Cr.
Law, pt. 1, p. 75.

FENCE, n. A hedge, structure, or partition, erected for the purpose of inclosing a piece of land, or to divide a piece of land into distinct portions, or to separate two contiguous estates. See Kimball v. Carter, 95 Va. 77, 27
S. E. 823, 38 L. R. A. 570; Estes v. Railroad
Co., 63 Me. 309; Allen v. Tobias, 77 Ill.
171; Wolf v. Schwill, 289 Ill. 190, 124 N. E.
207 S. W. 913, 914.

An inclosure about a field or other place, or about any object; especially, an inclosing structure of wood, iron or other material, intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.
Midland Valley R. Co. v. Bryant, 37 Okl. Cr. 206, 131 P. 678.
By statute in Oregon, all precipes, embankments, streams, lakes, and other natural obstruction, if equally secured against the trespass of domestic animals, shall be treated as lawful fences. Seavey v. Williams, 57 Or. 299, 191 P. 779, 781.

Colloquially, a person who receives stolen goods from persons who steal them. People v. Boneau, 327 Ill. 194, 158 N. E. 431, 436.

FENCE-MONTH, or DEFENSE-MONTH. In old English law. A period of time, occurring in the middle of summer, during which it was unlawful to hunt deer in the forest, that being their fawning season. Probably so called because the deer were then defended from pursuit or hunting. Manwood; Cowell; Spelman.

FERATION. Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending. Sometimes applied to interest on money lent. See Colebrook, Dig. Hindu Law, I. 7.

FENGELD. In Saxon law. A tax or imposition, exacted for the repelling of enemies. Spelman.

FENIAN. A champion, hero, giant. This word, in the plural, is generally used to signify invaders or foreign spoliators. The modern meaning of “Fenian” is a member of an organization of persons of Irish birth, resident in the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, having for its aim the overthrow of English rule in Ireland. Webster.

FEOD. The same as feud or ref. 2 Bla. Comm. 45; Spelman.

FEODAL. Belonging to a fee or feud; feudal. More commonly used by the old writers than feud.

FEODAL ACTIONS. Real actions. 3 Bla. Comm. 117.

FEODAL SYSTEM. See Feudal System.

FEODALITY. Fidelity or fealty. Cowell. See Fealty.

FEODARUM (or FEUDARAM) CONSUETUDINES. The customs of feuds. The name of a compilation of feudal laws and customs made at Milan in the twelfth century. It is the most ancient work on the subject, and was always regarded, on the continent of Europe, as possessing the highest authority.

FEODARY. An officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, under Sec. VIII, c. 26, whose business it was to be present with the escheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give evidence for the king, as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the land of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He also assigned the king's widows their dower; and received all the rents, etc. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24. Wharton; Kennett, Gloss; Cowell.

FEODATORY, or FEUDATORY. In feudal law. The grantee of a feud, feud, or fee; the vassal or tenant who held his estate by feudal service. Termes de la Ley. Blackstone uses “feudatory.” 2 Bl. Comm. 46.

FEODI FIRMA. In old English law. Fee-farm (q. v.).

FEODI FIRMARIUS. The lessee of a fee-farm.

FEODUM. This word (meaning a feud or fee) is the one most commonly used by the older English law-writers, though its equivalent, “feudum” (q. v.), is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law-writers. Litt. § 1; Spelman. There were various classes of feoda, among which may be enumerated the following: Feodum latum, a lay fee. Feodum militare, a knight's fee. Feodum improprium, an improper or derivative fee. Feodum proprium, a proper and original fee, regulated by the strict rules of feudal succession and tenure. Feodum simplex, a simple or pure fee; fee-simple. Feodum tallitum, a fee-tall. See 2 Bl. Comm. 58, 62; Litt. §§ 1, 13; Bract. fol. 175; Glan. 13, 23.

In Old English Law

A seigniory or jurisdiction. Flet, lib. 2, c. 63, § 4.

A fee, a perquisite or compensation for a service. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 7.

In General

—Feodum antiquum. A feud which devolved upon a vassal from his intestate ancestor.

—Feodum nobile. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed homage. Spelman.

—Feodum novum. A feud acquired by a vassal himself.

Feodum est quod quasi tenet ex quacunque causa sit tenementum sive redditus. Co. Litt. 1. A fee is that which any one holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent.

Feodum simplex quia feodum idem est quod hereditas, et simplex idem est quod legitimum vel purum; et sic feodum simplex idem est quod hereditas legitima vel hereditas pura. Litt. § 1. A fee-simple, so called because fee is the same as inheritance, and simple is the same as lawful or pure; and thus fee-simple is the same as a lawful inheritance, or pure inheritance.

Feodum talliatum, l. e., hereditas in quandam certitudinem limitata. Litt. § 13. Fee-tail, f. e., an inheritance limited in a definite descent.

FEOFFAMENTUM. A fee-offment. 2 Bl. Comm. 310.

FEOFFARE. To enfeof; to bestow a fee. The bestower was called "feofer," and the grantee or feoffee, "feoffatus." 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 91.

FEOFFATORE. In old English law. A feoffor or feoffor; one who gives or bestows a fee; one who makes a feoffment. Bract. fols. 128, 81.

FEOFFATUS. In old English law. A feoffee; one to whom a fee is given, or a feoffment made. Bract. fols. 179, 416.

FEOFFEE. He to whom a fee is conveyed. Litt. § 1; 2 Bl. Comm. 20.

FEOFFEE TO USES. A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. (The latter was called "cestui que use.") One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 333. He answers to the hares fiduciaries of the Roman law.

FEOFFMENT. The gift of any corporeal hereditament to another (2 Bl. Comm. 310), operating by transmission of possession, and requiring, as essential to its completion, that the seisin be passed (Warb. Conv. 180), which, might be accomplished either by investiture or by livery of seisin. 1 Warb. Real Prop. 33. See Thatcher v. Omans, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 532; French v. French, 3 N. H. 260; Perry v. Price, 1 Mo. 554; Orndoff v. Turman, 2 Leigh (Va.) 233, 21 Am. Dec. 608. A gift of a freehold interest in land accompanied by livery of seisin. The essential part is the livery of seisin. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 187.

Also the deed or conveyance by which such corporeal hereditament is passed.

A feoffment originally meant the grant of a feu or fee; that is, a barony or knight's fee, for which certain services were due from the feoffee to the feoffor. This was the proper sense of the word; but by custom it came afterwards to signify also a grant (with livery of seisin) of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs, referring rather to the perpetuity of the estate than to the feudal tenure. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 90, 91. It was for ages the only method (in ordinary use) for conveying the freehold of land in possession, but has now fallen in great measure into disuse, even in England, having been almost entirely supplanted by some of that class of conveyances founded on the statute law of the realm. 1 Steph. Comm. 467, 468; Dane, Abr. c. 194; Sterne, Real Act. 2; Green v. Leter, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 239, 3 L. Ed. 545.

FEOFFMENT TO USES. A fee-offment of lands to one person to the use of another. In such case the feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the lands according to the use, and could himself derive no benefit. Sometimes such feoffments were made to the use of the feoffor. The effect of such conveyance was entirely changed by the statute of uses. See Wm. R. P. (6th Ed.) 155; 2 Sand. Us. 13; Warb. Conv. 288.

FEOFFOR. The person making a feoffment, or enfeofing another in fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 310; Litt. §§ 1, 57.

FEOH. This Saxon word meant originally cattle, and thence property or money, and, by a second transition, wages, reward, or fee. It was probably the original form from which the words "feod," "feudum," "fief," "feu," and "fee" (all meaning a feudal grant of land) have been derived. Spelman, Feuds.

FEONATIO. In forest law. The fawning season of deer.

FEORME. A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter. Spel. Feuds, c. 7.

FER/ß BESTi/E. Wild beasts.

FER/ß NATURÆ. Lat. Of a wild nature or disposition. Animals which are by nature wild are so designated, by way of distinction from such as are naturally tame, the latter being called "domita naturæ." Fleet v. Hegeman, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 43; State v. Taylor, 27 N. J. Law, 119, 72 Am. Dec. 347; Gillet v. Mason, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 17.

FERCOSTA. Ital. A kind of small vessel or boat. Mentioned in old Scotch law, and called "fercost." Skene.

FERDELÆ TERRÆ. A fardel-land; ten acres; or perhaps a yard-land. Cowell.

FERDÆRE. Sax. A summons to serve in the army. An acquittance from going into the army. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 23.

FERDINGUS. A term denoting, apparently, a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotessi. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FERDWITE. In Saxon law. An acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition. Cowell.

FERIA. In old English law. A holiday; a day on which process could not be served; a fair; a ferry. Cowell; Du Cange; Spelman; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 17.

FERIÆ. In Roman law. Holidays; generally speaking, days or seasons during which free-born Romans suspended their political transactions and their lawsuits, and during which slaves enjoyed a cessation from labor. All feria were thus dies nefasti. All feria were divided into two classes—"feriae publicae" and "feriae private." The latter were only observed by single families or individuals, in commemoration of some particular event which had been of importance to them or their ancestors. Smith, Dict. Antiq.

Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman Empire. In the later Roman Empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called. Du Cange.

FERIAL DAYS. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading; holidays. In statute 27 Hen. VI. c. 5, working-days; weekdays, as distinguished from Sunday. Cowell.

FERITA. In old European law. A wound; a stroke. Spelman.

FERLING. In old records. The fourth part of a penny; also the quarter of a ward in a borough.

FERLINGATA. A fourth part of a yardland.

FERLINGUS, or FERLINGUM. A furlong. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FERM, or FEARM. A house or land, or both, let by lease. Cowell.

FERME. A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease. Plowd. 365; Vicat; Cowell. See Farm.

FERMENTED LIQUORS. Beverages produced by, or which have undergone, a process of alcoholic fermentation, to which they owe their intoxicating properties, including beer, wine, hard cider, and the like, but not spirituous or distilled liquors. State v. Lemp, 16 Mo. 391; State v. Biddle, 64 N. H. 385; People v. Foster, 64 Mich. 715, 31 N. W. 596; State v. Gill, 89 Minn. 562, 95 N. W. 449; State v. Adams, 53 N. H. 568; People v. Emmons, 175 Mich. 123, 144 N. W. 479, 481, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 425.

FERMER, FERMOR. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

FERMIER. In French law. One who farms any public revenue.

FERMISONA. In old English law. The winter season for killing deer.

FERMORY. In old records. A place in monasteries, where they received the poor, (hospicio excipiebant,) and gave them provisions, (ferm, firma.) Spelman. Hence the modern infirmary, used in the sense of a hospital.

FERNIGO. In old English law. A waste ground, or place where fern grows. Cowell.

FERRATOR. A farrier (q. v.).

FERRI. In the civil law. To be borne; that is on or about the person. This was distinguished from portari, (to be carried,) which signified to be carried on an animal. Dig. 50, 16, 235.

FERRAGIAE. The toll or fare paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry.

Literally speaking, it is the price or fare fixed by law for the transportation of the traveling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake. People v. San Francisco & A. R. Co., 53 Cal. 606.

FERRUERE, or FERRURA. The shoeing of horses. Kelham. See Ferrum.

FERRY. A liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised. See New York v. Starn, 8 N. Y. St. Rep. 655; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 681, 55 Am. Rep. 633; Einstman v. Black, 14 Ill. App. 381; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; State v. Freeholders of Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206; Woolf. Ways 217. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised; Chapelle v. Wells, 4 Mart. La. (N. S.) 426.

"Ferry" properly means a place of transit across a river or arm of the sea; but in law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river, or arm of the sea, from one vili to another, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another. It is not a servitude or easement. It is wholly unconnected with the ownership or occupation of land, so much so that the owner of the ferry need not have any property in the soil adjacent on either side. (12 C. B., N. S., 32.) Brown.

In a strict sense a ferry is a continuation of a highway from one side of the water to the other and is for the transportation of passengers, vehicles and other property; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Starn, 196 N. Y. 11, 22 N. E. 561; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633; Chesapeake Ferry Co. v. Hampton Roads Transp. Co., 145 Va. 28, 133 S. E. 561, 563.

A ferry is an incorporeal hereditament acquired from the public, and, in this country, granted by a special act of the Legislature, or by some other competent authority under the provisions of a general law. It comprises not merely the exclusive privilege of transportation, for tolls, across a stream or other body of water, but also the use for that purpose of the respective landings, with the outlets therefrom; without which the grant would be wholly nugatory. It is usually established upon some public road, of which it is a connecting link; but the landings may be altogether private property, in which case the grant supposes that they belong to the grantees, or that he is entitled to the use thereof for the purposes of the ferry. In either case, the use of the landings and outlets is a part of the franchise, so far as the public is concerned. If they constitute portions of the highway, as they do where the ferry is on a duly established road, then the grant is a delegation of the use of the public easement, so far as is necessary for the purposes of the ferry. Hale v. Record, 74 Oklt. 77, 176 P. 755, 757.

Public and Private

A public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, for which a regular fare is established, and the ferryman is a common carrier, bound to take over all who apply, and bound to keep his ferry in operation and good repair. Hudspeth v. Hall, 111 Ga. 510, 38 S. E. 770; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 691, 55 Am. Rep. 835. By statute in some states, all ferries upon any public navigable stream shall be deemed public ferries. Kirby's Dig. § 3565; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Harrison, 140 Ark. 158, 215 S. W. 698. A private ferry is one mainly for the use of the owner, and though he may take pay for ferriage, he does not follow it as a business. His ferry is not open to the public at its demand, and he may or may not keep it in operation. Hudspeth v. Hall, supra; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Harrison, 140 Ark. 158, 215 S. W. 698.

FERRY FRANCHISE. The public grant of a right to maintain a ferry at a particular place; a right conferred to land at a particular point and secure toll for the transportation of persons and property from that point across the stream. Mills v. St. Clair County, 7 Ill. 208. A grant by the state or its authorized subdivisions to a named person, empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over interrupting waters. Ferry Co. v. Solano Aquatic Club, Vallejo, 165 Cal. 255, 131 P. 584, 871, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1197.

FERRYBOAT. A vessel traversing any of the waters of the state between two constant points regularly employed for the transfer of passengers and freight, authorized by law so to do, and also any boat employed as a part of the system of a railroad for the transfer of passengers and freight plying at regular and stated periods between two points. Pol. Code Cal. § 3643; Lake Tahoe Ry. & Transp. Co. v. Roberts, 168 Cal. 571, 142 P. 786, 789, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1196.

FERRYMAN. One employed in taking persons across a river or other stream, in boats or other contrivances, at a ferry. Covington Ferry Co. v. Moore, 8 Dana (Ky.) 158; State v. Clarke, 2 McCord (S. C.) 48, 18 Am. Dec. 701.

FESTA IN CAPPIS. In old English law. Grand holidays, on which choirs wore caps. Jacob.

Festinatio justicie est nevera infortunii. Hob. 37. Hasty justice is the stepmother of misfortune.

FESTING-MAN. In old English law. A bondsman; a surety; a frank-pledge, or one who was surety for the good behavior of another. Monasteries enjoyed the privilege of being "free from festing-men," which means that they were "not bound for any man's forthcoming who should transgress the law." Cowell. See Frank-Pledge.

FESTING-PENNY. Earnest given to servants when hired or retained. The same as aries-penny. Cowell.

FESTINUM REMEDIA. Lat. A speedy remedy. A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. Bacon, Abr. Assiss, A. The action of dower is festinum remedium. The writ of assise was also thus characterised (in comparison with the less expeditious remedies previously available) by the statute of Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I. c. 24.)

FESTUCA. In Frankish law. A rod or staff of (as described by other writers) a stick, on which imprecatory runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans. 2 Poll. & Maist. 88, 184, 190; Maistl. Domestay Book and Beyond 323. *

FESTUM. A feast, holiday, or festival. Festum stiliorum, the feast of fools.

FETICIDE. In medical jurisprudence. Destruction of the fetus; the act by which criminal abortion is produced. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288; Guy, Med. Jur. 133. See, also, Prolificide.

FETTERS. Chains or shackles for the feet; irons used to secure the legs of convicts, unruly prisoners, etc. Similar chains securing the wrists are called "handcuffs."

FEU. In Scotch law. A holding or tenure where the vassal, in place of military service, makes his return in grain or money. Distinguished from "wardship," which is the military tenure of the country. Bell; Erskine, Inst. lib. ii. tit. 3, § 7.

FEU ANNUALS. In Scotch law. The redendo, or annual return from the vassal to a superior in a feu holding. Wharton, Dict., 2d Lond. Ed.

FEU HOLDING. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service. Bell.

FEUAR. In Scotch law. The tenant or vassal of a feu; a feu-vassal. Bell.

FEUD. In Feudal Law

An estate in land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bl. Comm. 105.

An inheritable right to the use and occupation of lands, held on condition of rendering services to the lord or proprietor, who himself retains the property in the lands. See Speel. Feuds, c. 1.

In this sense the word is the same as “feod,” “feodium,” “feudum,” “tieff,” or “fee.” 1 Sullivan, Lect. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 34; Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 90; 1 Washb. R. P. 18; Mitch. R. 80.

In Saxon and Old German Law

An enmity, or species of private war, existing between the family of a murdered man and the family of his slayer. In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley; Whishaw. See Deadly Feud; Frailda.

Military Feuds

The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

FEUDA. Feuds or fees.

FEUDAL. Pertaining to feuds or fees; relating to or growing out of the feudal system or feudal law; having the quality of a feud, as distinguished from “allodial.”

FEUDAL ACTIONS. An ancient name for real actions, or such as concern real property only. 3 Bl. Comm. 117.

FEUDAL COURTS. In the 12th century a lord qua lord, had the right to hold a court for his tenants; in the 13th century, they became of less importance and for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king’s court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appantant to landowning. 1 Holdew. Hist. E. L. 64.

FEUDAL LAW. The body of jurisprudence relating to feuds; the real-property law of the feudal system; the law anciently regulating the property relations of lord and vassal, and the creation, incidents, and transmission of feudal estates. The body of laws and usages constituting the “feudal law” was originally customary and unwritten, but a compilation was made in the twelfth century, called “Feodarum Constutudines,” which has formed the basis of later digests. The feudal law prevailed over Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth century, and was introduced into England at the Norman Conquest, where it formed the entire basis of the law of real property until comparatively modern times. Survivals of the feudal law, to the present day, so affect and color that branch of jurisprudence as to require a certain knowledge of the feudal law in order to the perfect comprehension of modern tenures and rules of real-property law.

FEUDAL POSSESSION. The equivalent of “seisin” under the feudal system.

FEUDAL SYSTEM. The system of feuds. A political and social system which prevailed throughout Europe during the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and is supposed to have grown out of the peculiar usages and policy of the Teutonic nations who overrun the continent after the fall of the Western Roman Empire, as developed by the exigencies of their military domination, and possibly furthered by notions taken from the Roman jurisprudence. It was introduced into England, in its completeness, by William I., A.D. 1066, though it may have existed in a rudimentary form among the Saxons before the Conquest. It formed the entire basis of the real-property law of England in medieval times; and survivals of the system, in modern times, so modify and color that branch of jurisprudence, both in England and America, that many of its principles require for their complete understanding a knowledge of the feudal system. The feudal system originated in the relations of a military chieftain and his followers, or king and nobles, or lord and vassals, and especially their relations as determined by the bond established by a grant of land from the former to the latter. From this it grew into a complete and intricate complex of rules for the tenure and transmission of real estate, and of correlated duties and services; while, by tying men to the land and to those holding above and below them, it created a close-knit hierarchy of persons, and[] Esprit des Lois, bk. 30; Gutzot, Hist. Civilization.

FEUDAL TENURES. The tenures of real estate under the feudal system, such as knight-service, socage, villenage, etc.

FEUDALISM. The feudal system; the aggregate of feudal principles and usages.

FEUDALIZE. To reduce to a feudal tenure; to conform to feudalism. Webster.

FEUDARY. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure, (also spelled "feodatory" and "feudatory.") Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures.

FEUDBOTE. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent. It having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel. Jacob.

FEUDE. An occasional early form of "feud" in the sense of private war or vengeance. Termes de la Ley. See Feud.

FEUDIST. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius, Spelman, etc.

FEUDO. In Spanish law. Feud or fee. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 2.

FEUDORUM LIBRI. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III., about the year 1252. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about that time to be the standard of authority to other nations, by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind. 2 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law, 55.

FEUDUM. l. Lat. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. Spelman. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land. This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feodum. There was an older word feum.

Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. "Feudal" was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land. Maiti, Someday Book and Beyond 182.

FEUDUM ANTIQUUM. An ancient feud or fief; a fief descended to the vassal from his ancestors. 2 Bl. Comm. 212, 221. A fief which ancestors had possessed for more than four generations. Spelman; Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 349.

FEUDUM APERTUM. An open feud or fief; a fief resulting back to the lord, where the blood of the person last seised was utterly extinct and gone or where the tenant committed a crime, or gave other legal cause. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 245.

FEUDUM FRANCUM. A free feud. One which was noble and free from tallage and other subsidies to which the plebeis feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject. Spelman.

FEUDUM HAUBERTICUM. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arriere ban. Spelman.

FEUDUM IMPROPRIMUM. An improper or derivative feud or fief. 2 Bl. Comm. 58.

FEUDUM INDIVIDUUM. An indivisible or inaparable feud or fief; descendible to the eldest son alone. 2 Bl. Comm. 215.

FEUDUM LAICUM. A lay fee.

FEUDUM LIGIUM. A liege feud or fief; a fief held immediately of the sovereign; one for which the vassal owed fealty to his lord against all persons. 1 Bl. Comm. 367; Spelman.

FEUDUM MATERNUM. A maternal fief; a fief descended to the feudality from his mother. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

FEUDUM MILITARE. A knight's fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bla. Comm. 62.

FEUDUM NOBILE. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. Spelman.

FEUDUM NOVUM. A new feud or fief; a fief which began in the person of the feudality, and did not come to him by succession. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 212; Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 349.

FEUDUM NOVUM UT ANTIQUUM. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bl. Comm. 212.

FEUDUM PATERNUM. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. Culvin.; Spelman. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bl. Comm. 223. One which might be held by males only. Du Cange.

FEUDUM PROPRIUM. A proper, genuine, and original feud or fief; being of a purely military character, and held by military service. 2 Bl. Comm. 57, 58.

FEUDUM TALLIATUM. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bl. Comm. 112, note; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 66; Spelman.
FEUM. An older form of feu dem. Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 162.

FF. A Latin abbreviation for "Fragmenta," designating the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian; so called because that work is made up of fragments or extracts from the writings of numerous jurists. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 74.

FI. FA. An abbreviation for fieri facias, (which see.)

FIANCER. L. Fr. To pledge one's faith. Kelham.

FIANZA. Sp. In Spanish law, trust, confidence, and correlative a legal duty or obligation arising therefrom. The term is sufficiently broad in meaning to include both a general obligation and a restricted liability under a single instrument. Martinez v. Runkle, 57 N. J. Law, 111, 50 A. 553. But in a special sense, it designates a surety or guarantor, or the contract or engagement of suretyship; the contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfill the obligations of another if the latter should fail to do so.

FIAR. In Scotch law. He that has the fee or feu. The proprietor is termed "flair," in contradistinction to the life renter. 1 Kames, Eq. Pref. One whose property is charged with a life-rent. Where a right is taken to a husband and wife in conjunct fee and life-rent, the husband, as the persona dignior, is the only flair. Ersk. Prin. 421.

FIARS PRICES. The value of grain in the different counties of Scotland, fixed yearly by the respective sheriffs, in the month of February, with the assistance of jurists. These regulate the prices of grain stipulated to be sold at the flour prices, or when no price has been stipulated. Ersk. 1, 4, 6.

FIAT. (Lat. "Let it be done.") In English practice. A short order or warrant of a judge or magistrate directing some act to be done; an authority issuing from some competent source for the doing of some legal act. See 1 Tidd Fr. 100.

One of the proceedings in the English bankrupt practice, being a power, signed by the lord chancellor, addressed to the court of bankruptcy, authorizing the petitioning creditor to prosecute his complaint before it. 2 Steph. Comm. 199. By the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 116, flats were abolished.

-Fiat justitiae. Let justice be done. On a petition to the king for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition, "Fiat justitiae," and then the writ of error is made out, etc. Jacob.

-Fiat ut petitur. Let it be done as it is asked. A form of granting a petition.

-Joint fiat. In English law. A fiat in bankruptcy, issued against two or more trading partners.

Flat justitiae, rust colenum. Let right be done, though the heavens should fail. Branch, Prin. 161.

Fiat prout fieri consuevit, (all tamen nevandum.) Let it be done as it hath used to be done, (nothing must be rashly innovated.) Jenk. Cent. 116, case 80; Branch, Prin.

FIAUNT. An order; command. See Fiat.

FICTION. In Roman law. A fiction; an assumption or supposition of the law.

"Fictio" in the old Roman law was properly a term of pleading, and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse, as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction. Maine, Anc. Law, 25.

Fictio cedit veritati. Fictio juris non est ubi veritas. Fiction yields to truth. Where there is truth, fiction of law exists not. 11 Co. 61.

Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur. Fiction is against the truth, but it is to be esteemed true.

Fictio juris non est ubi veritas. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

Fictio legum unice operatur alieus damnum vel injuriam. A legal fiction does not properly work loss or injury. 2 Coke, 35; 3 Coke, 36; Broom, Max. 129; Gilb. 223. Fiction of law is wrongful if it works loss or injury to anyone.

Fictio legum neminem lends. A fiction of law injures no one. 2 Rolle, 502; 3 Bl. Comm. 43; Low v. Little, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348.

FICTION. An assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place. New Hampshire Strafford Bank v. Corneli, 2 N. H. 324; Hibberd v. Smith, 57 Cal. 457, 4 P. 476, 56 Am. Rep. 720; Murphy v. Murphy, 190 Iowa, 874, 179 N. W. 530, 533. An assumption, for purposes of justice, of a fact that does not or may not exist. - Dodo v. Stocker, 74 Colo. 295, 219 P. 222, 223.

A rule of law which assumes as true, and will not allow to be disproved, something which is false, but not impossible. Best, Ky. 419.

These assumptions are of an innocent or even beneficial character, and are made for the advancement of the ends of justice. They secure this end chiefly by the extension of procedure from cases to which it is applicable to other cases to which it is not strictly applicable, the ground of inapplicability being some difference of an immaterial character. Brown.

Fictions are to be distinguished from presumptions of law. By the former, something known to be false or unreal is assumed as true; by the latter, an inference is set up, which may be and probably is true, but which, at any rate, the law will not permit to be controverted. It may also be said that a presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.

Fictions are also to be distinguished from estoppels; an estoppel being the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

Best distinguishes legal fictions from presumptions juris et de jure, and divides them into three kinds,—affirmative or positive fictions, negative fictions, and fictions by fiction, and fictions by relation. Best, Pera p. 27, § 24.

FICTITIOUS ACTION. An action brought for the sole purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law, not for the settlement of any actual controversy between the parties. Smith v. Junction Ry. Co., 29 Ind. 531.

FICTITIOUS NAME. A counterfeit, feigned, or pretended name taken by a person, differing in some essential particular from his true name, (consisting of Christian name and patronymic) with the implication that it is meant to deceive or mislead. But a fictitious name may be used so long or under such circumstances as to become an "assumed" name, in which case it may become a proper designation of the individual for ordinary business and legal purposes. See Pollard v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co., 1 S. D. 370, 47 N. W. 1060; Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 26 P. 587; Ray v. American Photo Player Co., 46 Cal. App. 311, 189 P. 180, 181; Mangan v. Schuykill County, 279 Pa. 340, 116 A. 920, 921.

FICTITIOUS PAYEE. A fictitious person who, though named in a note, has no right to it or to its proceeds, because it was not so intended when the note was executed. Sockland v. Storch, 123 Ark. 253, 185 S. W. 262, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 658. The term may include one who, although named as payee in a negotiable instrument, and although a real or existing person, has no right to it, the maker not intending that such payee shall take anything by it; "fictitiousness" depending on the intention to pay, rather than on the payee's existence. Norton v. City Bank & Trust Co. (C. C. A.) 294 F. 839, 844; Mueller v. Martin v. Liberty Ins. Bank, 187 Ky. 44, 218 S. W. 465, 466.

FICTITIOUS PLAINТIFF. A person appearing in the writ or record as the plaintiff in a suit, but who in reality does not exist, or who is ignorant of the suit and of the use of his name in it. It is a contempt of court to sue in the name of a fictitious party. See 4 Bl. Comm. 134.

FICTITIOUS PROMISE. See Promise.

FIDE-COMMISSARY. A term derived from the Latin "fidel-commissarius," and occasionally used by writers on equity jurisprudence as a substitute for the law French term "cestui que trust," as being more elegant and euphonious. See Brown v. Brown, 38 Hun, 160, 31 N. Y. S. 650.

FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS. In the civil law this term corresponds nearly to our "cestui que trust." It designates a person who has the real or beneficial interest in an estate or fund, the title or administration of which is temporarily confided to another. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 908; 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 295.

According to Du Cange, the term was sometimes used to denote the executor of a will.

FIDEI-COMMISSUM. In the civil law. A species of trust; being a gift of property (usually by will) to a person, accompanied by a request or direction of the donor that the recipient will transfer the property to another, the latter being a person not capable of taking directly under the will or gift. In re Courtin, 144 La. 971, 81 So. 457, 459; Succession of Reilly, 136 La. 347, 67 So. 27, 33; Succession of Manthey, 159 La. 743, 106 So. 298, 299; Succession of Hall, 141 La. 860, 75 So. 802, 803. See, further, Succession of Maginnis, 138 La. 815, 104 So. 726, 727; Succession of Meunier, 52 La. Ann. 79, 26 So. 776, 45 L. R. A. 77; Gortari v. Cantu, 7 Tex. 44.

FIDE-JUBERE. In the civil law. To order a thing upon one's faith; to pledge one's self; to become surety for another. Fide-jubet Fide-jubeo: Do you pledge yourself? I do pledge myself. Inst. 3, 16, 1. One of the forms of stipulation.
FIDE-JUSSIO

An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety. Vleat, Voc. Jur.; Halifax, Annals, b. 2, c. 16, n. 10.

FIDE-JUSSOR. In Roman law. A guarantor; one who becomes responsible for the payment of another’s debt, by a stipulation which binds him to discharge it if the principal debtor fails to do so. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 452; 3 Bl. Comm. 108. He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfill his engagement; Dig, 12, 4, 4; 16, 1, 13; 24, 3, 64; 38, 1, 37; 59, 17, 110; 6, 14, 20; Hall, Pr. 33; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 306; Clerke, Prax. tit. 63.

The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. Lees. Eliz. § 872; Code Naps. 292.

The sureties taken on the arrest of a defendant, in the court of admiralty, were formerly denominated “fide jussor.” 3 Bl. Comm. 108.

FIDE-PROMISSOR. See Fide-Jussor.

FIDELITAS. Fealty; fidelity. See Fealty.

Fidelitas. De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum, fit homagi; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum. Co. Litt. 670. Fealty. For no tenement which is held for a term is there the oath of homage, but there is the oath of fealty.

FIDELITY INSURANCE. See Insurance.

FIDEM MENTIRI. Lat. To betray faith or fealty. A term used in feudal and old English law of a feodary or feudal tenant who does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord. Leg. Hen. I. c. 53.

FIDES. Lat. Faith; honesty; confidence; trust; veracity; honor. Occurring in the phrases “bona fides,” (good faith), “mauia fides,” (bad faith), and “uberrima fides,” (the utmost or most abundant good faith.)

FIDES FACTA. Among the Franks and Lombards undertakings were guaranteed by “making one’s faith”—fides facta. This was symbolized by such formal acts as the giving of a rod; in suretyship giving the “festuca” or “vadium.” 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 73.

Fides est obligatio conscientiae aliquius ad intentionem alterius. Bacon. A trust is an obligation of conscience of one to the will of another.

Fides servanda est. Faith must be observed. An agent must not violate the confidence reposed in him. Story, Ag. § 192; Coolidge v. Brigham, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 551; McCoy v. Arter, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 523; Paul v. Hadley, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 521.

Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium prevaleat. Faith must be kept; the simplicity of the law of nations must prevail. A rule applied to bills of exchange as a sort of sacred instruments. 3 Burrows, 1672; Story, Bills § 15.

FIDUCIA. In Roman law. An early form of mortgage or pledge, in which both the title and possession of the property were passed to the creditor by a formal act of sale, (properly with the solemnities of the transaction known as mancipatio,) there being at the same time an express or implied agreement on the part of the creditor to reconvey the property by a similar act of sale provided the debt was duly paid; but on default of payment, the property became absolutely vested in the creditor without foreclosure and without any right of redemption. In course of time, this form of security gave place to that known as hypotethca, while the contemporary contract of pignus or pawn underwent a corresponding development. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 384; Tomk. & J. Mod. Rom. Law, 182; Hadley, Rom. Law, 201-203; Pothier, Pand. tit. “Fiducia.”

FIDUCIAL. An adjective having the same meaning as “fiducial;” as, in the phrase “public or fiducial office.” Ky. St. § 3752; Moss v. Rowlett, 112 Ky. 121, 65 S. W. 153.

FIDUCIARIUS HÆRES. See Fiduciary Heir.

FIDUCIARIUS TUTOR. In Roman law. The elder brother of an emancipated pupillus, whose father had died leaving him still under fourteen years of age.

FIDUCIARY. The term is derived from the Roman law, and means (as a noun) a person holding the character of a trustee, or a character analogous to that of a trustee, in respect to the trust and confidence involved in it and the scrupulous good faith and candor which it requires. Thus, a person is a fiduciary who is invested with rights and powers to be exercised for the benefit of another person. Swan v. Jurgens, 144 Ill. 507, 35 N. E. 955; Stoll v. King, 8 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 299.

As an adjective it means of the nature of a trust; having the characteristics of a trust; analogous to a trust; relating to or founded upon a trust or confidence.

FIDUCIARY CAPACITY. One is said to act in a “fiduciary capacity” or to receive money or contract a debt in a “fiduciary capacity,” when the business which he transacts, or the money or property which he handles, is not his own or for his own benefit, but for the benefit of another person, as to whom he stands in a relation implying and necessitating great confidence and trust on the one part.
and a high degree of good faith on the other part. The term is not restricted to technical or express trusts, but includes also such offices or relations as those of an attorney at law, a guardian, executor, or broker, a director of a corporation, and a public officer. Quoted with approval in Templeton v. Bockler, 73 Or. 494, 144 P. 465, 409. See, also, In re Bloemcote (D. C.) 265 F. 343, 344; Glover v. National Bank of Commerce of New York, 141 N. Y. 409, 414, 156 App. Div. 247; Schudder v. Shields, 17 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 420; Roberts v. Prosser, 53 N. Y. 260; Hef- tren v. Jayne, 39 Ind. 465, 13 Am. Rep. 281; Flanagan v. Pearson, 42 Tex. 1, 19 Am. Rep. 40; Forker v. Brown, 36 N. Y. 827, 10 Misc. Rep. 161; Madison Tp. v. Dunkle, 114 Ind. 292, 16 N. E. 593. As used in the Bank ruptruptcy Act, § 17, subj. 4 (11 USCA § 35), however, the term imports a technical trust, actually and expressly constituted, and not such merely as the law implies, and has no application to debts or obligations merely because they were created under circumstances in which trust or confidence in the popular sense of those terms was reposed in debtor. Culp v. Robey (Tex. Civ. App.) 294 S. W. 647, 651; American Surety Co. of New York v. Spice, 119 Md. 1, 85 A. 1061, 1035; First Nat. Bank v. Bamforth, 90 Vt. 75, 96 A. 609, 602; American Agricultural Chemical Co. v. Berry, 110 Mo. 528, 87 A. 218, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1293.

FIDUCIARY DEBT. A debt founded on or arising from some confidence or trust, as distinguished from a debt founded simply on contract. In re Steele-Smith Dry Goods Co. (D. C.) 298 P. 812, 815.

FIDUCIARY HEIR. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament. Merlin, Répart. But Pothier, Pand. vol. 22, says that fiduciarius hæres properly signifies the person to whom a testator has sold his inheritance under the condition that he should sell it to another.

FIDUCIARY OR CONFIDENTIAL RELATION. One founded on trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another. Kerrigan v. O'Meara, 71 Mont. 1, 227 P. 819, 821. The term is a very broad one. It is said that the relation exists, and that relief is granted in all cases in which influence has been acquired and abused, in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The origin of the confidence and the source of the influence are immaterial. The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations, and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in and relies upon another. Dale v. Jennings, 90 Fla. 234, 107 So. 175, 178; Quin v. Phibbs, 93 Fla. 805, 113 So. 419, 420, 54 A. L. R. 1173; McDaniel v. Schroeder, 128 Okl. 91, 261 P. 224, 226. See, also, Fiduciary Relation, infra.

FIDUCIARY RELATION. A relation subsisting between two persons in regard to a business, contract, or piece of property, or in regard to the general business or estate of one of them, of such a character that each must repose trust and confidence in the other, and must exercise a corresponding degree of fairness and good faith. Out of such a relation, the law raises the rule that neither party may exert influence or pressure upon the other, take selfish advantage of his trust, or deal with the subject-matter of the trust on such a basis as to benefit himself or prejudice the other except in the exercise of the utmost good faith and with the full knowledge and consent of that other, business, shrewdness, hard bargaining, and astuteness to take advantage of the forgetfulness or negligence of another being totally prohibited as between persons standing in such a relation to each other. Examples of fiduciary relations are those existing between attorney and client, guardian and ward, principal and agent, executor and heir, trustee and custos que trust, landlord and tenant, etc. See Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 497; Thomas v. Whitney, 186 Ill. 225, 57 N. E. 808; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 68, 26 L. Ed. 693; Meyer v. Reimer, 65 Kan. 522, 70 P. 869; Studlbaker v. Cofield, 159 Mo. 596, 61 S. W. 246; Reeves v. Crum, 97 Okl. 293, 225 P. 177, 179; Koehler v. Haller, 62 Ind. App. 8, 112 N. E. 527; Anderson v. Watson, 141 Md. 217, 118 A. 509. In the "fiduciary relation" exists when confidence is reposed on one side and there is resulting superiority and influence on the other, which relation need not be legal, but may be moral, social, domestic, or merely personal. Miranovitz v. Gee, 163 Wis. 246, 157 N. W. 790, 792; Higgins v. Chicago Tite & Trust Co., 312 Ill. 11, 143 N. E. 482, 484; Dawson v. National Life Ins. Co. of United States, 176 Iowa, 392, 157 N. W. 929, 933, L. R. A. 1916E, 878, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 230; Dean v. Cole, 103 Or. 570, 294 P. 952, 955. It is one in which, if a wrong arise, the same remedy exists against the wrongdoer on behalf of the principal as would exist against a trustee on behalf of a custos que trust. Smith v. Smith, 222 Mass. 102, 109 N. E. 830, 832; Niland v. Kennedy, 316 Ill.
253, 147 N. E. 117, 119. Sometimes confidential and fiduciary relations are regarded as synonymous; In re Cover's Estate, 188 Cal. 192, 204 P. 853, 858; but on the other hand, a technical distinction may be taken between a "fiducial relation" which is more correctly applicable to legal relationships between parties, such as guardian and ward, administrator and heirs, and other similar relationships, and a "confidential relation" which includes the legal relationships, and also every other relationship wherein confidence is rightfully reposed and is exercised. Roberts v. Parsons, 195 Ky. 274, 242 S. W. 594, 596.

FIEF. A fee, feeod, or feud.

FIEF D'HAUBERT (or D'HAUBERK). Fr. In Norman feudal law. A fief or fee held by the tenure of knight-service; a knight's fee. 2 Bl. Comm. 62. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban. Feudum hauerticum. Spelman; Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange.

FIEF-TEHANT. In old English law. The holder of a fief or fee; a feeholder or freeholder.

FIEL. In Spanish law. A sequestrator; a person in whose hands a thing in dispute is judicially deposited; a receiver. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 9, l. 1.

FIELD. A cultivated tract of land; State v. Mack, 92 Vt. 103, 102 A. 58, 59; State v. McMinn, 81 N. C. 585; Com. v. Jesselyn, 97 Mass. 422; but not a one-acre lot used for cultivating vegetables; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 510. This term might well be considered as definite and certain a description as "close," and might be used in law; but it is not a usual description in legal proceedings. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 160.

FIELD-ALE, or FILDKALE. An ancient custom in England, by which officers of the forest and bailiffs of hundreds had the right to compel the hundred to furnish them with ale. Tomlins.

FIELD REEVE. An officer elected, in England, by the owners of a regulated pasture to keep in order the fences, ditches, etc., on the land, to regulate the times during which animals are to be admitted to the pasture, and generally to maintain and manage the pasture subject to the instructions of the owners. (General Inclosure Act, 1845, c. 113.) Sweet.

FIELD VISION. The general vision used in catching in sight, following and locating objects; distinguished from "binocular vision" (q. v.). Turpin v. St. Regis Paper Co., 199 App. Div. 64, 192 N. Y. S. 85, 87.

FIELDAD. In Spanish law. Sequestration. This is allowed in six cases by the Spanish law where the title to property is in dispute. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 3, l. 1.

FIERDING COURTS. Ancient Gothic courts of an inferior jurisdiction, so called because four were instituted within every inferior district or hundred. 3 Bl. Comm. 34; 3 Steph. Com. 396; Stiernhub, De Jure Goth. l. 1, c. 2.

FIERI. Lat. To be made; to be done. See In Fieri.

FIERI FACIAS. (That you cause to be made.) In practice. A writ of execution commanding the sheriff to levy and make the amount of a judgment from the goods and chattels of the judgment debtor.

FIERI FACIAS DE BONIS ECCLESIASTICIS. When a sheriff to a common fi. fa. returns nulla bona, and that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, not having any lay fee, a plaintiff may issue a fi. fa. de bonis ecclesiasticis, addressed to the bishop of the diocese or to the archbishop, (during the vacancy of the bishop's see,) commanding him to make of the ecclesiastical goods and chattels belonging to the defendant within his diocese the sum therein mentioned. 2 Chit. Archb. Pr. (12th Ed.) 1062.

FIERI FACIAS DE BONIS TESTATORIS. The writ issued on an ordinary judgment against an executor when sued for a debt due by his testator. If the sheriff returns to this writ nulla bona, and a de conspectis, (q. v.) the plaintiff may sue out a fieri facias de bonis propriis, under which the goods of the executor himself are seized. Sweet.

FIERI FECI. (I have caused to be made.) In practice. The return made by a sheriff or other officer to a writ of fieri facias, where he has collected the whole, or a part, of the sum directed to be levied. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1018. The return, as actually made, is expressed by the word "Satisfied" indorsed on the writ.

Fieri non debet, (debuit,) sed factum valet. It ought not to be done, but [if] done, it is valid. Shap. Touch. 6; 5 Coke, 39; T. Raym. 58; 1 Strange, 528. A maxim frequently applied in practice. Nichols v. Ketcham, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 84, 92.

FIFTEENTH. In English law. This was originally a tax or tribute, levied at intervals by act of parliament, consisting of one-fifteenth of all the movable property of the subject or personality in every city, town, and borough. Under Edward III., the taxable property was assessed, and the value of its fifteenth part (then about £20,000) was recorded in the exchequer, whence the tax, levied on that valuation, continued to be called a "fifteenth," although, as the wealth of the kingdom increased, the name ceased to be an accurate designation of the proportion of the tax to the value taxed. See 1 Bl.
FIFTY DECISIONS. Ordinances of Justinian (629-532) upon the authority of which all moot points were settled in the preparation of the second edition of the Code. Taylor, Science of Jurispr 144.

FIGHT. An encounter, with blows or other personal violence, between two persons. See Carpenter v. People, 31 Colo. 254, 72 P. 1072; Coles v. New York Casualty Co., 87 App. Div. 41, 83 N. Y. S. 1063. The term does not necessarily imply that both parties should give and take blows. It is sufficient that they voluntarily put their bodies in position with that intent; State v. Gladden, 73 N. C. 155; Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 148.

FIGHTWITHE. Sax. A mulet or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the place. Called also by Cowell "foris factura pugna." The amount was one hundred and twenty shillings. Cowell.

A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 35.

FIGURES. Artificial representations of a form, as in sculpture, drawing, or painting, especially the human body represented by art of any kind. People v. Eastman, 59 Misc. 596, 152 N. Y. S. 314, 317.

Numerals. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet; for example, MDCCCLXXVI; or they are Arabic, as follows: 1773.

FILACER. An officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were two such filacers, and it was their duty to make out all original process. Cowell; Blount; Jacob L. Dict. It is used in 8 Mod. 284. The office was abolished in 1837.

FILARE. In old English practice. To file. Townsend Pl. 67.

FILE. A thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe-keeping and ready turning to the same. Spelman; Cowell; Tomlins. Papers put together and tied in bundles. A paper is said also to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file. 13 Vin. Abr. 211; 1 Litt. 113; 1 Hawk. P. C. 7, 207; Phillips v. Beene, 38 Ala. 251; Holman v. Chevallier, 14 Tex. 338; Beebe v. Morrell, 76 Mich. 114, 42 N. W. 1119, 15 Am. St. Rep. 288. But, in general, "file," or "the files," is used loosely to denote the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and papers are kept. The "file" in a cause includes original subpoenas and all papers belonging thereto. Jackson v. Mobley, 157 Ala. 408, 47 So. 560.

FILE. In practice. To put upon the files, or deposit in the custody or among the records of a court. To deliver an instrument or other paper to the proper officer for the purpose of being kept on file by him in the proper place. Gallagher v. Linwood, 30 N. M. 213, 231 P. 627, 629, 37 A. L. R. 664; Dillon v. Superior Court of Nevada County, 24 Cal. App. 760, 142 P. 503, 505; People v. Madigan, 229 Mich. 86, 195 N. W. 806, 807; Thompson v. State, 190 Ind. 383, 130 N. E. 412, 413; Stubbins v. Mendel, 148 Ga. 802, 98 S. E. 475; Pendrey v. Brennan, 31 Idaho, 54, 169 P. 174, 175. It carries the idea of permanent preservation as a public record. In re Gubelman (C. C. A.) 10 F. (2d) 928, 929.

It is commonly held that the filing is complete when the paper is lodged with the proper officer, whose indorsement, though required of him as a duty, is unnecessary to complete the filing or to give validity to the paper filed. Mahnken v. Metz, 97 N. J. Law, 139, 146 A. 794, 795; Palmer v. Simons, 107 S. C. 93, 92 S. E. 23, 24; Daniel v. Blankenship, 177 Ky. 726, 198 S. W. 48, 61; Reeder v. Mitchell, 117 Okl. 21, 244 P. 773, 774; Hogue v. Hogue, 137 Ark. 485, 208 S. W. 579, 582; Caroline-Tennessee Power Co. v. Hawassaw River Power Co., 175 N. C. 688, 96 S. E. 99, 101; Gove v. Armstrong, 57 Vt. 468, 89 A. 868, 869.

"To file" a paper, on the part of a party, is to place it in the official custody of the clerk. "To file," on the part of the clerk, is to indorse upon the paper the date of its reception, and retain it in his office, subject to inspection by whomsoever it may concern. Holman v. Chevallier, 14 Tex. 338.

The word "filed" is not equivalent to "deposited. People v. Peck, 67 Hun, 569, 22 N. Y. Supp. 576. While filing involves depositing, the converse is not true. U. S. v. Davidson (D.C.) 255 F. 661. See, however, People v. Glassberg, 235 Ill. 579, 133 N. E. 162, 119.

The expressions "filing" and "entering of record" are not synonymous. They are nowhere so used, but always convey distinct ideas. "Filing" originally signified placing papers in order on a thread or wire for safe-keeping. In this country and at this day it means, agreeably to our practice, depositing them in due order in the proper office. Entering of record uniformly implies writing. Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 247.

"Filing a bill" in equity is an equivalent expression to "commencing a suit."

"An order that a cause should be "filed away"' for want of prosecution meant that it should be "discontinued" or "stricken from the docket."" Phillips v. Arnott, 104 Ky. 420, 157 S. W. 660, 662.

FILIAZATE. To fix a bastard child on some one, as its father. To declare whose child it is. 2 W. Bl. 1017.

Filiatio non potest probari. Co. Litt. 126. Filiation cannot be proved; that is, the husband is presumed to be the father of a child born during coverture. But see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

FILIAZATION. The relation of a child to its parent; correlative to “paternity.” The judicial assignment of an illegitimate child to a designated man as its father.

In the Civil Law.

The descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

FILICETUM. In old English law. A ferny or bracky ground; a place where fern grows. Co. Litt. 45; Shep. Touch. 95.

FILIOLUS (or Filius). In old records. A godson. Spelman.

FILIUS. Lat. A son; a child.

As distinguished from heir filius is a term of nature, heres a term of law. 1 Powell, Dev. 311. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. Calvinius, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. A distinction was sometimes made, in the civil law, between "filii" and "heredes," the latter word including grandchilders, (heredes,) the former not. Inst. 1, 14, 5. But, according to Paulinus and Julianus, they were of equally extensive import. Dig. 1, 5, 54; Id. 59, 15, 201.

Filius est nomen natura, sed heres nomen juris. 1 Sid. 193. 1 Pow. Dev. 311. Son is a name of nature, but heir is a name of law.

FILIUS FAMILIAS. In the civil law. The son of a family; an unmancipated son. Inst. 2, 12, pr.; Id. 4, 5, 2; Story, Confl. Laws, § 61.

Filius in utero matris est pars viscerae matris. 7 Coke, 8. A son in the mother’s womb is part of the mother’s vitals.

FILIUS MULIERATUS. In old English law. The eldest legitimate son of a woman, who previously had an illegitimate son by his father. Glanv. 11b, 7, c. 1. Otherwise called "mulier." 2 Bl. Comm. 248.

FILIUS NULLUS. The son of nobody; i.e., a bastard.

FILIUS POPULI. A son of the people; a natural child.

FILL. To make full; to complete; to satisfy or fulfill; to possess and perform the duties of; to occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant.

The election of a person to an office constitutes the essence of his appointment; but the office cannot be considered as actually filled until his sep-FILUM AQUÆ. A thread of water; a line of water; a line of a stream of water, supposed to divide it into two equal parts, and constituting in many cases the boundary between the riparian proprietors on each side. Ingraham v. Wilkinson, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 273, 16 Am. Dec. 342. Medium flum is sometimes used with no additional meaning.

FILUM FORESTÆ. The border of the forest. 2 Bla. Comm. 419; 4 Inst. 303; Manw. Purieu.

FIN. Fr. An end, or limit; a limitation, or period of limitation.

FIN DE NON RECEVOIR. In French law. An exception or plea founded on law, which, without entering into the merits of the action, shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called “prescription,” or that there has been a compromise, accord and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted. Poth. Proc. Civile, pt. 1, c. 2, § 2; Story, Conf. Laws, § 650.

FINAL. Definitive; terminating; completed; conclusive; last. In its use in jurisprudence, this word is generally contrasted with “interlocutory.” Johnson v. New York, 48 Hun, 620, 1 N. Y. S. 254; Garrison v. Dougherty, 18 S. C. 458; Ronneau v. Beaumette, 4 Minn. 224 (Gill. 163); Blanding v. Sayles, 23 R. I. 226, 49 A. 992; U. S. v. Broude (D. C.) 299 F. 322, 333.

FINAL ARCHITECT’S CERTIFICATE. One which is issued after a job is done and which finally determines the rights of the parties as to money and disputes. Johnson v. Hogg, 292 Ill. App. 253, 255; Hunt v. Owen Bldg. & Inv. Co. (Mo. App.) 219 S. W. 138, 140.

FINAL DISPOSITION. When it is said to be essential to the validity of an award that it should make a “final disposition” of the matters embraced in the submission, this term means such a disposition that nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation is required or can arise on the matter. It is such an award that the party against whom it is made can perform or pay it without any further ascertainment of rights or duties. Colcord v. Fletcher, 50 Me. 401.

FINAL HEARING. This term designates the trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed “interlocutory.” Smith v. W. U. Tel. Co. (C. C.) 81 F. 243; Akerly v. Villas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am. Rep. 166; Galpin v. Critchlow, 112 Mass. 343, 17 Am. Rep. 176. This is the usual meaning of the term, but it may also be used with reference to a dismissal on the motion of plaintiff. Christensen v. General Electric Co. (D. C.) 248 F. 284, 286.

FINAL PASSAGE. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule. State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 613. The actual final vote necessary to a bill becoming a law, regardless of parliamentary fiction. Roane Iron Co. v. Francis, 130 Tenn. 694, 172 S. W. 816.

FINAL RECEIVER’S RECEIPT. An acknowledgment by the government that it has received full payment for public land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entryman, and will in due course issue to him a patent. Bovey-Shute Lumber Co. v. Erickson, 41 N. D. 365, 170 N. W. 635, 639.

FINAL TRIAL. Under a statute such trial in the court having original trial jurisdiction as is the basis of entry of judgment finally disposing of action in that court; the term does not apply to proceedings in the appellate court. Wynne v. Smith, 23 Ga. App. 339, 96 S. E. 271, 272.

FINALIS CONCORDIA. A final or conclusive agreement. In the process of "levying a fine," this was a final agreement entered by the litigating parties upon the record, by permission of court, settling the title to the land, and which was binding upon them like any judgment of the court. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 970.

FINANCES. The public wealth of a state or government, considered either statically (as the property or money which a state now owns) or dynamically, (as its income, revenue, or public resources.) Monetary affairs, funds in a treasury or accruing to it, etc. City of Newburgh v. Dickey, 150 N. Y. S. 175, 177, 164 App. Div. 791.

Money resources generally. The state of the finances of an individual or corporation, being his condition in a monetary point of view. The cash he has on hand, and that which he expects to receive, as compared with the engagements he has made to pay.

FINANCIALLY ABLE. To entitle a broker to his commission; the requirement that the purchaser be financially able to purchase, does not necessarily mean that such purchaser shall have all money in cash, but merely that he must be able to command the money to close the deal on reasonable notice. Hays v. Goodman-Leonard Realty Co., 146 Miss. 768, 111 So. 369, 370. See Able to Purchase.

FINANCIER. A person employed in the economical management and application of public money; one skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious management of money affairs.

FINISH: To complete; to bring to a close; to perfect; to end; to terminate; to conclude; to Manufacture, construction, completion.

FINIS. The end; the conclusion; the finish; the conclusion of a business; a termination of a period; the final result.

FINISHING: The act of finishing; the act of completing; the act of finishing up; the act of doing up; the act of completing; the act of bringing to a close; the act of bringing to an end; the act of bringing to a conclusion.

Finding of fact. A determination of a fact by the court, such fact being averred by one party and denied by the other, and the determination being based on the evidence in the case; also the answer of the jury to a specific interrogatory propounded to them as to the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue. Siles v. McCallan; 1 Ark. 431; 5 P. 620; Murphy v. Bennett; 29 Cal. 528, 9 P. 798; Morley v. Railway Co.; 118 Iowa, 84; 89 N. W. 705.
Maeder Steel Products Co. v. Zuniello, 109 Or. 562, 220 P. 155, 158. The term is not applicable, with special reference to review on appeal, to a mere conclusion that the evidence is insufficient to authorize relief, Monetaire Mining Co. v. Columbus Rexall Consol. Mines Co., 63 Utah, 413, 174 P. 172, 174; nor to the opinion of the trial court, delivered in announcing judgment, Rogers v. Harris, 76 Okl. 215, 184 P. 459, 462; nor to a memorandum of the decision of the trial judge, Preston v. Preston, 102 Conn. 96, 128 A. 292, 296; nor to a transcript of the evidence, State v. Chin Lung, 106 Conn. 701, 139 A. 91, 97.

—General and special findings. Where issues of fact in a case are submitted to the court by consent of parties to be tried without a jury, the "finding" is the decision of the court as to the disputed facts, and it may be either general or special, the former being a general statement that the facts are in favor of such a party or entitle him to judgment, the latter being a specific setting forth of the ultimate facts established by the evidence and which are determinative of the judgment which must be given. See Rhodes v. United States Nat. Bank, 66 F. 514, 13 C. C. A. 612, 34 L. R. A. 742; Scarry County v. Thompson, 66 F. 94, 13 C. C. A. 349; Humphreys v. Third Nat. Bank, 75 F. 556, 21 C. C. A. 538. In a trial to the court, a general finding is a complete determination of all matters, and is a finding of every special thing necessary to be found to sustain the general finding, Miller v. Thompson, 80 Okl. 70, 194 P. 108, 105; whereas a special finding is only a determination of the ultimate facts on which the law must be determined, Societe Nouvelle d'Armenement v. Barnaby (C. C. A.) 246 F. 68, 70. A special finding may also be said to be one limited to the fact issue submitted. Ex parte Woodward Iron Co., 212 Ala. 220, 102 So. 163, 106.

FINE, n. To impose a pecuniary punishment or mulct.
To sentence a person convicted of an offense to pay a penalty in money. Goodman v. Durant B. & L. Ass'n, 71 Miss. 310, 14 So. 148; State v. Belle, 92 Iowa, 258, 60 N. W. 525.

FINE, n. In Conveyancing
An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. 2 Bl. Comm. 349; Christy v. Burch, 23 Fla. 942, 2 So. 258; First Nat. Bank v. Roberts, 9 Mont. 323, 29 P. 718; Hitz v. Jenks, 123 U. S. 297, 8 S. Ct. 145, 31 L. Ed. 156; McGregor v. Comstock, 17 N. Y. 166. Fines were abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, substituting a disentailing deed. (q. v.).

'A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. The party who parted with the land, by acknowledging the right of the other, was said to keep the fine, and was called the "cognizor" or "conuor," while the party who recovered or received the estate was termed the "cognizor" or "conuor," and the fine was said to be levied to him.

In the Law of Tenure
A money payment made by a feudal tenant to his lord. The most usual fine is that payable on the admissgence of a new tenant, but there are also due in some manors fines upon alienation, on a licence to demis the lands, or on the death of the lord, or other events. Elton, Copyh. 159; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 465, 57 Am. Dec. 470.

In General
—Executed fine. See Executed.
—Fine and recovery act. The English statutes 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, for abolishing fines and recoveries. 1 Steph. Comm. 514, et seq.
—Fine for alienation. A fine anciently payable upon the alienation of a feudal estate and substitution of a new tenant. It was payable to the lord by all tenants holding by knight's service or tenants in capite by socage tenure. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24. See 2 Bl. Comm. 71, 89; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 467, 495, 57 Am. Dec. 470.
—Fine for endowment. A fine anciently payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant, without which she could not be endowed of her husband's lands. Abolished under Henry I., and by Magna Charta. 2 Bl. Comm. 135; Mozley & Whitley.
—Fine rolls. See Oblate Rolls.
—Fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo que il ad de son done. A fine upon acknowledgment, of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizer. By this the deforciant acknowledged in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff. 2 Bl. Comm. 352.
—Fine sur cognizance de droit tantum. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely, and not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizer. This was commonly used to pass a reversionary interest which was in the cognizer, of which there could be no feoffment supposed. 2 Bl. Comm. 353; 1 Steph. Comm. 519; Jacob, Law Dict.; Com., Dig.

Fine sur concessit. A fine upon concessit (he hath granted). A species of fine, where the cognizer, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledged no precedent right, yet granted to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of —Fine sur done grant et render. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ece and the fine sur consciousit. It might be used to convey particular limitations of estates, whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ece, conveyed nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. In this last species of fines, the cognizee, after the right was acknowledged to be in him, granted back again or rendered to the cognizer, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Bl. Comm. 353; Viner, Abr. Fine; Comyns, Dig. Fine.

—Joint fine. In old English law. "If a whole will is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but, in other cases, fines for offenses are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them." Jacob.

In Criminal Law

A "fine" is always a penalty, though a penalty need not be always a fine; Bankers' Trust Co. v. State, 96 Conn. 301, 114 A. 104, 107; a "penalty" being a generic term which includes both fines and forfeitures; State ex rel. Jones v. Howe Scale Co. of Illinois, 122 Mo. App. 553, 165 S. W. 225, 230. As distinguished from "penalty," a "penalty" when recovered ordinarily goes to the statutory beneficiaries, while a "fine" goes to the state. Poindexter v. State, 137 Tenn. 359, 163 S. W. 126, 127.

FINEM ANULLANDO LEVATO DE TEMENTO QUOD FUIT DE ANTIQUO DOMINICO. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord. Reg. Orig. 15.

FINE CAPIENDO PRO TERRIS. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc. Reg. Orig. 142.

FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRE PLACITANDO. An obsolete writ to inhibit officers of courts to take fines for fair pleading.

FINE PRO REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO. An old writ that lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redisseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine. Reg. Orig. 222.

FINE-FORCE. An absolute necessity or irrevocable constraint. Flowd. 94; 6 Coxe, 11; Cowell; Old N. B. 78.

FINEM FACERE. To make or pay a fine. Bract. 106; Skene.

FINES LE ROY. In old English law. The king's fines. Fines formerly payable to the king for any contempt or offense, as where one committed any trespass, or falsely denied his own deed, or did anything in contempt of law. Termes de la Ley.

FINGER PRINTS. See Anthropometry.

FINIRE. In old English law. To fine, or pay a fine. Cowell. To end or finish a matter.

FINIS. Lat. An end; a fine; a boundary or terminus; a limit. Also in L. Lat., a fine (q. v.).

Finis est amicabils compositio et finalis concordia ex concensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum. Glan. 168, 8, c. 1. A fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord, the king, or his Justices.

Finis finem illitum imponit. A fine puts an end to litigation. 3 Inst. 78.

Finis rel attendendus est. 3 Inst. 51. The end of a thing is to be attended to.

Finis ulius diei est principium alterius. 2 Buck. 305. The end of one day is the beginning of another.

FINITIO. An ending; death, as the end of life. Blount; Cowell.

FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO. In the civil law. Action for regulating boundaries. The name of an action which lay between.
those who had lands bordering on each other, to settle disputed boundaries. MacFad. Rom. Law, § 499.

FINORS. Those that purify gold and silver, and part them by fire and water from coarser metals; and therefore, in the statute of 4 Hen. VII. c. 2, they are also called "parters." Termes de la Ley.

FIRDFARE. Sax. In old English law. A summoning forth to a military expedition, (indictio ad profectum militarem.) Spelman.

FIRDINGA. Sax. A preparation to go into the army. Leg. Hen. I.

FIROWITE. In old English law. A fine for refusing military service, (multa detrediantis militiam.) Spelman. A milder or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition. Cowell.

A fine imposed for murder committed in the army; an acquittance of such fine. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47.

FIRE. The effect of combustion. The juridical meaning of the word does not differ from the vernacular. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 231, et seq.

The word "fire," as used in insurance policies, does not have the technical meaning developed from analysis of its nature, but more nearly the popular meaning, being an effect rather than an elementary principle, and is the effect of combustion, being equivalent to ignition or burning, but heat is not fire, though fire may proximately cause loss from heat. Lattu v. Hartford County Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 105 Conn. 729, 138 A. 572.

The ordinary meaning of the word as used in an insurance policy includes the idea of visible heat or light. Damage to wood by spontaneous combustion with smoke and great heat, but without any visible flame or glow, is held not to be fire. The "fire is always caused by combustion, but combustion does not always cause fire." Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Assurance Co., 139 F. 355, 72 C. C. A. 1.

As used in policies of fire insurance, the word means a hostile fire as distinguished from a friendly fire. Lattu v. Hartfoord County Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 105 Conn. 729, 138 A. 572, 574.

FIRE AND SWORD, LETTERS OF. In old Scotch law. Letters issued from the privy council in Scotland, addressed to the sheriff of the county, authorizing him to call for the assistance of the county to dispossess a tenant retaining possession, contrary to the order of a judge or the sentence of a court. Wharton; Bell, Dict.

FIRE-ARM. An instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it. A weapon which acts by force of gunpowder. People v. Simons, 124 Misc. 28, 207 N. Y. S. 56, 57. This word comprises all sorts of guns, powder-places, blunderbusses, pistols, etc.; Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N. W. 437, 29 Am. St. Rep. 801; Atwood v. State, 55 Ala. 509; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 563; but not an air pistol. People v. Schmidt, 221 App. Div. 77, 222 N. Y. S. 647, 650. As to whether a pistol in such a condition of disrepair that it cannot be discharged, at least in the normal way, constitutes a fire-arm, the decisions have been somewhat conflicting. See Atwood v. State, 55 Ala. 508; Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417, 34 Am. Rep. 102; Evins v. State, 46 Ala. 88; Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 3, 34 Am. Rep. 1; State v. Morris, 233 Mo. 359, 172 S. W. 603, 604.

FIREBARE. A beacon or high tower by the seaside, wherein are continual lights, either to direct sailors in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy. Cowell.

FIRE BOTE. Allowance of wood or esoterors to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 99.

FIREBUG. A popular phrase referring to person(s guilty of the crime of arson; commonly understood to mean an incendiary or pyromaniac. Blechner v. Krauer (Co. Ct.) 137 N. Y. S. 296.

FIRE DAMP. "Fire damp" consists of light carbonated hydrogen, and is so called from its tendency to explode when mixed with atmospheric air and brought into contact with flame. Wells' Adm'r v. Sutherland Coal & Coke Co., 116 Va. 1003, 88 S. E. 384, 385.

FIRE DISTRICT. One of the districts into which a city may be (and commonly is) divided for the purpose of more efficient service by the fire department in the extinction of fires. Des Moines v. Gilchrist, 67 Iowa, 210, 25 N. W. 136. Under a statute, a territorial subdivision of the state, established to provide protection against fire within its limits, maintain street lights, etc., and, although composed of one or more towns, it is in substance a quasi municipal corporation of definitely restricted powers, and as such it may raise money by taxation for its legitimate uses. President, etc., of Williams College v. Inhabitants of Town of Williamstown, 106 N. E. 687, 688, 219 Mass. 46.

FIRE DOOR. A fireproof barrier for closing openings to prevent the spread of fire. People v. One Hundred and Thirty-One Boerum St. Co., 233 N. Y. 268, 135 N. E. 327, 328.

FIRE ESCAPE. An apparatus constructed to afford a safe and convenient method of escape from a burning building. The term includes fire ladders of such sort and location as to permit safe descent of persons caught in a building on fire, but not a balcony or an interior staircase in a hotel. West v. Sprattling, 204 Ala. 178, 88 So. 32, 33.

FIRE FIGHTING MACHINE. An instrument of public utility designed and used exclusively for putting out fires; the average or normal fire-fighting machine is in all its parts essentially designed for that purpose. American-La France Fire Engine Co. v. Rior- dan (C. C. A.) 6 F.(2d) 964, 966.

FIRE INSURANCE. See Insurance.

FIREMEN. Those whose duty is to extinguish fires and to protect property and life therefrom. Behr v. Soth, 170 Minn. 278, 212 N. W. 461, 462.

FIRE ORDEAL. See Ordeal.

FIRE POLICY. A policy of fire insurance. See Insurance.

FIRE-PROOF. Incombustible; not in danger from the action of fire. To say of any article that it is "fire-proof" conveys no other idea than that the material out of which it is formed is incombustible. To say of a building that it is fire-proof excludes the idea that it is of wood, and necessarily implies that it is of some substance fitted for the erection of fire-proof buildings. To say of a certain portion of a building that it is fire-proof suggests a comparison between that portion and other parts of the building not so characterized, and warrants the conclusion that it is of a different material. Hickey v. Morrell, 102 N. Y. 450, 7 N. E. 321, 55 Am. Rep. 824.

A "fire-proof safe" within an insurance policy is one which, in the judgment of prudent men in locality of property insured, is sufficient; National Liberty Ins. Co. of America v. Sphar- ler, 172 Ark. 715, 200 S. W. 594, 596; or one which is of the kind commonly regarded as fire-proof; Knoxville Fire Ins. Co. v. Hird, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 23 S. W. 393.

FIRE RAISING. In Scotch law. The wilfully setting on fire buildings, growing or stored cereals, growing wood, or coalsheughs. Ersk. Pr. 577. See Arson.

FIRE WALL. This term, as used in a municipal building code, has been held to refer to a wall that is noncombustible, and to require that such quality adhere to the openings in the wall as well as the solid wall itself. Robeson v. Turner, 199 Ky. 612, 251 S. W. 857, 860.

FIRE-WOOD. Wood suitable for fuel, not including standing or felled timber which is suitable and valuable for other purposes. Hogan v. Hogan, 102 Mich. 641, 61 N. W. 73.

FIRE-WORKS. A contrivance of inflammable and explosive materials combined of various proportions for the purpose of producing in combustion beautiful or amusing scenic effects, or to be used as a night signal on land or sea, or for various purposes in war. Cent. Dict.

FIRKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to nine gallons. The word is also used to designate a weight, used for butter and cheese, of fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

FIRLOT. A Scotch measure of capacity, containing two gallons and a pint. Spelman.

The word is used as synonymous with partnership. The words "house," "concern," and "company" are also used in the same sense. This name is in point of law conventional, and applicable only to the persons who, on each particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm. A firm is usually described, in legal proceedings, as certain persons trading or carrying on business under and using the name, style, and firm of, etc. See 9 Q. B. 881; 9 M. & W. 247; 1 Chitty, Bailm. 49.

FIRM NAME. The name or title of a firm in business.

FIRMA. In old English law. The contract of lease or letting; also the rent (or farm) reserved upon a lease of lands, which was frequently payable in provisions, but sometimes in money, in which latter case it was called "the firma," white rent. Spelman, Gloss.; Cunningham, Law Dict.

A messuage with the house, garden, or lands, etc., connected therewith. Co. Litt. 5 a; Shepp. Touch. 33.

A banquet; supper; provisions for the table. Du Cange.

A tribute or custom paid towards entertaining the king for one night. Domesday; Cowell.

FIRMA BURGI. The right, in medieval days, to take the profits of a borough, paying for them a fixed sum to the crown or other lord of the borough. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 276.

FIRMA FEODI. In old English law. A farm or lease of a fee; a fee-farm.

FIRMAN. A Turkish word denoting a decree or grant of privileges, or passport to a traveler. A passport granted by the Great Mogul to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.

FIRMANARIA. The right of a tenant to his lands and tenements. Cowell.
FIRMARIUM. In old records. A place to monastery, and elsewhere, where the poor were received and supplied with food. Spelman. Hence the word "infirmary."

FIRMARIUS. L. Lat. A fermor. A lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed. 2 Inst. 144, 145; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 107; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312; 7 Ad. & E. 697.

FIRMATIO. The doe season. Also a supplying with food. Cowell.

FIRME. In old records. A farm.

Firmior et potior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis. The operation of the law is firmer and more powerful [or efficacious] than the disposition [or will] of man. Co. Litt. 102a.

FIRMITAS. In old English law. An assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

FIRMLY. A statement that an affiant "firmly believes" the contents of the affidavit imports a strong or high degree of belief, and is equivalent to saying that he "verily believes it. Bradley v. Eccles, 1 Browne (Pa.) 258; Thompson v. White, 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 157. The operative words in a bond or recognizance, that the obligor is held and "firmly bound," are equivalent to an acknowledgment of indebtedness and promise to pay. Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 477.

FIRMURA. In old English law. Liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc. Blount.

FIRST. Initial; leading; chief; preceding all others of the same kind or class in sequence, (numerical) or chronological; entitled to priority or preference above others. Redman v. Railroad Co., 33 N. J. Eq. 165; Thompson v. Grand Gulf R. & B. Co., 3 How. (Miss.) 247, 34 Am. Dec. 81; Happend v. Brown, 102 Mass. 452.

The word commonly, but not necessarily, connotes precedence. Hill v. Prior, 79 N. H. 188, 106 A. 641; Beckley v. Alling, 31 Conn. 362, 39 A. 1084, 1055. Thus, under a contract that, if the purchaser should "first" make payment, the vendor would convey, payment was to precede the execution of the conveyance. Walker v. Hewitt, 109 Or. 365, 220 P. 147, 151, 25 A. L. R. 106. But in a will the word "first" may not import precedence of one bequest over another. Everett v. Carr, 59 Mo. 330; Swasey v. American Bible Society, 67 Me. 633.

First blush. By the phrase "first blush," within the rule that damages, to justify reversal, must be so great as to strike the mind at first blush as having been superinduced by passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, is meant that immediately the judicial mind is shocked and surprised at the great disproportion of the size of the verdict to what the facts of the case would authorize. Cole & Crane v. May, 135 Ky. 214 S. W. 885, 897.

First degree burn. One which varies from redness to a blister, as distinguished from a "second degree burn," which occurs where the skin is charred or killed. Murphy v. Ludowyk Gas & Oil Co., 96 Kan. 321, 150 P. 551, 552.

First devisee. The person to whom the estate is first given by the will, the term "next devisee" referring to the person to whom the remainder is given. Young v. Robinson, 5 N. J. Law, 669; Wilcox v. Heywood, 12 R. I. 198.

First fruits. In English ecclesiastical law, the first year's whole profits of every benefice or spiritual living, formerly paid by the incumbent to the pope, but afterwards transferred to the fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty," for increasing the revenue from poor livings. In feudal law, one year's profits of land which belonged to the king on the death of a tenant in capite; otherwise called "primer scutum." One of the incidents to the old feudal tenures. 2 Bl. Comm. 66, 67.

First heir. The person who will be first entitled to succeed to the title to an estate after the termination of a life estate or estate for years. Winter v. Ferratt, 5 Barn. & C. 48.

First impression. First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A case is said to be "of the first impression" when it presents an entirely novel question of law for the decision of the court, and cannot be governed by any existing precedent.

First inventor. Within the meaning of that phrase as used in the fourth paragraph of Rev. St. § 4920 (65 USCA § 69), providing that it shall be a defense to a suit for infringement that the patentee was not the original or first inventor, a person who perfects his invention, the only evidence of such perfected invention ordinarily derivable from any patent being a union of disclosure and claim. Davis-Bournville Co. v. Alexander Milburn Co. (C. C. A.) 1 F.(2d) 227, 232.

First meeting. As used in a statute providing that, for insulting words or conduct to reduce homicide to manslaughter, killing must occur immediately or at "first meeting" after slayer is informed thereof, quoted words mean first time parties are in proximity under such circumstances as would enable slayer to act in the premises. Smith v. State, 105 Tex. Cr. R. 327, 288 S. W. 458, 462.

First of exchange. Where a set of bills of exchange is drawn in duplicate or triplicate, for greater safety in their transmission, all being of the same tenor, and the intention being that the acceptance and payment of any one of them (the first to arrive safely) shall cancel the others of the set, they are called individually the "first of exchange," "second of exchange," etc. See Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neal, 22 How. 96, 110, 16 L. Ed. 323.

—First purchaser. In the law of descent, this term signifies the ancestor who first acquired (in any other manner than by inheritance) the estate which still remains in his family or descendants. Blair v. Adams (C. C.) 59 Fed. 247.

—First trial. Under a statute providing when a case at law is tried by a jury, and the successful party excepts to the granting of a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence, and the evidence is certified, the appellate court, if there have been two trials below, shall first look to the evidences and proceedings on the first trial, and, if the setting aside of the first verdict was error, all proceedings subsequent thereto shall be annulled, and judgment rendered thereon, the "first trial" means the first at which exceptions to the granting of a new trial were taken. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Parker's Admin'r, 118 Va. 386, 52 S. E. 183, 187.

FIRST-CLASS. Of the most superior or excellent grade or kind; belonging to the head or chief or numerically precedent of several classes into which the general subject is divided. See Pacific Fire Co. v. Renkel, 63 Cal. App. 108, 218 P. 274, 275.

FIRST-CLASS MAIL—MATTER. In the postal laws. All mailable matter containing writing and all else that is sealed against inspection.

FIRST-CLASS MISDEMEANANT. In English law. Under the prisons act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, § 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanor, and not sentenced to hard labor, are divided into two classes, one of which is called the "first division;" and it is in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division, usually called "first-class misdemeanant," and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i. e., a prisoner convicted of a crime.

FIRST-CLASS TITLE. A marketable title, shown by a clean record, or at least not depending on presumptions that must be overcome or facts that are uncertain. Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253, 24 N. E. 135, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634.

FISCAL AGENT. This term does not necessarily imply a depository of the public funds, so as, by the simple use of it in a statute, without any directions in this respect, to make it the duty of the state treasurer to deposit with him any moneys in the treasury. State v. Dubuclet, 27 La. Ann. 29.

FISCAL COURT. A ministerial and executive body in some states. Stone v. Winn, 165 Ky. 9, 176 S. W. 933, 941.

FISCAL JUDGE. A public officer named in the laws of the Riparians and some other Germanic peoples, apparently the same as the "Graf," "reeve," "comes," or "count," and so called because charged with the collection of public revenues, either directly or by the imposition of fines. See Spelman, voc. "Grafeo.

FISCAL OFFICERS. Those charged with the collection and distribution of public money, as, the money of a state, county, or municipal corporation. Rev. St. Mo. 1896, § 5338 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2776).

FISCAL YEAR. In the administration of a state or government or of a corporation, the fiscal year is a period of twelve months (not necessarily concurrent with the calendar year) with reference to which its appropriations are made and expenditures authorized, and at the end of which its accounts are made up and the books balanced. Shaffner v. Lipinsky, 194 N. C. 1, 138 S. E. 418, 419. The financial year, at the end of which accounts are balanced. Union Trust & Savings Bank v. City of Sedalia, 300 Mo. 399, 254 S. W. 28, 30; Leavenworth Nat. Bank v. Relly, 97 Kan. 817, 156 P. 747, 748. An accounting period of 12 months. U. S. v. Mabel Elevator Co. (D. C.) 17 F.(2d) 309, 110; U. S. v. Carroll Chalan Co. (D. C.) 8 F.(2d) 529, 530. See also, Moose v. State, 49 Ark. 490, 5 S. W. 883.

FISCUS. In Roman Law

The treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from "ararium," which was the treasury of the state. Spelman; Paillet, Droit Public, 21 n. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the ararium and became the treasury of the state. Gray, Nature and

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
Sources of Law 58. See Law 10, ft. De jure Fisci.

The treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.

From this term is derived the word "confiscate," i.e., to appropriate to the fiscus or fisc.

In English Law

The king's treasury, as the repository of forfeited property.

The treasury of a noble, or of any private person. Spelman.

FISH. An animal which inhabits the water, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous. The term includes crabs, State v. Savage, 96 Or. 53, 184 P. 567, 570; escallops, State v. Dudley, 182 N. C. 822, 169 S. E. 63, 65; and mussels and other shellfish, Gratz v. McKee (C. C. A.) 265 F. 335, 336.

FISH COMMISSIONER. A public officer of the United States, created by act of congress of February 9, 1871, whose duties principally concern the preservation and increase throughout the country of fish suitable for food. Rev. St. § 4395 (16 USCA § 741).

FISH POTS. Contrivances in the nature of screens and traps, placed at the junction of low dams or walls extending out from each shore and somewhat down stream, in such a way as to collect the water and send it through the pot, so that fish may be screened out there. Middlekauff v. Le Compte, 149 Md. 621, 132 A. 48.

FISH ROYAL. These were the whale and the sturgeon, which, when thrown ashore or caught near the coast of England, became the property of the king by virtue of his prerogative and in recompense for his protecting the shore from pirates and robbers. Brown; 1 Bl. Comm. 290. Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. Law, 86, 10 Am. Dec. 356. Some authorities include the porpoise. Hale, De jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 7; Plowd. 305; Bracton, I. 3, c. 3.

FISHERY. A place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks. This is commonly applied to the place of drawing a seine or net. Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131, 132.

A right or liberty of taking fish; a species of incorporeal hereditament, anciently termed "piscary," of which there are several kinds. 2 Bl. Comm. 34, 39; 3 Kent, Comm. 409-418; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. Law, 22, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Gould v. James, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 376; Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 124.

Common Fishery

A fishing ground where all persons have a right to take fish. Bennett v. Costar, 8 Taunt. 188; Albright v. Park Com'n, 68 N. J. Law, 523, 53 A. 612. Not to be confounded with "common of fishery," as to which see Common, n.

Fishery Laws

A series of statutes passed in England for the regulation of fishing, especially to prevent the destruction of fish during the breeding season, and of small fish, spawn, etc., and the employment of improper modes of taking fish. 3 Steph. Comm. 165.

Free Fishery

A franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil. 3 Kent, Comm. 410. Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. Law, 87, 10 Am. Dec. 356. See Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Com'n, 68 N. J. Law, 525, 53 A. 612; Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 64.

Right of Fishery

The general and common right of the citizens to take fish from public waters, such as the sea, great lakes, etc. Shively v. Bowlby, 162 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 648, 38 L. Ed. 331.

Several Fishery

A fishery of which the owner is also the owner of the soil, or derives his right from the owner of the soil. 2 Bl. Comm. 39, 40; 1 Steph. Comm. 671, note. And see Frency v. Cooke, 14 Mass. 459; Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 64; Holford v. Bailey, 8 Q. B. 1018. One by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner. 5 Burr. 2314.

FISHGARTH. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish. Cowell.

Ordering one party to a suit to produce all of its books and papers for examination by the other party for evidence material to its cause is commonly known as "fishing" which is not permitted either in law or in equity. Mobile Gas Co. v. Patterson (D. C.) 285 F. 884, 885.

FISK. In Scotch law. The fiscus or fisc. The revenue of the crown. Generally used of the personal estate of a rebel which has been forfeited to the crown. Bell.

FISSURE VEIN. In mining law. A vein or lode of mineralized matter filling a pre-existing fissure or crack in the earth’s crust extending across the strata and generally extending indefinitely downward. See Crocker v. Manley, 164 Ill. 282, 45 N. E. 577, 56 Am. St. Rep. 196.

FISTUCA, or FESTUCA. In old English law. The rod or wand, by the delivery of which the property in land was formerly transferred in making a feoffment. Called, also, “baculum,” “virga,” and “fustis.” Spelman. See Festuca.

FISTULA. In the civil law. A pipe for conveying water. Dig. 8, 2, 18.

Fit for cultivation refers to that condition of soil which will enable a farmer with a reasonable amount of skill to raise regularly and annually, by tillage, grain or other staple crops. Keenan v. Griffith, 24 Cal. 58; State v. Allen, 35 N. C. 27; Barrett v. Nelson, 29 Kan. 596.

FIT, n. In medical jurisprudence. An attack or spasm of muscular convulsions, generally attended with loss of self-control and of consciousness; particularly, such attacks occurring in epilepsy. In a more general sense, the period of an acute attack of any disease, physical or mental, as, a fit of insanity. See Gunter v. State, 58 Ala. 90, 3 So. 609. Also used in the plural, in which sense it is a layman’s term for epilepsy. Westphall v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal. App. 734, 151 P. 159, 182.

FITZ. A Norman word, meaning “son.” It is used in law and genealogy; as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; FitzJames, the son of James; FitzRoy, the son of the king. It was originally applied to illegitimate children.

FIVE-MILE ‘ACT.’ An act of parliament passed in 1665, against non-conformists, whereby ministers of that body who refused to take the oath of non-resistance were prohibited from coming within five miles of any corporate town, or place where they had preached or lectured since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689. Brown.

A constitutional provision to the effect that the general assembly shall fix the compensation of officers, means that it shall prescribe the rule by which such compensation is to be determined. Goodin v. State, 19 Ohio, 9.

FIX UP. A promise by a debtor to visit his creditor and “fix it up” with him was not a sufficient promise to pay to toll the statute of limitations, as the expression “fix it” would ordinarily be understood as meaning “make some kind of agreement or adjustment that may dispose of it.” Shaw v. Bubier, 119 Me. 59, 109 A. 373, 374.

FIXED. In a charter entered into by the captain of a ship, containing the condition, “Provided ship not fixed previously,” “fixed” was equivalent to “tied up,” “closed,” “not free.” Richichi v. James B. Drake & Sons (D. Ct.) 280 F. 421, 424.

FIXED BELIEF OR OPINION. As ground for rejecting a juror, this phrase means a settled belief or opinion which would so strongly influence the mind of the juror and his decision in the case that he could not exclude it from his mind and render a verdict solely in accordance with the law and the evidence. Bales v. State, 63 Ala. 30; Curley v. Com., 54 Pa. 156; Staup v. Com., 74 Pa. 461.

FIXED SALARY. One which is definitely ascertained and prescribed as to amount and time of payment, and does not depend upon the receipt of fees or other contingent emoluments; not necessarily a salary which cannot be changed by competent authority. Sharpe v. Robertson, 5 Grat. (Va.), 518; Hedrick v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 101. In a constitutional provision that certain officers shall be paid fixed and definite salaries, “fixed” means established or settled, to remain for a time, and “definite” relates to a salary defined or determined in amount. Board of Sup’rs, of Yavapai County v. Stephens, 20 Ariz. 115, 177 P. 261, 262.

FIXING BAIL. In practice, rendering absolute the liability of special bail.

FIXTURE. A personal chattel substantially affixed to the land; but which may afterwards be lawfully removed therefrom by the party affixing it, or his representative, without the
A fixture is an article of personal or chattell nature affixed to the freehold by a tenant and removable by him if it can be taken away without material injury to the property. lolse Ann's of Credit Men v. Ellis, 26 Idaho, 438, 144 P. 6, 9, L. R. A. 1916, 217.

A "fixture" formerly meant any chattel which on becoming affixed to the soil became a part of the realty. It now means those things which formed an exception to that rule and can be removed by the person who affixed them to the soil. L. R. 4 Ex. 325.

"Fixtures" does not necessarily import things affixed to the freehold. The term is a modern one, and is generally understood to comprehend any article which a tenant has the power to remove. Sheen v. Richette, 3 Mees. & W. 174; Rogers v. Gifinger, 30 Pa. 185, 189, 72 Am. Dec. 694.

Chattels which, by being physically annexed or affixed to real estate, become a part of and accessory to the freehold, and ordinarily the property of the owner of the land: Hill v. Atlantic Redlining Co. v. Felbinger, 1 W. W. Hari. (Dem). 183, 112 A. 685, 697; Red Diamond Clothing Co. v. Stiedemann, 109 Mo. App. 306, 152 S. W. 609, 617.

Things fixed or affixed to other things. The rules of law regarding them is that which is expressed in the maxim, "accessio est principali," "the accessory goes with, and as part of, the principal subject matter." Brown.

Personal property is not so annexed to realty as to become a fixture if it can be removed without material injury to the property or to the freehold. Maxson v. Ashland Iron Works, 55 Or. 345, 166 P. 37, 39.

A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines or shrubs, or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently rests upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws. Clev. Cod. Cal. § 660: Big Sespe Oil Co. v. Cochran (C. C. A.) 276 F. 216, 217.

Personal property, in order to lose its character as a chattel and become a fixture, must be annexed to the realty, either actually or constructively, must be appropriated to the use of that part of the realty with which it is connected, and must be intended as a permanent accession to the freehold. Boise-Payette Lumber Co. v. McCormick, 22 Idaho, 482.

That which is fixed or attached to something permanently as an appendage, and not removable. Webster. Something fixed or immovable. Worcester.

The general result seems to be that three views have been taken. One is that "fixture" means something which has been affixed to the realty, so as to become a part of it; it is fixed, irremovable. An opposite view is that "fixture" means something which appears to be a part of the realty, but is not fully so; it is only a chattel fixed to it, but removable. An intermediate view is that "fixture" means a chattel annexed, affixed, to the realty, but imports nothing as to whether it is removable; that is to be determined by considering its circumstances and the relation of the parties. Abbott; New Castle Theater Co. v. Ward, 57 Ind. App. 473, 104 N. E. 325, 327. See, also, Review Printing Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 128 Minn. 223, 158 N. W. 39, 40.

Agricultural Fixtures

Domestic Fixtures
All such articles as a tenant attaches to a dwelling house in order to render his occupation more comfortable or convenient, and which may be separated from it without doing substantial injury, such as furnaces, stoves, cupboards, shelves, bells, gas fixtures, or things merely ornamental, as painted wainscots, pier and chimney glasses, although attached to the walls with screws, marble chimney pieces, grates, beds palled to the walls, window blinds and curtains. Wright v. Du Bignon, 114 Ga. 765, 40 S. E. 747, 57 L. R. A. 669.

Trade Fixtures
Articles placed in or attached to rented buildings by the tenant, to prosecute the trade or business for which he occupies the premises, or to be used in connection with such business, or promote convenience and efficiency in conducting it. Herkimer County L. & P. Co. v. Johnson, 37 App. Div. 257, 55 N. Y. Supp. 924; Brown v. Reno Electric L. & P. Co. (C. C.) 55 Fed. 231; Security L. & T. Co. v. Villamette, etc., Mfg. Co., 99 Cal. 636, 34 Pac. 321; In re West (D. C.) 233 F. 903, 906; Winnike v. Heyman, 185 Iowa, 114, 169 N. W. 631, 632; Northwestern Lumber & Wrecking Co. v. Parker, 125 Minn. 107, 145 N. W. 664, 665. Such chattels as merchants usually possess and annex to the premises occupied by them to enable them to store, handle, and display their goods, which are generally removable without material injury to the premises. Lovett v. Berningham.

FLACO. A place covered with standing water.

FLAG. A national standard on which are certain emblems; an ensign; a banner. It is carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and commonly displayed at forts and many other suitable places.

In common parlance, the word "flag," when used as denoting a signal, does not necessarily mean the actual use of a flag, but by figure of speech the word is used in the secondary sense and signifies a signal given as with a flag; that is to say, as by a waving of the hand for the purpose of communicating information. Bergfeld v. Kansas City Rys. Co., 255 Mo. 654, 227 S. W. 106, 110.

—Flag, duty of the. This was an ancient ceremony in acknowledgment of British sovereignty over the British seas, by which a foreign vessel struck her flag and lowered her top-sail on meeting the British flag.

—Flag of the United States. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," (Rev. St. §§ 1791, 1792 [4 USCA §§ 1, 2]), it is provided "that, from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field; that, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission."

—Flag of truce. A white flag displayed by one of two belligerent parties to notify the other party that communication and a cessation of hostilities are desired.

—Law of the flag. See Law.

FLAGRANS. Lat. Burning; raging; in actual perpetration.

—Flagrants bellum. A war actually going on.

—Flagrantes crimen. In Roman law. A fresh or recent crime. This term designated a crime in the very act of its commission, or while it was of recent occurrence.

—Flagrante bello. During an actual state of war.

—Flagrante delito. In the very act of committing the crime. 4 Bl. Comm. 397.

FLAGRANT DÉLIT. In French law. A crime which is in actual process of perpetration or which has just been committed. Code d'Instr. Crim. art. 41.

FLAGRANT NECESSITY. A case of urgency rendering lawful an otherwise illegal act, as an assault to remove a man from impending danger.

FLAGRANTLY AGAINST EVIDENCE. So much against weight of evidence as to shock conscience and clearly indicate passion and prejudice of jury. Smith v. Commonwealth, 216 Ky. 813, 288 S. W. 752, 754.

FLASH CHECK. A check drawn upon a banker by a person who has no funds at the banker's and knows that such is the case.

FLAT. A place covered with water too shallow for navigation with vessels ordinarily used for commercial purposes. The space between high and low water mark along the edge of an arm of the sea, bay, tidal river, etc. Thomas v. Hatch, 23 Fed. Cas. 946; Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 424; Jones v. Janney, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 443, 42 Am. Dec. 308.

A floor or separate division of a floor, fitted for housekeeping and designed to be occupied by a single family. Cent. Dict. A building, the various floors of which are fitted up as flats, either residential or business.

FLATTERY. False or excessive praise, insincere complimentary language or conduct. Smith v. State, 13 Ala. App. 399, 69 So. 402, 404.

FLECTA. A feathered or fleet arrow. Cowell.

FLEDWITE. A discharge or freedom from amercements where one, having been an outlawed fugitive, cometh to the place of our lord of his own accord. Termes de la Ley.

The liberty to hold court and take up the amercements for beating and striking. Cowell.

The fine set on a fugitive as the price of obtaining the king's freedom. Spelman.

FLEE TO THE WALL. A metaphorical expression, used in connection with homicide done in self-defense, signifying the exhaustion of every possible means of escape, or of averting the assault, before killing the assailant.
FLEET. A place where the tide flows; a creek, or inlet of water; a company of ships or navy; a prison in London (so called from a river or ditch formerly in its vicinity,) now abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

FLEM. In Saxon and old English law. A fugitive bondman or villein. Spelman. The privilege of having the goods and fines of fugitives.

FLEMENE FRIT, FLEMENES FRINTHE, or FLYMENA FRYNTHE. (A corrupt pseudo-archaic form is Flemmes-ferth, representing the old law Latin form, flmeneferth, of the Anglo-Saxon flmyn ferth or flmene fyrmth. Cent. Dict.) The reception or relief of a fugitive or outlaw. Jacob.

FLEMESWITE. The possession of the goods of fugitives. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 147.

FLET. In Saxon law. Land; a house; home.

Fleta. The name given to an ancient treatise on the laws of England, founded mainly upon the writings of Bracton and Glanville, and supposed to have been written in the time of Edw. I. The author is unknown, but it is surmised that he was a judge or learned lawyer who was at that time confined in the Fleet prison, whence the name of the book.

Flichwite. In Saxon law. A fine on account of brawls and quarrels. Spelman.

FLOATING BOG. A mass of grass reeds or other aquatic vegetation growing and floating on the water which may become frozen into the ice in winter, and in high water is carried on the surface and broken off and may be moved by winds and currents to deep waters, where it disappears as sediment, and its formation in the summer season indicates a substantial amount of water between it and the soil forming the bed of the water, which may be navigable. Attorney General v. Bay Boom Wild Rice & Fur Farm, 172 Wis. 363, 178 N. W. 569, 572.

FLOATING CAPITAL (or circulating capital). The capital which is consumed at each operation of production and reappears transformed into new products. At each sale of these products the capital is represented in cash, and it is from its transformations that profit is derived. Floating capital includes raw materials destined for fabrication, such as wool and flax, products in the warehouses of manufacturers or merchants, such as cloth and linen, and money for wages, and stores. De Laveleye, Pol. Ec.

Capital retained for the purpose of meeting current expenditure.

FLOATING DEBT. By this term is meant that mass of lawful and valid claims against the corporation for the payment of which there is no money in the corporate treasury specifically designed, nor any taxation nor other means of providing money to pay particularly provided. People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374; City of Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 30 C. C. A. 38, 86 F. 276, 49 L. R. A. 534.

FLOATING POLICY. A floating policy is one intended to supplement special insurance, and attaches only when the latter ceases to cover the risk, the reason for the creation and the purpose of such policy being to provide indemnity for property which cannot, because of its frequent change in location and quantity, be covered by special insurance, and by its terms it cannot become operative until the prior insurance has been exhausted. Wilson Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 300 Mo. 1, 254 S. W. 266, 282.

FLODE-MARK. Flood-mark, high-water mark. The mark which the sea, at flowing water and highest tide, makes on the shore. Blount.

FLOGGING. Thrashing or beating with a whip or lash. In America, the act of June 4, 1920, c. 227, subchapter II, § 1, 41 Stat. 795 (10 USC § 1512) prohibits, as to the army, "cruel and unusual punishments of every kind, including flogging." Flogging is likewise prohibited in the navy. See 34 USCA § 1250, art. 49.

Ordinary and Extraordinary Floods

Extraordinary or unprecedented floods are floods which are of such unusual occurrence that they could not have been foreseen by men of ordinary experience and prudence. Ordinary floods are those, the occurrence of which may be reasonably anticipated from the general experience of men residing in the region where such floods happen. Soules v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 34 N. D. 7, 157 N. W. 828; 380, L. R. A. 1917A, 501; Elkland v. Casey (C. C. A.) 12 A. L. R. 175, 286 F. 821, 823; Clements v. Phoenix Utility Co., 119 Kan. 130, 287 P. 1062, 1065.

FLOOD WATERS. Waters escaping from a natural water course in time of flood or overflow. Where a stream coming out of the mouth of a canyon has left a cone of detritus and flows down one side thereof, but in a time of high water it breaks out of its channel to flow down the other slope of the cone, such waters are "flood waters" running wild, and any property owner threatened thereby has the right to protect himself against them as best he can, the waters not being "surface waters" in the technical sense, it being immaterial that the escaping waters have made for themselves a channel or follow some natural channel, gulley, or depression to come to defendant property owner, who has protected himself against them, as a stream, instead of spreading out over the ground. Horton v. Goodenoough, 154 Cal. 461, 104 P. 34, 35; Motl v. Boyd, 116 Tex. 226, 266 S. W. 406, 407; Siefert v. Cook, 74 Cal. App. 259, 241 P. 415, 420; Texas Co. v. Burkett, 17 Tex. 196 S. W. 273, 279; Thomson v. La Beta, 180 Cal. 171, 183 P. 152; Herrmannhaus v. Southern California Edison Co., 200 Cal. 81, 252 P. 607, 610.

FLOOR. A section of a building between horizontal planes. Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 1, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422. A story, including outer walls. Loominster Fuel Co. v. Scanlon, 248 Mass. 126, 137 N. E. 271, 24 A. L. R. 1459. The word "floor" may mean the mere bottom plane of an inclosure or artificial structure, the surface on which we walk, ride, or travel, or it may mean such surface or plane, together with the timbers, framework, and materials which enter into and form part of its construction. So of the word "flooring." If used without reference to a structure in its completed form, it would ordinarily convey the idea of materials suitable for use in constructing a floor, or in a narrow sense the boards or planks for covering the framework of a floor. When used with reference to a completed structure, it may mean either the materials of which the floor is composed, or the completed floor structure. When not attempting to speak with technical exactness, the words "floor" and "flooring" may be, and often are, used as synonymous or interchangeable terms. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. v. City of Cedar Rapids, 173 Iowa, 886, 155 N. W. 842; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Holt (C. C. A.) 280 P. 105, 107.

A term used metaphorically, or in parliamentary practice, to denote the exclusive right to address the body in session. A member who has been recognized by the chair, and who is in order, is said to have the floor, until his remarks are concluded. Similarly, the "floor of the house" means the main part of the hall where the members sit, as distinguished from the galleries, or from the corridors or lobbies.

In England, the floor of a court is that part between the judge's bench and the front row of counsel. Litigants appearing in person, in the high court or court of appeal, are supposed to address the court from the floor.

FLORENTINE PANDECTS. A copy of the Pandects discovered accidentally about the year 1137, at Amalfi, a town in Italy, near Salerno. From Amalfi, the copy found its way to Pisa, and, Pisa having submitted to the Florentines in 1406, the copy was removed in great triumph to Florence. By direction of the magistrates of the town, it was immediately bound in a superb manner, and deposited in a costly chest. Formerly, these Pandects were shown only by torch-light, in the presence of two magistrates, and two Cistercian monks, with their heads uncovered. They have been successively collated by Pollittan, Bogolinni, and Antonius Augustinus. An exact copy of them was published in 1553 by Francisetus Taurellus. For its accuracy and beauty, this edition ranks high among the ornaments of the press. Breuzach, who collated the manuscript about 1710, refers it to the sixth century. Butl. Hor. Jur. 90, 91.

FLORIN. A coin originally made at Florence, now of the value of about two English shillings.

FLOTAGES. Such things as by accident float on the top of great rivers or the sea. Blount.

A commission paid to water bailiffs. Cun. Dict.

FLOTSAM, FLOTSAN. A name for the goods which float upon the sea when cast overboard for the safety of the ship, or when a ship is sunk. Distinguished from "jetsam" and "ligan." Bract. lib. 2, c. 6; 5 Coke, 106; 1 Bl. Comm. 282.

FLAUD-MARKE. In old English law. Highwater mark: flood-mark. 1 Add. 88, 89.
FLOURISH. The act of brandishing or waving; a swinging or whirling movement as flourish of a whip or sword; to fling or whirl about while holding in the hand, brandish, flant, as, he flourished his whip. State v. Boyles, 24 N. M. 464, 174 P. 423.

FLOWAGE. The natural flow or movement of water from an upper estate to a lower one is a servitude which the owner of the latter must bear, though the flowage be not in a natural water course with well-defined banks; Leidlein v. Meyer, 29 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367; Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, 13 Am. Rep. 215; Gray v. McWilliams, 68 Cal. 157, 32 P. 376, 21 L. R. A. 563, 55 Am. St. Rep. 183.

FLOWING LANDS. This term has acquired a definite and specific meaning in law. It commonly imports raising and setting back water on another's land, by a dam placed across a stream or water course which is the natural drain and outlet for surplus water on such land. Call v. Middlesex County Com'rs, 2 Gray (Mass.) 235.

FLUCTUS. Flood; flood-tide. Bract. fol. 255.

FLUME. Primarily, a stream or river, but usually used to designate an artificial channel applied to some definite use, and may mean either an open or a covered aqueduct. Talbot v. Joseph, 79 Or. 308, 155 P. 184, 186.

FLUMEN. In Roman Law

A servitude which consists in the right to conduct the rain-water, collected from the roof and carried off by the gutters, onto the house or ground of one's neighbor. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 317; Erek. Inst. 2, 9, 9. Also a river or stream.

In Old English Law

Flood; flood-tide.

Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus communis est. Rivers and ports are public. Therefore the right of fishing there is common to all. Day, Ir. K. B. 55; Branch, Princ.

FLUMINE VOLUCRES. Wild fowl; waterfowl. 11 East, 571, note.

FLUVIUS. Lat. A river; a public river; flood; flood-tide.

FLUXUS. In old English law. Flow. Per fluxum et refluxum maris, by the flow and reflow of the sea. Dal. pl. 10.

FLY FOR IT. Anciently it was the custom in a criminal trial to inquire after the verdict, "Did he fly for it?" After the verdict, even if not guilty, forfeiture of goods followed conviction upon such inquity. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28. Wharton.

FLYING SWITCH. In railroading, a flying switch is made by uncoupling the cars from the engine while in motion, and throwing the cars onto the side track, by turning the switch, after the engine has passed it upon the main track. Greenleaf v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 29 Iowa, 39, 4 Am. Rep. 181; Baker v. Railroad Co., 122 Mo. 553, 26 S. W. 29; Hanson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 157 Wis. 455, 146 N. W. 524, 525.

FLYMA. In old English law. A runaway; fugitive; one escaped from justice, or who has no "liaford."

FLYMAN-FRYMTH. See Flemene Frit.

FOAL. a. To bring forth young; said of animals of the horse family. O'Rear v. Richardson, 17 Ala. App. 87, 81 So. 863, 866.

FOCAGE. House-bote; fire-bote. Cowell.

FOCALE. In old English law. Firewood. The right of taking wood for the fire. Fire-bote. Cunningham.

FODDER. Food for horses or cattle. In feudal law, the term also denoted a prerogative of the prince to be provided with corn, etc., for his horses by his subjects in his wars.

FODERTORIUM. Provisions to be paid by custom to the royal purveyors. Cowell.

FODERUM. See Fodder.

FODINA. A mine. Co. Litt. 6a.

FŒBUS. In international law. A treaty; a league; a compact.

Fœmina viro co-operta. A married woman; a feme covert.

Fœminæ ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remota sunt. Women are excluded from all civil and public charges or offices. Dig. 50, 17, 2; 1 Exch. 645; 6 Mees. & W. 216.

Fœminæ non sunt capaces de publicis officiis. Jenk. Cent. 237. Women are not admitted to public offices.

Fædation. Lending money at interest; the act of putting out money to usufruct.

Fænus. Lat. In the civil law. Interest on money; the lending of money on interest.

feit. 1 How. State Tr. 927.

FOIRTHOUGHT. In old Scotch law. Forethought; premeditated. 1 Pitt. Crim. Tr.
pt. 1, p. 90.

FOITERERS. Vagabonds. Blount.

FOLC-GEMOTE (spelled, also, folkmote, fol-mote, folkgemote; from folc, people, and gemote, an assembly). In Saxon law. A general assembly of the people in a town or shire. It appears to have had judicial functions of a limited nature, and also to have discharged political offices, such as deliberating upon the affairs of the commonwealth or complaining of misgovernment, and probably possessed considerable powers of local self-government. The name was also given to any sort of a popular assembly. See Spelman; Manwood; Cunningham.

FOLC-LAND. In Saxon law. Land of theolk or people. Land belonging to the people or the public.

Folc-land was the property of the community. It might be occupied in common, or possessed in severality; and, in the latter case, it was probably parcelled out to individuals in the folc-gemote or court of the district, and the grant sanctioned by the freemen who were there present. But, while it continued to be folc-land, it could not be alienated in perpetuity; and therefore, on the expiration of the term for which it had been granted, it reverted to the com-community, and was again distributed by the same authority. It was subject to many burdens and ex-actions from which boc-land was exempt. Wharton.

FOLC-MOTE. A general assembly of the people, under the Saxons. See Folc-Gemote.

FOLC-RIGHT. The common right of all the people. 1 Bl. Comm. 85, 67.

The jus commune, or common law, mentioned in the laws of King Edward the Elder, declaring the same equal right, law, or justice to be due to persons of all degrees.
Wharton.

FOLD-COURSE. In English law. Land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant. Sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called "common foldage." Co. Litt. 60, note 1.

FOLD-SOKE. A feudal service which constantly incurred the obligation of the tenant not to have a fold of his own but to have his sheep lie in the lord's fold. He was said to be con-suetus ad foldam, tied to his lord's fold. The basis of this service is thus expressed by a recent writer: "It is manure that the lord wants; the demand for manure has played a large part in the history of the human race."
Maitland, Domescay Book 76. In East Anglia the peasants had sheep enough to make this an important social institution; id. 442.

FOLDAGE. A privilege possessed in some places by the lord of a manor, which consists in the right of having his tenant's sheep feed on his fields, so as to manure the land. The name of foldage is also given to parts of Norfolk to the customary fee paid to the lord for exemption at certain times from this duty. Elton, Com. 45, 46.

FOLGARII. Menial servants; followers.
Bract.

FOLGERE. In old English law. A freeman, who has no house or dwelling of his own,
but is the follower or retainer of another, (hearthfast), for whom he performs certain prestial services.

FOLGERS. Menial servants or followers.
Cowell.
FOLGOTH. Official dignity.
FOLIE BRIGHTIQUE. See Insanity.
FOLIE CIRCULAIRE. See Insanity.

FOLIO. A leaf. In the ancient lawbooks it was the customary to number the leaves, instead of the pages; hence a folio would include both sides of the leaf, or two pages. The references to these books are made by the number of the folio, the letters "a" and "b" being added to show which of the two pages is intended; thus "Bracton, fol. 100a."
A large size of book, the page being obtained by folding the sheet of paper once only in the binding. Many of the ancient lawbooks are folios.
In computing the length of written legal documents, the term "folio" denotes a certain number of words, fixed by statute in some states at one hundred.

The term "folio," when used as a measure for computing fees or compensation, or in any legal proceedings, means one hundred words, counting every figure necessarily used as a word; and any portion of a folio, when in the whole draft or figure there is not a complete folio, and when there is any excess over the last folio, shall be computed as a folio. Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 4, § 1, par. 4 (Minn. St. 1897, § 10933).

FOLK-LAND; FOLK-MOTE. See Folc-Land; Folc-Gemote.

FOLLOW. To conform to, comply with, or be fixed or determined by; as in the expressions "costs follow the event of the suit," "the situs of personal property follows that of the owner," "the offspring follows the mother," (portus sequitur ventrem).
To walk in, to attend upon closely, as a profession or calling. Spears v. Ford, 197 Ky. 575, 247 S. W. 713.

The French words "fonds et biens," translated as "goods and effects," include reality, as they appear in the following terms of a treaty between the United States and Sweden: "The subjects of the contracting parties in the respective states may freely dispose of their goods and effects, either by testament, donation, or otherwise, in favor of such persons as they think proper; and their heirs, in whatever place they shall reside, shall receive the succession even ab intestat, either in person or by their attorney." § U. S. St. at Large, p. 64, art. 3, Erickson v. Carlson, 56 Neb. 132, 146 N. W. 532.

FONDS PERDUS. In French law. A capital is said to be invested in fonds perdus when it is stipulated that in consideration of the payment of an amount as interest, higher than the normal rate, the lender shall be repaid his capital in this manner. The borrower, after paying the interest during the period determined, is free as regards the capital itself. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law, 560.

FONSADERA. In Spanish law. Any tribute or loan granted to the king for the purpose of enabling him to defray the expenses of a war.

FONTANA. A fountain or spring. Bract. fol. 233.

FOOT. A measure of length containing twelve inches or one-third of a yard.
The base, bottom, or foundation of anything; and, by metonymy, the end or termination; as the foot of a fine.

FOOT OF THE FINE. The fifth part of the conclusion of a fine. It includes the whole matter, recting the names of the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

FOOT POUND. A unit of energy, or work, equal to work done in raising one pound avoirdupois against the force of gravity to the height of one foot. Webster, Dict. Healey v. Moran Towing & Transportation Co. (C. C. A.) 253 F. 334, 337.

FOOTGELD. In the forest law. An amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet, (expediting him.) To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest unleashed without punishment or control. Manwood.

FOOT-PRINTS. In the law of evidence. Impressions made upon earth, snow, or other surface by the feet of persons, or by the shoes, boots, or other covering of the feet. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 264.

FOR. Fr. In French law. A tribunal. Le for interieur, the interior forum; the tribunal of conscience. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 3, § 4.

FOR. Instead of; on behalf of; in place of; as, where one signs a note or legal instrument "for" another, this formula importing agency or authority. Emerson v. Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 240; Am. Dec. 66; Donovan v. Welch, 11 N. D. 113, 90 N. W. 282; Wilks v. Black, 2 East, 142.
FOR

71 Okl. 47, 175 P. 242, 243; Myakka Co. v. Edwards, 68 Fla. 382, 67 So. 217, 224.

In consideration for; as an equivalent for; in exchange for; in place of; as where property is agreed to be given "for" other property or "for" services. Norton v. Woodruff, 2 N. Y. 153; Duncan v. Franklin Tp, 43 N. J. Eq. 143, 10 A. 546; Mudge v. Black, Sheridan & Wilson (C. C. A.) 224 P. 919, 921.

Belonging to, exercising authority or functions within; as, where one describes himself as "a notary public in and for the said county."

FOR ACCOUNT OF. This formula, used in an indorsement of a note or draft, introduces the name of the person entitled to receive the proceeds. Freiberger v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259, 28 A. 1111; White v. Miners' Nat. Bank, 102 U. S. 668, 26 L. Ed. 260; Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Rochling, 275 U. S. 246, 48 S. Ct. 55, 69, 72 L. Ed. 294.

FOR AT LEAST. As applied to a number of days required for notice this phrase includes either the first or last day, but not both. Stroud v. Water Co., 58 N. J. Law, 422, 28 A. 578.

FOR CAUSE. With reference to the power of removal from office, this term means some cause other than the will or pleasure of the removing authority, that is, some cause relating to the conduct, ability, fitness, or competence of the officer. Hagerstown Street Com'rs v. Williams, 96 Md. 232, 53 A. 923; In re Nichols, 57 How. Frac. (N. Y.) 404.

FOR COLLECTION. A form of indorsement on a note or check where it is not intended to transfer title to it or to give it credit or currency, but merely to authorize the transferee to collect the amount of it. Central R. Co. v. Bank, 73 Ga. 383; Sweeney v. Easter, 1 Wall. 106, 17 L. Ed. 681; Freiberger v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259, 28 A. 1111; National Shawmut Bank of Boston v. Barnwell, 140 Miss. 816, 105 So. 462, 463; First Nat. Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, Mo. (C. C. A.) 6 F. (2d) 339, 345. But see In re Ziegenhein (Mo. App.) 157 S. W. 593, 886.

FOR PURPOSE OF. With the intention of. State v. Derridckson, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 342, 114 A. 286, 288.

FOR THAT. In pleading. Words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Ham. N. P. 9.

FOR THAT WHEREAS. In pleading. Formal words introducing the statement of the plaintiff's case, by way of recital, in his declaration, in all actions except trespass. 1 Inst. Cier. 170; 1 Burrill, Pr. 127. In trespass, where there was no recital, the expression used was, "For that." Id.; 1 Inst. Cier. 202.

FOR USE. (1) For the benefit or advantage of another. Thus, where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of his assignor, the suit is entitled "A. for use of B. v. C." (2) For enjoyment or employment without destruction. A loan "for use" is one in which the balsee has the right to use and enjoy the article, but without consuming or destroying it, in which respect it differs from a loan "for consumption." In re Hook's Estate, 168 Cal. 643, 200 P. 417, 418.

FOR VALUE. See Holder.

FOR VALUE RECEIVED. See Value Received.

FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. In a policy of marine or fire insurance, this phrase indicates that the insurance is taken for the benefit of all persons (besides those named) who may have an insurable interest in the subject.

FORAGE. Hay and straw for horses, particularly in the army. Jacob.

FORAGIUM. Straw when the corn is threshed out. Cowell.

FORAKER ACT. A name usually given to the act of congress of April 12, 1800, 51 Stat. L. 77, c. 191 (48 USC A § 731 et seq.), which provided civil government for Porto Rico. See a synopsis of it by Harlan, J., in Downes v. Bidwell, 152 U. S. 244, 390, 21 S. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1058.

FORBATUDUS. In old English law. The aggressor slain in combat. Jacob.

FORBEARANCE. The act of abstaining from proceeding against a delinquent debtor; delay in exacting the enforcement of a right;
FORCE MAJEUERE. Fr. In the law of insurance. Superior or irresistible force. Emerg. Tr. des Ass. c. 12.

FORCED HEIRS. In Louisiana. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. Civil Code La. art. 1495. And see Crafn v. Crafn, 17 Tex. 90; Hagerty v. Hagerty, 12 Tex. 456; Miller v. Miller, 105 La. 251, 29 So. 802; Succession of Hawkins, 139 La. 228, 71 So. 492, 494.

FORCED SALE. In practice. A sale made at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, in virtue of execution issued on a judgment already rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law. Sampson v. Williamson, 6 Tex. 110, 55 Am. Dec. 762.

A forced sale is a sale against the consent of the owner. The term should not be deemed to embrace a sale under a power in a mortgage. Patterson v. Taylor, 15 Fla. 328.

FORCHEAPUM. Pre-emption; forestalling the market. Jacob.

FORCIBLE DETAINER. The offense of violently keeping possession of lands and tenements, with menaces, force, and arms, and without the authority of law. 4 Bl. Comm. 148; 4 Steph. Comm. 250.

Forcible detainer may ensue upon a peaceable entry, as well as upon a forcible entry; but it is most commonly spoken of in the phrase "forcible entry and detainer." See infra.

FORCIBLE ENTRY. An offense against the public peace, or private wrong, committed by violently taking possession of lands and tenements with menaces, force, and arms, against the will of those entitled to the possession, and without the authority of law. 4 Bl. Comm. 148; 4 Steph. Comm. 250; Code Ga. 1882, § 4524 (Pen. Code, 1910, § 344).

Every person is guilty of forcible entry who either (1) by breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstance of terror, enters upon or into any real property; or (2) who, after entering peaceably upon real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct the party in possession. Code Civil Proc. Cal. § 1159.

At common law, a forcible entry was necessarily one effected by means of force, violence, menaces, display of weapons, or otherwise with the strong hand; but this rule has been relaxed, either by statute or the course of judicial decisions, in many of the states, so that an entry effected without the consent of the rightful owner, or against his remonstrance, or under circumstances which amount to no more than a mere trespass, is now technically considered "forcible," while a detainer of the prop-

Refraining from action. The term is used in this sense in general jurisprudence, in contradistinction to "act."

Unlawful violence. It is either simple, as entering upon another's possession, without doing any other unlawful act; compound, when some other violence is committed, which of itself alone is criminal; or implied, as in every trespass, rescous, or dsesisin. Lambert v. Helena Adjustment Co., 69 Mont. 510, 222 P. 1057, 1058.

Power statically considered; that is at rest, or latent, but capable of being called into activity upon occasion for its exercise. Efficiency; legal validity. This is the meaning when we say that a statute or a contract is "in force."

In Old English Law

A technical term applied to a species of assentary before the fact.

In Scotch Law

Coercion; duress. Bell.

In General

—Force and arms. A phrase used in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chit. Pl. 846, 850.

—Force and fear, called also "vi metuque," means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party. Brown.

—Forces. The military and naval power of the country.

—Of force. See that title.
Entry consisting merely in the refusal to surrender possession after a lawful demand, is treated as a "forcible" detainer; the reason in both cases being that the action of a "forcible entry and detainer": (see next title) has been found an extremely convenient method of procuring possession against a tenant refusing to quit, the "force" required at common law being now supplied by a mere fiction. See Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. art. 3975; Golfsadbery v. Bishop, 2 Duw. (Ky.) 144; Wells v. Darby, 13 Mont. 504, 34 P. 1095; Willard v. Warren, 17 Tenn. 717, 2 S. E. 168; Phelps v. Randolph, 347 Ill. 335, 32 N. E. 243; Brawley v. Risdon Iron Works, 33 Cal. 678; Cuyler v. Estes, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 1063, 64 S. W. 673; Herkimer v. Keeler, 109 Iowa, 680, 81 N. W. 178; Young v. Young, 169 Ky. 122, 58 S. W. 592; Quinn v. McCoshreno, 208 N. Y. 560, 562, 110 App. Div. 569; Crossen v. Campbell, 105 Or. 668, 202 P. 745, 748; Willows Cattle Co. v. Connell, 25 Ariz. 592, 220 P. 1088, 1093; Hammond Savings & Trust Co. v. Boney, 51 Ind. App. 296, 107 N. E. 480, 484; Gallaher v. Miles, 200 Mich. 632, 166 N. W. 1099, 1919; Godin v. McCall, 81 Fla. 514, 98 So. 553, 558; Brooks v. Brooks, 84 N. J. Law. 210, 65 Atl.; California Products v. Mitchell, 52 Cal. App. 212, 198 P. 646.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER. The action of forcible entry and detainer is a summary proceeding to recover possession of premises forcibly or unlawfully detained. The inquiry in such cases does not involve title, but is confined to the actual and peaceable possession of the plaintiff and the unlawful or forcible ouster or detention by defendant; the object of the law being to prevent the disturbance of the public peace by the forcible assertion of a private right. Gore v. Altice, 33 Wash. 335, 74 P. 556; Evel- eth v. Gill, 97 Me. 315, 54 A. 757; Harris v. Harris, 190 Ala. 619, 67 So. 465, 466; Bugner v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 280 Ill. 620, 117 N. E. 711, 717; Ball v. Dancer, 44 Okl. 114, 143 P. 565; Rose v. Skiles (Tex. Civ. App.), 245 S. W. 127; Yukon Inv. Co. v. Crescent Meat Co., 140 Wash. 136, 248 P. 377, 378; Allen v. Houn, 30 Wyo. 156, 219 P. 573, 580; Purcell v. Merrick, 172 Mo. App. 412, 158 S. W. 478, 480; Long v. Bagwell, 38 Okl. 312, 133 P. 50, 51.

FORCIBLE TRESPASS. In North Carolina, this is an invasion of the rights of another with respect to his personal property, of the same character, or under the same circumstances, which would constitute a "forcible entry and detainer" of real property at common law. It consists in taking or seizing the personal property of another by force, violence, or intimidation or in forcibly injuring it. State v. Lawson, 125 N. C. 740, 31 S. E. 967, 98 Am. St. Rep. 564; Smith v. Barefoot, 64 N. C. 567; State v. Hays, 32 N. C. 40; State v. Bowles, 61 N. C. 151; State v. Laney, 87 N. C. 555; State v. Oxendine, 187 N. C. 658, 122 S. E. 688, 571; State v. Holder, 185 N. C. 561, 125 S. E. 113, 114.

FORDAL. A butt or headland, jutting out upon other land. Cowell.

FORDANNO. In old European law. He who first assaulted another. Spelman.

FORDIKK. In old records. Grass or herbage growing on the edge or bank of dykes or ditches. Cowell.

FORE-MATRON. In a jury of women this word corresponds to the foreman of a jury. She was sworn in separately; 8 Carr. & P. 264.

FORE-OATH. Before the Norman Conquest, an oath required of the complainant in the first instance (in the absence of manifest facts) as a security against frivolous suits. Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 83.

FORECLOSURE. A process in chancery by which all further right existing in a mortgagor to redeem the estate is defeated and lost to him, and the estate becomes the absolute property of the mortgagee; being applicable when the mortgagor has forfeited his estate by non-payment of the money due on the mortgage at the time appointed, but still retains the equity of redemption. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 227; Goodman v. White, 36 Conn. 322; Arrington v. Liseon, 34 Cal. 376, 37 44 A. 722; Appeal of Ansonia Nat. Bank, 56 Conn. 257, 18 A. 1030; Williams v. Wilson, 42 Or. 299, 70 P. 1031, 95 Am. St. Rep. 745; Froelich v. Swafford, 33 S. D. 142, 144 N. W. 925, 928; Trustees of Schools v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 296 Ill. 89, 129 N. E. 567, 568.

The term is also loosely applied to any of the various methods, statutory or otherwise, known in different jurisdictions, of enforcing payment of the debt secured by a mortgage, by taking and selling the mortgaged estate. Dikeman v. Jewet Gold Mining Co. (C. C. A.) 15 F.(2d) 118; Realty Mortgage Co. v. Moore, 50 Fla. 2, 55 So. 155, 156.

Foreclosure is also applied to proceedings founded upon some other items; thus there are proceedings to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Insurance Co. of North America v. Cheatham, 221 Ky. 663, 299 S. W. 545, 547.

-Foreclosure decree. Properly speaking, a decree ordering the strict foreclosure (see infra) of a mortgage; but the term is also loosely and conventionally applied to a decree ordering the sale of the mortgaged premises and the satisfaction of the mortgage out of
FOREIGN TRADE

FOREIGN COINS. Coins issued as money under the authority of a foreign government. As to their valuation in the United States, see Rev. St. U. S. §§ 3564, 3565.

FOREIGN COURTS. The courts of a foreign state or nation. In the United States, this term is frequently applied to the courts of one of the states when their judgments or records are introduced in the courts of another.

FOREIGN DOMINION. In English law this means a country which at one time formed part of the dominions of a foreign state or potentate, but which by conquest or cession has become a part of the dominions of the British crown. 5 Best & S. 290.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT. The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 69, prohibiting the enlistment, as a soldier or sailor, in any foreign service. 4 Steph. Comm. 226. A later and more stringent act is that of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE. Drafts drawn on a foreign state or country.

FOREIGN-GOING SHIP. By the English merchant shipping act, 1854, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104,) § 2, any ship employed in trading, going between some place or places in the United Kingdom and some place or places situate beyond the following limits, that is to say: The coasts of the United Kingdom, the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Sark, Alderney, and Man, and the continent of Europe, between the river Elbe and Brest, inclusive. Home-trade ship includes every ship employed in trading and going between places within the last-mentioned limits.

FOREIGN MATTER. In old practice. Matter triable or done in another county. Cowell.

FOREIGN OFFICE. The department of state through which the English sovereign communicates with foreign powers. A secretary of state is at its head. Till the middle of the last century, the functions of a secretary of state as to foreign and home questions were not disunited.

FOREIGN SERVICE, in feudal law, was that whereby a mesne lord held of another, without the compass of his own fee, or that which the tenant performed either to his own lord or to the lord paramount out of the fee. (Ktch. 290.) Foreign service seems also to be used for knight's service, or escheat uncertain. (Perk. 650.) Jacob.

FOREIGN TRADE. The exportation and importation of commodities to or from foreign countries, as distinguished in the United States from interstate or coastwise trade, Sec U. S. v. Patton, 1 Holmes 421, Fed. Cas. No. 16,007.

FOREIGNER. In old English law, this term, when used with reference to a particular city, designated any person who was not an inhabitant of that city. According to later usage, it denotes a person who is not a citizen or subject of the state or country of which mention is made, or any one owing allegiance to a foreign state or sovereign.

For the distinctions, in Spanish law, between "domiciliated" and "transient" foreigners, see Yates v. Iams, 10 Tex. 168.

FOREIN. An old form of foreign (q. v.) Blount.

FOREJUDGE. In old English law and practice. To expel from court for some offense or misconduct. When an officer or attorney of a court was expelled for any offense, or for not appearing to an action by bill filed against him, he was said to be forjudged the court. Cowell.

To deprive or put out of a thing by the judgment of a court. To condemn to lose a thing.

To expel or banish.

FOREJUDGER. In English practice. A judgment by which a man is deprived or put out of a thing; a judgment of expulsion or banishment.

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury, who speaks or answers for the jury.

FORENSIC. Belonging to courts of justice.

FORENSIC MEDICINE, or medical jurisprudence, as it is also called, is "that science which teaches the application of every branch of medical knowledge to the purposes of the law; hence its limits are, on the one hand, the requirements of the law, and, on the other, the whole range of medicine. Anatomy, physiology, medicine, surgery, chemistry, physics, and botany lend their aid as necessity arises; and in some cases all these branches of science are required to enable a court of law to arrive at a proper conclusion on a contested question affecting life or property." Tayl. Med. Jur. 1.

FORENSIS.

In the Civil Law

Belonging to or connected with a court; forensic. Forensis homo, an advocate; a pleader of causes; one who practices in court. Calvin.

In Old Scotch Law

A strange man or stranger; an out-dwelling man; an "unfreeman," who dwells not within burgh.

FORESCHASE. Foresaken; disavowed. 10 Edw. II. c. 1.

FORESHORE. That part of the land adjacent to the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the ordinary flow of the tides; i. e., by the medium line between the greatest and least range of tide (spring tides and neap tides). Sweet. See, also, Shore.

FOREST. In old English law. A certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and lodge in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. Manw. For. Laws, c. 1, no. 1; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bl. Comm. 289.

A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts, or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. Spelman; Cowell.

The word is also used to signify a franchise or right, being the right of keeping, for the purpose of hunting, the wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, park, and warren, in a territory or precinct of woody ground or pasture set apart for the purpose. 1 Steph. Comm. 665.

—Forest courts. In English law. Courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greenward, and to the covert in which such deer were lodged. They consisted of the courts of attachments, of regard, of swinemote, and of justice-seat; but in later times these courts are no longer held. 3 Bl. Comm. 71.

—Forest law. The system or body of old law relating to the royal forests.

—Forestage. A duty or tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowell.

—Forester. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount.
FORESTAGIUM. A duty or tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowell.

FORESTALL. To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. Cowell. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Bl. Comm. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it. Cowell.

FORESTALLER. In old English law. Obstruction; hindrance; the offense of stopping the highway; the hindering a tenant from coming to his land; intercepting a deer before it can regain the forest. Also one who forestalls; one who commits the offense of forestalling. 3 Bl. Comm. 170; Cowell.

FORESTALLING. Obstructing the highway. Intercepting a person on the highway.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET. The act of the buying or contracting for any merchandise or provision on its way to the market, with the intention of selling it again at a higher price; or the dissuading persons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persuading them to enhance the price when there. 4 Bl. Comm. 158. Barton v. Morris, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 361. This was formerly an indictable offense in England, but is now abolished by St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24. 4 Steph. Comm. 291, note.

Forestalling differs from "engrossing," in that the latter consists in buying up large quantities of merchandise already on the market, with a view to effecting a monopoly or acquiring so large a quantity as to be able to dictate prices. Both forestalling and engrossing may enter into the manipulation of what is now called a "corner."

FORESTARIUS.

In English Law
A forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bract. 316; Du Cange.

In Scotch Law
A forester or keeper of woods, to whom, by reason of his office, pertains the bark and the hewn branches. And, when he rides through the forest, he may take a tree as high as his own head. Skene de Verh. Sign.

FORETHOUGHT FELONY. In Scotch law. Murder committed in consequence of a previous design. Ersk. Inst. 4, 4, 50; Bell.

FORFANG. In old English law. The taking of provisions from any person in fairs or markets before the royal purveyors were served with necessaries for the sovereign. Cowell. Also the seizing and rescuing of stolen or strayed cattle from the hands of a thief, or of those having illegal possession of them; also the reward fixed for such rescue.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)—51

FORFEIT. To lose an estate, a franchise, or other property belonging to one, by the act of the law, and as a consequence of some misfeasance, negligence, or omission. Cassell v. Crothers, 193 Pa. 359, 44 A. 440; State v. De Gress, 72 Tex. 242, 11 S. W. 1029; State v. Walbridge, 119 Mo. 383, 24 S. W. 457, 41 Am. St. Rep. 693; State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 432, 38 Am. Dec. 518. The further ideas connoted by this term are that it is a deprivation, (that is, against the will of the losing party,) and that the property is either transferred to another or resumed by the original grantor.

To incur a penalty; to become liable to the payment of a sum of money, as the consequence of a certain act. To incur loss through some fault, omission, error, or offense: loss. Sands v. Holbert, 98 W. Va. 574, 117 S. E. 896, 899; Ford v. Ellison, 287 Mo. 683, 239 S. W. 637, 640.

FORFEITABLE. LIABLE to be forfeited; subject to forfeiture for non-user, neglect, crime, etc.

FORFEITURE. 1. A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they go to the party injured as a recompense for the wrong which he alone, or the public together with himself, hath sustained. 2 Bl. Comm. 267. Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 227; Stephenson v. Calliham (Tex. Civ. App.) 289 S. W. 158, 159; Pratt v. Daniels-Jones Co., 47 Mont. 487, 139 P. 700, 701.

2. The loss of land by a tenant to his lord, as the consequence of some breach of fidelity. 1 Steph. Comm. 169.

4. The loss of goods or chattels, as a punishment for some crime or misdemeanor in the party forfeiting, and as a compensation for the offense and injury committed against him to whom they are forfeited. 2 Bl. Comm. 459.

It should be noted that "forfeiture" is not an identical or convertible term with "confiscation." The latter is the consequence of the former. Forfeiture is the result which the law attaches as an immediate and necessary consequence to the illegal acts of the individual; but confiscation implies the action of the state; and property, although it may be forfeited, cannot be said to be confiscated until the government has formally claimed or taken possession of it.

5. The loss of office by abuser, non-user, or refusal to exercise it. City of Williamsburg v. Weesner, 164 Ky. 769, 176 S. W. 224, 225.

6. The loss of a corporate franchise or charter in consequence of some illegal act, or

7. The loss of the right to life, as the consequence of the commission of some crime to which the law has affixed a capital penalty. In re New Jersey Court of Pardons, 97 N. J. Eq. 555, 129 A. 624, 630.

8. The incurring a liability to pay a definite sum of money as the consequence of violating the provisions of some statute, or refusal to comply with some requirement of law. State v. Marion County Com’rs, 85 Ind. 493.

10. In mining law, the loss of a mining claim held by location on the public domain (unpatented) in consequence of the failure of the holder to make the required annual expenditure upon it within the time allowed. McKay v. McDougall, 25 Mont. 258, 64 P. 689, 87 Am. St. Rep. 395; St. John v. Kidd, 26 Cal. 271.

FORFEITURE OF A BOND. A failure to perform the condition on which the obligor was to be excused from the penalty in the bond.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry who married without the consent or against the will of the guardian. See Duplex Valor Maritigii.

FORFEITURE OF SILK, supposed to lie in the docks, used, in times when its importation was prohibited, to be proclaimed each term in the exchequer.

FORFEITURES ABOLITION ACT. Another name for the felony act of 1870, abolishing forfeitures for felony in England.

FORGABULUM, or FORGAVEL. A quit-rent; a small reserved rent in money. Jacob.

FORGE. To fabricate, construct, or prepare one thing in imitation of another thing, with the intention of substituting the false for the genuine, or otherwise deceiving and defrauding by the use of the spurious article. To counterfeit or make falsely. Especially, to make a spurious written instrument with the intention of fraudulently substituting it for another, or of passing it off as genuine; or to fraudulently alter a genuine instrument to another's prejudice; or to sign another person's name to a document, with a deceitful and fraudulent intent. See In re Cross (D. C.) 43 F. 320; U. S. v. Watkins, 23 Fed. Cas. 445; Johnson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 251; Longwell v. Day, 1 Mich. N. P. 290; People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 P. 44; People v. Graham, 1 Sheph. (N. Y.) 155; Rohr v. State, 60 N. J. Law, 576, 88 A. 673; Haynes v. State, 15 Ohio St. 455; Garner v. State, 5 Lea, 213; State v. Greenwood, 76 Minn. 211, 78 N. W. 1042, 77 Am. St. Rep. 632; State v. Young, 46 N. H. 266, 88 Am. Dec. 212; Everage v. State, 14 Ala. App. 100, 71 So. 983, 984; De Rose v. People, 64 Colo. 322, 171 P. 359, 360, L. R. A. 1918C, 1193; State v. Sokal, 100 W. Va. 652, 131 S. E. 706, 708, 46 A. L. R. 1523; Davis v. State, 25 Ga. 532, 103 S. E. 819, 822; American Expr. Co. v. People’s Sav. Bank, 192 Iowa, 306, 151 N. W. 701, 703.

To forge (a metaphorical expression, borrowed from the occupation of the smith) means, properly speaking, no more than to make or form, but in our law it is always taken in an evil sense. 2 East. P. C. p. 882, c. 19, § 1.

To forge is to make in the likeness of something else; to counterfeit is to make in imitation of something else. With a view to defraud by passing the false copy for genuine or original. Both words, "forged" and "counterfeited," convey the idea of similitude. State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 292.

In common usage, however, forgery is almost always predicated of some private instrument or writing, as a deed, note, will, or a signature; and counterfeiting denotes the fraudulent imitation of coined or paper money or some substitute therefor.

FORGERY.

In Criminal Law

The thing itself, so falsely made, imitated or forged; especially a forged writing. A forged signature is frequently said to be "a forgery."

BLLAW DICT. (3d Ed.)
In the Law of Evidence

The fabrication or counterfeiting of evidence. The artful and fraudulent manipulation of physical objects, or the deceitful arrangement of genuine facts or things, in such a manner as to create an erroneous impression or a false inference in the minds of those who may observe them. See Burrill, Circ. Ev. 131, 420.

FORGERY ACT, 1870. The statute 33 & 34 Vict. c. 58, was passed for the punishment of forgers of stock certificates, and for extending to Scotland certain provisions of the forgery act of 1831. Mozley & Whitley.

FORHERDA. In old records. A herdland, headland, or foreland. Cowell.

FORI DISPUTATIONES. In the civil law. Discussions or arguments before a court. 1 Kent, Comm. 530.

FORINSECUS. Lat. Foreign; exterior; outside; extraordinary. Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town, and is not included within the liberties of it. Cowell; Blount; Jacob; 1 Reeve, Eng. Law. 273.

FORINSIC. In old English law. Exterior; foreign; extraordinary. In feudal law, the term “forinsic services” comprehended the payment of extraordinary aids or the retention of extraordinary military services, and in this sense was opposed to “intrinsick services.” 1 Reeve, Eng. Law. 273.

FORIS. Lat. Abroad; out of doers; on the outside of a place; without; extrinsic.

FORISBANITUS. In old English law. Banished.

FORISFACERE. Lat. To forfeit; to lose an estate or other property on account of some criminal or illegal act. To confiscate.

To act beyond the law, i.e., to transgress or infringe the law; to commit an offense or wrong; to do any act against or beyond the law. See Co. Litt. 59a; Du Cange; Spelman.

Forisfacere, i.e., extra legem seu consuetudinem facere. Co. Litt. 59. Forisfacere, i.e., to do something beyond law or custom.

FORISFACTURA. A crime or offense through which property is forfeited.

A fine or punishment in money. Forfeiture. The loss of property or life in consequence of crime.

FORISFACTURA PLENA. A forfeiture of all a man’s property. Things which were forfeited. Du Cange. Spelman.

FORISFACTUS. A criminal. One who has forfeited his life by commission of a capital offense. Spelman.

FORISFACTUS SERVUS. A slave who has been a free man, but has forfeited his freedom by crime. Du Cange.

FORISFAMILIARE. In old English and Scotch law. Literally, to put out of a family (foris familiam ponere). To portion off a son, so that he could have no further claim upon his father. Glany. lib. 7, c. 3.

To emancipate, or free from paternal authority.

FORISFAMILIATED. In old English law. Portioned off. A son was said to be forisfamiliated (forisfamilari) if his father assigned him part of his land, and gave him seisin thereof, and did this at the request or with the free consent of the son himself, who expressed himself satisfied with such portion. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law. 42, 110.

FORISFAMILIATUS. In old English law. Put out of a family; portioned off; emancipated; forisfamiliated. Bract. fol. 64.

FORISJUDICATUS. Forejudged; sent from court; banished. Deprived of a thing by judgment of court. Bract. fol. 250b; Co. Litt. 100b; Du Cange.

FORISJURARE. To forswear; to abjure; to abandon.

—Forisjurare parentilam. To remove oneself from parental authority. The person who did this lost his rights as heir. Du Cange.

—Provinciae forisjurare. To forswear the country. Spelman.

FORJUDGE. See Forejudge.

FORJURER. L. Fr. In old English law. To forswear; to abjure.

FORJURER ROYALME. To abjure the realm. Brit. cc. 1, 16.

FORLIER—LAND. Land in the diocese of Hereford, which had a peculiar custom attached to it, but which has been long since disused, although the name is retained. But. Surv. 56.

FORM. A model or skeleton of an instrument to be used in a judicial proceeding, containing the principal necessary matters, the proper technical terms or phrases, and whatever else is necessary to make it formally correct, arranged in proper and methodical order, and capable of being adapted to the circumstances of the specific case.
In contradistinction to "substance," "form" means the legal or technical manner or order to be observed in legal instruments or juridical proceedings, or in the construction of legal documents or processes.

The distinction between "form" and "substance" is often important in reference to the validity or amendment of pleadings. If the matter of the plea is bad or insufficient, irrespective of the manner of setting it forth, the defect is one of substance. If the matter of the plea is good and sufficient, but is inartificially or defectively pleaded, the defect is one of form. Pierson v. Insurance Co., 7 Henst. (Del.) 397, 31 Atl. 666.

Common Form, Solemn Form
See Probate.

Forms of Action
This term is the general designation of the various species or kinds of personal actions known to the common law, such as trover, trespass, debt, assumpsit, etc. These differ in their pleadings and evidence, as well as in the circumstances to which they are respectively applicable. Truax v. Parvis, 7 Henst. (Del.) 330, 32 A. 227.

Matter of Form
In pleadings, in indictments, in affidavits, conveyances, etc., matter of form (as distinguished from matter of substance) is all that relates to the mode, form, or style of expressing the facts involved, the choice or arrangement of words, and other such particulars, without affecting the substantial validity or sufficiency of the instrument, or without going to the merits. Railway Co. v. Kurtz, 10 Ind. App. 60, 67 N. E. 303; Meath v. Mississippi Levee Com’rs, 100 U. S. 268, 3 S. Ct. 284, 27 L. Ed. 500; State v. Amidon, 98 Vt. 624, 2 A. 154.

Form of the Statute
This expression means the words, language, or frame of a statute, and hence the inhibition or command which it may contain; used in the phrase (in criminal pleading) "against the form of the statute in that case made and provided."

FORMA. Lat. Form; the prescribed form of judicial proceedings.

Forma est esse. Form gives being. Called "the old physical maxim." Lord Henley, Ch., 2 Eden, 99.

FORMA ET FIGURA JUDICII. The form and shape of judgment or judicial action. 3 Bl. Comm. 271.

Forma legalis forma essentia. Legal form is essential form. 10 Coke, 100.

Forma non observata, infertur adnuillé actus. Where form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. 12 Coke, 7. Where the law prescribes a form, the nonobservance of it is fatal to the proceeding, and the whole becomes a nullity. Best, Ev. Introd. § 59.

FORMA PAUPERIS. See In Forma Pauperis.

FORMAL. Relating to matters of form; as, "formal defects"; inserted, added, or joined pro forma. See Parties.

FORMALITIES. In England, robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions. Enc. Lond.

FORMALITY. The conditions, in regard to method, order, arrangement, use of technical expressions, performance of specific acts, etc., which are required by the law in the making of contracts or conveyances, or in the taking of legal proceedings, to insure their validity and regularity. Succession of Seymour, 48 La. Ann. 903, 20 So. 217.

FORMATA. In canon law. Canonical letters. Spelman.

FORMATA BREVIA. Formed writs; writs of form. See Brevia Formata.

FORMED ACTION. An action for which a set form of words is prescribed, which must be strictly adhered to. 10 Mod. 140, 141.

FORMED DESIGN. In criminal law, and particularly with reference to homicide, this term means a deliberate and fixed intention to kill, whether directed against a particular person or not. Mitchell v. State, 60 Ala. 33; Wilson v. State, 128 Ala. 17, 29 So. 569; Ake v. State, 30 Tex. 473.

FORMEDON. An ancient writ in English law which was available for one who had a right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. It was in the nature of a writ of right, and was the highest action that a tenant in tail could have; for he could not have an absolute writ of right, that being confined to such as claimed in fee-simple, and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted to him by the statute de donis, (Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 1,) and was emphatically called "his" writ of right. The writ was distinguished into three species, viz.: Formedon in the descender, in the remainder, and in the reverter. It was abolished in England by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. See 3 Bl. Comm. 191; Co. Litt. 316; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 255.

FORMEDON IN THE DESCENDER. A writ of formedon which lay where a gift was made in tail, and the tenant in tail aliened the lands or was dissised of them and died, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold. 3 Bl. Comm. 192.

FORMEDON IN THE REMAINDER. A writ of formedon which lay where a man gave lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee, and he who had the particular estate died.
without issue inheritable, and a stranger intruded upon him in remindcr, or his heir, was entitled to this writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 192.

FORMEDON IN THE REVERTER. A writ of formedon which lay where there was a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donor or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion fell in upon the donor, his heirs designs. In such case, the reversioner had this writ to recover the lands. 3 Bl. Comm.
192.

FORMELLA. A certain weight of above 70 lbs., mentioned in 51 Hen. III. Cowell.

FORMER ACQUITTAL. See Antrefolus.

FORMER ADJUDICATION, or FORMER RECOVERY. An adjudication or recovery in a former action. See Res Judicata.

FORMIDO PERICULI. Lat. Fear of danger. 1 Kent, Comm. 23.

FORMS OF ACTION. This term comprehends the various classes of personal action at common law, viz.: trespass, case, trover, definse, repelvis, covenant, debt, assumpsit, scire facias, and revivor, as well as the nearly obsolete actions of account and annuity, and the modern action of mandamus. They are now abolished in England by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875, and in many of the states of the United States, where a uniform course of proceeding under codes of procedure has taken their place. But the principles regulating the distinctions between the common-law actions are still found aplicable even where the technical forms are abolished.

FORMULA. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings.
In the civil law, an action. Calvin.

FORMULÆ. In Roman law. When the legis actiones were proved to be inconvenient, a mode of procedure called "per formulæ," i.e., by means of formulæ, was gradually introduced, and eventually the legis actiones were abolished by the Lex Æbutia, B. C. 164, excepting in a very few exceptional matters.
The formulæ were four in number, namely:
(1) The Demonstratio, wherein the plaintiff stated, i.e., showed, the facts out of which his claim arose; (2) the Intentio, where he made his claim against the defendant; (3) the Adjudicatio, wherein the judex was directed to assign or adjudicate the property or any portion or portions thereof according to the rights of the parties; and (4) the Condemnatio, in which the judex was authorized and directed to condemn or to acquit according as the facts were or were not proved. These formulæ were obtained from the magistrate, (in jure,) and were thereafter proceeded with before the judex, (in judicio). Brown. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 204.

FORMULARIES. Collections of formulæ, or forms of forensic proceedings and instruments used among the Franks, and other early continental nations of Europe. Among these the formulary of Marculphus may be mentioned note 77, lib. 3.

FORNAGIUM. The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, who was bound to bake in the lord's common oven, (in furno domini,) or for a commission to use his own.

FORNICATION. Unlawful sexual intercourse between two unmarried persons. Further, if one of the persons be married and the other not, it is fornication on the part of the latter, though adultery for the former. In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, it is adultery on the part of both persons if the woman is married, whether the man is married or not. Banks v. State, 96 Ala. 78, 11
So. 404; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am.
Rep. 21; Com. v. Lafferty, 6 Grat. (Va.) 673;
People v. Rouse, 2 Mich. N. P. 209; State v.
Shear, 51 Wis. 469, 8 N. W. 287; Buchanan
v. State, 55 Ala. 154; Stubblefield v. State, 85 Tex. Cr. 48, 200 S. W. 1000; State v.
Giescke, 125 Minn. 497, 147 N. W. 663, 666;
State v. Phillips, 26 N. D. 266, 144 N. W. 94;
95, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 470, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 320; State v. Ling, 91 Kan. 647, 138 P. 552,
Ann. Cas. 1915D, 374.

FORNIX. Lat. A brothel; fornication.

FORNO. In Spanish law. An oven. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, l. 18.

FORO. In Spanish law. The place where tribunals hear and determine causes.—exer-cendurum litium locus.

FOROS. In Spanish law. Emphyteutic rents.
Schm. Civil Law, 309.

FORPRISE. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. Cowell;
Blount.

In another sense, the word is taken for any action.

FORSCHEL. A strip of land lying next to the highway.

FORSES. Waterfalls. Camden, Brit.

FORSPÆAKER. An attorney or advocate in a cause. Blount; Whishaw.

FORSPÆCA. In old English law. Prolocutor; paronymphasis.

FORTSTAL. See Forestall.

Forstollaris est pauperum depressor et totius communitatis et patriæ publicae inimicus. 3.
Inst. 106. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy of the whole community and country.

FORSWEAR. In criminal law. To make oath to that which the deponent knows to be untrue.

This term is wider in its scope than "perjury," for the latter, as a technical term, includes the idea of the oath being taken before a competent court or officer, and relating to a material issue, which is not implied by the word "forswear." Fowle v. Robbins, 12 Mass. 501; Tolman v. Brittlebank, 4 Barn. & A. 632; Railway Co. v. McCurdy, 114 Pa. 554, 5 A. 253, 60 Am. Rep. 396.

FORT. This term means "something more than a mere military camp, post, or station. The term implies a fortification, or a place protected from attack by such some means as a moat, wall, or parapet." U. S. v. Tichenor (C. C.) 12 F. 424.

FORTALICE, or FORTELACE. A fortress or place of strength, which anciently did not pass without a special grant. 11 Hen. VII. c. 18.

FORTALITIUM. In old Scotch law. A fortalice; a castle. Properly a house or tower which has a battlement or a ditch or moat about it.

FORTAXED. Wrongly or extortunately taxed.

FORTHCOMING. In Scotch law. The action by which an arrestment (garnishment) is made effectual. It is a decree or process by which the creditor is given the right to demand that the sum arrested be applied for payment of his claim. 2 Kames, Eq. 288, 289; Bell.

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given to a sheriff who has levied on property, conditioned that the property shall be forthcoming, &c., produced, when required. On the giving of such bond, the goods are allowed to remain in the possession of the debtor. Hill v. Manners, 11 Grat. (Va.) 522; Nichols v. Chittenden, 14 Colo. App. 49, 59 P. 954; Burnham-Munger Root Dry Goods Co. v. Strauli, 102 Neb. 142, 166 N. W. 265.

The sheriff or other officer levying a writ of fieri facias, or distress warrant, may take from the debtor or a bond, with sufficient surety, payable to the creditor, reciting the service of such writ or warrant, and the amount due therefor, (including his fees for taking the bond, commissions, and other lawful charges, if any,) with condition that the property shall be forthcoming at the day and place of sale; whereupon such property may be permitted to remain in the possession and at the risk of the debtor. Code Va. 1919, § 631.

FORTHWITH. As soon as, by reasonable exertion, confined to the object, a thing may be done. Thus, when a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within twenty-four hours. When a statute enacts that an act is to be done "forthwith," it means that the act is to be done within a reasonable time. 1 Chit. Archb. Pr. (12th Ed.) 164; Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 20 S. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423; Faivre v. Manderscheid, 117 Iowa, 724, 90 N. W. 76; Martin v. Pifer, 96 Ind. 248; Hilderson v. City of Grand Island, 115 Neb. 287, 212 N. W. 619, 621; State v. French, 102 Wash. 273, 172 P. 1156, 1157; Gedratis v. Verdier, 236 Mich. 383, 210 N. W. 538, 340; Dallas Opera House Ass'n v. Dallas Enterprises (Tex. Civ. App.) 288 S. W. 656, 690; National Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 62 Ind. App. 15, 111 N. E. 18, 18; Gamwell v. Bigley, 253 Mass. 378, 149 N. E. 155, 159; Macelia v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co., 101 N. J. Law, 238, 128 A. 244, 245.

FORTIA. Force. In old English law. Force used by an accessory, to enable the principal to commit a crime, as by binding or holding a person while another killed him, or by aiding or counseling in any way, or commanding the act to be done. Bract. fols. 138, 1389. According to Lord Coke, fortia was a word of art, and properly signified the furnishing of a weapon of force to do the fact, and by force whereof the fact was committed, and he that furnished it was not present when the fact was done. 2 Inst. 152.

FORTIA FRISCA. Fresh force (q. v.).

FORTILITY. In old English law. A fortified place; a castle; a bulwark. Cowell; 11 Hen. VII. c. 18.

FORTIOR. Lat. Stronger. A term applied, in the law of evidence, to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party. Burris, Circ. Ev. 64, 66.

Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis. 2 Rolle, 325. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man.

Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is of greater force and effect than that of man. Co. Litt. 234a; Shep. Touch. 302; 15 East, 178. The law in some cases overrides the will of the individual, and renders ineffective or futile his expressed intention or contract. Broom, Max. 697.

FORTIORI. See A Fortiori.

FORTIS. Lat. Strong. Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel. Townsh. Pl. 227.

FORTLETT. A place or port of some strength; a little fort. Old Nat. Brev. 45.

FORTUIT. In French law. Accidental; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitement, accidentally; by chance; casually.

FORTUITOUS EVENT. In the civil law. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted. An unforeseen occurrence, not caused by either of the parties, nor such as they could prevent. In French it is called "cas fortuit." Civ. Code La. art. 3556, no. 15. There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or inevitable accident, and irresistible force. By the former, commonly called the "act of God," is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable. Of this nature are losses occasioned by the intruders of a hostile army, or by public enemies. Story, Balm. § 25. In Workmen's Compensation Acts fortuitous event is accidental happening, or accident that takes place without design or expectation, or thing that happens from irresistible cause. The term is expressly defined in several acts. Stolp v. Department of Labor and Industries, 188 Wash. 862, 246 P. 20, 21; Frandilla v. Department of Labor and Industries, 187 Wash. 530, 243 P. 5; Stertz v. Industrial Insurance Commission of Washington, 91 Wash. 588, 185 P. 256, 259, Ann. Cas. 1918 B, 354; Cole v. Department of Labor and Industries, 137 Wash. 598, 243 P. 7, 9; Zappalla v. Industrial Ins. Commission, 82 Wash. 314, 144 P. 54, L. R. A. 1916 A, 285; Thompson v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 156 La. 476, 100 So. 688, 690; Deppe v. Pacific Coast Forge Co., 154 Wash. 203, 259 P. 720, 721.

FORTUNA. Lat. Fortune; also treasure-trove. Jacob.

Fortunam faciunt iudicem. They make fortune the judge. Co. Litt. 167. Spoken of the process of making partition among coparceners by drawing lots for the several parts.

FORTUNE-TELLERS. In English law. Persons pretending or professing to tell fortunes, and punishable as rogues and vagabonds or disorderly persons. 4 Bl. Comm. 62.

FORTUNIUM. In old English law. A tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

FORTY. In land laws and conveyancing, in those regions where grants, transfers, and deeds are made with reference to the subdivisions of the government survey, this term means forty acres of land in the form of a square, being the tract obtained by quartering a section of land (640 acres) and again quartering one of the quarters. Lente v. Clarke, 22 Fla. 515, 1 So. 149.

FORTY-DAYS COURT. In old English forest law. The court of attachment in forests, or wood-mote court.

FORUM. Lat. A court of justice, or judicial tribunal; a place of jurisdiction; a place where a remedy is sought; a place of litigation. 3 Story, 347.

In Roman Law

The market place, or public paved court, in the city of Rome, where such public business was transacted as the assemblies of the people and the judicial trial of causes, and where also elections, markets, and the public exchange were held.

FORUM ACTUS. The forum of the act. The forum of the place where the act was done which is now called in question.

FORUM CONSCIENTIÆ. The forum or tribunal of conscience.

FORUM CONTENTIOSUM. A contentious forum or court; a place of litigation; the ordinary court of Justice, as distinguished from the tribunal of conscience. 3 Bl. Comm. 211.

FORUM CONTRACTUS. The forum of the contract; the court of the place where a contract is made; the place where a contract is made, considered as a place of jurisdiction. 2 Kent Comm. 463.

FORUM DOMESTICUM. A domestic forum or tribunal. The visitatorial power is called a "forum domesticum," calculated to determine, sine strepitu, all disputes that arise within themselves. 1 W. Bl. 82.

FORUM DOMICILI. The forum or court of the domicile; the domicile of a defendant, considered as a place of jurisdiction. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

FORUM ECCLESIASTICUM. An ecclesiastical court. The spiritual jurisdiction, as distinguished from the secular.

FORUM LIGEANTIÆ REI. The forum of defendant's allegiance. The court or jurisdiction of the country to which he owes allegiance.

FORUM ORIGINIS. The court of one's nativity. The place of a person's birth, considered as a place of jurisdiction.

FORUM REGIUM. The king's court. St. Westm. 2, c. 43.

FORUM REI. This term may mean either (1) the forum of the defendant, that is, of his residence or domicile; or (2) the forum of the res or thing in controversy, that is, of the place where the property is situated. The ambiguity springs from the fact that rei may be the genitive of either res or res.

FORUM REI GESTÆ. The forum or court of a res gesta, (thing done;) the place where an act is done, considered as a place of jurisdiction and remedy. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

FORUM REI SITÆ. The court where the thing in controversy is situated. The place where the subject-matter in controversy is situated, considered as a place of jurisdiction. 2 Kent, Comm. 463.

FORUM SECULARE. A secular, as distinguished from an ecclesiastical or spiritual, court.

FORURTH. In old records. A long slip of ground. Cowell.

FORWARDING MERCHANT, or FORWARDER. One who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which he receives a compensation from the owners, having no concern in the vessels or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight, and not being deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman and agent. Story, Bailm. §§ 502, 509. Schloss v. Wood, 11 Colo. 287, 17 P. 910; Ackley v. Kellogg, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 224; Place v. Union Exp. Co., 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 19; Bush v. Miller, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 488.

FOSSA.

In the Civil Law

A ditch; a receptacle of water, made by hand. Dig. 43, 14, 1, 5.

In Old English Law

A ditch. A pit full of water, in which women committing felony were drowned. A grave or sepulcher. Spelman.

FOSSAGIUM. In old English law. The duty levied on the inhabitants for repairing the moat or ditch round a fortified town.

FOSSATORUM OPERATIO. In old English law. Fosse work; or the service of laboring, done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for the repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town, for which some paid a contribution, called "fossagiun." Cowell.

FOSSATUM. A dyke, ditch, or trench; a place inclosed by a ditch; a moat; a canal.

FOSSE-WAY, or FOSSE. One of the four ancient Roman ways through England. Spelman.

FOSELLUM. A small ditch. Cowell.

FOSTERING. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Fostering was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers. Mozley & Whitley.

FOSTERLAND. Land given, assigned, or allotted to the finding of food or victuals for any person or persons; as in monasteries for the monks, etc. Cowell; Blount.

FOSTERLEAN. The remuneration fixed for the rearing of a foster child; also the jointure of a wife. Jacob.

FOUJDA. In Hindu law. Under the Mogul government a magistrate of the police over a large district, who took cognizance of all criminal matters within his jurisdiction, and sometimes was employed as receiver general of the revenues. Wharton.

FOUJDAZRY COURT. In Hindu law. A tribunal for administering criminal law.

FOUJDAZRY COURT. In Hindu law. A tribunal for administering criminal law.

FOUNDER. The founding or building of a college or hospital. The incorporation or endowment of a college or hospital is the foundation; and he who endows it with land or other property is the founder. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 567, 4 L. Ed. 629; Segrave's Appeal, 126 Pa. 382, 17 A. 412; Union Baptist Asylum v. Hunn, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 249, 28 S. W. 755.

FOUNDERED. Based upon; arising from, growing out of, or resting upon; as in the expressions "founded in fraud," "founded on a consideration, founded on contract," and the FOUNDER. The person who endows an ecclesiastical corporation or institution, or supplies the funds for its establishment. See Foundation.

FOUNDERS' SHARES. In English Company Law. Shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital. Encyc. Dict.

FOUNDEROSA. Founderous; out of repair, as a road. Cro. Car. 366.

FOUNDLING. A deserted or exposed infant; a child found without a parent or guardian, its relatives being unknown. It has a settlement in the district where found. State ex rel. Wilson v. Pierre, 155 La. 510, 99 So. 421.

FOUNDLING HOSPITALS. Charitable institutions which exist in most countries for taking care of infants forsaken by their parents, such being generally the offspring of illegitimate connections. The foundling hospital act in England is the 13 Geo. II. c. 29.

FOUR. Fr. In old French law. An oven or bake-house. Four banal, an oven, owned by the seignior of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

FOUR CORNERS. The face of a written instrument. That which is contained on the face of a deed (without any aid from the knowledge of the circumstances under which it is made) is said to be within its four corners, because every deed is still supposed to be written on one entire skin, and so to have but four corners.

To look at the four corners of an instrument is to examine the whole of it, so as to construe it as a whole, without reference to any one part more than another. 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 235.

FOUR SEAS. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scotch and Irish; the Northern, or North sea; the Eastern, being the German ocean; the Southern, being the British channel.

FOURCHER. Fr. To fork. This was a method of delaying an action formerly resorted to by defendants when two of them were joined in the suit. Instead of appearing together, each would appear in turn and cast an essoin for the other, thus postponing the trial.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. The Fourteenth Amendment of the constitution of the United States became a part of the organic law July 28, 1868, and its importance entitles it to special mention. It creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states; forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; and secures all "persons" against any state action which is either deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denial of the equal protection of the laws.

FOWLS OF WARREN. Such fowls as are preserved under the game laws in warrens. According to Manwood, these are partridges and pheasants. According to Coke, they are partridges, rails, quails, woodcocks, pheasants, mallards, and herons. Co. Litt. 223.

FOX'S LIBEL ACT. In English law. This was the statute 32 Geo. III. c. 60, which secured to jurors, upon the trial of indictments for libel, the right of pronouncing a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter in issue, and no longer bound them to find a verdict of guilty on proof of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to it in the indictment. Wharton.

FOY. L. Fr. Faith; allegiance; fidelity.

FR. A Latin abbreviation for "fragmentum," a fragment, used in citations to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civilis of Justinian, the several extracts from juristic writings of which it is composed being so called.

FRACTIO. Lat. A breaking; division; fraction; a portion of a thing less than the whole.

FRACTION. A breaking, or breaking up; a fragment or broken part; a portion of a thing less than the whole. Jory v. Palace Dry Goods Co., 30 Or. 196, 46 P. 786.

FRACTION OF A DAY. A portion of a day. The dividing a day. Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day. 2 Bl. Comm. 141.

FRACTIONAL. As applied to tracts of land, particularly townships, sections, quarter sections, and other divisions according to the government survey, and also mining claims, this term means that the exterior boundary lines are laid down to include the whole of such a division or such a claim, but that the tract in question does not measure up to the full extent or include the whole acreage, because a portion of it is cut off by an overlapping survey, a river or lake, or some other external interference. See Tolleston Club v. State, 141 Ind. 197, 35 N. E. 214; Parke v. Meyer, 28 Ark. 287; Gotterman v. Schlemeyer, 111 Mo. 404, 19 S. W. 487. Any irregular division whether containing more or less than conventional amount of acreage. Graysonia-Nashville Lumber Co. v. Wright, 117 Ark. 155, 175 S. W. 405; South Florida Farms Co. v. Goodno, 84 Fla. 532, 94 So. 672, 675.

Frationem diem non recipit lex. Lofti, 572. The law does not take notice of a portion of a day.

FRACTURA NAVIUM. Lat. The breaking or wreck of ships; the same as naufragium, (q. v.)

FRAGMENTA. Lat. Fragments. A name sometimes applied (especially in citations) to the Digest or Pandects in the Corpus Juris Civile of Justinian, as being made up of numerous extracts or "fragments" from the writings of various jurists. Macnaid. Rom. Law, § 74.

FRAIS. Fr. Expense; charges; costs. Frais d'un procès, costs of a suit.

FRAIS DE JUSTICE. In French and Canadian law. Costs incurred incidentally to the action.

FRAIS JUSQU'A BORD. Fr. In French commercial law. Expenses to the board; expenses incurred on a shipment of goods, in packing, cartage, commissions, etc., up to the point where they are actually put on board the vessel. Bartels v. Redfield (C. C.) 16 F. 336.

FRANC ALEU. In French feudal law. An allod; a free inheritance; or an estate held free of any services except such as were due to the sovereign.

FRANC TENANCIER. In French law. A freeholder.

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government upon an individual or corporation, and which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally, of common right. It is essential to the character of a franchise that it should be a grant from the sovereign authority, and in this country no franchise can be held which is not derived from a law of the state. In England, a franchise is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject. In this country, it is a privilege of a public nature, which cannot be exercised of a legislative grant. See Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 595, 10 L. Ed. 274; Dike v. State, 38 Minn. 306, 58 N. W. 95; Chicago Board of Trade v. People, 91 Ill. 82; Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 224, 55 N. E. 663, 47 L. R. A. 502, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103; Southampton v. Jessup, 162 N. Y. 122, 56 N. E. 538; Thompson v. People, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 578; Black River Imp. Co. v. Holway, 87 Wis. 584, 59 N. W. 126; Central Pac. R. Co. v. California, 162 U. S. 91, 16 S. Ct. 766, 40 L. Ed. 905; Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Dunbar, 95 Ill. 575; State v. Weatherby, 45 Mo. 20; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 223, 23 L. Ed. 860; State ex rel. Coco v. Riverside Irr. Co., 142 La. 10, 76 So. 216, 218; Public Service Commission, Second Dist., v. New York Cent. R. Co., 185 N. Y. S. 267, 273, 193 App. Div. 615.

A franchise is a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant. To be a corporation is a franchise. The various powers conferred on corporations are franchises. The execution of a policy of insurance by an insurance company, and the issuing a bank-note by an incorporated bank, are franchises. People v. Ulica Ins. Co., 25 Johns. (N. Y.) 387, 8 Am. Dec. 245.

The word "franchise" has various significations, both in a legal and popular sense. A corporation is itself a franchise belonging to the members of the corporation, and the corporation, itself a franchise, may hold other franchises. So, also, the different powers of a corporation, such as the right to hold and dispose of property, are its franchises. In a popular sense, the political rights of subjects and citizens are franchises, such as the right of suffrage, etc. Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 49; Turner v. Turner Mfg. Co., 184 Wis. 395, 199 N. W. 153, 156; State v. Black Diamond Co., 97 Ohio St. 24, 119 N. E. 156, 159, L. R. A. 1922B, 252.

The term "franchise" has several significations, and there is some confusion in its use. When used with reference to corporations, the better opinion, deduced from the authorities, seems to be that it consists of the entire privileges embraced in and constituting the grant. It does not embrace the property acquired by the exercise of the franchise. Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 285, 4 Am. Rep. 63.

General and Special

The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but with private profit. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 194 N. Y. 212, 87 N. E. 449, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

Elective Franchise

The right of suffrage; the right or privilege of voting in public elections.
Franchise Tax

A tax on the franchise of a corporation, that is, on the right and privilege of carrying on business in the character of a corporation, for the purposes for which it was created, and in the conditions which surround it. Though the value of the franchise, for purposes of taxation, may be measured by the amount of business done, or the amount of earnings or dividends, or by the total value of the capital or stock of the corporation in excess of its tangible assets, a franchise tax is not a tax on either property, capital, stock, earnings, or dividends. See Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 10 S. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025; Worth v. Petersburg R. Co., 89 N. C. 305; Tremont & Suffolk Mills v. Lowell, 178 Mass. 460, 50 N. E. 1007; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. State, 153 Ind. 134, 51 N. E. 924; Marsden Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 61 N. J. Law, 461, 39 A. 638; People v. Knight, 174 N. Y. 475, 67 N. E. 65, 63 L. R. A. 57; State ex rel. Marquette Hotel Inv. Co. v. State Tax Commission, 282 Mo. 213, 221 S. W. 721, 726; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Commonwealth, 190 Ky. 552, 228 S. W. 15, 16; Greene v. Louisville & I. R. Co., 244 U. S. 499, 37 S. Ct. 673, 678, 61 L. Ed. 1290, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 88; Arkansas & Memphis Ry. Bridge & Terminal Co. v. State, 174 Ark. 420, 295 S. W. 378, 379; American Refining Co. v. Staples (Tex. Com. App.) 269 S. W. 420, 421.

Personal Franchise

A franchise of corporate existence, or one which authorizes the formation and existence of a corporation, is sometimes called a "personal" franchise, as distinguished from a "property" franchise, which authorizes a corporation so formed to apply its property to some particular enterprise or exercise some special privilege in its employment, as, for example, to construct and operate a railroad. See Sandham v. Nyc, 30 N. Y. S. 552, 9 Misc. Rep. 541.

Secondary Franchises

The franchise of corporate existence being sometimes called the "primary" franchise of a corporation, its "secondary" franchises are the special and peculiar rights, privileges, or grants which it may receive under its charter or from a municipal corporation, such as the right to use the public streets, exact tolls, collect fares, etc. See State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 60 P. 337; Virginia Canon Toll Road Co. v. People, 22 Colo. 429, 45 P. 398, 37 L. R. A. 711. The franchises of a corporation are divisible into (1) corporate or general franchises; and (2) "special or secondary franchises." The former is the franchise to exist as a corporation, while the latter are certain rights and privileges conferred upon existing corporations. Gulf Refining Co. v. Cleveland Trust Co. (Miss.) 108 So. 153, 100.

Special Franchises

See Secondary Franchises, supra.
—Frank-fold. In old English law. Free-fold; a privilege for the lord to have all the sheep of his tenants and the inhabitants within his seigniory, in his fold, in his demesne, to manage his land. Kellw. 198.

—Frank-law. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, or the liberties and civil rights of a freeman.

—Frank-marriage. A species of entailled estates, in English law, now out of use, but still capable of subsisting. When tenements are given by one to another, together with a wife, who is a daughter or cousin of the donor, to hold in frank-marriage, the donees shall have the tenements to them and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, i.e., in special tail. For the word “frank-marriage,” ex vi termini, both creates and limits an inheritance, not only supplying words of descent, but also terms of procreation. The donees are liable to no service except fealty, and a reserved rent would be void, until the fourth degree of consanguinity be passed between the issues of the donor and donee, when they were capable by the law of the church of intermarrying. Litt. § 19; 2 Bl. Comm. 115.

—Frank-pledge. In old English law. A pledge or surety for freemen; that is, the pledge, or corporate responsibility, of all the inhabitants of a tithing for the general good behavior of each free-born citizen above the age of fourteen, and for his being forthwith to answer any infraction of the law. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

—Frank-tenement. In English law. A free tenement, freeholding, or freehold. 2 Bl. Comm. 61, 62, 104; 1 Steph. Comm. 217; Bract. fol. 207. Used to denote both the tenure and the estate.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment of postage, in pursuance of a personal or official privilege.

FRANKLEYN (spelled, also, “Franceling” and “Franklin”). A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman. Blount; Cowell.

FRASSETUM. In old English law. A wood or wood-ground where ash-trees grow. Co. Litt. 4b.

FRATER. In the civil law. A brother. Frater consanguineus, a brother having the same father, but born of a different mother. Frater uterinus, a brother born of the same mother, but by a different father. Frater nutricius, a bastard brother.

Frater fratri utero non succedit in hereditate paterna. A brother shall not succeed a uterine brother in the paternal inheritance. 2 Bl. Comm. 223; Fortes. de Laud. c. 5. A maxim of the common law of England, now superseded by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 9. See Broom, Max. 530.

FRATERICA. In old records. A fraternity, brotherhood, or society of religious persons, who were mutually bound to pray for the good health and life, etc., of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead. Cowell.

FRATERNAL. Brotherly; relating or belonging to a fraternity or an association of persons formed for mutual aid and benefit, but not for profit. In re Mason Tire & Rubber Co., 11 F.(2d) 556, 557, 56 App. D. C. 170.

FRATERNAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION. A society or voluntary association organized and carried on for the mutual aid and benefit of its members, not for profit; which ordinarily has a lodge system, a ritualistic form of work, and a representative government, makes provision for the payment of death benefits, and (sometimes) for benefits in case of accident, sickness, or old age, the funds therefor being derived from dues paid or assessments levied on the members. National Union v. Marlow, 74 F. 778, 21 C. C. A. 80; Walker v. Giddings, 108 Mich. 344, 61 N. W. 512.

FRATERNAL INSURANCE. The form of life (or accident) insurance furnished by a fraternal benefit association, consisting in the payment to a member, or his heirs in case of death, of a stipulated sum of money, out of funds raised for that purpose by the payment of dues or assessments by all the members of the association.

FRATERNIA. A fraternity or brotherhood.

FRATERNITY. In old English law. “A corporation is an investing of the people of a place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall bind strangers; but a fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect to a mystery or business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers.” Cuddon v. Eastwick, 1 Salk. 192.

FRATRES CONJURATI. Sworn brothers or companions for the defense of their sovereign, or for other purposes. Hoved. 443.

FRATRES PYES. In old English law. Certain friars who wore white and black garments. Walsingham, 124.

FRATRIAGE. A younger brother’s inheritance.

FRAUD. As applied to contracts, is the cause of that error bearing on a material part of the contract, created or continued by artifice, with design to obtain some unjust advantage to the one party, or to cause an inconveni- ence or loss to the other. Civil Code La. art. 1847. Strauss v. Insurance Co. of North America, 157 La. 661, 102 So. 861, 863; Jesse French Plano & Organ Co. v. Gibbon (Tex. Civ. App.) 180 S. W. 1185, 1187.

FRAUD. In the sense of a court of equity, properly includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 187; Morgan v. Gaither, 202 Ala. 492, 80 So. 576, 578; Jones v. Snyder, 121 Okl. 254, 249 P. 313, 315.

Synonyms

The term "fraud" is sometimes used as synonymous with "cozen," "conceal," or "deceit." But distinctions are properly taken in the meanings of these words, for which reference may be had to the titles Cozen; Conceal: Deceit.

Classification

Fraud is either actual or constructive. Actual fraud consists in deceit, artifice, trick, design, some direct and active operation of the mind; it includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice used to circumvent or cheat another; it is something said, done, or omitted by a person with the design of perpetrating what he knows to be a cheat or deception. "Constructive fraud consists in any act of commission or omission contrary to legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence justly reposed, which is contrary to good conscience and operates to the injury of another. Or, as otherwise defined, it is an act, statement or omission which operates as a virtual fraud on an individual, or which, if generally permitted, would be prejudicial to the public welfare, and yet may have been unconnected with any selfish or evil design. Or, according to Story, constructive frauds are such acts or contracts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a positive fraud or injury upon other persons, are yet, by their tendency to deceive or mislead other persons, or to induce private or public confidence, or to impair or injure the public interests, deemed equally reprehensible with actual fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 258. And see, generally, Code Ga. 1882, § 3173 (Civ. Code 1910, § 4622); People v. Kelly, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 457; Jackson v. Jackson, 23 Ga. 59; Hatch v. Barrett, 24 Cal. 233, 8 P. 125; Forker v. Brown, 30 Misc. Rep. 101, 30 N. Y. Supp. 827; Massachusetts Loc. L. Ass'n v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 256, 30 S. E. 518, 42 L. R. A. 261; Haas v. Sternbach, 138 Ill. 44, 41 N. E. 51; Newell v. Wagnes, 1 N. D. 62, 44 N. W. 1014; Cary v. Con- nolly, 91 Cal. 15, 27 P. 359; Stock v. Delta Land & Water Co., 63 174a, 495, 237 P. 701, 795; Peniston v. White, 115 Okl. 248, 242 P. 854, 856; National Bank of Savannah v. Ali (C. C. A.) 250 F. 570, 384; Moore v. Gregory, 146 Va. 504, 131 S. E. 692, 697; Douglas v. Ogle, 80 Fla. 42, 85 So. 243, 244; Windle v. City of Valparaiso, 63 Ind. App. 142, 113 N. E. 485, 486; Murray v. Speed, 54 Okl. 133, 152; State Trust & Savings Bank v. Hermon Land & Cattle Co., 30 N. M. 566, 240 P. 463, 467; Harrison v. Roark, 31 Ariz. 73, 220 P. 367, 368; Lytle v. Fulotka, 106 Okl. 85, 233 P. 455, 456, 460; Leader Pub. Co. v. Grant Trust & Savings Co., 182 Ind. 661, 106 N. E. 121, 124; Rettew v. Gratz, 147 Ind. 531, 532; Kell- ler v. Cox, 67 Ind. App. 351, 113 N. E. 543, 546; Blake v. Thwing, 185 Ill. App. 187, 194; Parker v. Solis (Tex. Civ. App.) 277 S. W. 714, 717; U. S. v. Whyde (D. C.) 19 F.2d 290, 293; Allen v. United States Pidelity & Guaranty Co., 209 Ill. 234, 109 N. E. 1035, 1036.

FRAUD. Fraud is also classified as fraud in fact and fraud in law. The former is actual, positive, intentional fraud. Fraud disclosed by matters of fact, as distinguished from constructive fraud or fraud in law. McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 356, 3 Am. Rep. 588; Cook v. Burnham, 3 Kan. App. 27, 44 P. 447. Fraud in law is fraud in contemplation of law; fraud implied or inferred by law; fraud made out by construc- tion of law, as distinguished from fraud found by a jury from matter of fact; constructive fraud (q. v.) See 2 Kent, Commentaries, 522-523; Delaney v. Val- quinta, 104 N. Y. 582, 49 N. E. 65; Burr v. Clement, 9 Colo. 1, 9 P. 635; Lovato v. Catron, 20 N. M. 166, 148 P. 450, 452, 6, L. R. A. 1915B, 454; Pursell & Thomas v. Merritt, 190 N. C. 297, 130 S. E. 40, 43.

FRAUD. Fraud is also said to be legal or positive. The former is made out by legal construction or inference, or the same thing as constructive fraud. Newell v. Wagnes, 1 N. D. 62, 44 N. W. 1014. Positive fraud is the same thing as actual fraud. The Douthitt v. Applegate, 33 Kan. 256, 6 P. 575, 52 Am. Rep. 533; Nocato Fruit Co. v. Pungate (C. C. A.) 12 P.2d 250, 252.

In General

—Actionable fraud. See Actionable, Frauds, statute of. This is the common designation of a very celebrated English statute, 20 Car. II c. 5) passed in 1677, and which has been adopted, in a more or less modified form, in nearly all of the United States. Its chief characteristic is the provision that no suit or action shall be maintained on certain classes of contracts or engagements unless there shall be a note or memorandum thereof in writing signed by the party to be charged or by his authorized agent. Its object was to close the door to the numerous frauds

—Plous fraud. A subterfuge or evasion considered morally justifiable on account of the ends sought to be promoted; particularly applied to an evasion or disregard of the laws in the interests of religion or religious institutions, such as circumventing the statutes of mortmain.

FRAUD ORDER. A name given to orders issued by the postmaster general, under Rev. St. §§ 3929, 4041 (39 USCA §§ 259, 722), for preventing the use of the mails as an agency for conducting schemes for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, etc. They are not restricted to schemes which lack all the elements of legitimate business, but the statute applies "when a business, even if otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly conducted upon the plan of inducing its patrons by means of false representations to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more than, what is actually sold;" Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 419, 15 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

The fraud order is issued to the post-master of the office through which the person affected by it receives his mail. It forbids the post-master to pay any postal money order to the specified person, and instructs the post-master to return all letters to the senders if practicable, or if not, to the dead letter office, stamped in either case with the word "fraudulent." The method of testing the validity of the fraud order is to apply to the federal court for an injunction to restrain the postmaster from executing it. The decision of the postmaster-general is not the exercise of a judicial function; if he exceeds his jurisdiction, the party injured may have relief in equity; Degge v. Hitchcock, 229 U. S. 162, 33 Sup. Ct. 659, 57 L. Ed. 1133.

FRAUDARE. Lat. In the civil law. To deceive, cheat, or impose upon; to defraud.

FRAUDULENT. Based on fraud; proceeding from or characterized by fraud; tainted by fraud; done, made, or effected with a purpose or design to carry out a fraud.

FRAUDULENT ALIENATION. In a general sense, the transfer of property with an intent to defraud creditors, lienors, or others. In a particular sense, the act of an administrator who wastes the assets of the estate by giving them away or selling at a gross undervalue. Rhame v. Lewis, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 269.

FRAUDULENT ALIENEE. One who knowingly receives from an administrator assets of the estate under circumstances which make it a fraudulent alienation on the part of the administrator. Rhame v. Lewis, 13 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 289.

FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT. The hiding or suppression of a material fact or circumstance which the party is legally or morally bound to disclose. Magee v. Insurance Co., 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. Ed. 669; Page v. Parker, 43 N. H. 287, 80 Am. Dec. 172; Jordan v. Pickett, 78 Ala. 359; Small v. Graves, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 578.

Fraudulent concealment justifying a rescission of a contract is the intentional concealment of some fact known to the party charged, which is material for the party injured to know to prevent being defrauded; the concealment of a fact which one is bound to disclose being the equivalent of an indirect representation that such fact does not exist. Long v. Martin (Tex. Civ. App.) 234 S. W. 91, 94.

The test of whether failure to disclose material facts constitutes fraud is the existence of a duty, legal or equitable, arising from the relation of the parties; failure to disclose a material fact with intent to mislead or defraud under such circumstances being equivalent to an actual "fraudulent concealment." Newell Bros. v. Hanson, 67 Vt. 297, 123 A. 268, 210.

Where the vendor stated that there were defects in the title, but that, except for squatters and prior conveyances, there were no objections to his title, and that so far as he knew he had as good title as any one, his concealment of the fact that he then had options for the true owners was fraudulent, for while a party may remain silent, and not be bound to tell the defects in his title, yet if he assumes to tell them, and omits a material one, of which he knows, that may be "fraudulent concealment." Continental Coal, Land
To constitute concealment of a cause of action so as to prevent the running of limitations, some trick or artifice must be employed to prevent inquiry or elude investigation, or to mislead and hinder the party who has the cause of action from obtaining information, and the acts relied on must be of an affirmative character and fraudulent. Refusal to allow insurer to inspect the books of insured to ascertain the compensation paid by insurer to his employees within the period of the policy was not a "fraudulent concealment" within the meaning of the law; but a breach of contract, and could not affect the running of the statute of limitations. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York v. Jasper Furniture Co., 186 Ind. 566, 117 N. E. 238, 239.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. A conveyance or transfer of property, the object of which is to defraud a creditor, or hinder or delay him, or to put such property beyond his reach. Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 259; Lockyer v. De Hart, 6 N. J. Law. 455; Land v. Jeffries, 5 Rand. (Va.) 601; Blodgett v. Webster, 24 N. H. 103; Creel v. Cloyd, 131 Ky. 627, 122 S. W. 776, 777; In re Grocers' Baking Co. (D. C.) 205 F. 900, 903; Johnson v. Union Inv. Co., 119 Minn. 106, 182 N. W. 955, 956; Levy v. Weidhorn (D. C.) 287 F. 754, 756; Gustlin v. Whitham (D. C.) 292 F. 782, 791; Surratt v. Esbidge, 131 Va. 325, 108 S. E. 677, 679; Dean v. Davis, 242 U. S. 488, 37 S. Ct. 130, 61 L. Ed. 419. Every transfer of property or charge thereon made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or other person of his demands, is void against all creditors of the debtor, and their successors in interest, and against any person upon whom the estate of the debtor devolves in trust for the benefit of others than the debtor. Civ. Code Cal. § 3439.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES, STATUTES OF, OR AGAINST. The name given to two celebrated English statutes,—the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 5; and the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18.

FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES. In English law. Every conveyance or transfer of property or charge thereon made, every judgment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own moneys, in favor of any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a preference over other creditors, shall be deemed fraudulent and void if the debtor become bankrupt within three months. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, § 92.

FRAUNC, FRAUNCHE, FRAUNKE. See Frank.

FRAUNCHISE. L. Fr. A franchise.

FRAUS. Lat. Fraud. More commonly called in the civil law, "dolus," and "dolus malus," (q. v.) A distinction, however, was sometimes made between "fraus" and "dolus;" the former being held to be of the most extensive import. Calvin.

FRAUS DANS LOCUM CONTRACTUI. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a "fraud dans locum contractui;" i. e., a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

FRAUS LEGIS. Lat. In the civil law. Fraud of law; fraud upon law. See In Fraudem Legis.

Fraus est celare fraudem. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud. 1 Vern. 240; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 359, 360.

Fraus est odiosa et non presumenda. Fraud is odious, and not to be presumed. Cro. Car. 350.

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent. Fraud and deceit should defend or excuse no man. 2 Coke, 78; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 13, § 15; Id. lib. 6, c. 6, § 5.

Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant. Wing. 680. Fraud and justice never dwell together.

Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.

Fraus meretur fraudem. Plowd. 100. Fraud merits fraud.

FRAXINETUM. In old English law. A wood of ashes; a place where ashes grow. Co. Litt. 4b; Shep. Touch. 95.
FRAY. See Affray.

FRECTUM. In old English law. Freight. Quod frectum navium suarum, as to the freight of his vessels. Blount.

FREDNITE. In old English law. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. To be free from fines. Cowell.

FREDSTOLE. Sanctuaries; seats of peace.

FREDUM. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. Spelman: Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge.

FREDWIT, or FREDWITE. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. Jacob, Law Dict.

FREE. Not subject to legal constraint of another.

Unconstrained; having power to follow the dictates of his own will. Not subject to the dominion of another. Not compelled to involuntary servitude. Used in this sense as opposed to "slave."

Not bound to service for a fixed term of years; in distinction to being bound as an apprentice.

Enjoying full civic rights.

Available to all citizens alike without charge; as a free school.

Available for public use without charge or toll; as a free bridge.

Not despotic; assuring liberty; defending individual rights against encroachment by any person or class; instituted by a free people; said of governments, institutions, etc. Webster.

Certain, and also consistent with an honorable degree in life; as free services, in the feudal law.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being shared with others; as a free fishery.

Not engaged in a war as belligerent or ally; neutral; as in the maxim, "Free ships make free goods."

—Free bench. A widow's dower out of copyholds to which she is entitled by the custom of some manors. It is regarded as an encumbrance growing out of the husband's interest, and is indeed a continuance of his estate. Wharton.

—Free bord. In old records. An allowance of land over and above a certain limit or boundary, as so much beyond or without a fence. Cowell: Blount. The right of claiming that quantity. Termes de la Ley.

—Free borough men. Such great men as did not engage, like the frank-pledge men, for their decenues. Jacob.

—Free chapel. In English ecclesiastical law. A place of worship, so called because not liable to the visitation of the ordinary. It is always of royal foundation, or founded at least by private persons to whom the crown has granted the privilege. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 298.

—Free course. In admiralty law. A vessel having the wind from a favorable quarter is said to sail on a "free course," or said to be "going free" when she has a fair (following) wind and her yards braced in. The Queen Elizabeth (D. C.) 100 F. 876.

—Free entry, egress, and regress. An expression used to denote that a person has the right to go on land again and again as often as may be reasonably necessary. Thus, in the case of a tenant entitled to emblements.

-Free fishery. See Fishery.

-Free ice. All ice in navigable streams not included within that authorized to be appropriated is sometimes called “free” ice, and does not belong to the adjacent riparian owners, but to the person who first appropriates it. Hudson River Ice Co. v. Brady, 158 App. Div. 142, 142 N. Y. S. 819, 821.

-Free law. A term formerly used in England to designate the freedom of civil rights enjoyed by freemen. It was liable to forfeiture on conviction of treason or an infamous crime. McCafferty v. Guyer, 59 Pa. 116.

-Free men. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man’s right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergeld. See Liber Homo.

-Free services. In feudal and old English law. Such feudal services as were not becoming the character of a soldier or a free man to perform; as to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 60, 61.

-Free shareholders. The free shareholders of a building and loan association are subscribers to its capital stock who are not borrowers from the association. Steinberger v. Independent B. & S. Ass’n, 84 Md. 625, 36 A. 439.

-Free ships. In international law. Ships of a neutral nation. The phrase “free ships shall make free goods” is often inserted in treaties, meaning that goods, even though belonging to an enemy, shall not be seized or confiscated, if found in neutral ships. Wheat. Int. Law, 507, et seq.

-Free socage. See Socage.

-FREEDOM. Tenure by free services; freedom.

-Free warren. See Warren.

FREE ON BOARD. A sale of goods “free on board” imports that they are to be delivered on board the cars, vessels, etc., without expense to the buyer for packing, cartage, or other such charges. Batchelr v. Ferguson, 30 Idaho, 639, 198 P. 680, 681, 16 A. L. R. 590.

In a contract for sale and delivery of goods “free on board” vessel, the seller is under no obligation to act until the buyer names the ship to which the delivery is to be made. Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 508, 12 A. 32.

FREE WHITE PERSONS. “Free white persons” referred to in Naturalization Act, as amended by Act July 14, 1870, has meaning naturally given to it when first used in 1 Stat. 103, c. 3, meaning all persons belonging to the European races then commonly counted as white, and their descendants, including such descendants in other countries to which they have emigrated. It includes all European Jews, more or less intermixed with peoples of Celtic, Scandinavian, Teutonic, Iberian, Latin, Greek, and Slavonic descent. It includes Magyars, Lapps, and Finns, and the Basques and Albanians. It includes the mixed Latin, Celtic-Iberian, and Moorish inhabitants of Spain and Portugal, the mixed Greek, Latin, Phoenician, and North African inhabitants of Sicily, and the mixed Slav and Tartar inhabitants of South Russia. It does not mean Caucasian race, Aryan race, or Indo-European races, nor the mixed Indo-European, Dravidian, Semitic and Mongolian peoples who inhabit Persia. A Syrian of Asiatic birth and descent will not be entitled to become a naturalized citizen of the United States as being a free white person. Ex parte Shahid (D. C.) 205 F. 812, 813; United States v. Cartozian (D. C.) 6 F.(2d) 919, 921; Ex parte Dow (D. C.) 211 F. 486, 487; In re En Sk Song (D. C.) 271 F. 23.

FREEDOM. In Roman law. One who was set free from a state of bondage; an emancipated slave. The word is used in the same sense in the United States, regarding negroes who were formerly slaves. Fairfield v. Lawson, 50 Conn. 513, 47 Am. Rep. 689; Davenport v. Caldwell, 10 S. C. 333.

FREEDOM. The state of being free; liberty; self-determination; absence of restraint; the opposite of slavery.

The power of acting, in the character of a moral personality, according to the dictates of the will, without other check, hindrance, or prohibition than such as may be imposed by just and necessary laws and the duties of social life.

The prevalence, in the government and constitution of a country, of such a system of laws and institutions as secure civil liberty to the individual citizen.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH AND OF THE PRESS. See Liberty.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY.

In English Law

Immunity from county jurisdiction, and the privilege of corporate taxation and self-government held under a charter from the crown. This freedom is enjoyed of right, subject to the provision of the charter, and is often conferred as an honor on princes and other distinguished individuals. The freedom of a city carries the parliamentary franchise. Encyc. Dict. The rights and privileges possessed by the burgesses or freemen of a municipal corporation under the old English law; now of little importance, and conferred chiefly as a mark of honor. See 11 Chic. L. J. 357.

The phrase has no place in American law, and, as frequently used in addresses of welcome made to organizations visiting an American city, particularly by mayors, has no meaning whatever except as an expression of good will.

The form of the grant made by the city of New York to Andrew Hamilton of Philadelphia is quoted at large in 13 Law Notes 150.

FREETHOLD. An estate in land or other real property, of uncertain duration; that is, either of inheritance or which may possibly last for the life of the tenant at the least, (as distinguished from a leasehold;) and held by a free tenure, (as distinguished from copyhold or villeinage.) Nevitt v. Woodburn, 175 Ill. 379, 51 N. E. 593; Railroad Co. v. Hempfield, 33 Miss. 22; Nellis v. Munson, 108 N. Y. 453, 16 N. E. 759; Jones v. Jones, 20 Ga. 700; Beirle v. Columbia County, 73 Or. 107, 144 P. 457, 460; Fowler v. Marlton & Pittsburg Coal Co., 315 Ill. 312, 146 N. E. 318, 319; Church v. Grossi, 124 Misc. 192, 207 N. Y. S. 106, 107; Hull v. Ensinger, 257 Ill. 160, 100 N. E. 513, 515; Rogers v. McAllister, 151 Ky. 488, 152 S. W. 571, 572; Ralston Steel Car Co. v. Ralston, 112 Ohio St. 306, 147 N. E. 513, 516, 39 A. L. R. 324; Lakeside Irr. Co. v. Markham Irr. Co., 116 Tex. 65, 285 S. W. 593, 596.

Such an interest in lands of frank-tenement as may endure not only during the owner's life, but which is cast after his death upon the persons who successively represent him, according to certain rules elsewhere explained. Such persons are called "heirs;" and he whom they thus represent, the "ancestor." When the interest extends beyond the ancestor's life, it is called a "freehold of inheritance" and, when it only endures for the ancestor's life, it is a freehold not of inheritance.

An estate to be a freehold must possess these two qualifications: (1) Immobility, that is, the property must be either land or some interest issuing out of or annexed thereto; and (2) indeterminate duration, for, if the utmost period of time to which an estate can endure be fixed and determined, it cannot be a freehold. Wharton.

Determinable freehold

Estates for life, which may determine upon future contingencies before the life for which they are created expires. As if an estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice; in these and similar cases, whenever the contingency happens,—when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains the benefice,—the respective estates are absolutely determined and gone. Yet, while they subsist, they are reckoned estates for life; because they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 Bl. Comm. 221.

Freehold in law

A freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Terms de la Lay.

Freehold land societies

Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other working men to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated. Wharton.

Freeholder

A person who possesses a freehold estate. Shively v. Lankford, 174 Mo. 555, 74 S. W. 88; Whelden v. Corsetti, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 432, 54 N. W. 626; People v. Scott, 5 Hun. (N. Y.) 567. Statutory meaning, meaning which they may by possibility last for life, if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen. 2 Bl. Comm. 221.

FREEMAN. This word has had various meanings at different stages of history. In the Roman law, it denoted one who was either born free or emancipated, and was the opposite of "slave." In feudal law, it designated an allodial proprietor, as distinguished from a vassal or feudal tenant. (And so in Pennsylvania colonial law. Fry's Election Case, 71 Pa. 308, 10 Am. Rep. 608.) In old English law, the word described a freeholder or tenant by free service; one who was not a villein. In modern legal phraseology, it is the appellation of a member of a city or borough having the right of suffrage, or a member of the town council. —Blackstone's Commentaries.
ber of any municipal corporation invested with full civic rights.

A person in the possession and enjoyment of all the civil and political rights accorded to the people under a free government.

FREEMAN’S ROLL. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the municipal corporation act, (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76.) Distinguished from the Burgess Roll. 2 Steph. Comm. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, in some of the American colonies.

FREIGHT. Freight is properly the price or compensation paid for the transportation of goods by a carrier, at sea, from port to port. But the term is also used to denote the hire paid for the carriage of goods on land from place to place, (usually by a railroad company, not an express company,) or on inland streams or lakes. The name is also applied to the goods or merchandise-transported by any of the above means. Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. 533, 16 L. Ed. 177; Huth v. Insurance Co., 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 552; Christie v. Davis Coal Co. (D. C.) 95 F. 928; Hagar v. Donaldson, 154 Pa. 242, 25 A. 824; Paradise v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 4 La. Ann. 596.

Property carried is called “freight;” the reward, if any, to be paid for its carriage is called “freightage;” the person who delivers the freight to the carrier is called the “consignor;” and the person to whom it is to be delivered is called the “consignee.” Civil Code Cal. § 2110; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6197; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 1119.

The term “freight” has several different meanings, as the price to be paid for the carriage of goods, or for the hire of a vessel under a charter-party or otherwise; and sometimes it designates goods carried, as “a freight of lime,” or the like. But, as a subject of International law, it is used in one of the two former senses. Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 19 Gray (Mass.) 160.

The sum agreed on for the hire of a ship, entirely or in part, for the carriage of goods from one port to another. 13 East, 500. All rewards or compensation paid for the use of ships, Giles v. Cynthia, 3 Pet. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 364.

Freight is a compensation received for the transportation of goods and merchandise from port to port; and is never claimable by the owner of the vessel until the voyage has been performed and terminated. Patapan Ins. Co. v. Biscoe, 7 Gill. & J. (Md.) 370, 22 Am. Dec. 819.

“Dead freight” is money payable by a person who has chartered a ship and only partly loaded her, in respect of the loss of freight caused to the ship-owner by the deficiency of cargo. L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 128; The Rosemary (C. C. A.) 277 F. 674, 678.

FREIGHT CAR. A railroad car adapted to the transportation from one point to another of movable articles of every kind, character, and description, and a box car while so used is at least temporarily a car carrying freight. State v. Jones, 84 W. Va. 85, 90 S. E. 271, 274.

Freight is the mother of wages. 2 Show. 288; 3 Kent Comm. 196. Where a voyage is broken up by vis major, and no freight earned, no wages, eo nomine, are due.

FREIGHTER. In maritime law. The party by whom a vessel is engaged or chartered; otherwise called the “charterer.” 2 Steph. Comm. 148. In French law, the owner of a vessel is called the “freighter” (fréteur); the merchant who hires it is called the “affreighter” (affréteur). Emerigg. Tr. des Ass. ch. 11, § 8.

FRENCHMAN. In early times, in English law, this term was applied to every stranger or “outlandish” man. Bract. lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 15.

FRENDELSEMAN. Sax. An outlaw. So called because on his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days. Cowell; Blount.

FRENDWITE. In old English law. A muet or fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend. Cowell; Tomlins.

FRENINETICUS. In old English law. A madman, or person in a frenzy. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 36.

FREDOBORCH. A free-surety, or free-pledge. Spelman. See Frank-Pledge.

FREQUENT, v. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually. Green v. State, 109 Ind. 175, 9 N. E. 781; State v. Ah Sam, 14 Or. 347, 13 P. 303; State v. Seha (Mo. App.) 200 S. W. 300; Koehler v. Dubose (Tex. Civ. App.) 200 S. W. 238, 242; Ex parte Werner, 46 R. I. 1, 124 A. 195, 196.

Frequentia actus multum operatur. The frequency of an act effects much. 4 Coke, 78; Wing. Max. p. 719, max. 192. A continual usage is of great effect to establish a right.

FRESCA. In old records. Fresh water, or rain and land flood.
FRESH. Immediate; recent; following without any material interval.

FRESH DISSEISIN. By the ancient common law, where a man had been disseised, he was allowed to right himself by force, by ejecting the disseisor from the premises, without resort to law, provided this was done forthwith, while the disseisin was fresh, (flagrante disseisin.) Bract. fol. 162b. No particular time was limited for doing this, but Bracton suggested it should be fifteen days. Id. fol. 163. See Brit. cc. 32, 43, 44, 45.

FRESH FINE. In old English law. A fine that had been levied within a year past. St. Westm. 2, c. 45; Cowell.

FRESH FORCE. Force done within forty days. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 7; Old Nat. Brev. 4. The heir or reversloner in a case of disseisin by fresh force was allowed a remedy in chancery by bill before the mayor. Cowell.

FRESH PURSUIT. A pursuit instituted immediately and with intent to reclaim or recapture, after an animal escaped, a thief flying with stolen goods, etc. People v. Pool, 27 Cal. 578; White v. State, 70 Miss. 253, 11 So. 632.

FRESH SUE. In old English law. Immediate and unremitting pursuit of an escaping thief. "Such a present and earnest following of a robber as never ceases from the time of the robbory until apprehension. The party pursuing them had back again his goods, which otherwise were forfeited to the crown." Staunfie, P. C. lib. 3, cc. 10, 12; 1 Bl. Comm. 297.

FRÉTER. Fr. In French marine law. To freight a ship; to let it. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 11, § 3.

FRÉTEUR. Fr. In French marine law. Freighter. The owner of a ship, who lets it to the merchant. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 11, § 3.

FRETTUM, FRECTUM. In old English law. The freight of a ship; freight money. Cowell.

FRETTUM. Lat. A strait.

FRETUM BRITANNICUM. The strait between Dover and Calais.

FRIARS. An order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches, viz.: (1) Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans; (2) Augustines; (3) Dominicans, or Black Friars; (4) White Friars, or Carmelites, from whom the rest descend. Wharton.

FRIBURGH. (Also, Frithburg, Frithburgh, Friborg, Froeborg, and Friburg.) (Sax.) A kind of frank-pledge whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants. Fleta, lib. 1, cap. 47. Cowell says it is the same as frank-pledge.

FRIBUSCULUM. In the civil law. A temporary separation between husband and wife, caused by a quarrel or estrangement, but not amounting to a divorce, because not accompanied with an intention to dissolve the marriage.

FRIDHBURGUS. In old English law. A kind of frank-pledge, by which the lords or principal men were made responsible for their dependents or servants. Bract. fol. 124b.

FRIEND OF THE COURT. See Amicus Curiae.

FRIENDLESS MAN. In old English law. An outlaw; so called because he was denied all help of friends. Bract. lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 12.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. In English law. Associations supported by subscription, for the relief and maintenance of the members, or their wives, children, relatives, and nominees, in sickness, infancy, advanced age, widowhood, etc. The statutes regulating these societies were consolidated and amended by St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60. Wharton.

FRIENDLY SUIT. A suit brought by a creditor in chancery against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor, against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. 2 Williams, Ex'ts, 1915. Also any suit instituted by agreement between the parties to obtain the opinion of the court upon some doubtful question in which they are interested.

FRIGIDITY. Impotence. Johnson. The term in this sense is obsolete. Webster's New Int. Dict.

FRILINGI. Persons of free descent, or free-born; the middle class of persons among the Saxons. Spelman.

FRISK, v. The running of hands rapidly over another's person, as distinguished from "search," which is to strip and examine contents more particularly. Kaylin Business FRITH. Sax. Peace, security, or protection. This word occurs in many compound terms used in Anglo-Saxon law.

FRITHBORE. Frank-pledge. Cowell.

FRITHBOTE. A satisfaction or fine, for a breach of the peace.

FRITHBREACH. The breaking of the peace.

FRITHGAR. The year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendship.

FRITHGILDA. Guildhall; a company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; also a fine for breach of the peace. Jacob.

FRITHMAN. A member of a company or fraternity.

FRITHSCONE. Surety of defense. Jurisdiction of the peace. The franchise of preserving the peace. Also spelled "frithsoken."

FRITHSPLOT. A spot or plot of land, encircling some stone, tree, or well, considered sacred, and therefore affording sanctuary to criminals.

FRITHSTOOL. The stool of peace. A stool or chair placed in a church or cathedral, and which was the symbol and place of sanctuary to those who fled to and reached it.

FRIVOLOUS. An answer or other pleading is called "frivolous" when it is clearly insufficient on its face, and does not controvert the material points of the opposite pleading, and is presumably interposed for mere purposes of delay or to embarrass the opponent. Erwin v. Lowery, 64 N. C. 321; Strong v. Sprout, 58 N. Y. 469; Gray v. Gildiere, 4 Strob. (S. C.) 442; Peacock v. Williams (C. C.) 110 F. 916; Segerstrom v. Holland Piano Mfg. Co., 160 Minn. 95, 199 N. W. 897, 898; Nolen v. State, 48 Okl. 594, 150 P. 149, 150; Germain v. Harwell, 108 Miss. 396, 66 So. 396, 398; Bronzini Holding Co. v. McGee, 168 Minn. 129, 207 N. W. 199, 200; Cairns v. Lewis, 169 Minn. 156, 210 N. W. 888, 889; Guaranty Trust Co. of South Carolina v. Kibler, 105 S. C. 513, 80 S. E. 158, 159; Scullthorpe v. Commonwealth Casualty Co., 98 N. J. Law, 545, 121 A. 755, 752; In re Beam, 98 N. J. Eq. 593, 117 A. 613, 614; Milberg v. Keuthe, 98 N. J. Law, 779, 121 A. 713, 714.

A frivolous demurrer has been defined to be one which is so clearly untenable, or its insufficiency so manifest upon a bare inspection of the pleadings, that its character may be determined without argument or research. Cottrill v. Cramer, 40 Wis. 558.

Synonyms

The terms "frivolous" and "sham," as applied to pleadings, do not mean the same thing. A sham plea is good on its face, but false in fact; it may, to all appearances, constitute a perfect defense, but is a pretense because false and because not pleaded in good faith. A frivolous plea may be perfectly true in its allegations, but yet is liable to be stricken out because totally insufficient in substance. Andrews v. Bandler (Sup.) 58 N. Y. S. 614; Brown v. Jenison, 1 Code R. N. S. (N. Y.) 157; Sheets v. Ramer, 125 Minn. 84, 145 N. W. 787. See, further, Answer.

FROM. The legal effect of this word has been a fruitful subject of judicial discussion resulting in a great diversity of construction of the word as used with respect to both time and place. Many attempts have been made to lay down a general rule to determine whether it was to be treated as inclusive or exclusive of a terminus a quo, whether of time or place. Very long ago a critical writer, after reviewing the cases up to that date, undertook to formulate such a rule thus: From, as well in strict grammatical sense, as in the ordinary import thereof, when referring to a certain point as a terminus a quo, always excludes that point; though in vulgar acceptance it were capable of being taken indifferently, either inclusively or exclusively, yet in law it has obtained a certain fixed import and is always taken as exclusive of the terminus a quo. Powell, Powers 440. This conclusion states a rule applied in the majority of cases, and it was said that the prepositions "from," "until," "between," generally exclude the day to which they relate, but the general rule will yield to the intent of parties; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94. But the rule has not been unvarying, and many courts have not hesitated to follow the views of Lord Mansfield, in Copw. 714 (overruling his own decision of three years before, id. 159), that it is either exclusive or inclusive according to context and subject-matter, and the court will construe it to effectuate the intent of parties and not to destroy it. Lowman v. Shokoski, 106 Neb. 540, 184 N. W. 107, 108; Allen v. Effler, 144 Tenn. 685, 253 S. W. 67, 68; Lanham v. McKeel, 47 Okl. 348, 418 P. 344, 345; City of Dubuque v. Dubuque Elec. Co., 188 Iowa, 1192, 177 N. W. 790, 795; McWilliams v. Coneaux, 355 La. 210, 135 So. 112; Williams v. Chambers, 85 Ind. App. 404, 154 N. E. 295; Pull v. Ball, 132 Ark. 617, 209 S. W. 988; Zimmerman v. United States (C. A.) 277 F. 995; Mushel v. Board of Comrs' of Benton County, 152 Minn. 266, 188 N. W. 555, 556; Southern Surety Co. v. Penzel, 164 Ark. 395, 261 S. W. 920, 922; Penquite v. General Accident Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, 121 Kan. 174, 248 P. 498, 500; Martin v. 'Travelers' Ins. Co., 310 Mo. 411, 276 S. W. 350, 322, 41 A. L. R. 1372; Platt v. Flaherty, 96 Kan. 42, 149 P. 734.
As to time, after an examination of authorities, Washington, J., laid down what he considered the settled principles to be deduced from them: when time is computed from an act done, the day of its performance is included; (2) when the words are from the date, if a present interest is to commence, the day is included, if it is a term, from which to impute time the day is excluded; Spear- point v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 240;—Fed. Cas. No. 19,877, where reference was made to a clause of the lease as was also in Lord Raym. 84; and to a bond; Lyale v. Williams, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 235; and the first proposition has been laid down with reference to the words “from and after the passage of this act,” Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; U. S. v. Williams, 1 Polk. 361, Fed. Cas. No. 16,753; U. S. v. Arnold, 1 Gall. 348, Fed. Cas. No. 14,458; contra, Locrent v. Ins. Co., 1 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 595. See U. S. v. Heth, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 359, 2 L. Ed. 479. From is generally held a word of exclusion; Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 36. Oatman v. Walker, 23 Me. 67; Garway v. Remington, 22 R. I. 519, 34 Am. Rep. 646; Atkins v. Sleep- er, 7 Allen (Mass.) 457. But a promise made November 1st, 1811, and sued November 1st, 1817, was held barred by statute of limitation; Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193. In many cases it is held to be either exclusive or inclusive according to the intention of the parties; Davis v. Davis, (N. Y.) 9; Houser v. Reynolds, 2 N. C. 114, 1 Am. Dec. 551. Where an act was to be done in a given number of days from the time of the contract, the day on which the contract was made was included; Brown v. Bussan, 24 Ind. 194; but if the contract merely says in so many days it means so many days from the day of date, and that is excluded; Blake v. Crownswagen, 9 N. H. 304. A fire policy from one given date to another includes the last day, whether the first is included was not decided; L. R. 5 Exch. 296. In most cases when something is required to be done in a given time from the day on which an event has happened, that day is excluded, as in case of proving claims against the estate of a decedent or insolvent; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 378, 59 Am. Dec. 249; enrolling deeds, after execution; Seawell v. Williams, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 291; appeal from arbitrators, afterward, after a final judgment on 3 S. 12; issuing a letter of attorney, in sae claus to revive a judgment, after entry; Appeal of Green, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 327; the time an execution runs, after its date; Homan v. Llewelly, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 638; redemption from execution sale: id. 518; allowing appeal from a justice; Ex parte Dear, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 605, 14 Am. Dec. 501. The principle is thus well expressed. When time is to be computed from a particular day or a particular event, as when an act is to be performed within a specified period from or after a day named, that day is excluded and the last day included; Sheed v. Garfield, 17 L. Ed. 897; 17 L. Ed. 277; 17 L. Ed. 380. But it was held that in considering the question of barring a writ of error, the day of the decree is included; Chiles v. Smith’s Heirs, 13 R. Monr. (Ky.) 469.

From the expiration of a policy means from the expiration of the time from which the policy was to be computed. Time is terminated by alienation; Sullivan v. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 318. Six months from testator’s death allowed a legatee to give security not to marry, are exclusive of that day; 15 Ves. 248. Where an annuity is granted, and from and after the payment thereof and subject to the life of a person, it is subject to make up deficiency of income; after if the gift over were from and after the annuitant’s death, merely; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 644, reversing L. R. 4 Eq. 58. From time to time, as applied to the payment of expenses or damages caused by building a railroad; L. R. 5 Ex. 6; or the appointment, by a married woman, of rents and profits, nor restrain the party from a sweeping discharge or disposition of the whole subject-matter at once. From time to time is not sufficient in a bond for which under the statute should stipulate at a rate in the time of term to term; Forbes v. State (Tex.) 15 S. W. 1072. From day to day, in reference to adjournments, usually means to the next day but not, under a statute authorizing the adjournment of a sale from day to day, a sale is good if made by adjournment to a day certain, which did not immediately succeed the first; Burns v. Lyon, 4 Watts (Pa.) 363. From henceforth in a lease means from the delivery; 5 Co. 1; so also does one from March 25th last past (the execution being March 29th); 4 B. & C. 272; or one from an impossible date (as February 30th), or no date, but if it has a sensible date, the words day or days are other parts of time of delivery; 4 B. & C. 908. Where authority is given to commissioners to build a bridge and then and from henceforth, the county to be liable, means only after the bridge is built; 16 East, 305. Whenever they are used with respect to places it is said that the power extends to all of the state and to all of the county, inclusively according to the subject-matter; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. Ed. 428 (fixing the term to a railroad under an act of congress). From an object to an object in a deed excludes the terminus referred to; Bonney v. Merrill, 52 Me. 222; State v. Bushey, 54 Me. 423, 24 Atl. 349. From place to place means from one place in a town to another in the same town; Com. v. Inhabitants of Cambidges, 7 Mass. 158; Com. v. Waters, 11 Gray (Mass.) 81. From a street means from any part of it according to circumstances; City of Pittsburgh v. Cluey, 74 Pa. 250. From a town is not always and indeed is seldom exclusive of the place named; it generally means from some indefinite place within that town; Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cra. C. C. 509, 606, Fed. Cas. No. 2,649. Authority in a railroad charter to construct a railroad from a city to another point gives power to construct the railroad from a city to any point on the line and no elsewhere; the Apex v. Freeman, 52 Ga. 244; Appeal of Western Penn- sylvania R. Co., 99 Pa. 155; Tennessee & A. R. Co. v. Adams, 3 Head (Tenn.) 506; contra North-Eastern R. Co. v. Payne, 8 Rich. L. (S. C.) 177. And see Farmers’ Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 289, where in a similar case “to” was construed “into”; and Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 5 Page Ch. (N. Y.) 594, where, “at or near” was held equivalent to "within." But from a town to another in an indictment for transportation of liquor does not charge it as done within the town; State v. Bushey, 54 Me. 423, 24 Atl. 349. To construe reasonably the expression a road from a village to a city within the same village, in a statute, requires that it be taken inclusively; Smith v. Helmer, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 418. Sailing from a port means out of it; U. S. v. La Coste, 2 Mass. 125, Fed. Cas. No. 15,548.

Descent from a parent cannot be construed to mean as distributed to a parent, it must be immediate, from the person designated; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 86, 7 L. Ed. 347; Case v. Wildridge, 4 Ind. 51; but the words from the part of the father include a descent, either immediately from the father or from any person in the line of the father; Shippen v. Sime. (Pa.) 222. The words to be paid for in from six to eight weeks have no definite meaning and it was properly left to the jury to say if the suit was brought prematurely; L. R. $ C. F. 20. From the loading in a marine policy ordinarily means that the risk is covered after the goods are on board, but this meaning may be qualified by any words in the policy indicating a different intention: 16 East 240; L. R. 7 Q. B. 580, 762. A contract to deliver from one to three thousand bushels gives the seller an option to deliver any quantity he chooses within the limits named; Small v. Quincy, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 497. Appraisers living from one to one and a half miles away, in a fairly well settled community, are prima facie from the neighborhood; State v. Jungling, 115 Mo. 162, 22 S. W. 568.

FROM ONE PLACE TO ANOTHER. From premises owned by one person to premises owned by another person in some legal subdivision or from one legal subdivision to another. Liquor Transportation Cases, 140 Tenn. 582, 205 S. W. 423, 426; Ready v. State, 155 Tenn. 13, 290 S. W. 28, 29; Allen v. State, 159 Ark. 665, 252 S. W. 896; State v. Knight, 94 W. Va. 150, 117 S. E. 783, 784; State v. White, 111 Kan. 190, 206 P. 905, 904.

FROM TIME TO TIME. Occasionally, at intervals, now and then. Spade v. Hawkins, 60 Ind. App. 388, 110 N. E. 1010, 1012. See From.

FRONT. Forepart, as opposed to the back or rear. State v. Read, 162 Iowa, 572, 144 N. W. 310, 311; Howland v. Audruins, 51 N. J. Eq. 175, 86 A. 931, 933.

Fronting and Abutting
As used in statutes relating to assessment for improvements. Property between which and the improvement there is no intervening land; where platted property lies between street proposed to be paved and unplatted property which abuts platted property, unplatted property is not subject to assessment as abutting property for any part of cost of improvement. City of Wilburton v. McNell, 119 Okl. 242, 249 P. 708, 710; Oklahoma Ry. Co. v. Severna Paving Co., 67 Okl. 206, 170 P. 216-218, 10 A. L. R. 157; Flynn v. Chiappari, 191 Cal. 139, 215 P. 682, 686.

Front Foot
As used in an act providing that property shall be assessed in proportion to the "front foot" has been held synonymous with "abutting foot". Moberly v. Hogan, 151 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014.

Front-Foot Rule
"Front-foot rule" is one by which cost of improvement is to be apportioned among several properties in proportion to their frontage on improvement and without regard to benefits conferred. Davy v. McNell, 31 N. M. 7, 240 P. 482, 488. The front-foot rule of apportionment for assessing a local tax for street pavement means this: The total cost of the work, including the cost of grading, filling, culverts, headers, gutters, curbing, engineering, labor, material, etc., is to be divided by the total number of square feet of paving done under the contract; and the quotient multiplied by one-half of the number of linear feet in the width of the pavement opposite the property lines, is the basis or rate of assessment of the property per front foot. City of Crowley v. Police Jury of Acadia Parish, 138 La. 488, 70 So. 487, 488.

FRONTAGE, FRONTAGER. In English law a frontager is a person owning or occupying land which abuts on a highway, river, seashore, or the like. The term is generally used with reference to the liability of frontagers on streets to contribute towards the expense of paving, draining, or other works on the highway carried out by a local authority, in proportion to the frontage of their respective tenements. Sweet.

The term is also in a similar sense in American law, the expense of local improvements made by municipal corporations (such as paving, curbing, and sewer) being generally assessed on abutting property owners in proportion to the "frontage" of their lots on the street or highway, and an assessment so levied being called a "frontage assessment." Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 581; Lyon v. Tawmanda (C. C.) 98 F. 368; City of Ft. Collins v. Lee, 72 Colo. 202, 210 P. 522; Haviland v. Columbus, 59 Ohio St. 471, 34 N. E. 679; and Toledo v. Shebl, 53 Ohio St. 447, 42 N. E. 323, 30 L. R. A. 598, overruled in City of Youngstown v. Fleshel, 89 Ohio St. 247, 104 N. E. 141, 143, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 921, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1073; Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. Kamrato, 313 Ill. 51, 149 N. E. 558, 559.

FRONTIER. In international law. That portion of the territory of any country which lies close along the border line of another country, and so "fronts" or faces it. The term means something more than the boundary line itself, and includes a tract or strip of country, of indefinite extent, contiguous to the line. Stoughton v. Mott, 15 Vt. 169.

FROZEN SNAKE. A term used to impute ingratitude and held libelous, the court taking judicial notice of its meaning without an innuendo. 12 Ad. & El. 624.

FRUCTUARIUS. Lat. In the civil law. One who had the usufruct of a thing; i.e., the use of the fruits, profits, or increase, as of land or animals. Inst. 2, 1, 93, 93. Bracton applies it to a lessee, feermor, or farmer of land, or one who held lands ad firmam, for a farm or term. Bract. fol. 261.

FRUCTUS. Lat. In the civil law. Fruit, fruits; produce; profit or increase; the organic productions of a thing.

The right to the fruits of a thing belonging to another.

The compensation which a man receives from another for the use or enjoyment of a thing, such as interest or rent. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 157; Inst. 2, 1, 35, 37; Dig. 7, 1, 93; 1d. 5, 3, 29; 1d. 22, 1, 51.
FRUCTUS CIVILES. All revenues and remunerations which, though not fruits, properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. The term includes such things as the rents and income of real property, interest on money loaned, and annuities. Civ. Code La. 1900, art. 545.

FRUCTUS FUNDI. The fruits (produce or yield) of land.

FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES. Industrial fruits, or fruits of industry. Those fruits of a thing, as of land, which are produced by the labor and industry of the occupant, as crops of grain; as distinguished from such as are produced solely by the powers of nature. Emblems are so called in the common law. 2 Steph. Comm. 258; 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 92; Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 32 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571; Turner v. Piety, 40 Mo. 223, 17 Am. Rep. 563; Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 64; Clark v. Strohbeen, 190 Iowa, 989, 181 N. W. 430, 435, 13 A. L. R. 1419; Twin Falls Bank & Trust Co. v. Weinhberg, 44 Idaho, 251, 257 P. 31, 33, 54 A. L. R. 1527.

FRUCTUS LEGIS. The fruit of the law, i. e. execution.

FRUCTUS NATURALES. Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone; as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals. Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 32 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571; Kiehl v. Holiday, 77 Mont. 451, 251 P. 225, 528; Clark v. Strohbeen, 190 Iowa, 989, 181 N. W. 430, 433, 13 A. L. R. 1419.

FRUCTUS PECUDUM. The produce or increase of flocks or herds.

FRUCTUS PENDENTES. Hanging fruits; those not severed. The fruits united with the thing which produces them. These form a part of the principal thing.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur. Hanging fruits make part of the land. Dig. 6, 1, 44; 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 1578.

Fructus perseverat viam non esse constat. Gathered fruits do not make part of the farm. Dig. 10, 1, 17, 1; 2 Bouv. Inst. no. 1578.

FRUCTUS REI ALIENÆ. The fruits of another’s property; fruits taken from another’s estate.

FRUCTUS SEPARATI. Separate fruits; the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it. Dig. 7, 4, 13.

FRUCTUS STANTES. Standing fruits; those not yet severed from the stalk or stem.

Fructus augent hereditatem. The yearly increase goes to enhance the inheritance. Dig. 5, 3, 20, 3.

FRUGES. In the civil law. Anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone- quarries. Dig. 50, 16, 77.

FRUIT. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food. Klas v. Kuehl, 159 Wis. 561, 150 N. W. 973, 975.

This term, in legal acceptance, is not confined to the produce of those trees which in popular language are called “fruit trees,” but applies also to the produce of oak, elm, and walnut trees. Bullen v. Denning, 5 Barn. & C. 847.

Civil Fruits

Civili fruits, in the civil law (fructus civilis) are such things as the rents and income of real property, the interest on money loaned, and annuities. Civ. Code La. art. 545.

Fruit Fallen

The produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus, a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the adowson. Wharton.

Fruits, Fruits of the Land

In replevy bond granting obligors therein sequestered property, “with value of fruits, hire, and revenue thereof forthwith,” the term “fruits” includes the natural accession to live stock. Southern Surety Co. v. Adams (Tex. Civ. App.) 278 S. 943, 944. The right of a possessor in good faith to reap the benefit of the “fruits of the land” until it is claimed by its owner does not permit such possessor to extract the mineral oil and gas from the land and retain the proceeds. Elder v. Ellerbe, 135 La. 960, 66 So. 337.

Fruits Of Crime

Natural Fruits

The produce of the soil, or of fruit-trees, bushes, vines, etc., which are edible or otherwise useful or serve for the reproduction of their species. The term is used in contradistinction to “artificial fruits,” i. e., such as by metaphor or analogy are likened to the fruits of the earth. Of the latter, interest on money is an example. See Civ. Code La. art. 545.

Fremiumæ quæ sunt soli sed non intelleguntur. Grain which is sown is understood to form a part of the soil. Inst. 2, 1, 32.

FRUMENTUM. In the civil law. Grain. That which grows in an ear. Dig. 50, 16, 77.
FRUMGYLD. Sax. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder. Blount.

FRUSCA TERRA. In old records. Uncultivated and desert ground. 2 Mon. Angl. 327; Cowell.

FRUSSURA. A breaking; plowing. Cowell.

FUNCTIONAL DISEASE

The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government, and creating a "sinking fund," designed to keep down interest, and to effect the gradual reduction of the principal debt. Merrill v. Monticello (C. C.) 22 F. 996.

FUND, n. A sum of money set apart for a specific purpose, or available for the payment of debts or claims.

In its narrower and more usual sense, "fund" signifies "capital," as opposed to "interest" or "income": as where we speak of a corporation funding the arrears of interest due on its bonds, or the like, meaning that the interest is capitalized and made to bear interest in its turn until it is repaid. Sweet.

In the plural, this word has a variety of slightly different meanings, as follows:

3. Corporate stocks or government securities; in this sense usually spoken of as the "funds."

In General

—General fund. This phrase, in New York, is a collective designation of all the assets of the state which furnish the means for the support of government and for defraying the discretionary appropriations of the legislature. People v. Orange County Sup'rs, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 575, 588. It has also been used in Delaware in the messages of the governor and other state papers to distinguish such funds as are available in the hands of the state treasurer for general purposes from assets of a special character, such as the school fund.

—No funds. This term denotes a lack of assets or money for a specific use. It is the return made by a bank to a check drawn upon it by a person who has no deposit to his credit there; also by an executor, trustee, etc., who has no assets for the specific purpose.

—Public funds. An untechnical name for (1) the revenue or money of a government, state, or municipal corporation; (2) the bonds, stocks, or other securities of a national or state government. Money, warrants, or bonds, or other paper having a money value, and belonging to the state, or to any county, city, incorporated town or school district. Crawford & Moses' Dig. (Ark.) § 2885; Bank of Blytheville v. State, 148 Ark. 504, 230 S. W. 550, 553. The term applies to funds of every political subdivision of state wherein taxes are levied for public purposes. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Bramwell (D. C.) 12 F.(2d) 307, 309.

—Revolving fund. Usually, a renewable credit over a defined period. In simple parlance it relates usually to a situation where a banker or merchant extends credit for a certain amount which can be paid off from time to time and then credit is again given not to exceed the same amount. It may also mean a fund, which, when reduced, is replenished by new funds from specified sources. U. S. v. Butterworth-Judson Corporation (C. A. N.) 297 F. 971, 979.

—Sinking fund. The aggregate of sums of money (as those arising from particular taxes or sources of revenue) set apart and invested, usually at fixed intervals, for the extinguishment of the debt of a government or corporation, by the accumulation of interest. Elser v. Ft. Worth (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 740; Brooke v. Philadelphia, 162 Pa. 123, 29 A. 387, 24 L. R. A. 751. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. This definition was quoted and approved in Union Pac. R. Co. v. Buffalo Co., 9 Neb. 453, 4 N. W. 53. See, also, Sidney Spitzer & Co. v. Commissioners of Franklin County, 188 N. C. 30, 123 S. E. 636, 639. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt. Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 379, cited in Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Pyne (C. C.) 30 F. 89.

—Sinking fund tax. A tax raised to be applied to the payment of interest on, and principal of public loan. Sidney Spitzer & Co. v. Commissioners of Franklin County, 188 N. C. 30, 123 S. E. 636, 639; Union Pac. R. Co. v. York County, 10 Neb. 612, 7 N. W. 270.

FUNDAMENTAL LAW. The law which determines the constitution of government in a state, and prescribes and regulates the manner of its exercise; the organic law of a state; the constitution.

FUNDAMUS. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 473; 3 Steph. Comm. 173.

FUNDATIO. Lat. A founding or foundation. Particularly applied to the creation and endowment of corporations. As applied to eleemosynary corporations such as colleges and hospitals, it is said that "fundatio incipiens" is the incorporation or grant of corporate powers, while "fundatio perficiens" is the endowment or grant or gift of funds or revenues. Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 667, 4 L. Ed. 629.

FUNDATOR. A founder, (q.v.)

FUNDI PATRIMONIALES. Lands of inheritance.

FUNDI PUBLICI. Public lands.

FUNDITORES. Pioneers. Jacob.

FUNDUS. In the civil and old English law. Land; land or ground generally; land, without considering its specific use; land, including buildings generally; a farm.

FUNGIBLE THINGS. Movable goods which may be estimated and replaced according to weight, measure, and number. Things belonging to a class, which do not have to be dealt with in specie. Standard Bank of Can-
FUNGIBLE THINGS

Fungible Things. See Fornagium; Four.

FURNITURE. This term includes that which furnishes, or with which anything is furnished or supplied; whatever must be supplied to a house, a room, place of business, or public building or the like, to make it

The word "furniture" made use of in the disposition of the law, or in the conventions or acts of persons, comprehends only such furniture as is intended for use and ornament of apartments, but not libraries which happen to be there, nor plate. Civ. Code La. art. 477.

The term "furniture" embraces everything about the house that has been usually enjoyed therewith, including plate, linens, china, and pictures, rugs, draperies and furnishings. Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 96, 3 Atl. 157; In re Kathan's Estate, 153 N. Y. S. 366, 368, 90 Misc. Rep. 590; Case v. Haase, 80 N. J. Eq. 170, 92 A. 728, 729; Peckham v. Peckham, 97 N. J. Eq. 174, 127 A. 95.

Furniture of a Ship

This term includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy; it comprehends all articles furnished by ship chandlers, which are almost innumerable. Weaver v. The S. G. Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 369, Fed. Cas. No. 17,510.

Household Furniture

This term, in a will, includes all personal chattels that may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder, or the ornament of the house; as plate, linen, china, both useful and ornamental, and pictures. But goods in trade, books, and wines will not pass by a bequest of household furniture. 1 Rep. Leg. 203.

FURNIVAL'S INN. Formerly an inn of chancery. See Inns of Chancery. Furor contrahit matrimonium non sitit, quia consensus opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed. Dig. 23, 2, 16, 21; 1 Ves. & B. 140; 1 Bl. Comm. 439; Wightman v. Wightman, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343, 345.

FURST AND FONDUNG. In old English law. Time to advise or take counsel. Jacob.

FURTA. A right derived from the king as supreme lord of a state to try, condemn, and execute thieves and felons within certain bounds or districts of an honour, manor, etc. Cowell seems to be doubtful whether this word should not read fureca, which means directly a gallows. Cowell; Holhouse, L. Dict.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagee by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Wharton.

FURTHER ASSURANCE, COVENANT FOR. See Covenant.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION. In English practice, upon a motion for judgment or application for a new trial, the court may, if it shall be of opinion that it has not sufficient materials before it to enable it to give judgment, direct the motion to stand over for further consideration, and direct such issues or questions to be tried or determined, and such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, as it may think fit. Rules Sup. Ct. xl, 10.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. When a master ordinary in chancery made a report in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, the cause was again set down before the judge who made the decree or order, to be proceeded with. Where a master made a separate report, or one not in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, a petition for consequential directions had to be presented, since the cause could not be set down for further directions under such circumstances. See 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. (5th Ed.) 1233, note.

FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS. Additional instructions given to jury after they have once been instructed and have retired. White v. Sharpe, 219 Mass. 393, 107 N. E. 56.

FURTHER MAINTENANCE OF ACTION, PLEA TO. A plea grounded upon some fact or facts which have arisen since the commencement of the suit, and which the defendant puts forward for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff should not further maintain his action. Brown.

FURTHERANCE. In criminal law, furthering, helping forward, promotion, or advancement of a criminal project or conspiracy. Powers v. Comm., 114 Ky. 237, 70 S. W. 652.

FURTIVE. In old English law. Stealthily; by stealth. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 3.

FURTUM. Lat. Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft without the consent of the owner. Fleta, l. 1, c. 36; Bract. fol. 150; 3 Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bract. fol. 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM. In Roman law. The theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen was discovered in his possession.

Furtum est contractatio rei alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerat. 3 Inst. 107. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it was.

FURTUM GRAVE. In Scotch law. An aggravated degree of theft, anciently punished with death. It still remains an open point what amount of value raises the theft to this serious denomination. 1 Brown, 352, note. See 1 Swift. 487.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM. Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bract. fol. 150b.

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentionis per dominium rei. 3 Inst. 107. There is no theft where the foundation of the detention is based upon ownership of the thing.

FURTUM OBLATUM. In the civil law. Offered theft. Oblatum furtum dictur cum res furtiva ab aliquo tibi oblata sit, eaque apud te concepta sit. Theft is called "oblatum" when a thing stolen is offered to you by any one, and found upon you. Inst. 4, l. 1, 4.

FUSEL OIL. A volatile oily liquid obtained in the rectification of spirituous liquors made from the fermentation of grain, potatoes, the marc of grapes, and other material; its chief constituent being amyl alcohol, a direct nerve poison. Calkins v. National Travelers' Ben. Ass'n of Des Moines, 200 Iowa, 60, 204 N. W. 406, 407, 41 A. L. R. 383.

FUSTIGATIO. In old English law. A beating with sticks or clubs; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bract. fol. 104b, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

FUSTIS. In old English law. A staff, used in making livery of seisin. Bract. fol. 40.

A baton, club, or cudgel.

FUTHWITE, or FITHWITE. A line for fighting or breaking the peace. Cowell; Cun. L. Diet.

FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. Mortgages, especially of railroad companies are frequently made in terms to cover after-acquired property; such as rolling stock, etc. Such mortgages are valid; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 396, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Shaw v. Bill, 35 U. S. 10, 24 L. Ed. 333; L. R. 16 Eq. 383. This may include future net earnings; Dunham v. Issett, 13 Iowa, 284; the proceeds to be received from the sale of surplus lands; L. R. 2 Ch. 201; a ditch or flame in process of construction, which was held to cover all improvements and fixtures thereafter to be put on the line thereof; De Araguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 620; rolling stock, etc.; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 396, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Benjamin v. R. Co., 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 441. Future calls of assessments on stock cannot be mortgaged; L. R. 10 Eq. 681; but calls already made can be; id.

Locomotives bought under a conditional sale, reserving title in the vendor, pass under an after-acquired clause to a mortgage of the railroad, subject to the vendor's rights; Contracting & Building Co. of Kentucky v. Trust Co., 105 F. 1, 47 C. C. A. 143.

A power in a Kentucky hotel company's charter to mortgage "all its property" does not sustain a mortgage covering after-acquired personal property; In re New Galt House Co., 199 F. 533, following Kentucky cases, but the authorities are contras; In re Medina Quarry Co., 179 F. 929; Trust Co. of America v. City of Rhinelander, 152 F. 64; Zartman v. Bank, 189 N. Y. 267, 52 N. E. 127, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1085.

A will speaks as of the death of the testator and ordinarily passes property acquired after its date.

FUTURE DEBT. In Scotch law. A debt which is created, but which will not become due till a future day. 1 Bell, Comm. 315.

FUTURE ESTATE. See Estate.

FUTURES. This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none is ever intended or executed. The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or to pay the price. Instead of that, a percentage or margin is paid, which is increased or diminished as the market rates go up or down, and accounted for to the buyer. King v. Quinlick Co., 14 R. L. 135; Lemonius v. Mayer, 71 reserved to the king's pleasure. Leges Hen. I q. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it treasure trope; but Cowell reads fyrdeninga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fyrd or host. a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called firdwite. See Spelman, Gloss. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD. Sax. In Anglo-Saxon law. The military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. (Also spelled "ferd" and "frd.") FYROFARE. A summoning forth to join a military expedition; a summons to join the fyrd or army.

FYRDSOCNE. (or fyrdsoken.) Exemption from military duty; exemption from service in the fyrd.

FYRDWITE. A fine imposed for neglecting to join the fyrd when summoned. Also a fine imposed for murder committed in the army; also an acquittance of such fine.
G. In the Law French orthography, this letter is often substituted for the English W, particularly as an initial. Thus, "gage" for "wage," "garranty" for "warranty," "gast" for "waste."

GABEL. An excise; a tax on movables; a rent, custom, or service. Co. Litt. 142a, 218.

Land Gabel
See Land.

GABELLA. The Law Latin form of "gabel." (q. v.)

GABLATORES. Persons who paid gabel, rent, or tribute. Domesday; Cowell.

GABLUM. A rent; a tax. Domesday; Du Cange. The gable-end of a house. Cowell.

GADSDEN PURCHASE. A term commonly applied to the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico by treaty of December 30, 1853, known as the Gadsden Treaty.

GAFFOLDGILD. The payment of custom or tribute. Scott.

GAFFOLDLAND. Property subject to the gaffoldgild, or liable to be taxed. Scott.

GAFOL. The same word as "gabel" or "gavel." Rent; tax; interest of money.

GAGE, v. In old English law. To pawn or pledge; to give as security for a payment or performance; to wage or wager.

GAGE, n.
In Old English Law
A pawn or pledge; something deposited as security for the performance of some act or the payment of money, and to be forfeited on failure or non-performance. Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6; Brit. c. 27.
A mortgage is a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

In French Law
The contract of pledge or pawn; also the article pawned.

In General
—Gage, estates in. Those held in vado, or pledge. They are of two kinds: (1) Vizum vadium, or living pledge, or vifgage; (2) mortuum vadium, or dead pledge, better known as "mortgage."

GAGER DE DELIVERANCE. In old English law. When he who has distrained, being sued, has not delivered the cattle distrained, then he shall not only avow the distress, but gager deliverance, i.e., put in surety or pledge that he will deliver them. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law (q. v.).

GAINAGE. The gain or profit of tilled or planted land, raised by cultivating it; and the draught, plow, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage by the baser kind of sokemen or villeins. Bract. l. i. c. 9.

GAINERY. Tillage, or the profit arising from it, or from the beasts employed therein.

GAINOR. In old English law. A sokeman; one who occupied or cultivated arable land. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 12.

GAJUM. A thick wood. Spelman.

GALE. The payment of a rent, tax, duty, or annuity.
A gale is the right to open and work a mine within the Hundred of St. Briavel's, or a stone quarry within the open lands of the Forest of Dean. The right is a license or interest in the nature of real estate, conditional on the due payment of rent and observance of the obligations imposed on the galee. It follows the ordinary rules as to the devotion and conveyance of real estate. The galee pays the crown a rent known as a "galeage rent," "royalty," or some similar name, proportionate to the quantity of minerals got from the mine or quarry. Sweet.

GALEA. In old records. A piratical vessel; a galley.

GALENES. In old Scotch law. Amends or compensation for slaughter. Bell.

GALLIVOLATIUM. A cock-shoot, or cock-glade.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)
GALLOWS. A scaffold; a beam laid over either one or two posts, from which malefactors are hanged.

GAMACTA. In old European law. A stroke or blow. Spelman.

GAMALIS. A child born in lawful wedlock; also one born to betrothed but unmarried parents. Spelman.

GAMBLE. To game or play at a game for money. Buckley v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 193, 18 Am. Rep. 460. The word "gamble" is perhaps the most apt and substantial to convey the idea of unlawful play that our language affords. It is inclusive of hazarding and betting as well as playing. Bennett v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 474. Allen v. Commonwealth, 178 Ky. 250, 198 S. W. 896, 897.

—Commercialized gambling. Such gambling as is a source of sure and steady profit. State v. Gardner, 131 La. 874, 92 So. 395, 371.

—Common gambler. One who furnishes facilities for gambling, or keeps or exhibits a gambling table, establishment, device, or apparatus. People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 291, 46 N. W. 459, citing cases.

—Gambling policy. In life insurance. One issued to a person, as beneficiary, who has no pecuniary interest in the life insured. Otherwise called a "wager policy." Gams v. Covenant Mut. L. Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 47.

GAME. Wild birds and beasts.

Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bacon, Abr. See Coodidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79. The term is said to include (in English hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath, or moor game, black game, and bustards. Brown. See 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32. Graves v. Dunlap, 87 Wash. 648, 52 P. 582, 583, L. R. A. 1916C, 588, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 944; Crabtree v. State, 129 Ark. 68, 184 S. W. 490.

—Game-keeper. One who has the care of keeping and preserving the game on an estate, being appointed thereto by a lord of a manor.

—Game-laws. Laws passed for the preservation of game. They usually forbid the killing of specified game during certain seasons or by certain described means. As to English game-laws, see 2 Steph. Comm. 82; 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32.

—Game of chance. One in which the result, as to success or failure, depends less upon the skill and experience of the player than upon purely fortuitous or accidental circumstances, incidental to the game or the manner of playing it or the device or apparatus with which it is played, but not under the control of the player. A game of skill, on the other hand, although the element of chance necessarily cannot be entirely eliminated, is one in which success depends principally upon the superior knowledge, attention, experience, and skill of the player, whereby the elements of luck or chance in the game are overcome, improved, or turned to his advantage. People v. Lawin, 179 N. Y. 164, 71 N. E. 753, 66 L. R. A. 601; Stearns v. State, 21 Tex. 692; Harless v. U. S., Morris. (Iowa) 172; Wortham v. State, 59 Miss. 182; State v. Gupton, 30 N. C. 271; State v. Randall, 121 Or. 545, 255 P. 393, 394.

GAMING. An agreement between two or more persons to play together at a game of chance for a stake or wager which is to become the property of the winner, and to which all contribute. In re Stewart (D. C.) 21 F. 398; People v. Todd, 51 N. Y. Supp. 4, N. Y. S. 25; State v. Shaw, 39 Minn. 153, 39 N. W. 305; State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033; Bell v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 597; Allen v. Commonwealth, 178 Ky. 250, 198 S. W. 896, 898; Carpenter v. Bcal-McDonnell & Co. (D. C.) 222 F. 453, 460.

In general, the words "gambling" and "gambling," in statutes, are similar in meaning, and either one comprehends the idea that, by a bet, by chance, or by some exercise of skill, or by the transpiring of some event unknown until it occurs, something of value is, as the conclusion of promises agreed, to be transferred from a loser to a winner, without which latter element there is no gambling or gambling, Blah. St. Crimes, § 883. Town of Eros v. Powell, 117 La. 482, 48 So. 632, 634; Relamiller v. State, 26 Fla. 462, 111 So. 633, 635.

It is not necessary that the player shall hazard what he plays, but it is equally "gaming" if he may win by chance more than the value expended by him. Nelson v. State, 57 Okl. Cr. 90, 258 P. 989, 940; City of Moberly v. Deakin, 169 Mo. App. 672, 155 S. W. 842, 843.

To constitute "gaming," winner must either pay consideration for his chance to win, or without paying anything in advance stand chance to lose or win. R. J. Williams Furniture Co. v. McComb Chamber of Commerce, 112 So. 579, 580, 147.
GAMING
"Gaming" is properly the act or engagement of the players. If bystanders or other third persons put up a stake or wager among themselves, to go to one or the other according to the result of the game, this is more correctly termed "betting."
—Gaming contracts. See Wager.
—Gaming-houses. In criminal law. Houses in which gambling is carried on as the business of the occupants, and which are frequented by persons for that purpose. They are nuisances, in the eyes of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices. 1 Russ.
Crimes, 299; Rosc. Crim. Ev. 663; People v.
Jackson, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449;
Anderson v. State (Tex. App.) 12 S. W. 869;
People v. Welthoff, 51 Mich. 203, 16 N. W.
442, 47 Am. Rep. 557; Morgan v. State, 42
Tex. Cr. R. 422, 60 S. W. 769.
—Gaming table. Any table that may be used for playing games of chance for money or property. State v. Leaver, 171 Mo. App. 571, 157 S. W. 821, 822; Everhart v. People, 54
Colo. 272, 130 P. 1076, 1080.
GANANCIAL PROPERTY. In Spanish law.
A species of community in property enjoyed by husband and wife, the property being divisible between them equally on a dissolution of the marriage. 1 Burge, Conf. Law, 418.
See Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex.
634; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 251;
W. 290, 292. See Community.
GANANCIAS. In Spanish law. Gains or profits resulting from the employment of property held by husband and wife in common.
White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.
GANG-WEEK. The time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers,—rogation week. Enc.
Lond.
GANGIATORI. Officers in ancient times whose business it was to examine weights and measures. Skene.
GANTELOPE. (pronounced "gauntlet"). A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Enc. Lond. This was called "running the gauntlet."
GAOL. A prison for temporary confinement; a jail; a place for the confinement of offenders against the law.
There is said to be a distinction between "gaol" and "prison:" the former being a place for temporary or provisional confinement, or for the punishment of the lighter offenses and misdemeanors, while the latter is a place for permanent or long-continued confinement, or for the punishment of greater crimes. In modern usage, this distinction is commonly taken between the words "gaol" and "penitentiary," (or state's prison,) but the name
"prison" is indiscriminately applied to either. See, also, Jail.
GAOL DELIVERY. In criminal law. The delivery or clearing of a gaol of the prisoners confined therein, by trying them.
In popular speech, the clearing of a gaol by the escape of the prisoners.
GAOL LIBERTIES, GAOL LIMITS. A district around a gaol, defined by limits, within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. It is considered a part of the gaol. Singer v. Knott, 237 N. Y.
110, 142 N. E. 435, 436.
General Gaol Delivery
In English law. At the assizes (q. v.) the judges sit by virtue of five several authorities, one of which is the commission of "general gaol delivery." This empowers them to try and deliverance make every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whether an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not. 4 Bl. Comm. 270. This is also a part of the title of some American criminal courts, as, in Pennsylvania, the "court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery."
GAOLER. A variant of "jailer" (q. v.)
GARAGE. A place for the care and storage
Div. 813, 169 N. Y. S. 652, 657; Grimes v.
State, 82 Tex. Cr. R. 512, 200 S. W. 378, 379;
Red Arrow Garage & Auto Co. v. Carson City,
47 Nev. 473, 225 P. 457, 458; White v. Home

N. W. 315, 316; Taylor v. State, 191 Ind. 200, 132 N. E. 294.
Public garages
A public garage is a place where automobiles are stored for compensation, but in practice, it is usually not essential to constitute a public garage under statutes or ordinances regulative thereof, that a charge be made for storing the vehicles of customers, the principal business of a garage being gencerally that of repairing cars. Blashfield Cyclopedia of Automobile Law, p. 374, § 38. State v. Elkins, 125 S. E. 249, 187 N. C. 563.
GARANDIA, or GARANTIA. A warranty.
Spelman.
GARANTIE. In French law. This word cor-

GARNISH. In English law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow-prisoners on his entrance into prison.

GARNISH, v. To warn or summon.
To issue process of garnishment against a person.

GARNISHEE. One garnished; a person against whom process of garnishment is issued; one who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, or who owes the defendant a debt, which money, property, or debt is attached in his hands, with notice to him not to deliver or pay it over until the result of the suit be ascertained.
Welsh v. Blackwell, 14 N. J. Law, 348;
Stein, 94 N. J. Eq. 231, 119 A. 504, 505.

GARNISHMENT. A warning to a person in whose hands the effects of another are attached, not to pay the money or deliver the property of the defendant in his hands to him, but to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit.
Drake, Attachm. § 451; National Bank of Wilmington v. Furtick, 2 Marr. (Del.) 35, 42
Bank, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 637, 89 N. W. 772.

A statutory proceeding to reach and subject money or effects of a defendant, in the possession or under the control of a third person, or debts owing such defendant, or liabilties to him on contracts for the delivery of personal property, or for the payment of money. Dishman v. Griffith, 196 Ala. 664, 73 So. 966, 967; Eller v. National Motor Vehiele Co., 181
Iowa, 679, 165 N. W. 64, 68; Coller v. Shefield Farms Co., 129 Misc. 600, 223 N. Y. S.

ams, 87 Okl. 291, 211 P. 79, 81; First Nat.
Bank v. Ellison, 135 Miss. 42, 90 So. 573, 574.

Garnishment is a proceeding in rem, Gerlach Mercantile Co. v. Hughes-Bozarth-
Anderson Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 189 S. W. 754, 788; McLaughlin v. Aumselle Mercantile
Co., 74 Or. 50, 144 P. 1154, 1155; Atkins v.
Evans, 76 W. Va. 17, 84 S. E. 901; is ancillarly to the main action, Brucker v. Georgia Casualty Co. (D. C.) 14 F. (2d) 888; Dugg v.
Consolidated Grocery Co., 155 Ga. 560, 118 S.
E. 56, 58; Geren & Hamond v. Lawson, 23
N. M. 415, 194 P. 218, 217; and does not create lien, but serves to hold garnishee to a personal liability. Pleasant Valley Farms &
Morey Condensery Co. v. Carl, 90 Fta. 120;
106 So. 427, 429; Sargent County v. Stute;
47 N. D. 561, 182 N. W. 270, 275; Same v.
Bank of North Dakota, 47 N. D. 561, 182 N.
W. 270.

Garnishment is a proceeding to apply the debt due by a third person to a judgment defendant, to the extinguishment of that judgment, or to appropriate, effects belonging to a defendant, in the hands of a third person, to its payment. Strickland v. Mad-
Also a warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause. Cowell.

Equitable Garnishment

This term is sometimes applied to the statutory proceedings authorized in some states, upon the return of an execution unsatisfied, whereby an action something like a bill of discovery may be maintained against the judgment debtor and any third person, to compel the disclosure of any money or property or chose in action belonging to the debtor or held in trust for him by such third person, and to procure satisfaction of the judgment out of such property. Gelst v. St. Louis, 156 Mo. 649, 57 S. W. 786, 79 Am. St. Rep. 545. See St. Louis v. O'Neill Lumber Co., 114 Mo. 74, 21 S. W. 454.

GARNISTRUXA. In old English law. Garniture; whatever is necessary for the fortification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer, 328; Du Cange; Cowell; Blount.

GARRISON. The permanent home of the army in time of peace, where soldiers are given proper training with a view of having them prepared for the intelligent performance of duty in event of conflict. Hines v. Mikell (C. C. A.) 259 F. 28, 81.

GARROTING. A method of inflicting the death penalty on convicted criminals practised in Spain, Portugal, and some Spanish-American countries, consisting in strangulation by means of an iron collar which is mechanically tightened about the neck of the sufferer, sometimes with the variation that a sharpened screw is made to advance from the back of the apparatus and pierce the base of the brain. Also, popularly, any form of strangling resorted to to overcome resistance or induce unconsciousness, especially as a concomitant to highway robbery.

GARSUMME. In old English law. An American or fine. Cowell.

GARTER. A string or ribbon by which the stocking is held upon the leg. The mark of the highest order of English knighthood, ranking next after the nobility. This military order of knighthood is said to have been first instituted by Richard I., at the siege of Acre, where he caused twenty-six knights who firmly stood by him to wear thongs of blue leather about their legs. It is also said to have been perfected by Edward III. and to have received some alterations, which were afterwards laid aside, from Edward VI. The badge of the order is the image of St. George, called the "George," and the motto is "Honi soit qui mal y pense." Wharton.

GARTH. In English law. A yard; a little close or homestead in the north of England. Cowell; Blount. A dam or weir in a river, for the catching of fish.

Casing-head Gas

Natural Gas

The gas obtained from wells in coal and oil regions, and used for lighting and heating. Dry natural gas is natural gas which does not contain an appreciable amount of readily condensable gasoline; it is usually not intimately associated with petroleum. Wet natural gas is natural gas from which a gasoline can be extracted in sufficient quantities to warrant the installation of a plant, or natural gas which contains readily condensable gasoline. Mussellem v. Magnolia Petroleum Co., 107 Okl. 183, 231 P. 526, 533.

GASOLINE. A colorless inflammable fluid, the first and highest distillate of crude petroleum. Being the most volatile component of petroleum, it readily separates from it, and, in the process of distillation, is the oil drawn off at the lowest temperature. Locke v. Russell, 75 W. Va. 602, 84 S. E. 948, 949; Hammett Oil Co. v. Gypsy Oil Co., 95 Okl. 223, 218 P. 501, 504, 34 A. L. R. 275.

GASTEL. L. Fr. Wastel; wastel bread; the finest sort of wheat bread. Britt. c. 30: Kelham.

GASTINE. L. Fr. Waste or uncultivated ground. Britt. c. 57.

GATE (Sax. gate), at the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the words beast-gate and cattle-gate, it means a right of pasture; these rights are local to Suffolks and Yorkshire respectively; they are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie; 2 Stra. 1054, 1 Term 137; and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gate of the pasture; and perhaps the name comes from this.

In modern railroad practice, movable barriers which close entrance through which public is permitted to enter upon, pass over, and leave property of railway company enclosed within its right of way fences. Jefferin v. Kewanee, G. B. & W. Ry. Co., 180 Wis. 207, 207 N. W. 283, 284.

GÄUDIES. A term used in the English universities to denote double commons.

GAUGE. The measure of width of a railway, fixed, with some exceptions, at 4 feet 8½ inches in Great Britain and America, and 5 feet 3 inches in Ireland.

GAUGEATOR. A gauger. Lowell.

GAUGER. A surveying officer under the customs, excise, and internal revenue laws, appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogheads, barrels and tineers of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure. There are also private gaugers in large seaport towns, who are licensed by government to perform the same duties. Rupal. & L.

GAUGETUM. A gauge or gauging; a measure of the contents of any vessel.

GAVEL. In English law. Custom; tribute; toll; yearly rent; payment of revenue; of which there were anciently several sorts; as gavel-corn, gavel-malt, oat-gavel, gavel-fodder, etc. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Co. Litt. 142a.

—Gavelbred. Rent reserved in bread, corn, or provision; rent payable in kind. Cowell.

—Gavelgeld. That which yields annual profit or toll. The tribute or toll itself. Cowell; Du Cange.

—Gavelherte. A service of plowing performed by a customary tenant. Cowell; Du Cange.

—Gaveling men. Tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides some customary duties to be done by them. Cowell.

—Gavelmed. A customary service of moving meadow-land or cutting grass. (Consequentudo falcandi) Blount.

—Gavelrep. Bedreap or bidreap; the duty of reaping at the bid or command of the lord. Somn. Gavelkind, 19, 21; Cowell.

—Gavelwerk. A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or earropera, by his carts or carriages. Blount; Somn. Gavelkind, 24; Du Cange.

GAVELET. An obsolete writ. An ancient and special kind of esseat, used in Kent and London for the recovery of rent. The statute of gavellet is 10 Edw. II. 3 Reeve, Eng. Law, c. 12, p. 298. See Emig v. Cunningham, 62 Md. 460.

GAVELKIND. A species of sokeage tenure common in Kent, in England, where the lands descend to all the sons, or heirs of the nearest degree, together; may be disposed of by will; do not escheat for felony; may be aliened by the heir at the age of fifteen; and dower and curtesy is given of half the land. Stin. Law Gloss.

GAVELLER. An officer of the English crown having the general management of the mines, pits, and quarries in the Forest of Dean and Hundred of St. Briavel's, subject, in some respects, to the control of the commissioners of woods and forests. He grants gales to free miners in their proper order, accepts surrenders of gales, and keeps the registers required by the acts. There is a deputy-gaveller, who appears to exercise most of the gaveller's functions. Sweet.

GAZETTE. The official publication of the English government, also called the "London Gazette." It is evidence of acts of state, and of everything done by the king in his political capacity. Orders of adjudication in bankruptcy are required to be published therein; and the production of a copy of the "Gazette," containing a copy of the order of adjudication, is evidence of the fact. Mozley & Whitley.

GEBOCCED. An Anglo-Saxon term, meaning "conveyed."

GEOBICIAN. In Saxon law. To convey; to transfer hoc land, (book-land or land held by charter.) The grantor was said to geobician the allience. See 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 10.

GEBUR (Sax.). A boor. His services varied in different places—to work for his lord two or more days a week; to pay gafols in money, barley, etc.; to pay hearth money, etc. He was a tenant with a house and a yard land or virgate or two oxen. Maitl. Domesday and Beyond 37.

GEBURSCRIPT. In old English law. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS. In old English law. A country neighbor; an inhabitant of the same geburscript, or village. Cowell.

GELD. In Saxon law. Money or tribute. A mulet, compensation, value, price. Angeld was the single value of a thing; twegeld, double value, etc. So, werengeld was the value of a man slain; orfegeld, that of a beast. Brown. A land tax of so much per hide or carucate. Maitl. Domesday Book 120. The compensation for a crime.

GELDABILIS. In old English law. Taxable; gendable.
GELDABLE. Liable to pay geld; liable to be taxed. Kelham.

GELDING. A horse that has been castrated, and which is thus distinguished from the horse in his natural and unaltered condition. A "ridging" (a half-castrated horse) is not a gelding, but a horse, within the denomination of animals in the statutes. Brisco v. State, 4 Tex. App. 219, 30 Am. Rep. 162.

GEMMA. Lat. In the civil law. A gem; a precious stone. Gems were distinguished by their transparency; such as emeralds, chrysolites, amethysts. Dig. 54, 2, 19, 17.

GÉMOT. In Saxon law. A meeting or moot; a convention; a public assemblage. These were of several sorts, such as the witenagemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folcgemot, or general assembly of the people; the shire-gemot; or county court; the burgh-gemot, or borough court; the hundred-gemot, or hundred court; the hal-gemot, or court-baron; the hal-mote, a convention of citizens in their public hall; the holy-mote, or holy court; the swain-gemot, or forest court; the goard-mote, or ward court. Wharton; Cunningham.

GEOLOGY. The summary history or table of a family, showing how the persons named are connected together.

GENEALOGY. The head of a family.

GENEATH. In Saxon law. A villicen, or agricultural tenant, (villanus vilivus;) a hind or farmer, (armarius rusticus.) Spelman.

GENER. Lat. In the civil law. A son-in-law; a daughter's husband. (Filius vir.) Dig. 38, 10, 4, 6.

GENERAL. Pertaining to, or designating, the genus or class, as distinguished from that which characterizes the species or individual. Universal, not particularized; as opposed to special. Principal or central; as opposed to local. Open or available to all; as opposed to select. Obtaining commonly, or recognized universally; as opposed to particular. Universal or unbounded; as opposed to limited. Comprehending the whole, or directed to the whole; as distinguished from anything applying to or designed for a portion only. Extensive or common to many. Record v. Ellis, 97 Kan. 754, 156 P. 712, 713; L. R. A. 1916E, 654, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 822; McNell v. McNell, 106 Iowa, 680, 145 N. W. 845, 851.

As a noun, the word is the title of a principal officer in the army, usually one who commands a whole army, division, corps, or brigade. In the United States army, the rank of "general" is the highest possible, next to the commander in chief, and is only occasionally created. The officers next in rank are lieutenant general, major general, and brigadier general.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY. A name given in some of the United States to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body. See State v. Gear, 5 Ohio Dec. 599.

GENERAL BOARD OF THE NAVY. A general advisory board to the Secretary of the Navy as to the preparation, maintenance and distribution of the fleet, plans of campaign, number and types of vessels, &c., number and ranks of officers and number and ratings of enlisted men, &c.

GENERAL BUILDING SCHEME. One under which a large tract of land divides into building lots, to be sold to different persons for separate occupancy by deeds which contain uniform covenants restricting the use which the several grantees may make of their premises. Besch v. Hyman, 221 App. Div. 455, 226 N. Y. S. 251, 253.

GENERAL CIRCULATION. That of a general newspaper only, as distinguished from one of a special or limited character; 1 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 114.

GENERAL COUNCIL. (1) A council consisting of members of the Roman Catholic Church from most parts of the world, but not from every part, as an ecumenical council. (2) One of the names of the English parliament.

GENERAL COURT. The name given to the legislature of Massachusetts and of New Hampshire, in colonial times, and subsequently by their constitutions; so called because the colonial legislature of Massachusetts grew out of the general court or meeting of the Massachusetts Company. Cent. Dict. See Citizens' Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Topek, 20 Wall. 600, 22 L. Ed. 455.

GENERAL CREDIT. The character of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. A distinction is sometimes insisted upon between this and "particular credit," which may be affected by proof of particular facts.

GENERAL EXCEPTION. General exception is an objection to a pleading, or any part thereof, for want of substance, while a special exception is an objection to the form in which a cause of action is stated. Cochran v. People's Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 271 S. W. 486, 494.

GENERAL FIELD. Several distinct lots or pieces of land inclosed and fenced in as one common field. Mansfield v. Hawkes, 14 Mass. 440.

GENERAL IMPARLANCE. In pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions.

GENERAL INCLOSURE ACT. The statute 41 Geo. III. c. 106, which consolidates a number of regulations as to the inclosure of common fields and waste lands.

GENERAL INTEREST. In speaking of matters of public and general interest, the terms "public" and "general" are sometimes used as synonyms. But in regard to the admissibility of hearsay evidence, a distinction has been taken between them, the term "public" being strictly applied to that which concerns every member of the state, and the term "general" being confined to a lesser, though still a considerable, portion of the community. Tayl. Ev. § 609.

GENERAL LAND-OFFICE. In the United States, one of the bureaus of the interior department, which has charge of the survey, sale, granting of patents, and other matters relating to the public lands.

GENERAL WORDS. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described, but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Such words are rendered unnecessary by the English conveyancing act of 1881, under which they are presumed to be included.

See, as to the effect of such words in deeds, 4 M. & S. 429; in a will; 1 P. Wms. 302; in a lease; 2 Moo. 532; in a release; 3 Mod. 277; in a covenant; 3 Moo. 703; in a statute; 1 Bla. Com. 88; 2 Co. 46.

GENERALE. The usual commons in a religious house, distinguished from pietante, which on extraordinary occasions were allowed beyond the commons. Cowell.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum. A general expression is to be interpreted generally. 8 Coke, 116a.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus, quantum singulare in singulis. What is general is of as much force among general things as what is particular is among things particular. 11 Coke, 559.

Generalia sunt proponenda singularibus. Branch, Princ. General things are to precede particular things.

Generalia verba sunt generaliter intelligenda. General words are to be understood generally, or in a general sense. 3 Inst. 76; Broom, Max. 647.

Generalis clausula non porrigitur ad ea quae anteas specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things which are previously provided for specially. 8 Coke, 154b. Therefore, where a deed at the first contains special words, and afterwards concludes in general words, both words, as well general as special, shall stand.

Generalis regula generaliter est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally. 6 Coke, 69.

GENERALIS OF ORDERS. Chiefs of the several orders of monks, friars, and other religious societies.

GENERATIO. The issue or offspring of a mother-monastery. Cowell.

GENEROSUS. Lat. Gentleman; a gentleman, Spelman.

GENEROSA. Gentlemwoman. Cowell; 2 Inst. 668.

GENEROSI FILIUS. The son of a gentleman. Generally abbreviated "gen. fili."

GENICULUM. A degree of consanguinity. Spelman.

GENS. Lat. In Roman law. A tribe or clan: a group of families, connected by common descent and bearing the same name, being all free-born and of free ancestors, and in possession of full civic rights.

GENS DE JUSTICE. In French law. Officers of a court.

GENTILES. In Roman law. The members of a gens or common tribe.

GENTLEMAN. In English law. A person of superior birth.

Under the denomination of "gentlemen" are comprised all above yeoman; whereby noblemen are truly called "gentlemen." Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 1, cc. 29, 31.

A "gentleman" is defined to be one who, without any title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen; and, by the coat that a gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be, descended from those of his name that lived many hundred years since. Jacob. See Cresson v. Cresson, 6 Fed. Cas. 369.

GENTLEMAN USHER. One who holds a post at court to usher others to the presence, etc.

GENTLEWOMAN. A woman of birth above the common, or equal to that of a gentleman; an addition of a woman's state or degree.

GENTOO LAW. See Hindu Law.

GENUINE. As applied to notes, bonds, and other written instruments, this term means that they are truly what they purport to be, and that they are not false, forged, fictitious, simulated, spurious, or counterfeit. Baldwin v. Van Deussen, 37 N. Y. 492; Smeltzer v. White, 92 U. S. 362, 23 L. Ed. 508; Dow v. Speney, 23 Mo. 390; Cox v. Northwestern Stage Co., 1 Idaho, 379; Alisa v. Mercantile Trust Co. of San Francisco, 174 Cal. 504, 163 P. 595, 901; Krug v. Sinclair, 57 Cal. App. 563, 207 P. 606, 697. A will that has been revoked by later instrument and not revived by republication is not "genuine," within Surrogate's Court Act, § 144. In re Kilts' Will, 125 Misc. 475, 211 N. Y. S. 450, 461.

GENUS. In the civil law. A general class or division, comprising several species. In toto surrei generi per speciem derogatar, et illud potissimum habetur quod ad speciem directum est, throughout the law, the species takes from the genus, and that is most particularly regarded which refers to the species. Dig. 50, 17, 80.

A man's lineage, or direct descendants.

In logic, it is the first of the universal ideas, and is when the idea is so common that it extends to other ideas which are also universal; e. g., incorporeal herediamt is genus with respect to a rent, which is species. Woolley, Introd. Log. 45; 1 Mill., Log. 133.

GEORGE-NOBLE. An English gold coin; value 6s. 8d.

GERECHTSBODE. In old New York law. A court messenger or constable. O'Callaghan, New Neth. 322.

GEREFA. In Saxon law. Greve, reeve, or Reeve; a ministerial officer of high antiquity in England; answering to the græf or graef (grafio) of the early continental nations. The term was applied to various grades of officers, from the scyrto-gerefa, shire-greffe, or shire-reeve, who had charge of the county, (and whose title and office have been perpetuated in the modern "sheriff,") down to the tunc-gerefa, or town-reeve, and lower. Burrill.

GERENS. Bearing. Gerens datum, bearing date. 1 Id. Raym. 336; Hob. 19.

GERMAN. Whole, full, or own, in respect to relationship or descent. Brothers-german, as opposed to half-brothers, are those who have both the same father and mother. Cousins-german are "first" cousins; that is, children of brothers or sisters.

GERMANUS. Lat. Descended of the same stock, or from the same couple of ancestors; of the whole or full blood. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 145.

GERMEN TERRÆ. Lat. A sprout of the earth. A young tree, so called.

GERONTOCOMI. In the civil law. Officers appointed to manage hospitals for the aged poor.

GERONTOCOMIUM. In the civil law. An institution or hospital for taking care of the old. Cod. 1, 3, 46, 1; Calvin.

GERRYMANDER. A name given to the process of dividing a state or other territory into the authorized civil or political divisions, but with such a geographical arrangement as to accomplish a sinister or unlawful purpose, as, for instance, to secure a majority for a given political party in districts where the result would be otherwise if they were divided according to obvious natural lines, or to arrange school districts so that children of certain religions or nationalities shall be brought within one district and those of a different religion or nationality in another district. State v. Whitford, 54 Wis. 150, 11 N. W. 424.

GERSUMARIUS. In old English law. Finline; liable to be amerced at the discretion of the lord of a manor. Cowell.

GERSUME. In old English law. Expense; reward; compensation; wealth. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offense. 2 Mon. Angl. 973.

GEST. In Saxon law. A guest. A name given to a stranger on the second night of his enertainment in another’s house. Twilight gest.

GESTATION, UTERO-GESTATION. In medical jurisprudence. The time during which a female, who has conceived, carries the embryo or fetus in her uterus.

GESTIO. In the civil law. Behavior or conduct.

Management or transaction. Negotiorum gestio, the doing of another’s business; an interference in the affairs of another in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. Dig. 3, 5, 45; Id. 46, 8, 12; 2 Kent, Comm. 613, note.

GESTIO PRO HÆREDE. Behavior as heir. This expression was used in the Roman law, and adopted in the civil law and Scotch law, to denote conduct on the part of a person appointed heir to a deceased person, or otherwise entitled to succeed as heir, which indicates an intention to enter upon the inheritance, and to hold himself out as heir to creditors of the deceased; as by receiving the rents due to the deceased, or by taking possession of his title-deeds, etc. Such acts will render the heir liable to the debts of his ancestor. Mozeley & Whitley.

GESTOR. In the civil law. One who acts for another, or transacts another’s business. Calvin.

GESTU ET FAMA. An ancient and obsolete writ resorted to when a person’s good behavior was impeached. Lamb. Eir. 1, 4, c. 14.

GESTUM, Lat. In Roman law. A deed or act; a thing done. Some writers affected to make a distinction between gestum and factum. But the best authorities pronounced this subtle and indefensible. Dig. 50, 16, 38.

GET, n. A bill of divorce among the Jews, which is drawn in the Aramaic language, uniformly worded and carefully written by a proper scribe, and after proper ceremonies and questionings by the rabbi, especially as to whether both parties agree to the divorce, the husband hands to the wife in the presence of ten witnesses. Shilman v. Shilman, 174 N. Y. S. 385, 386, 105 Misc. 461.

GEWINEDA. In Saxon law. The ancient convention of the people to decide a cause.

GEWITNESSA. In Saxon and old English law. The giving of evidence.

GEWRITE. In Saxon law. Deeds or charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law 10.

GIBBET. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their bodies are exposed. It differs from a common gallows, in that it consists of one perpendicular post, from the top of which proceeds one arm, except it be a double gibbet, which is formed in the shape of the Roman capital T. 1 Enc. Lond.

GIBBET LAW. Lynch law; in particular a custom anciently prevailing in the parish of Halifax, England, by which the freeburghers held a summary trial of any one accused of petit larceny, and, if they found him guilty, ordered him to be decapitated.

A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily and without consideration. Civil Code Cal. § 1148.

In popular language, a voluntary conveyance or assignment is called a “deed of gift.” “Gift” and “advancement” are sometimes used interchangeably as expressive of the same operation. But, while an advancement is always a gift, a gift is very frequently not an advancement. In re Dewees’ Estate, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 514.

Advancement Distinguished

Upon an ordinary “gift” there is no intention on the part of the donor that the donee will ever be expected to account for it, that being the distinguishing feature between a gift and a statutory advancement. Brewer’s Adm’r v. Brewer, 181 Ky. 490, 205 S. W. 339.

In English Law

A conveyance of lands in tail; a conveyance of an estate tail in which the operative words are “I give,” or “I have given.” 2 Bl. Comm. 316; 1 Steph. Comm. 473.

In General

—Absolute gift, or gift inter vivos, as distinguished from a testamentary gift, or one made in contemplation of death, is one by which the donee becomes in the lifetime of the donor the Gift to a class. A gift to a class exists when the instrument creating it directs the distribution of all aggregate sum to a body of persons, commonly designated by some general name, as "children," "grandchildren," "nephews," uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at a future time, and who are all to take in equal or in some other definite proportions; the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number of persons in the designated class. Priechard v. Priechard, 83 S. Va. 652; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Calef, 45 R. I. 618, 112 A. 775, 778; In re Helms' Estate, 96 N. J. Eq. 197, 128 A. 42, 45; In re Fox's Adm'r, 206 N. Y. 478, 104, 123 Misc. 228; Weisborg v. Marth, 186 Mich. 556, 162 N. W. 102, 106, L. R. A. 1915E, 1073; In re Rochester Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 222 N. Y. S. 256, 260, 129 Misc. 518; Stahl v. Emery, 147 Md. 123, 127 A. 761; Perry v. Leslie, 124 Me. 68, 126 A. 340, 343; Blackstone v. Alchouse, 273 Ill. 451; 116 N. E. 154, 157, 39 L. R. A. 1915B, 230; Marx v. Hale, 131 Mass. 290, 95 So. 441, 445; Hagood v. Hagood (Tex. Civ. App.) 184 S. W. 220, 225.

GIFT AQUÆ. The stream of water to a mill. Mon. Angl. tom. 3.

GIFTOMAN. In Swedish law. The right to dispose of a woman in marriage; or the person possessing such right,—her father, if living, or, if he be dead, the mother.

GILD. In Saxon law. A tax or tribute. Spelman. A fine, mulet, or amerciament; a satisfaction or compensation for an injury. A fraternity, society, or company of persons combined together, under certain regulations, and with the king's license, and so called because its expenses were defrayed by the contributions (gild, gild) of its members. Spelman. In other words, an incorporation; called, in Latin, "societas," "collegium," "fratres," "fraternitas," "sodalitium," "unio matrimonii," and, in foreign law, "gildonia." Spelman. There were various kinds of these gilds, as merchant or commercial gilds, religious gilds, and others. 3 Turn. Anglo Sax. 68; 3 Steph. Comm. 173, note u. See Gilda Mercatoria.

A frigorg, or decennary; called, by the Saxons, "gildiscipes," and its members, "gildones" and "congildones." Spelman.

GILD-HALL. See Guildhall.

GILD-RENT. Certain payments to the crown from any gild or fraternity.

GILDA MERCATORIA. A gild merchant, or merchant gild; a gild, corporation, or company of merchants. 10 Coke, 30.

GILDO. In Saxon law. Members of a gild or decennary. Oftener, spelled "compildi." Du Cange; Spelman.

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint.

GILLOUR. L. Fr. A cheat or deceiver. Applied in Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for silver or latex for gold. Brit. c. 13.

GILT EDGE. As applied to commercial paper, a colloquialism, meaning of the best quality or highest price, first class, and not implying that a note which is not gilt edge is not collectible, or that the maker is irresponsible. Martin v. Moreland, 83 Or. 61, 130 P. 593, 594.
GIRANTE. An Italian word, which signifies the drawer of a bill. It is derived from "pereare," to draw.

GIRDLE, v. To "girdle" a tree for the purpose of obtaining crude turpentine is to cut off a ring of bark around the trunk. Howard v. State, 17 Ala. App. 9, 81 So. 345, 346.

GIRTH. In Saxon and old English law. A measure of length, equal to one yard, derived from the girth or circumference of a man's body.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In old Scotch law. An asylum given to murderers, where the murder was committed without any previous design, and in clade melia, or heat of passion. Bell.

GISEMENT. L Fr. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle.

GISER. L Fr. To lie. Gisit en le bouche, it lies in the mouth. Le action bien gist, the action well lies. Gisant, lying.

GISETAKER. An agister; a person who takes cattle to graze.

GISLE. In Saxon law. A pledge. Fredgisel, a pledge of peace. Gisilebert, an illustrious pledge.

GIST. In pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 12; Hathaway v. Rice, 19 Vt. 102.

The gist of an action is the cause for which an action will lie; the ground or foundation of a suit, without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of a suit, and without which there is not a cause of action. First Nat. Bank v. Burkett, 101 Ill. 391, 40 Am. Rep. 290; Hoffman v. Knight, 127 Ala. 149, 28 So. 583; Tarbell v. Tarbell, 60 Vt. 486, 15 A. 104.

GIVE. To bestow upon another gratuitously or without consideration. Neblett v. Smith, 142 Va. 840, 128 S. E. 247, 251.

In their ordinary and familiar significance, the words "sell" and "give" have not the same meaning, but are commonly used to express different modes of transferring the right to property from one person to another. "To sell" means to transfer for a valuable consideration, while "to give" signifies to transfer gratuitously, without any equivalent. Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 384, 74 Am. Dec. 322.

To transfer;—used with reference to either the title or the possession. Crawford v. Hurst, 307 Ill. 243, 138 N. E. 620, 622.

The word is commonly used indiscriminately to refer to the transfer of either the possession or the title, though its primary meaning was a transfer to another's possession or ownership without com-

To transfer or yield, to, or bestow upon, another. One of the operative words in deeds of conveyance of real property, importing at law, a warranty or covenant for quiet enjoyment during the lifetime of the grantor. Mack v. Patchin, 29 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 23; Young v. Hargrave, 7 Ohio, 69, pt. 2; Dow v. Lewis, 4 Gray (Mass.) 473.

GIVE AND BEQUEST. These words, in a will, import a benefit in point of right, to take effect upon the decease of the testator and proof of the will, unless it is made in terms to depend upon some contingency or condition precedent. Eldridge v. Eldridge, 9 Cush. (Mass,) 519.

GIVE BAIL. To furnish or put in bail or security for one's appearance.

GIVE COLOR. To admit an apparent or colorable right in the opposite party. Under the ancient system a plea of confession and avoidance must give color to the affirmative averments of the complaint, or it would be fatally defective. The "giving color" was simply the absence of any denials, and the express or silent admission that the declaration, as far as it went, told the truth. Smith v. Marley, 39 Idaho, 779, 230 P. 769, 770. See Color.

GIVE JUDGMENT. To render, pronounce, or declare the judgment of the court in an action at law; not spoken of a judgment obtained by confession. Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329, 22 P. 505.

GIVE NOTICE. To communicate to another, in any proper or permissible legal manner, information or warning of an existing fact or state of facts or (more usually) of some intimated future action. See O'Neil v. Dickson, 11 Ind. 254; In re Devlin, 7 Fed. Cas. 564; City Nat. Bank v. Williams, 122 Mass. 535; Tinker v. Board of Sup'rs of Kossuth County, Iowa (D. C.) 292 F. 863, 866; St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Hicks (Tex. Civ. App.) 158 S. W. 192, 194.

GIVE TIME. The act of a creditor in extending the time for the payment or satisfaction of a claim beyond the time stipulated in the original contract. If done without the consent of the surety, indorser, or guarantor, it discharges him. Howell v. Jones, 1 Cump. M. & R. 107; Shipman v. Kelley, 9 Appl. Div. 316, 41 N. Y. S. 393.

GIVE WAY. In the rules of navigation, one vessel is said to "give way" to another when she deviates from her course in such a manner and to such an extent as to allow the other to pass without altering her course. See Lockwood v. Lashell, 19 Pa. 350.

GIVER. A donor; he who makes a gift.
GIVING IN PAYMENT. In Louisiana law, a phrase (translating the Fr. "dation en paiement") which signifies the delivery and acceptance of real or personal property in satisfaction of a debt, instead of a payment in money. See Civil Code La. art. 2655.

GIVING RINGS. A ceremony customarily performed in England by sergeants at law at the time of their appointment. The rings were inscribed with a motto, generally in Latin.

GLADIOLUS. A little sword or dagger; a kind of sedge. Mat. Paris.

GLADIUS. Lat. A sword. An ancient emblem of defense. Hence the ancient ears or comites (the king's attendants, advisers, and associates in his government) were made by being girt with swords, (gladio succincti.)

The emblem of the executive power of the law in punishing crimes. 4 Bl. Comm. 177.

In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction, (jus gladii.)

GLAIVE. A sword, lance, or horseman's staff. One of the weapons allowed in a trial by combat.

GLANS. In the civil law, Acorns or nuts of the oak or other trees. In a larger sense, all fruits of trees.

GLASS-MEN. A term used in St. 1 Jac. i. c. 7, for wandering rogues or vagrants.

GLAVEA. A hand dart. Cowell.

GLEANING. The gathering of grain after reapers, or of grain left ungathered by reapers. Held not to be a right at common law. 1 H. Bl. 51.

GLEBA. A turf, sod, or clod of earth. The soil or ground; cultivated land in general. Church land, (solum et dos ecclesiae.) Speelman. See Glebe.

GLEBÆ ASSCRIPTITII. Villein-soemen, who could not be removed from the land while they did the service due. Bract. c. 7; Reeve, Eng. Law, 260.

GLEBARIÆ. Turfs dug out of the ground. Cowell.

GLEBE.

In Ecclesiastical Law

The land possessed as part of the endowment or revenue of a church or ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman Law

A cloid; turf; soil. Hence, the soil of an inheritance; an agrarian estate. Servi addicti glebae were serfs attached to and passing with the estate. Cod. 11, 47, 7, 21; Nov. 54, 1.

GLISCYWA. In Saxon law. A fraternity.

GLOMERELLS. Commissioners appointed to determine differences between scholars in a school or university and the townsmen of the place. Jacob.

GLOS. Lat. In the civil law. A husband's sister. Dig. 38, 10, 4, 6.

GLOSS. An interpretation, consisting of one or more words, interlinear or marginal; an annotation, explanation, or comment on any passage in the text of a work, for purposes of elucidation or amplification. Particularly applied to the comments on the Corpus Juris.

GLOSSA. Lat. A gloss, explanation, or interpretation. The glossae of the Roman law are brief illustrative comments or annotations on the text of Justinian's collections, made by the professors who taught or lectured on them about the twelfth century, (especially at the law school of Bologna,) and were hence called "glossators." These glosses were at first inserted in the text with the words to which they referred, and were called "glossae interlinearae," but afterwards they were placed in the margin, partly at the side, and partly under the text, and called "glossae marginales." A selection of them was made by Accursius, between A. D. 1220 and 1260, under the title of "glossæ Ordinaria," which is of the greatest authority. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 90.

Glossa viperina est qua corrodit viscera textus. 11 Coke, 34. It is a poisonous gloss which corrupts the essence of the text.

GLOSSATOR. In the civil law. A commentator or annotator. A term applied to the professors and teachers of the Roman law in the twelfth century, at the head of whom was Imerius. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 90.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. The statute is the 6 Edw. I. c. 1, A. D. 1278. It takes its name from the place of its enactment, and was the first statute giving costs in actions.

GLOVE SILVER. Extraordinary rewards formerly given to officers of courts, etc.; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judges' officers. Jacob.

GLOVES. It was an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there was no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It is an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath. Wharton.

GLYN. A hollow between two mountains; a valley or glen. Co. Litt. 55.

GO. To be dismissed from a court. To issue from a court. "The court said a mandamus must go." 1 W. Bl. 50. "Let a supersedeas GO BAIL. To assume the responsibility of a surety on a bail-bond.

GO HENCE. To depart from the court; with the further implication that a suitor who is directed to “go hence” is dismissed from further attendance upon the court in respect to the suit or proceeding which brought him there, and that he is finally denied the relief which he sought, or, as the case may be, absolved from the liability sought to be imposed upon him. See Hlatt v. Kinkaid, 40 Neb. 178, 58 N. W. 700.

GO TO. In a statute, will, or other instrument, a direction that property shall “go to” a designated person means that it shall pass or proceed to such person, vest in and belong to him. In re Hitchins’ Estate, 43 Misc. Rep. 465, 89 N. Y. S. 472; Plass v. Plass, 121 Cal. 131, 53 P. 448.

GO TO PROTEST. Commercial paper is said to “go to protest” when it is dishonored by non-payment or non-acceptance and is handed to a notary for protest.

GO WITHOUT DAY. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again.

GOAT, GOTE. In old English law. A contrivance or structure for draining waters out of the land into the sea. Callis describes goats as “usual engines erected and built with portcullises and doors of timber and stone or brick, invented first in Lower Germany.” Callis, Sewers, (91), 112, 113. Cowell defines “gote,” a ditch, sewer, or gutter.

GOB. In mining. Space between face of coal and where props had been set by machine operators on previous trip. New Union Coal Co. v. Suit, 172 Ark. 753, 290 S. W. 580, 581.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. The answer made by a prisoner, when arraigned, in answer to the question, “How will you be tried?” In the ancient practice he had the choice (as appears by the question) whether to submit to the trial by ordeal (by God) or to be tried by a jury, (by the country;) and it is probable that the original form of the answer was, “By God or my country;” whereby the prisoner averred his innocence by declining neither of the modes of trial.

GOD-BOTE. An ecclesiastical or church fine paid for crimes and offenses committed against God. Cowell.

GOD-GILD. That which is offered to God or his service. Jacob.

GOD’S PENNY. In old English law. Earnest-money; money given as evidence of the completion of a bargain. This name is probably derived from the fact that such money was given to the church or distributed in alms.

GOGING-STOLE. An old form of the word “cucking-stool,” (q. v.) Cowell.

GOING. In various compound phrases (as those which follow) this term implies either motion, progress, active operation, or present and continuous validity and efficacy.

GOING BEFORE THE WIND. In the language of mariners and in the rules of navigation, a vessel is said to be going “before the wind” when the wind is free as respects her course, that is, comes from behind the vessel or over the stern, so that her yards may be braced square across. She is said to be “going off large” when she has the wind free on either tack, that is, when it blows from some point abait the beam or from the quarter. Hall v. The Buffalo, 11 Fed. Cas. 216; Ward v. The Fashion, 29 Fed. Cas. 188.

GOING OFF LARGE. See “Going Before the Wind,” supra.

GOING PRICE. The prevalent price; the current market value of the article in question at the time and place of sale. Kelsev v. Haines, 41 N. H. 254; Hoff v. Lodi Canning Co., 51 Cal. App. 290, 196 P. 779, 780.

GOING THROUGH THE BAR. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen’s bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tabman are first called on. Wharton.

GOING TO THE COUNTRY. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words “and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination of a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. Wharton.

GOING WITNESS. One who is about to take his departure from the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as from one to another of the United States, or from England to Scotland.

GOLDSMITHS' NOTES. Bankers' cash notes (i. e., promissory notes given by a banker to his customers as acknowledgments of the receipt of money) were originally called in London "goldsmiths' notes" from the circumstance that all the banking business in England was originally transacted by goldsmiths. Wharton.

GOLDWIT. A mullet or fine in gold.

GOLIARDUS. L. Lat. A jester, buffoon, or juggler. Spelman, voc. "Goliardussis."

GOMASHTAH. In Hindu law. An agent; a steward; a confidential factor; a representative.

Responsible; solvent; able to pay an amount specified.

Of a value corresponding with its terms; collectible. A note is said to be "good" when the payment of it at maturity may be relied on. Curtis v. Smallman, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 232; Cooke v. Nathan, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 344; In re Parker Bros. & Johnson (D. C.) 279 F. 425, 428.

Writing the word "Good" across the face of a check is the customary mode in which bankers at the present day certify that the drawer has funds to meet it, and that it will be paid on presentation for that purpose. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 10 Wall. 646, 19 L. Ed. 1008; Irving Bank v. Weishard, 36 N. Y. 335.

—Good aseabing. See ABEARANCE.

—Good and clear record title, free from all incumbrances. A title which on the record itself can be again sold as free from obvious defects and substantial doubts, and differs from a "good, marketable title," which is an actual title, but which may be established by evidence-independently of the record. O'Meara v. Gleason, 216 Mass. 193, 140 N. E. 426, 427.

—Good and substantial deposit. A deposit suitable to take care of both passenger and freight business. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Letcher —Good jury. A jury of which the members are selected from the list of special jurors See L. R. 5 C. P. 155.

—Good, merchantable abstract of title. An abstract showing a good title, clear from incumbrances, and not merely an abstract of matters of record affecting the title, made by one engaged in the business of making abstracts in such form as is customary, as passing current among persons buying and selling real estate and examining titles. Geithman v. Eichler, 265 Ill. 579, 107 N. E. 180, 182.

—Good of service. Discharge of a civil service employee for "good of the service" or "for cause" implies some personal misconduct, or fault, rendering the incumbent's further tenure harmful to the public interest. State ex rel. Eckles v. Kansas City (Mo. App.) 257 S. W. 197, 200.

—Good record title. A "good record title," without words of limitation, means that the proper records shall show an unincumbered, fee-simple title, the legal estate in fee, free and clear of all valid claims, liens, and incumbrances. Riggins v. Post (Tex. Civ. App.) 172 S. W. 210, 211.

—Good title. This means such a title as a court of chancery would adopt as a sufficient ground for compelling specific performance, and such title as would be a good answer to an action of ejectment by any claimant. Reynolds v. Borel, 86 Cal. 583, 25 P. 67; Irving v. Campbell, 121 N. Y. 355, 24 N. E. 821, 8 L. R. A. 620; Gillespie v. Brosa, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 381.

—Good will. The custom or patronage of any established trade or business; the benefit or advantage of having established a business and secured its patronage by the public. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or acuteness or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 66; Haverly v. Elliott, 39 Neb. 201, 57 N. W. 1010; Munsey v. Butterfield, 133 Mass. 494; Bell v. Ellis, 53 Cal. 625; People v. Roberts, 159 N. Y. 70, 53 N. E. 895, 45 L. R. A. 126; Churton v. Douglas, 5 Jur. N. S. 890; Mende- zuez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 314, 9 S. Ct. 148, 82 L. Ed. 526. The good-will of a business is the expectation of continued public patronage, but it does not include a right to use the name of any person from whom it was acquired. Civ. Code Cal. § 992; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 5463; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 491. The term "good-will" does not mean simply the advantage of occupying particular premises which have been occupied by a manufacturer, etc. It means every advantage, every positive advantage, that has been acquired by a proprietor in carrying on his business, whether connected with the premises in which the business is conducted, or with the name under which it is managed, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business. Glen & Hall Mfg. Co. v. Hall, 61 N. Y. 226, 19 Am. Rep. 278; In re Ball's Estate, 146 N. Y. S. 409, 501, 161 App. Div. 73; Whitley v. Davie, 116 Va. 375, 52 S. E. 724, 726; Armstrong v. Atlantic Ice & Coal Corporation, 141 Ga. 464, 51 S. E. 212, 215; Hines v. Roberts Bros., 117 Kan. 539, 292 P. 1050, 1052; In re Brown, 242 N. Y. 1, 150 N. E. 654, 582, 44 A. L. R. 510; Hodde v. Hahn, 238 Mo. 320, 222 S. W. 799, Martin v. Jablonski, 238 Mass. 451, 149 N. E. 156, 159; Collas v. Brown, 211 Ala. 443, 100 So. 769, 770; United Romanian Meat & Grocery Co. v. Abramson, 218 Ill. App. 577; MacFadden v. Jenkins, 40 N. D. 422, 169 N. W. 151, 154; Hiltun v. Hilton, 59 N. J. Eq. 182, 104 A. 375, 376, L. R. A. 1918F, 1174; Sivley v. Cramer, 105 Miss. 23, 61 So. 653, 654; Manning v. Kesner, 209 Ill. App. 475, 476; Jones v. Stevens, 112 Ohio St. 43, 146 N. E. 894, 896; Acme, Palmers & DeMooey Foundry Co. v. Weiss (D. C.) 21 F. (2d) 492, 498.

—Public good. Under a statute providing that the Public Service Commission shall make an order permitting a transfer of the property of a public utility, when it is for the public good, such transfer is for the public good whenever it is not contrary to law and is reasonable, since it is not for the public good that such utilities be unreasonably restrained of their liberties. Grafton County Electric Light & Power Co. v. State, 77 N. H. 339, 94 A. 188, 194.

GOODRIGHT, GOODTITLE. The fictitious plaintiff in the old action of ejectment, most frequently called "John Doe," was sometimes called "Goodright" or "Goodtitle."

BE. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)
GOODS.

In Contracts

The term "goods" is not so wide as "chattels," for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which "chattels" does include. Co. Litt. 118; St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Wilson, 133 Ind. 485, 33 N. E. 119; Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Iowa, 529; S. N. W. 334; Putnam v. Westcott, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 76.

Goods is a term of variable content. It may include every species of personal property or it may be given a very restricted meaning. Cate v. Merrill, 116 Me. 235, 102 A. 235, 233, 237; Canales v. Earl (Mun. Ct. N. Y.) 178 N. Y. S. 726, 727.

In Wills

In wills "goods" is nomen generaleissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 370; Chamberlain v. Western Transp. Co., 44 N. Y. 310, 4 Am. Rep. 681; Foxall v. McKenney, 9 Fed. Cas. 645; Bailey v. Duncan, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 22; Kcyser v. School Dist., 35 N. H. 483.

In General

Goods and chattels. This phrase is a general denomination of personal property, as distinguished from real property; the term "chattels" having the effect of extending its scope to any objects of that nature which would not properly be included in the term "goods" alone, e. g., living animals, emblements, and fruits, and terms under leases for years. Larson v. Judd, 200 Ill. App. 420. The general phrase also embraces choses in action, as well as personality in possession. In wills, the term "goods and chattels" will, unless restrained by the context, pass all the personal estate, including leases for years, cattle, corn, debts, and the like. Ward, Leg. 203, 211.

Goods sold and delivered. A phrase frequently used in the action of assumpsit, when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

GOOLE. In old English law. A breach in a bank or sea wall, or a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea. St. 16 & 17 Car. II. c. 11.

GOPHER HOLE. The "gopher hole" method of blasting consists in boring holes, horizontally into the bank of earth and inserting therein charges of powder, the explosion of which dislodges the bank. Bartnese v. Pittsburg Iron Ore Co., 123 Minn. 131, 143 N. W. 117.

GORCE, or GORS. A wear, pool, or pit of water. Terms de la Ley.

GORE. In old English law, a small, narrow slip of ground. Cowell. In modern land law, a small triangular piece of land, such as may be left between surveys which do not close. In some of the New England states (as Maine and Vermont) the term is applied to a subdivision of a county, having a scanty population and for that reason not organized as a town.

GORGE. A defile between hills or mountains, that is a narrow throat or outlet from a region of country. Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241.

GOSSIPRED. In canon law. Compaternity; spiritual affinity.

GOUT. In medical jurisprudence. An inflammation of the fibrous and ligamentous parts of the joints, characterized or caused by an excess of uric acid in the blood; usually, but not invariably, occurring in the joints of the feet, and then specifically called "podagra."

GOVERNMENT. The regulation, restraint, supervision, or control which is exercised upon the individual members of an organized juridical society by those invested with authority; or the act of exercising supreme political power or control. Chicago, R. & Q. R. Co. v. School Dist. No. 1 in Yuma County, 63 Colo. 159, 165 P. 269, 263.

The system of polity in a state; that form of fundamental rules and principles by which a nation or state is governed, or by which individual members of a body politic are to regulate their social actions; a constitution, either written or unwritten, by which the rights and duties of citizens and public officers are prescribed and defined, as a monarchical government, a republican government, etc. Webster.
An empire, kingdom, state or independent political community; as in the phrase, "Compacta between independent governments."

The sovereign or supreme power in a state or nation.

The machinery by which the sovereign power in a state expresses its will and exercises its functions; or the framework of political institutions, departments, and offices, by means of which the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state is carried on.

The whole class or body of office-holders or functionaries considered in the aggregate, upon whom devolves the executive, judicial, legislative, and administrative business of the state. Stokes v. United States (C. C. A.) 264 F. 18, 22.

In a colloquial sense, the United States or its representatives, considered as the prosecutor in a criminal action; as in the phrase, "the government objects to the witness."

---Federal government. The government of the United States of America, as distinguished from the governments of the several states.

Government annuities societies. These societies are formed in England under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 14, to enable the industrious classes to make provisions for themselves by purchasing, on advantageous terms, a government annuity for life or term of years. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, this act, as well as 7 & 8 Vict. c. 86, amending it, were repealed; and the whole law in relation to the purchase of government annuities, through the medium of savings banks, was consolidated. And by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 43, additional facilities were afforded for the purchase of such annuities, and for assuring payments of money on death. Whileann.

Government de facto. A government of fact. A government actually exercising power and control in the state, as opposed to the true and lawful government; a government not established according to the constitution of the state, or not lawfully entitled to recognition or supremacy, but which has nevertheless supplanted or displaced the government de jure. A government deemed unlawful; or deemed "wrongful or unjust," which, nevertheless, receives presently habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324. There are several degrees of what is called "de facto government." Such a government, in its highest degree, assumes a character very closely resembling that of a lawful government. This is when "the usurping government expels the regular authorities from their customary seats and functions, and establishes itself in their place, and so becomes the actual government of a country. The distinguishing characteristic of such a government is that adherent to it "in" war against the government de jure do not futile the penalties of treason; and, under certain limitations, obligations assumed by it in behalf of the country or otherwise will, in general, be respected by the government de jure when restored.

But there is another description of government, called also by publicists a "government de facto," but which might, perhaps, be more aptly denominated a "government of paramount force." Its distinguishing characteristics are (1) that its existence is maintained by active military power, within the territories, and against the rightful authority, of an established and lawful government; and (2) that, while it exists, it must necessarily be obeyed in civil matters by private citizens who, by acts of obedience, rendered in submission to such force, do not become responsible, as wrong-doers, for those acts, though not warranted by the laws of the rightful government. Actual governments of this sort are established over districts differing greatly in extent and conditions. They are usually administered directly by military authority, but they may be administered, also, by civil authority, supported more or less by military force. Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. & 9, 19 L. Ed. 361. The term "de facto," as descriptive of a government, has no well-defined and definite sense. It is perhaps, most correctly used as signifying a government completely, though only temporarily, established in the place of the lawful or regular government, occupying its capitol, and exercising its power, and which is ultimately overthrown, and the authority of the government de jure re-established. Thomas v. Taylor, 45 Miss. 551, 503, 3 Am. Rep. 655.

Government de jure. A government of right; the true and lawful government; a government established according to the constitution of the state, and lawfully entitled to recognition and supremacy and the administration of the state, but which is actually cut off from power or control. A government deemed lawful, or deemed rightful or just, which, nevertheless, has been supplanted or displaced; that is to say, which receives not presently (although it received formerly) habitual obedience from the bulk of the community. Aust. Jur. 324.

Local government. The government or administration of a particular locality; especially, the governmental authority of a municipal corporation, as a city or county, over its local and individual affairs, exercised in virtue of power delegated to it for that purpose by the general government of the state or nation.

Mixed government. A form of government combining some of the features of two or all of the three primary forms, viz., monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy.
Republican government. One in which the powers of sovereignty are vested in the people and are exercised by the people, either directly, or through representatives chosen by the people, to whom those powers are specially delegated. Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) 600; In re Duncan, 159 U. S. 448, 11 Sup. Ct. 373, 35 L. Ed. 219; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 175, 22 L. Ed. 627.

GOVERNOR. The title of the chief executive in each of the states and territories of the United States; and also of the chief magistrate of some colonies, provinces, and dependencies of other nations.

GRABBOTS. Oilmill motes, composed of small particles of refuse cotton, detached from, but left with, the seed in the first ginning process and generally separated and recovered by a process of reginning. Chicago, R. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Cleveland, 61 Okl. 64, 160 P. 328, 330.

GRACE. This word is commonly used in contradistinction to "right." Thus, in St. 22 Edw. III, the lord chancellor was instructed to take cognizance of matters of grace, being such subjects of equity jurisdiction as were exclusively matters of equity. Brown.

A faculty, license, or dispensation; also general and free pardon by act of parliament. See Act of Grace.

For Of Grace, see that title.

GRACE, DAYS OF. Time of indulgence granted to an acceptor or maker for the payment of his bill of exchange or note. It was originally a gratuitous favor, (hence the name,) but custom has rendered it a legal right.

GRADATIM. In old English law. By degrees or steps, step by step; from one degree to another. Bract. fol. 64.

GRADE, v. To establish a level by mathematical points and lines, and then to bring the surface of the street or highway to the level by the elevation or depression of the natural surface to the line fixed. Gas & Electric Securities Co. v. Manhattan & Queens Traction Corporation (C. C. A.) 266 F. 625, 629; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. State, 137 Tenn. 341, 193 S. W. 115; Washington Water Power Co. v. City of Spokane, 89 Wash. 149, 154 P. 329, 330; Giles v. City of Olympia, 115 Wash. 428, 197 P. 631, 633, 16 A. L. R. 498.

GRADE, n. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street's inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. Cent. Dict. That is, it sometimes signifies the line established to guide future construction, and at other times, the street wrought to the line; Little Rock v. Ry. Co., 56 Ark. 28, 19 S. W. 17; Austin v. Tillamook City, 121 Or. 385, 234 P. 819, 824.

Grades of crime, in legal parlance, are always spoken of and understood as higher or lower in grade, or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction, and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; People v. Rawson, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

GRADE CROSSING. A place where one highway crosses another: in particular, a place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad. The term is most frequently used with reference to the crossing of a public highway by a railroad. Armour & Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 41 R. I. 351, 105 A. 1031, 1038. By a railroad grade crossing is meant, not where a railroad crosses a highway at grade, but where two lines of railway cross at grade. Poole v. Boston & M. R. R., 216 Mass. 12, 102 N. E. 918, 919.

GRADUATE. One who has taken a degree in a college or university. It is said to be a word of elastic meaning, involving infinite variety in the methods and standards of graduation which may be adopted; State v. Ins. Co., 40 La. Ann. 483, 4 South. 504; Valentine v. Independent School District of Casey, 191 Iowa, 1160, 183 N. W. 494, 497.

GRADUS. In the civil and old English law. A measure of space. A degree of relationship.

A step or degree generally; e. g., gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vict. A pulpit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.

GRADUS PARENTALÆ. A pedigree; a table of relationship.

GRAFFARIUS. In old English law. A graffer, notary, or scriven. St. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.

GRAFFER. A notary or scriven. See St. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1. The word is a corruption of the French "greffier," (q. v.)

GRAFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. A fiscal judge. An advocate. Spelman; Cowell.

GRAFT. A term used in equity to denote the confirmation, by relation back, of the right of a mortgagee in premises to which, at the making of the mortgage, the mortgagor had only an imperfect title, but to which the latter has since acquired a good title.

Advantage or personal gain received because of peculiar position or superior influence of one holding position of trust and confidence without rendering compensatory services, or dishonest transaction in relation to public or official acts, and sometimes implies theft, corruption, dishonesty, fraud, or swindle, and always want of integrity. Mount v. Welsh, 118 Or. 568, 247 P. 815, 822; Cooper v. Romney, 49 Mont. 119, 141 P. 280, 291; GHI v. Ruggles, 95 S. C. 90, 78 S. E. 536, 540.

GRAIN. In Troy weight, the twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight. Any kind of corn sown in the ground.

GRAIN RENT. A payment for the use of land in grain or other crops; the return to the landlord paid by croppers or persons working the land on shares. Railroad Co. v. Bates, 40 Neb. 351, 58 N. W. 963.

GRAINAGE. An ancient duty in London under which the twentieth part of salt imported by aliens was taken.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL. In England, this term designates a school in which such instruction is given as will prepare the student to enter a college or university, and in this sense the phrase was used in the Massachusetts colonial act of 1647, requiring every town containing a hundred householders to set up a "grammar school." See Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 97. But in modern American usage the term denotes a school, intermediate between the primary school and the high school, in which English grammar and other studies of that grade are taught.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam. 9 Coke, 48. False grammar does not vitiate a deed.

GRAMMATOPHYLACIUM. (Græco-Lat.) In the civil law. A place for keeping writings or records. Dig. 48, 19, 9, 6.

GRAMMÉ. The unit of weight in the metric system. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimeter of distilled water at the temperature of 4°C. It is equal to 15.4341 grains troy, or 5.8451 drachms avoirdupois.

GRANATARIIUS. In old English law. An officer having charge of a granary. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 1; Id. c. 84.

GRAND. n. In cant of gangsters, thieves, and underworld, one thousand dollars.

GRAND COUTUMIER. A collection of customs, laws, and forms of procedure in use in early times in France. See Coutumier.

GRAND DAYS. In English practice. Certain days in the terms, which are solemnly kept in the Inns of court and chancery, viz., Candlemas day in Hilary term, Ascension day in Easter, St. John the Baptist day in Trinity, and All Saints in Michaelmas; which are dies non juridici. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Blount. They are days set apart for peculiar festivity; the members of the respective inns being on such occasions regaled at their dinner in the hall, with more than usual sumptuousness. Holthouse.

GRAND REMONSTRANCE. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Commons in November, 1641. It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 296 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Petition of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councillors. See Tassel-Langmead, Engl. Const. Hist. 464; Forster, Grand Remonstrance. The text will be found in History for Ready Reference, II, 853.

GRAND-STAND PLAY. In baseball, etc., a play made more showily than necessary in order to draw the applause of those in the grand stand; hence, figuratively, an act done to draw applause. Webster, Dict. A statement that a judge made a "grand-stand play" by his decision in a pending case constituted contempt, for the words convey the idea that the judge was playing to the multitude, and simply making such decision as would be pleasing to them, regardless of the law. People v. Gilbert, 251 Ill. 619, 118 N. E. 196, 209.

GRANDFATHER. The father of either of one's parents.

GRANDFATHER CLAUSE. A clause introduced into several of the constitutions of the southern states, limited the right to vote to those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States, and have worked or been regularly employed in some lawful employment for the greater part of the year next preceding the time they offer to register unless prevented from labor or ability to read or write by physical disability, or who own property assessed at three hundred dollars upon which the taxes have been paid; but those who have served in the army or navy of the United States or in the Confederate States in time of war, their lawful descendants in every degree, and persons of good character who understand the duties and obligations of citizenship under a republican form of government were relieved from the operation of this law. In 1902 nine tenths of the negroes of Alabama were thereby disqualified. In Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 S. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909, a negro filed a bill in equity praying that the defendant board of registry be required to enroll his name and those of other negroes on the voting list and that certain sections of the constitution of Alabama be declared void as contrary to the XIVth and XVth amendments to the federal constitution. The bill was dismissed on the ground that equity has no jurisdiction over political matters; Brewer, Brown, and Harlan, JJ., dissenting.

GRANDMOTHER. The mother of either of one's parents.

GRANGE. A farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry. Co. Litt. 54.

GRANGEmARUS. A keeper of a grange or farm.

GRANGER CASES. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Chicago, M. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; Peltz v. Ry. Co., 94 U. S. 165, 24 L. Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. S. 179, 24 L. Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U. S. 180, 24 L. Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the toils and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators. The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their constitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law. A text writer, who was at that time a member of the court, says of these cases: "But these decisions left undecided the question how far this legislative power of regulation belonged to the States, and how far it was in the congress of the United States"; Miller, Const. U. S. 397.

GRANGIA. A grange. Co. Litt. 54.

GRANT. A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 181, 533.

A transfer by deed of that which cannot be passed by livery. Williams, Real Prop. 147, 149; Jordan v. Indianapolis Water Co., 150 Ind. 337, 34 N. E. 690.

An act evidenced by letters patent under the great seal, granting something from the king to a subject. Cruise, Dig. tit. 33, 34; Downs v. United States, 113 Fed. 147, 51 C. C. A. 100.

A technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 378-380.

Though the word "grant" was originally made use of, in treating of conveyances of interests in lands, to denote a transfer by deed of that which could not be passed by livery, and, of course, was applied only to incorporeal hereditaments, it has now become a generic term, applicable to the transfer of all classes of real property. 3 Washb. Real Prop. 181.

As distinguished from a mere license, a grant passes some estate or interest, corporeal or incorporeal, in the lands which it embraces; can only be made by an instrument in writing, under seal; and is irrevocable, when made, unless an express power of revocation is reserved. A license is a mere authority; passes no estate or interest whatever; may be made by parol; is revocable at will; and, when revoked, the protection which it gave ceases to exist. Jamieson v. Milleman, 3 Deuer (N. Y.) 255, 258.

The term "grant," in Scotland, is used in reference (1) to original dispositions of land, as when a lord makes grants of land among tenants; (2) to gratuitous deeds. Paterson. In such case, the superior or donor is said to grant the deed; an expression totally unknown in English law. Mosley & Whitley.

By the word "grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 468, 9 L. Ed. 1137. And see Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 178, 5 S. Ct. 413, 28 L. Ed. 968; Hastings v. Turnpike Co., 9 Pick. (Mass.) 80; Dudley v. Summer, 5 Mass. 470.

For office grant, see Office.

-Grant and demise. In a lease for years these words create an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment; Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 23 L. Ed. 486.

-Grant and to freight let. Operative words in a charter party, implying the placing of the vessel at the disposition of the charterer for the purposes of the intended voyage, and generally, transferring the possession. See Christie v. Lewis, 2 Brod. & B. 441.

-Grant, bargain, and sell. Operative words in conveyances of real estate. See Muller v. Boggs, 25 Cal. 187; Hawk v. McCullough, 21
GRANT

—Grant of personal property. A method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift by being always founded on some consideration or equivalent. 2 Bl. Comm. 440, 441. Its proper legal designation is an "assignment," or "bargain and sale." 2 Steph. Comm. 102.

—Grant to uses. The common grant with uses superadded, which has become the favorite mode of transferring realty in England. Wharton.

GRAVEL PIT. An excavation from which gravel is removed. Walker v. Dwelle, 187 Iowa, 1384, 175 N. W. 957, 964.

GRAVEYARD. A cemetery; a place for the interment of dead bodies; sometimes defined in statutes as a place where a minimum number of persons (as "six or more") are buried. See Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 433, 33 P. 322; Peterson v. Stolz (Tex. Civ. App.) 209 S. W. 113, 117; Gray v. Craig, 103 Kan. 190, 172 P. 1064, 1065.

GRAVEYARD INSURANCE. A term applied to insurances fraudulently obtained (as, by false personation or other means) on the lives of infants, very aged persons, or those in the last stages of disease. Also occasionally applied to an insurance company which writes wager policies, takes extra-hazardous risks, or otherwise exceeds the limits of prudent and legitimate business. See McCarty's Appeal, 4 A. 925, 110 P. 379.

GRAVIS. Grievous; great. Ad grave damnun, to the grievous damage. 11 Coke, 40.
GRAVIS. A graf; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "grafo," and used in combination with various other words, as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Land-gravius, etc. Speelman.

Gravis est divinam quam temperalem iadere majestatem. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty. 11 Coke, 29.

GRAY'S INN. An Inn of Court. See Inns of Court.

GREAT. As used in various compound legal terms, this word generally means extraordinary, that is, exceeding the common or ordinary measure or standard, in respect to physical size, or importance, dignity, etc. See Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 57 Tex. 348, 28 S. W. 520; San Christina Inv. Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 141 P. 384, 386, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675; Williamson Inv. Co. v. Williamson, 96 Wash. 529, 185 P. 385, 389; American Express Co. v. Terry, 126 Md. 254, 94 A. 1028, 1030, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 650.

For presumption great, see Proof.

As to great "Care," "Ponds," "Seal," "Tithes," see those titles.

GREAT CATTLE. All manner of beasts except sheep and yearlings. 2 Rolle, 173.

GREAT CHARTER. Magna Charta (q. v.).

GREAT-GRANDCHILDREN. Children of one's grandchildren. Jenkins v. Harris, 135 Miss. 457, 100 So. 280.

GREAT LAW, THE, or "The Body of Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Territories thereunto belonging, Past at an Assembly held at Chester, alias Upland, the 7th day of the tenth month, called 'December,' 1652." This was the first code of laws established in Pennsylvania, and is justly celebrated for the provision in its first chapter for liberty of conscience.

GREAT SEAL. A seal by virtue of which a great part of the royal authority in England is exercised. The appointment of the lord high chancellor, or lord keeper, is made by the delivery of the great seal into his custody. There is one great seal for all public acts of state which concern the United Kingdom. The seal of the United States, or of a state, used in the execution of commissions and other public documents is usually termed the great seal of the United States, or of the state, as the case may be.

In Scotland

Grassum is a fine paid for the making or renewing of a lease. Paterson.

GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGE. A marriage celebrated at Gretna, in Dumfries, (bordering on the county of Cumberland,) in Scotland. By the law of Scotland a valid marriage may be contracted by consent alone, without any other formality. When the marriage act (26 Geo. II. c. 38) rendered the publication of banns, or a license, necessary in England, it became usual for persons who wished to marry clandestinely to go to Gretna Green, the nearest part of Scotland, and marry according to the Scotch law; so a sort of chapel was built at Gretna Green, in which the English marriage service was performed by the village blacksmith. Wharton.

GREVA. In old records. The sea shore, sand, or beach. 2 Mon. Angl. 625; Cowell.

GREVE. A word of power or authority. Cowell.

GRIEVED. Aggrieved. 3 East. 22.

GRITH. In Saxon law. Peace; protection.

GRITHSTOLE. A place of sanctuary. Cowell.

GROAT. An English silver coin (value four pence) issued from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century. See Reg. v. Connell, 1 Car. & K. 191.

GROCER. In old English law. A merchant or trader who engrossed all vendible merchandise; an engrosser. St. 37 Edw. III. c. 5. See Engroser.

GROG-SHOP. A liquor saloon, barroom, or dram-shop; a place where intoxicating liquor is sold to be drunk on the premises. See Leesburg v. Putnam, 103 Ga. 110, 29 S. E. 602.

GRONNA. In old records. A deep hollow or pit; a bog or miry place. Cowell.

GROOM OF THE STOLE. In England. An officer of the royal household, who has charge of the king's wardrobe.

GROOM PORTER. Formerly an officer belonging to the royal household. Jacob.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSE BOIS. Timber. Cowell.

GROSSEMENT. L. Fr. Largely, greatly. Grossement ensemé, big with child. Plowd. 76.

GROSSOME. In old English law. A fine, or sum of money paid for a lease. Plowd. 270, 271. Supposed to be a corruption of gersuma, (q. v.). See Gressum.

GROUND. Soil; earth; the earth's surface appropriated to private use and under cultivation or susceptible of cultivation.

Though this term is sometimes used in conveyances and in statutes as equivalent to "land," it is properly of a more limited signification, because it applies strictly only to the surface, while "land" includes everything beneath the surface, and because "ground" always means dry land, whereas "land" may and often does include the beds of lakes and streams and other surfaces under water; See Wood v. Carter, 79 Ill. App. 218; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. Law, 629; Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray (Mass.) 491.

Ground annual. In Scotch law. An annual rent of two kinds: First, the feu duties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell; Ersk. Inst. 11, 3, 52.

Ground landlord. The grantor of an estate on which a ground-rent is reserved.
GARANTY

Ground of action. The basis of a suit; the foundation or fundamental state of facts on which an action rests; the real object of the plaintiff in bringing his suit. See Nash v. Adams, 24 Conn. 39; Appeal of Huntington, 73 Conn. 582, 48 A. 766.

Ground-rent. A perpetual rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. It is in the nature of an emphyteutic rent. Also, in English law, rent paid on a building lease. See Harj v. Anderson, 48 A. 696, 198 Pa. 558; Sturgeon v. Ely, 6 Pa. 408; Franciscus v. Reigart, 4 Watts. (Pa.) 116.

Ground writ. By the English common-law procedure act, 1852, c. 121, "it shall not be necessary to issue any writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, but writs of execution may issue at once into any county, and be directed to and executed by the sheriff of any county, whether a county palatinate or not, without reference to the county in which the venue is laid, and without any suggestion of the issuing of a prior writ into such county." Before this enactment, a ca. sa. or fl. fa. could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ, called a "ground writ," into the latter county, and then another writ, which was called a "testatum writ," into the former. The above enactment abolished this useless process. Wharton.

GROUNDAGE. A custom or tribute paid for the standing of shipping in port. Jacob.

GROWING CROP. A crop must be considered and treated as a growing crop from the time the seed is deposited in the ground, as at that time the seed loses the qualities of a chattel, and becomes a part of the freehold, and passes with a sale of it. Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 455. Things commonly planted, cultivated, and harvested for use or profit of husbandman. Pelham v. State, 29 Ala. App. 359, 102 So. 462, 463.

Growing crops of grain, and other annual productions raised by cultivation of the earth and industry of man, are personal chattels. Growing trees, fruit, or grass, and other natural products of the earth, are parcel of the land. Green v. Armstrong, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 550.

GROWTH HALF-PENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayt. 82.

GRUARI. The principal officers of a forest.

GRUB STAKE. In mining law. A contract between two parties by which one undertakes to furnish the necessary provisions, tools, and other supplies, and the other to prospect for and locate mineral lands and stake out mining claims thereon, the interest in the property thus acquired inuring to the benefit of both parties, either equally or in such proportion as their agreement may fix. Such contracts create a qualified or special partnership. See Berry v. Woodburn, 107 Cal. 512, 40 P. 804; Hartney v. Gosling, 10 Wyo. 346, 68 P. 1118, 98 Am. St. Rep. 1005; Meyletle v. Brennan, 20 Colo. 242, 38 P. 75; Gillespie v. Shufflin, 91 Okl. 72, 216 P. 132, 134; Mattocks v. Gibbons, 94 Wash. 44, 162 P. 19, 22.

GUADALUPE HIDALGO, TREATY OF. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. It was communicated by the president to the senate on February 23, 1848, and having been amended by the senate and ratified, it was afterwards ratified by the Mexican congress, both houses of which were required to concur. It was somewhat modified by the treaty with Mexico of 1853, by which a large territory was acquired from Mexico. See Gadsden Purchase.

GUADIA. In old European law. A pledge. Spelman; Calvin. A custom. Spelman. Spelled also "wadla."

GUARANTEE. He to whom a guaranty is made. This word is also used, as a noun, to denote the contract of guaranty or the obligation of a guarantor, and, as a verb, to denote the action of assuming the responsibilities of a guarantor. But on the general principle of legal orthography—that the title of the person to whom the action passes over should end in "ee," as "donce," "grantee," "payee," "bailee," "drawee," etc.—it seems better to use this word only as the correlative of "guarantor," and to spell the verb, and also the name of the contract, "guaranty."

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty. In re Ford (D. C.) 14 F.2d 848, 849.

GUARANTY, n. To undertake collaterally to answer for the payment of another's debt or the performance of another's duty, liability, or obligation; to assume the responsibility of a guarantor; to warrant. See Guaranty, n.

A guaranty is an undertaking by one person to be answerable for the payment of some debt, or the due performance of some contract or duty, by another person, who himself remains liable to pay or perform the same. Story, Prom. Notes, § 457.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person. Civil Code Cal. § 2737.

A guaranty is a contract that some particular thing shall be done, exactly as it is agreed to be done, whether it is to be done by one person or another, and whether there be a prior or principal contractor or not. Redfield v. Haight, 27 Conn. 31.

The definition of a "guaranty," by text-writers, is an undertaking by one person that another shall perform his contract or fulfill his obligation, or that, if he does not, the guarantor will do it for him. A guarantor of a bill or note is said to be one who engages that the note shall be paid, but is not an indorser or surety. Gridley v. Capen, 3 Ill. 11.

Synonyms

The terms guaranty and suretyship are sometimes used interchangeably; but they should not be confounded. The contract of a surety corresponds with that of a guarantor in many respects; yet important differences exist. The surety is bound with his principal as an original promisor. He is a debtor from the beginning, and must see that the debt is paid, and is held ordinarily to know every default of his principal, and cannot protect himself by the mere indulgence of the creditor, nor by want of notice of the default of the principal, however such notice may have been given to him. On the other hand, the contract of a guarantor is in his own separate name. It is in the nature of a warranty by him that the thing guaranteed to be done by the principal shall be done, not merely an engagement jointly with the principal to do the thing. The original contract of the principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. Therefore the creditor should give him notice; and it is universally held that, if the guarantor can prove that he has suffered damage by the failure to give such notice, he will be discharged to the extent of the damage thus sustained. It is not with a surety. Durham v. Manlove, 2 Cal. 148; Trafton v. Womack, 81 Cal. 405, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 186; Georgia Casualty Co. v. Dixie Trust & Security Co., 23 Ga. App. 447, 98 S. E. 414, 418; Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank of Comanche v. Lillard Milling Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 210 S. W. 466, 468; Shore’s-Mueller Co. v. Palmer, 141 Ark. 54, 218 S. W. 256, 257; Hoister-Brick Co. v. Floyd County Bank, 26 Ind. App. 445, 116 N. E. 37, 40; W. T. Rawleigh Co. v. Sailer, 31 Ga. App. 339, 120 S. E. 679, 681.

Guaranty and warranty are derived from the same root, and are in fact etymologically the same word, the "g" of the Norman French being interchangeably used. Colloquially, and in commercial transactions, having the same significance, as where a piece of merchandise or the produce of an estate is "guaranteed" for a term of years, "warranted" being the more appropriate term in such a case. See Accumulator Co. v. Dubuque & W. R. Co., 64 Iowa 524, 22 N. W. 37; Martin v. Earnshaw, 20 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 602. A distinction is also sometimes made in commercial usage, by which the term "guaranty" is understood as a collateral warranty (often a condition:al: one) against some default or event in the future, while the term "warranty" is taken as meaning an absolute undertaking in guarantee, against the defect, or for the quantity or quality contemplated by the parties in the subject-matter of the contract. Sturgis v. Bank of Circleville, 11 Ohio St. 169, 78 Am. Dec. 285. But in strict legal usage the two terms are widely distinguished in this, that a warranty is an absolute undertaking or liability on the part of the warrantor, and the contract is void unless it is strictly and literally performed, while a guaranty is a promise, entirely collateral to the original contract, and not imposing any primary liability on the guarantor, but binding him to be answerable in case of failure or default of another. Masons’ Union L. Ins. Ass’n v. Brockman, 29 Ind. App. 306, 50 N. E. 463.

—Collateral guaranty. A contract by which the guarantor undertakes, in case the principal fails to do what he has promised or undertaken to do, to pay damages for such failure; distinguished from an engagement of suretyship in this respect, that a surety undertakes to do the very thing which the principal has promised to do, in case the latter defaults. Woody v. Haworth, 24 Ind. App. 634, 57 N. E. 272; Nading v. McGregor, 121 Ind. 470, 23 N. E. 283, 6 L. R. A. 656.

—Conditional guaranty. One which depends upon some extraneous event, beyond the mere default of the principal, and generally upon notice of the guaranty, notice of the principal’s default, and reasonable diligence in exhausting proper remedies against the principal. Yager v. Title Co., 112 Ky. 923, 66 S. W. 1097; Tobacco Co. v. Heid (D. C.) 62 F. 902; Beardsley v. Hawes, 71 Conn. 29, 40 A. 1043; Galbraith v. Shores-Mueller Co., 178 —Guaranteed stock. See Stock.

—Guaranty company. A corporation authorized to transact the business of entering into contracts of guaranty and suretyship; as, one which, for fixed premiums, becomes surety on judicial bonds, fidelity bonds, and the like. See Stina L Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 193, 74 S. W. 1050.

—Guaranty insurance. See Insurance.

—Special guaranty. A guaranty which is available only to the particular person to whom it is offered or addressed; as distinguished from a general guaranty, which will operate in favor of any person who may accept it. Everson v. Gere, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 250; Tildioute Sav. Bank v. Libbey, 101 Wis. 128, 77 N. W. 122, 70 Am. St. Rep. 907; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 273, 45 Am. Rep. 204; Joes v. Miller, 201 Mo. App. 45, 209 S. W. 549, 550.

GUARDIAN. A state of wardship.

GUARDIAN. A guardian is a person lawfully invested with the power, and charged with the duty, of taking care of the person and managing the property and rights of another person, who, for some peculiarity of status, or defect of age, understanding, or self-control, is considered incapable of administering his own affairs. Bass v. Cook, 4 Port. (Ala.) 392; Sparhawk v. Allen, 21 N. H. 27; Burger v. Frakes, 67 Iowa, 490, 23 N. W. 746; Fleming v. Leibe, 95 N. J. Eq. 129, 122 A. 616.

One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

This term might be appropriately used to designate the person charged with the care and control of idiots, lunatics, habitual drunkards, spendthrifts, and the like; but such person is, under many of the statutory systems authorizing the appointment, styled "committee," and in common usage the name "guardian" is applied only to one having the care and management of a minor.

The name "curator" is given in some of the states to a person having the control of a minor's estate, without that of his person; and this is also the usage of the civil law.

Classification

A testamentary guardian is one appointed by the deed or last will of the child's father, while a guardian by election is one chosen by the infant himself in a case where he would otherwise be without one. A general guardian is one who has the general care and control of the person and estate of his ward: while a special guardian is one who has special or limited powers and duties with respect to his ward, s. g., a guardian who has the custody of the estate but not of the person, or vice versa, or a guardian ad litem. A domestic guardian is one appointed at the place where the ward is legally domiciled; while a foreign guardian derives his authority from appointment by the courts of another state, and generally has charge only of such property as may be located within the jurisdiction of the power appointing him. A guardian ad litem is a guardian appointed by a court of justice to prosecute or defend for an infant in any suit to which he may be a party. 2 Steph. Comm. 342. Most commonly appointed for infant defendents; infant plaintiffs generally suing by next friend. This kind of guardian has no right to interfere with the infant's person or property. 2 Steph. Comm. 343; Richter v. Leiby, 197 Wis. 404, 83 N. W. 694; Watts v. Hicks, 119 Ark. 621, 97 S. W. 924, 925; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 122 Cal. 343, 219 P. 998, 1900, 32 A. L. R. 1103. A guardian by appointment of court is the most important species of guardian in modern law, having custody of the infant until the attainment of full age. It has in England in a manner superseded the guardian in seignage, and in the United States the guardian by nature also. The appointment is made by a court of chancery, or by probate or orphans' court. 2 Steph. Comm. 341; 2 Kent, Comm. 226. A guardian by nature is the father, and, on his death, the mother, of a child. 1 Bl. Comm. 461; 2 Kent, Comm. 219. This guardianship extends only to the custody of the person of the child to the age of twenty-one years. Sometimes called "natural guardian," but this is rather a popular than a technical mode of expression. 2 Steph. Comm. 337; Klime v. Beebe, 6 Conn. 500;
GUARDIAN. A guardian, warden, or keeper. Spelman.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish law. A written authorization to a court to enforce the performance of an agreement in the same manner as if it had been decreed upon regular legal proceedings.

GUARNIMENTUM. In old European law. A provision of necessary things. Spelman. A furnishing or garnishment.

GUASTALD. One who had the custody of the royal mansions.

GUBERNATOR. Lat. In Roman law. The pilot or steersman of a ship.

GUERRILLA PARTY. In military law. An independent body of marauders or armed men, not regularly or organically connected with the armies of either belligerent, who carry on a species of irregular war, chiefly by depredation and massacre.

GUERRA, GUERRE. War. Spelman.

A guest, as distinguished from a boarder, is bound for no stipulated time. He stops at the inn for as short or as long time as he pleases, paying, while he remains, the customary charge. Stewart v. McCreary, 24 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 62; Hackett v. Bell Operating Co., 181 App. Div. 333, 160 N. Y. S. 114, 115; McIntosh v. Schops, 92 Or. 397, 180 P. 593, 595; Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Altamont Springs Hotel Co., 206 Ky. 494, 287 S. W. 555, 557.

GUEST-TAKER. An agister; one who took feed in to feed in the royal forests. Cowell.

GUIA. In Spanish law. A right of way for narrow carts. White, New Recoup. L. 2, c. 6, § 1.
GUIDAGE. In old English law. That which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another’s territory. Cowell.

The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDE-PLATE. An iron or steel plate to be attached to a ravel for the purpose of guiding to their place on the rail wheels thrown off the track. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 1291.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, by an unknown author, supposed to have been written about 1671 at Rouen, and considered, in continental Europe, as a work of high authority.

GUILD. A voluntary association of persons pursuing the same trade, art, profession, or business, such as printers, goldsmiths, wool merchants, etc., united under a distinct organization of their own, analogous to that of a corporation, regulating the affairs of their trade or business by their own laws and rules, and aiming, by co-operation and organization, to protect and promote the interests of their common vocation. In medieval history these fraternities or guilds played an important part in the government of some states; as at Florence, in the thirteenth and following centuries, where they chose the council of government of the city. But with the growth of cities and the advance in the organization of municipal government, their importance and prestige has declined. The place of meeting of a guild, or association of guilds, was called the “Guildhall.” The word is said to be derived from the Anglo-Saxon “gild” or “geld,” a tax or tribute, because each member of the society was required to pay a tax towards its support.

GUILD RENTS. Rents payable to the crown by any guild, or such as formerly belonged to religious guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of the monasteries. Tomlins.

GUILDHALL. The hall or place of meeting of a guild, or gild.

The place of meeting of a municipal corporation. 3 Steph. Comm. 176, note. The mercantile or commercial guilds of the Saxons are supposed to have given rise to the present municipal corporations of England, whose place of meeting is still called the “Guildhall.”

GUILDHALL SITTINGS. The sittings held in the Guildhall of the city of London for city of London causes.

GUILLOTINE. An instrument for decapitation, used in France for the infliction of the death penalty on convicted criminals, consisting, essentially, of a heavy and weighted knife-blade moving perpendicularly between grooved posts, which is made to fall from a considerable height upon the neck of the sufferer, immovably fixed in position to receive the impact.

GUILT. In criminal law. That quality which imputes criminality to a motive or act, and renders the person amenable to punishment by the law.

That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Ruth. Inst. b. 1, c. 18, § 10.

GUILTY. Having committed a crime or tort; the word used by a prisoner in pleading to an indictment when he confesses the crime of which he is charged, and by the jury in convicting. Com. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 108, 24 Am. Rep. 154; Jessie v. State, 23 Miss. 103; State v. White, 25 Wis. 399.

GUINEA. A coin formerly issued by the English mint, but all these coins were called in in the time of Wm. IV. The word now means only the sum of £1 1s., in which denomination the fees of counsel are always given.

GULA-THING. A collection of Scandinavian customs in force in the southern part of Norway. The Fresta-thing was in force in the more northerly division of Dronheim. They are said to help to an understanding of the law prevailing in the northern part of England, where the Danish influence was strongest. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 23.

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, being the day of St. Peter ad Vincula.

GULES. The heraldic name of the color usually called “red.” The word is derived from the Arabic word “gule,” a rose, and was probably introduced by the Crusaders. Gules is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines. heralds who blazoned by planets and jewels called it “Mars,” and “ruby.” Wharton.

GUN. Any portable firearm, except a pistol or revolver, such as a rifle, shotgun, carbine, etc. Henderson v. State, 75 Fla. 464, 78 So. 427, 428. A pistol or revolver; a pistol or revolver being quite commonly called a “gun.” State v. Christ, 159 Iowa, 474, 177 N. W. 54, 57.

GURGES. Lat. Properly a whirlpool, but in old English law and conveyancing, a deep pit filled with water, distinguished from “stagnum,” which was a shallow pool or pond. Co. Litt. 5; Johnson v. Rayner, 6 Gray (Mass.) 107.

GURGITES. Wears. Jacob.

GUTI. Jutes; one of the three nations who migrated from Germany to Britain at an early period. According to Spelman, they established themselves chiefly in Kent and the Isle of Wight.
GUTTER. The diminutive of a sewer. Callis, Sew. (80) 100. In modern law, an open ditch or conduit designed to allow the passage of water from one point to another in a certain direction, whether for purposes of drainage, irrigation, or otherwise. Warren v. Henly, 31 Iowa, 31; Willis v. State, 27 Neb. 98, 42 N. W. 920.

GWABB MERCHED. Maid's fee. A British word signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of the tenant's daughters, or otherwise on their committing incontinence. Cowell.

GWALSTOW. A place of execution. Jacob.

GWAYF. Wail, or waived; that which has been stolen and afterwards dropped in the highway for fear of a discovery. Cowell.

GYLEBU. The name of a court which was held every three weeks in the liberty or hundred of Ethew in Warwick. Jacob.

GYLTWITE, or GUILT WIT. Sax. Cesspits for fraud or trespass. Cowell.

GYNARCHY, or GYN/ECDOCRACY. Government by a woman; a state in which women are legally capable of the supreme command; e.g., in Great Britain.

GYRATORY STONE-CRUSHER. A machine with a shaft or crushing means which, instead of rotating, gyrates or moves in a circular course under the control of an eccentric. Traylor Engineering & Mfg. Co. v. Worthington Pump & Machinery Co. (C. C. A.) 1 F. (2d) 833.

GYROVAGI. Wandering monks.

GYVES. Fetters or shackles for the legs.
H. This letter, as an abbreviation, stands for Henry (a king of that name) in the citation of English statutes. In the Year Books, it is used as an abbreviation for Hilary term. In tax assessments and other such official records, "H" may be used as an abbreviation for "house," and the courts will so understand it. Alden v. Newark, 36 N. J. Law, 288; Parker v. Elizabeth, 39 N. J. Law, 693.

H. A. An abbreviation for hoc anno, this year, in this year.

H. B. An abbreviation for house bill, i.e., a bill in the house of representatives, as distinguished from a senate bill.

H. C. An abbreviation for house of commons, or for habeas corpus.

H. L. An abbreviation for house of lords.

H. R. An abbreviation for house of representatives.

H. T. An abbreviation for hoc titulo, this title, under this title; used in references to books.

H. V. An abbreviation for hoc verbo or hoc vobis, this word, under this word; used in references to dictionaries and other works alphabetically arranged.

HABE. or HAVE. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression "Are" (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. Calvin; Spielman.

HABEAS CORPORA JURATORUM. A writ commanding the sheriff to bring up the persons of jurors, and, if need were, to restrain them of their lands and goods, in order to insure or compel their attendance in court on the day of trial of a cause. It issued from the Common Pleas, and served the same purpose as a distinguas juratores in the King's Bench. It was abolished by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, § 104. Brown.

HABEAS CORPUS. Lat. (You have the body.) The name given to a variety of writs, (of which these were anciently the emphatic words,) having for their object to bring a party before a court or judge. In common usage, and whenever these words are used alone, they are understood to mean the habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, (see infra.) Dancy v. Owens, 126 Okl. 37, 258 P. 879, 884; In re McDevitt, 168 N. Y. S. 443, 101 Misc. 588; State v. Jameson, 51 S. D. 540, 215 N. W. 697, 699; Click v. Click, 98 W. Va. 419, 127 S. E. 194, 195; In re Stuart, 138 Wash, 59, 244 P. 116; Moody v. State, 87 Fla. 175, 99 So. 665; U. S. v. Tod, 263 U. S. 149, 44 S. Ct. 54, 57, 68 L. Ed. 221; People v. Windes, 283 Ill. 251, 119 N. E. 297, 298; State v. Konshak, 136 Minn. 331, 162 N. W. 323; Payne v. Graham, 20 Ala. App. 439, 102 So. 729, 731.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT. The English statute of 31 Car. II. c. 2, is the original and prominent habeas corpus act. It was amended and supplemented by St. 56 Geo. III. c. 100. And similar statutes have been enacted in all the United States. This act is justly regarded as the great constitutional guaranty of personal liberty.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM ET RECEPIENDUM. A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus," A; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 152. Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 97, 2 L. Ed. 554. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county. 1 Tyrw. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET RECEPIENDUM. A writ issuing in civil cases to remove the cause, as also the body of the defendant, from an inferior court to a superior court having jurisdiction, there to be disposed of. It is also called "habeas corpus cum cause." Ex parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 97, 2 L. Ed. 554.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM. A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 130.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM. A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Selw. Pr. 259; 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bl. Comm. 129; 1 Tidd Pr. 300.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENDUM. In English practice. A writ which issues when a prisoner has had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court, to charge him with process of execution. 3 Bl. Comm. 129, 130; 3 Steph. Comm. 693; 1 Tidd Pr. 350.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM. A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, (or person detained,) with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum et recipiendum, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the judge or court awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf. 3 Bl. Comm. 131; 3
Steph. Comm. 655. This is the well-known remedy for deliverance from illegal confinement, called by Sir William Blackstone the most celebrated writ in the English law, and the great and efficacious writ in all manner of illegal confinement. 3 Bl. Comm. 129.

HAEBAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM. A writ to bring a witness into court, when he is in custody at the time of a trial, commanding the sheriff to have his body before the court, to testify in the cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 130; 2 Tid. Pr. 809. Ex parte Marmaduke, 91 Mo. 250; 4 S. W. 91, 60 Am. Rep. 250.

HAEBAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. (You have the body, with the cause.) Another name for the writ of haebas corpus ad faciendum et recipiendum, (q. v.) 1 Tidl, Pr. 348, 349.

Habemus optimum testem, confitentem reum. 1 Phil. Ev. 397. We have the best witness,—a confessing defendant. "What is taken pro confessio is taken as indubitable truth. The plea of guilty by the party accused shuts out all further inquiry. Habemus confitentem reum is demonstration, unless indirect motives can be assigned to it." 2 Hagg. Eccl. 315.

HABENDUM ET TENENDUM. In old conveyancing. To have and to hold. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period. Bract. fol. 176.

HABENTES HOMINES. In old English law. Rich men; literally, having men. The same with festing-men, (q. v.) Cowell.

HABERE. Lat. In the civil law. To have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere, (to hold.) and possidere, (to possess;) habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both. Calvin.

HABERE FACIAS POSSIPTIONEM. Lat. That you cause to have possession. The name of the process commonly resorted to by the successful party in an action of ejectment, for the purpose of being placed by the sheriff in the actual possession of the land recovered. It is commonly termed simply "habere facias," or "*hab. fa."

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. L. Lat. That you cause to have seisin. The writ of execution in real actions, directing the sheriff to cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands recovered. It was the proper process for giving seisin of a freehold, as distinguished from a chattel interest in lands.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM. Lat. That you cause to have a view. A writ to cause the sheriff to take a view of lands or tenements.

HABERE LICERE. Lat. In Roman law. To allow [one] to have [possession.] This phrase denoted the duty of the seller of property to allow the purchaser to have the possession and enjoyment. For a breach of this duty, an actio ex empto might be maintained.

HABERJECTS. A cloth of a mixed color. Magna Charta, c. 26.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. Lat. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife. Calvin.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a usual repetition of the same act or function. Conner v. Citizens’ St. R. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N. E. 662; State v. Skillilcorn, 104 Iowa, 97, 73 N. W. 503; State v. Robinson, 111 Ala. 482, 20 So. 30; Sikes v. Allen, 2 Mart. N. S. (Lat.) 622; Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 172; Com. v. Whitney, 5 Gray (Mass.) 85. The customary conduct, to pursue which one has acquired a tendency, from frequent repetition of the same acts. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 350, 26 L. Ed. 1055; National Councl of Knights and Ladies of Security v. Fowler, 66 Okl. 294, 168 P. 914, 915, 6 A. L. R. 591.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something’s having happened: thus, by the law of Scotland, marriage may be established by “habit and repute” where the parties cohabit and are at the same time held and reputed as man and wife. See Bell. The same rule obtains in some of the United States.

HABITABLE REPAIR. A covenant by a lessee to “put the premises into habitable repair” binds him to put them into such a state that

Bl. Law Dict. (3d Ed.)
HABITUAL. Ordinarily applied to things done customarily or from force of habit. Moerling v. Falk Co., 155 Wis. 192, 144 N. W. 207, 208. Formed or acquired by or resulting from habit; frequent use or custom. Meggs v. State, 101 Tex. Cr. R. 415, 276 S. W. 262, 263. The "habitual" indulgence in violent and ungovernable temper as a ground for divorce is not synonymous with "frequent." Kellogg v. Kellogg, 93 Fla. 261, 111 So. 637, 638.

HABITUAL CRIMINAL. By statute in several states, one who is convicted of a felony, having been previously convicted of any crime (or twice so convicted), or who is convicted of a misdemeanor and has previously (in New York) been five times convicted of a misdemeanor. Crim. Code N. Y. § 510; Rev. St. Utah, 1898, § 4067 (Comp. Laws 1917, § 7607). In a more general sense, one made subject to police surveillance and arrest on suspicion, on account of his previous criminal record and absence of honest employment.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT. The statute 32 & 33 Vict. c. 90. By this act power was given to apprehend on suspicion convicted persons holding license under the penal servitude acts, 1853, 1857, and 1864. The act was repealed and replaced by the prevention of crimes act, 1871, (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.)

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to inebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. Ludwick v. Com., 18 Pa. 174; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R. I. 705, 19 A. 142: Miskey's Appeal, 107 Pa. 626; Richards v. Richards, 19 Ill. App. 467; McBee v. McBee, 22 Or. 329, 29 P. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613.

Within the meaning of the divorce laws, one who has the habit of indulging in intoxicating drinks so firmly fixed that he becomes drunk whenever the temptation is presented by his being near where liquor is sold. Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210. One who has a fixed habit of frequently getting drunk. Page v. Page, 43 Wash. 293, 86 P. 582, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1654; Bill v. Bill, 178 Iowa, 1025, 157 N. W. 158, 159.

One who customarily becomes intoxicated; it is not necessary that such person be intoxicated most of his time or that he shall have lost his will power so that he cannot resist stimulants. Lester v. Sampson (Mo. App.) 190 S. W. 419, 421.

A person who has acquired the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors or taking narcotic drugs to such an extent as to deprive him of reasonable self-control. Interdiction of Gasquet, 138 La. 557, 68 So. 39, 92.

One addicted to the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, who is commonly or frequently intoxicated and becomes so often as opportunity permits, it being unnecessary that he be intoxicated so often as to incapacitate him from attending to his business for a considerable portion of time. Runke v. Southern Pac. Milling Co., 184 Cal. 714, 155 P. 388, 400, 16 A. L. R. 575.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD.
HABITUAL DRUNKARD

In England, defined by the habitual drunkards' act, 1879, (45 & 46 Vict. c. 19,) which authorizes confinement in a retreat, upon the party's own application, as "a person who, not being amenable to any jurisdiction in lunacy, is, notwithstanding, by reason of habitual intemperate drinking of intoxicating liquor, at times dangerous to himself, or herself, or others, or incapable of managing himself or herself, or his or her affairs."

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS, INTOXICATION, or INTEMPERANCE. The custom or habit of getting drunk; the constant indulgence in such stimulants as wine, brandy, and whisky, whereby intoxication is produced; not the ordinary use, but the habitual use of them; the habit should be actual and confirmed, but need not be continuous, or even of daily occurrence. Williams v. Goss, 43 La. Ann. 868, 9 So. 750; Short v. Morrison, 159 La. 193, 105 So. 256, 288. As a cause for divorce, the fixed habit of frequently getting drunk; it does not necessarily imply continual drunkenness. Moor v. Moor, 211 Ala. 50, 99 So. 316, 318; Holm v. Holm, 44 Utah, 242, 139 P. 937, 938. That degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party. Rev. Codes Idaho, § 2632 (Code 1932, § 31-608). It has no reference to the excessive or habitual use of drugs. Hayes v. Hayes, 86 Fla. 539, 98 So. 60, 67; Smith v. Smith, 7 Boyce (Del.) 253, 105 A. 823.

HÆREDE DELIBERANDO ALTERI QUI HABET CUSTODIUM TERRÆ. An ancient writ, directed to the sheriff, to require one that had the body of an heir, being in ward, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

HÆREDE RAPTO. An ancient writ that lay for the ravishment of the lord's ward. Reg. Orig. 163.

Hæredem Deus facit, non hom. God makes the heir, not man. Co. Litt. 7b; Bract. 62b.

HÆREDES. Lat. In the civil law. Heirs. The plural of hæres (q. v.).

HÆREDIPETA. Lat. In old English law. A seeker of an inheritance; hence, the next heir to lands. Du Cange.

Hæredipeta suo propinquo vel extranea pericu- loso sese custodi nullus committitur. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger, certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed. Co. Litt. 88b.
HÆREDITAS.

In Roman Law

The hæreditas was a universal succession by law to any deceased person, whether such person had died testate or intestate, and whether in trust (ex fideicommissis) for another or not. The like succession according to the Praetorian law was bonorum possessio. The hæreditas was called "jacens," until the hæres took it up, i.e., made his aditio hæreditatis; and such hæres, if a suus hæres, had the right to abstain, potestas abstinenti, and, if an extraneus hæres, had the right to consider whether he would accept or decline, potestas deliberandi, the reason for this precaution being that (prior to Justinian's enactment to the contrary) a hæres after his aditio was liable to the full extent of the debts of the deceased person, and could have no relief therefrom, except in the case of a damnnum emergens or damnosa hæreditas, i.e., an hæreditas which disclosed (after the aditio) some enormous unsuspected liability. Brown. The theory was that, though the physical person of the deceased had perished, his legal personality survived and descended unimpaired on his heirs in whom his legal identity was continued.

In Old English Law

An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Co. Litt. 9.

In General

—Hæreditas damnosa. A burdensome inheritance; one which would be a burden instead of a benefit, that is, the debts to be paid by the heir would exceed the assets.

—Hæreditas jacens. In civil law. A prostrate or vacant inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called as long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance. So long as no one had acquired the inheritance, it was termed "hæreditas jacens;" and this, by a legal fiction, represented the person of the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 737. The estate of a person deceased, where the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it, called also "caducus"; an escheated estate. Cod. 10, 10, 1; 4 Kent, Comm. 425. The term has also been used in English law to signify an estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. Co. Litt. 342b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Bl. Comm. 239.

—Hæreditas logitima. A succession or inheritance devolving by operation of law (intestate succession) rather than by the will of the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 654.

—Hæreditas luctuosa. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis). Cod. 6, 25, 9; 4 Kent, Comm. 397. It was sometimes termed tristis successio.

—Hæreditas testamentaria. Testamentary inheritance, that is, succession to an estate under and according to the last will and testament of the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 654.

—Hæreditas, alia corporalis, alia incorporealis; corporalis est, qua tanti potest et videri; incorporealis qua tanti non potest nec videri. Co. Litt. 9. An inheritance is either corporeal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen.

—Hæreditas est successio in universum jus quod dicitur fundus habuerit. Co. Litt. 237. Inheritance is the succession to every right which the deceased had.

—Hæreditas nihil aliud est quam successio in universum jus, quod dicitur fundus habuerit. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased. Dig. 30, 17, 62.

—Hæreditas nunquam ascendit. An inheritance never ascends. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; 2 Bl. Comm. 211. A maxim of feudal origin, and which invariably prevailed in the law of England down to the passage of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 6, by which it was abrogated. 1 Steph. Comm. 378. See Broom, Max. 527, 528.

—Hæredum appellatione veniant hæreses hære- dum in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity. Co. Litt. 9.

HÆRES.

In Roman Law

The heir, or universal successor in the event of death. The heir is he who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property of the estate-leaver. He is not only the successor to the rights and claims, but also to the estate-leaver's debts, and in relation to his estate is to be regarded as the identical person of the estate-leaver, inasmuch as he represents him in all his active and passive relations to his estate. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 651.

The institution of the hæres was the essential characteristic of a testament: if this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mack. C. L. §§ 632, 650.

It should be remarked that the office, powers, and duties of the hæres, in Roman law, were much more closely assimilated to those of a modern executor than to those of an heir at law. Hence "heir" is not at all an accurate translation of "hæres," unless it be understood in a special, technical sense.

In Common Law

An heir; he to whom lands, tenements, or hereditaments by the act of God and right of blood do descend, of some estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 7b.

In General

-Hæres de facto. In old English law. Heir from fact; that is, from the disseisin or other act of his ancestor, without or against right. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law.

-Hæres ex asse. In the civil law. An heir to the whole estate; a sole heir. Inst. 2, 23, 9.

-Hæres extraneus. In the civil law. A strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testamentis juri subjecti non sunt, extranei hæredes appellantur. Inst. 2, 19, 8.

-Hæres factus. In the civil law. An heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Story, Confl. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224. Otherwise called "hæres ex testamento," and "hæres institutus." Inst. 2, 8, 7; Id. 2, 14.

-Hæres fideicommissarius. In the civil law. The person for whose benefit an estate was given to another (termed "hæres fiduciarius," q. v.) by will. Inst. 2, 26, 6, 7, 9. Answering nearly to the custod que trust of the English law.

-Hæres fiduciarius. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius."

-Hæres institutus. A testamentary heir; one appointed by the will of the decedent.

-Hæres legítimus. A lawful heir; one pointed out as such by the marriage of his parents.

-Hæres naturae. In the civil law. An heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir, (hæres factus, q. v.,) an heir at law, or by intestacy, (ab intestato;) the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy. Story, Confl. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224. This is the only form of heirship recognised in the English law. Wms. R. P., 6th Am. ed. 60.

-Hæres necessarius. In the civil law. A necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship. Inst. 2, 19, 1.

-Hæredes proximi. Nearest or next heirs. The children or descendants of the deceased.

-Hæredes remotiores. More remote heirs. The kinsmen other than children or descendants.

-Hæres suus. In the civil law. A man's own heir; a decedent's proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Persons who were in the power of the testator but became sui juris at his death. Inst. 2, 13; 3, 1, 4, 5. Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him. Calvin.

-Hæres suis et necessarius. In Roman law. Own and necessary heirs; i. e., the lineal descendants of the estate-leaver. They were called "necessary" heirs, because it was the law that made them heirs, and not the choice of either the decedent or themselves. But since this was also true of slaves (when named "heirs" in the will) the former class were designated "sui et necessarius," by way of distinction, the word "sui" denoting that the necessity arose from their relationship to the decedent. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 733.

Hæres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is part of the father. 3 Coke, 129.

Hæres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis. An heir is either by right of property, or right of representation. 3 Coke, 40b.

Hæres est eadem persona cum anteecessore. An heir is the same person with his ancestor. Co. Litt. 22; Branch, Princ. See Nov. 48, c. 1, § 1.

Hæres est nomen collectivum. "Heir" is a collective name or noun. 1 Vent. 215.

Hæres est nomen juris; filius est nomen naturae. "Heir" is a name of term of law; "son" is a name of nature. Bac. Max. 52, in reg. 11.

Hæres est pars anteecessoris. An heir is a part of the ancestor. So said because the ancestor, during his life, bears in his body (in judgment of law) all his heirs. Co. Litt. 22 b; Schoonmaker v. Sheely, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 165, 167.

Hæres hæredis noii est meus hæres. The heir of my heir is my heir. Wharton, Law Dict.

Hæres legitimus est quem nuptias demontrat. He is a lawful heir whom marriage points out as such; who is born in wedlock. Co. Litt. 7b; Bract. fol. 88; Fleota, lib. 6, c. 1; Broom, Max. 535; Mirror of Just. 70; Dig. 2, 4, 5. (As to the application of the principle when the marriage is subsequent to the birth of the child, see 2 Cl. & F. 571; 8 Bingh. N. C. 385; 5 Wheat. 226, 262, n., 5 L. Ed. 70.)
Hæres minor uno et vigintiannis non responsèbit, nisi in casu dotis. Moore, 348. An heir under twenty-one years of age is not answerable, except in the matter of dower.

Hæres non tenetur in Anglia ad debita anteossseris reddenda, nisi per additiones ad hoc fuit obligatus, praterquam debita regis tan-tum. Co. Litt. 383. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor's debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. But now, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV.
c. 104, he is liable.

HÆRETARE. In old English law. To give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs.
Cowell.

HÆRETICO COMBURENDO. The statute 2
Hen. IV. c. 15, de hæretico comburendo, was the first penal law enacted against heresy, and imposed the penalty of death by burning against all heretics who relapsed or who refused to abjure their opinions. It was repealed by the statute 29 Car. II. c. 9. Brown.
This was also the name of a writ for the purpose indicated. See, also, De Hæretico Com-burendo.

HAFNE. A haven or port. Cowell.

HAFNE COURTS. Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England.

which timber was cut annually by the propriety. Ersk. Pr. 222.

HAGA. A house in a city or borough. Scott.

HAGNE. A little hand-gun. St. 33 Hen.
VIII. c. 6.

HAGNEBUT. A hand-gun of a larger description than the hagne. St. 2 & 3 Edw. VI.
c. 14; 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

HAGUE TRIBUNAL. The Court of Arbitration established by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899. The object of the establishment was to facilitate the immediate recourse to arbitration for the settlement of international differences by providing a permanent court, "accessible at all times, and acting, in default of agreement to the contrary between the parties, in accordance with the rules of procedure inserted in the present convention."
The court is given jurisdiction over all arbitration cases, provided the parties do not agree to institute a special tribunal. An international Bureau was likewise established to serve as a registry for the court and to be the channel of communications relative to the meetings of the court. The court, although called "permanent," is really so only in the fact that there is a permanent list of members from among whom the arbitrators in a given case are selected. At the Second Hague Conference of 1907, apart from minor changes made in the court, it was provided that, of the two arbitrators appointed by each of the parties, only one should be a national of the appointing state. 1 Scott, 274-318, 523-464.

in substantially the same sense, as follows:

-Half blood. See Blood.

-Half-brother, half-sister. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers. Wood v.
Mitcham, 92 N. Y. 379; In re Weiss' Estate, 1

-Half-cent. A copper coin of the United States, of the value of five mills, and of the weight of ninety-four grains. The coinage of these was discontinued in 1857.
HALF

—Half chest. In connection with tea, a "half chest" is a chest containing 75 to 80 pounds, but the weight varies according to the kind of tea. Japan Tea Co. v. Franklin MacVeagh & Co., 142 Minn. 152, 171 N. W. 395, 397.

—Half defense. See Defense.

—Half-dime. A silver (now nickel) coin of the United States, of the value of five cents.

—Half-dollar. A silver coin of the United States, of the value of fifty cents, or one-half the value of a dollar.

—Half-mark. A noble, or six shillings and eight pence in English money.

—Half-pilota. Compensation for services which a pilot has put himself in readiness to perform, by labor, risk, and cost, and has offered to perform, at half the rate he would have received if the services had actually been performed. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 198, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 28 L. Ed. 158.

—Half-proof. In the civil law. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Halifax, Civil Law, b. 3, c. 9, no. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370. Or prima facie proof, which yet was not sufficient to found a sentence or decree.

—Half-seal. That which was formerly used in the English chancery for sealing of commissions to delegates, upon any appeal to the court of delegates, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes. 8 Eliz. c. 3.

—Half section. In American land law. The half of a section of land according to the divisions of the government survey, laid off either by a north-and-south or by an east-and-west line, and containing 320 acres. See Brown v. Hardin, 21 Ark. 324.

—Half-timer. A child who, by the operation of the English factory and education acts, is employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he may attend some "recognized efficient school." See factory and workshop act, 1878, § 23; elementary education act, 1876, § 11.

—Half-tongue. A jury half of one tongue or nationality and half of another. See De Medietate Linguae.

—Half-year. In legal computation. The period of one hundred and eighty-two days; the odd hours being rejected. Co. Litt. 135b; Cro. Jac. 166; Yel. 100; 1 Steph. Comm. 265; Pol. Code Cal. 1903, § 3257.

HALI. A man employed in ploughing. Wilson, Gloss. Ind.; Moz. & W.

HALIFAX LAW. A synonym for lynch law, or the summary (and unauthorized) trial of a person accused of crime and the infliction of death upon him; from the name of the parish of Halifax, in England, where anciently this form of private justice was practised by the free burgheers in the case of persons accused of stealing; also called "gibeet law."

HALIGEMOT, or HALIMOTE. In Saxon law. The meeting of a hall, (convventus aucta.) that is, a lord's court; a court of a manor, or court-baron. Spelman. So called from the hall, where the tenants or freemen met, and justice was administered. Crabb, Eng. Law, 26.

It was sometimes used to designate a convention of citizens in their public hall and was also called folkmote and hallmote. The word hallmote rather signifies the lord's court or a court baron held in a manor in which the differences between the tenants were determined. Cunn. L Dict.; Cowell.

"Furthermore, it seems to have been a common practice for a wealthy abbey to keep a court, known as a hallmote, on each of its manors, while in addition to these manorial courts it kept a central court, a liber curia for all its greater freehold tenants. And we may now and again meet with courts which are distinctly called courts of honors. The rule then was not merely this, that the lord of a manor may hold a court for the manor; but rather this, that a lord may hold a court for his tenants." 1 Poll. & Mtll. 67.

HALIMAS. In English law. The feast of All Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross-quarters of the year, was computed from Halimas to Candlemas. Wharton.

HALIWORFOLK. See Halywerfolk.

HALL. A building or room of considerable size, used as a place for the meeting of public assemblies, conventions, courts, etc.; as, the city hall, the town hall.

In English Law

A name given to many manor-houses because the magistrate's court was held in the hall of his mansion; a chief mansion-house. Cowell.

HALL-MARK. An official stamp affixed by the goldsmiths upon articles made of gold or silver as an evidence of genuineness, and hence used to signify any mark of genuineness. "The power of free alienation is the 'hall-mark' of a fee-simple absolute." Rand. Em. Dom. § 206.

HALLAGE. In old English law. A fee or toll due for goods or merchandise vended in a hall. Jacob; 6 Co. 62.
A toll due to the lord of a fair or market, for such commodities as were vended in the common hall of the place. Cowell; Blount.

HALLAZZO. In Spanish law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3, 5, 28; 5, 48, 49; 5, 20, 50.

HALLE-GEMOTE. In Saxon law. Haligemot (q. v.).

HALLMOOT. See Halligemot.

HALLUCINATION. In medical jurisprudence. A trick or deceit of the senses; a morbid error either of the sense of sight or that of hearing, or possibly of the other senses; a psychological state, such as would be produced naturally by an act of sense-perception, attributed confidently, but mistakenly, to something which has no objective existence; as, when the patient imagines that he sees an object when there is none, or hears a voice or other sound when nothing strikes his ear. See Staples v. Wellington, 35 Me. 459; McNett v. Cooper (C. C.) 13 Fed. 590; People v. Krist, 168 N. Y. 19, 60 N. E. 1067.

An error, a blunder, a mistake, a fallacy; and when used in describing the condition of a person does not necessarily carry an imputation of insanity. Foster's Ex'rs v. Dickerson, 64 Vt. 232, 24 A. 253.

The perception by any of the senses of an object which has no existence. The conscious recognition of a sensation of sight, hearing, feeling, taste, or smell which is not due to any impulse received by the perceptive apparatus from without, but arises within the perceptive apparatus itself. A false perception in contradistinction to a delusion or false belief. Wood, Am. Text-Book of Med.

Hallucinations are tricks of the senses, differing from delusions in that hallucinations pass away while delusions remain. Benson v. Washington University, 253 Mo. 541, 158 S. W. 330, 333.

Hallucination does not by itself constitute insanity, though it may be evidence of it or a sign of its approach. It is to be distinguished from “delusion” in that, the latter is a fixed and irrational belief in the existence of a fact or state of facts, not cogizable through the senses, but to be determined by the faculties of reason, memory, judgment, and the like; while hallucination is a belief in the existence of an external object, perceptible by the senses, but having no real existence; or, in so far as a delusion may relate to an external object, it is an irrational belief as to the character, nature, or appearance, of something which really exists and affects the senses. For example, if a man should believe that he saw his right hand in its proper place, after it had been amputated, it would be an hallucination; but if he believed that his right hand was made of glass, it would be a delusion.

In other words, in the case of hallucination, the senses betray the mind, while in the case of delusion, the senses act normally, but their evidence is rejected by the mind on account of the existence of an irrational belief formed independently of them. They are further distinguished by the fact that hallucination may be observed and studied by the subject himself and traced to their causes, or may be corrected by reasoning or argument, while a delusion is an unconscious error, but so fixed and unchanged that the patient cannot be reasoned out of it. Hallucination is also to be distinguished from “illusion,” the latter term being appropriate to describe a perverted or distorted or wholly mistaken impression in the mind, derived from a true act of sense-perception, stimulated by a real external object, but modified by the imagination of the subject; while, in the case of hallucination, as above stated, there is no objective reality to correspond with the imagined perception.

HALMOT. See Halligemot.

HALYMOTE. A holy or ecclesiastical court. A court held in London before the lord mayor and sheriffs, for regulating the bakers.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the “holy mote,” or holy court. Cowell.

HALYWERCFOLK. Sax. In old English law. Tenants who held by the service of repairing or defending a church or monument, whereby they were exempted from feudal and military services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob, Law Dict.

HAM. A place of dwelling; a homestead; a little narrow meadow. Blount. A house or little village. Cowell.

HAMA. In old English law. A hook; an engine with which a house on fire is pulled down. Yel. 60.

A piece of land.

HAMBLING, or HAMELING. In forest law. The boxing or hocking of dogs; an old mode of lamming or disabling dogs. Termes de la Ley. Expeditation (q. v.).

HAMEL, HAMELETA, or HAMELETA. A hamlet.

HAMESECKEN. In Scotch law. The violent entering into a man’s house without license or against the peace, and the seeking and assaulting him there. Skene de Verb. Sign.; 2 Forb. Inst. 139.

The crime of housebreaking or burglary. 4 Bl. Comm. 223. Spelled, also, “hamesucken.”

In Hale’s Pleas of the Crown it is said, “The common genus of offences that comes under the name of hamesucken is that which is usually called house-breaking; which sometimes comes under the common appellation of burglary, whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house-breaking of this kind is of two natures.” 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 547; Com. v. Hope, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 4.

See also, Hamsoccup.

HAMFARE. (Sax. From ham, a house.) In Saxon law. An assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. Cowell. This word by some is said to signify the freedom of a man's house. Holthouse. See also, Hamsocne.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill. It is the diminutive of "ham," a village. Cowell. See Rex v. Morris, 4 Term, 552.

A "village" or "hamlet" in a rural community may be no more than a store, a school, a church, and two or three residences. Rantoul Rural High School Dist. No. 2, Franklin County, v. Davis, 199 P. 1068, 1069, 99 Kan. 155.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; acroft; a little meadow. Cowell.

HAMMER. Metaphorically, a forced sale or sale at public auction. "To bring to the hammer," to put up for sale at auction. "Sold under the hammer," sold by an officer of the law or by an auctioneer.

HAMSOCNE. In Saxon law. The word is variously spelled hamsocna, hamsocna, hamsonken, hamsocnen, hamsocne. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss; Du Cange; Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offence. Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offence. Du Cange; Flota, lib. 1, c. 47, § 18. An insult offered in one's own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange.

Among the Anglo-Saxons it was breaking into a house; perhaps the time of the day was not an element. See 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 293; 2 Poll. & Mattl. 492. See also, Hamsocne.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Ric. II. c. 1; 3 Bl. Comm. 49; equivalent to the Roman fuscus. According to others, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept. Spelman; Du Cange.

HANAPER-OFFICE. An office belonging to the common-law jurisdiction of the court of chancery, so called because all writs relating to the business of a subject, and their returns, were formerly kept in a hamper, in hanaperio. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. See Yates v. People, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 363.

HAND. A measure of length equal to four inches, used in measuring the height of horses. A person's signature. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369; 10 Mod. 103.

As a part of the body, within the purview of Workmen's Compensation Acts, "hand" designates the palm, fingers, and thumb, an organ primarily of prehension or grasping. Loyal v. Michigan Stamping Co., 202 Mich. 85, 167 N. W. 904, 905. But it has elsewhere been said that for the purpose of fixing compensation, the statute treats all parts below the elbow joint as an entirety under the name "hand." Western Const. Co. v. Early, 81 Ind. App. 480, 142 N. E. 396.

In the plural, the term may be synonymous with "possession"; as, the "hands" of an executor, garnishee, etc. Brownwood Gas Co. v. Belser (Tex. Civ. App.) 267 S. W. 605, 607.

In Old English Law

An oath.
For the meaning of the terms "strong hand" and "clean hands," see those titles.

HAND DOWN. To announce or file an opinion in a cause. Used originally and properly of the opinions of appellate courts transmitted to the court below; but in later usage the term is employed more generally with reference to any decision by a court upon a case or point reserved for consideration.

HAND-FASTING. In old English law. Betrothment.

HAND-GRITH. Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand; used in the laws of Henry I. Tomlin; Cowell; Moz. & W.; Stat. Hen. I. c. 13.

HAND MONEY. Money paid in hand to bind a bargain; earnest money, when it is in cash.

HANDBILL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done. Kelly v. Board of Trustees of Evarts Common Graded School Dist., 162 Ky. 612, 172 S. W. 1047, 1048; People v. McLaughlin, 33 Misc. 691, 68 N. Y. S. 1108.

HANDBOROW. In Saxon law. A hand pledge; a name given to the nine pledges in a decennary or friborg; the tenth or chief, being called "handborow." (q. v.). So called as being an inferior pledge to the chief. Spelman.

HANDCUFFS. See Fetters.

HANDHABEND, or HAND-HABENDE. In Saxon law. One having a thing in his hand; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession. Jurisdiction to try such thief. See Laws of Hen. I. c. 59; Laws of Athelstane § 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1; Britton p. 72; Du Cange, Handhabenda. See also, Backberend.

HANDLE. To deal in, to buy and sell, as merchandise. Adams Fish Market v. Sterrett, 106 Tex. 362, 172 S. W. 1109. To manage or operate. The term includes the act of placing a truck on a depot platform for the purpose of loading. Wells Fargo & Co. v. Lowery (Tex. Civ. App.) 197 S. W. 605, 606.

HANDSALE. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in yealbal contracts. A sale thus made was called "handsale," (venditio per mutuum manuum complessionem.) In process of time the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. 2 Bl. Comm. 448.

HANDSEL. Handsale, or earnest money.

HANDWRITING. The chirurgery of a person; the cast or form of writing peculiar to a person, including the size, shape, and style of letters, tricks of penmanship, and whatever gives individuality to his writing, distinguishing it from that of other persons. In re Hyland's Will (Sur.) 27 N. Y. S. 963.

Anything written by hand; an instrument written by the hand of a person, or a specimen of his writing.

Handwriting, considered under the law of evidence, includes not only the ordinary writing of one able to write, but also writing done in a disguised hand, or in cipher, and a mark made by one able or unable to write. 9 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 264. See Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 301, 32 Am. Dec. 172.

Typewriting is not "handwriting" within a statute allowing experts' opinions as to who executed a writing. Wolf v. Gail, 176 Cal. 787, 169 P. 1017, 1019.

HANDY MAN. A man of all work. Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., v. Craft, 208 Ala. 467, 94 So. 531, 534.

HANG. In old practice. To remain undetermined. "It has hung long enough; it is time it were made an end of." Holt, C. J., 1 Show. 77.

Thus, the present participle means pending; during the pendency. "If the tenant alien, hanging the possession." Co. Litt. 260a. Remaining undetermined. 1 Show. 77.

HANGED, DRAWN AND QUARTERED. A method of executing traitors in England, said to have been introduced in 1241. The traitor was carried on a sled, or hurdle to the gallows (formerly dragged there to the tail of a horse); hanged till half dead and then cut down; his entrails cut out and burnt; his head cut off and his body to be divided into quarters, which, with his head, were hung in some public place. In practice the executioner usually cut out the heart and held it up to view. See Andrews, Old Time Punishments; 1 Eng. Rep. 87.

HANGING. In criminal law. Suspension by the neck; the mode of capital punishment used in England from time immemorial, and generally adopted in the United States. 4 Bl. Comm. 463.

HANGING IN CHAINS. In atrocity cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed, a practice quite contrary to the Mosale law. (Deut. xxxi. 28.) Its legality was declared by acts in 1751 and 1828. Abolished by & & Wm. IV, c. 26. Wharton.

HANGING PAPER. Ordinarily, paper for hanging or hangings, or paper which hangs. Within the meaning of the Tariff Act (19 US CA § 121), paper used for covering walls, ceiling, etc., whether such paper is tinted or decorative or not;—a more inclusive term than "paper hangings," meaning tinted or decorative paper used for the purpose mentioned. Downing & Co. v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cust. App. 451, 454.

HANGMAN. An executioner. One who executes condemned criminals by hanging.

HANGWITE. In Saxon law. A fine for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange.

HANIG. Some customary labor to be performed. Holthouse.

HANSE. An alliance or confederation among merchants or cities, for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members. An imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange.

—Hanse towns. The collective name of certain German cities, including Lübeck, Hamburg, and Bremen, which formed an alliance for the mutual protection and furtherance of their commercial interests, in the twelfth century. The powerful confederacy thus formed was called the "Hanseatic League." The league framed and promulgated a code of maritime law, which was known as the "Laws of the Hanse Towns," or jus Hanseaticum Maritimum.

—Hanse towns, laws of the. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lübeck, in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged.

—Hanseatic. Pertaining to a hanse or commercial alliance; but, generally, the union of the Hanse towns is the one referred to, as in the expression the "Hanseatic League." The years 1556 to 1377 marked the zenith of the league's power. The league gradually declined till, in 1699, the last general assembly was held and Lübeck, Hamburg and Bremen were left alone to preserve the name and small inheritance of the "Hanse."

HANGSRAVE. The chief of a company; the head man of a corporation.
HANTELOD, or HANTELODE. In old European law. An arrest, or attachment. Spelman; Du Cange; Toml.; Holthouse.

HAP. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used.

HAPPINESS. Comfort, consolation, contentment, ease, enjoyment; pleasure, satisfaction. National Surety Co. v. Jarrett, 55 W. Va. 493, 121 S. E. 291, 295. The constitutional right of men to pursue their "happiness" means the right to pursue any lawful business or vocation, in any manner not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, which may increase their prosperity, or develop their faculties, so as to give to them their highest enjoyment. Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 4 S. Ct. 652, 111 U. S. 737, 28 L. Ed. 585; 1 BL. Comm. 41. And see English v. English, 32 N. J. Eq. 750.

HAQUE. In old statutes. A hand-gun, about three-quarters of a yard long.

HARACIUM. In old English law. A race of horses and mares kept for breed; a stud. Spelman.

HARBINGER. In England, an officer of the royal household.

HARBOR, v. To receive clandestinely and without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same. Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. 215, 227, 12 L. Ed. 122. For example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. Poll. Torts 276; Wood v. Gale, 10 N. H. 217, 34 Am. Dec. 150; Eells v. People, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 498. It may be aptly used to describe the furnishing of shelter, lodging, or food clandestinely or with concealment, and under certain circumstances, may be equally applicable to those acts divested of any accompanying secrecy. U. S. v. Grant (C. C.) 55 F. 415.

A distinction has been taken in some decisions, between "harbor" and "conceal." A person may be convicted of harboring a slave, although he may not have concealed her. McElhaney v. State, 24 Ala. 71.

As used in U. S. Criminal Code, § 43 (18 USCA § 94), providing for the punishment of one who shall harbor, conceal, protect, or assist any soldier who has deserted from service, "harbor" means to lodge, to care for, after escaping the deserter. Pirpo v. United States (C. C. A.) 261 F. 830, 833.

Under Pen. Code Utah, § 4075, providing that persons who, after knowledge that a felony has been committed, harbor or protect the person charged therewith or convicted thereof, are accessories, the words "harbor and protect" imply more than mere withholding of knowledge as to the whereabouts of the party charged, and necessarily contemplate some affirmative act or acts of concealment or as-stance rendered to the principal personally. Ex parte Overfield, 39 Nev. 30, 152 P. 528.

To "harbor" a dog involves the idea of protection, and of treating it as living at one's house, and undertaking to control its actions. Hagenau v. Millard, 185 Ws. 544, 156 N. W. 718, 719. See, also, Markwood v. McBroom, 110 Wash. 209, 188 P. 821, 822.

HARBOR. n. A haven, or a space of deep water so sheltered by the adjacent land as to afford a safe anchorage for ships. Rowe v. Smith, 51 Conn. 271, 50 Am. Rep. 16; The Aurora (D. C.) 29 F. 103; People v. Kirsch, 67 Mich. 539, 33 N. W. 157; The Cuzco (D. C.) 225 F. 169, 178. A port or haven for ships; a sheltered place, natural or artificial, on the coast of a sea, lake, or other body of water. State v. Savidge, 55 Wash. 246, 163 P. 738, 740.

"Port" is a word of larger import than "harbor," since it implies the presence of wharves, or at any rate the means and opportunity of receiving and discharging cargo. See 7 M. & G. 679; Martin v. Hilton, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 271; 2 B. & Ald. 490. Thus, we have the "said harbor, basin, and docks of the port of Hull." 2 B. & Ald. 69. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster, Dict.

HARBOR AUTHORITY. In England a harbor authority is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, being proprietors of, or entrusted with the duty of constructing, improving, managing, or lighting, any harbor. St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47.

HARD. As applied to liquors, rough; acid; sour. In re Stiller, 175 App. Div. 211, 161 N. Y. S. 504, 507.

HARD CASES. A phrase used to indicate decisions which, to meet a case of hardship to a party, are not entirely consonant with the true principle of the law. It is said of such: Hard cases make bad law. Hard cases must not make bad equity any more than bad law; Moore v. Pierson, 6 Iowa, 279, 71 Am. Dec. 409.

HARD CASES are the quicksands of the law. Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Campbell Commissio

Hard cases make bad law.

HARD CIDER. Cider which has lost its sweetness from fermentation—fermented cider possessing a stimulating and intoxicating effect, due to its acquisition of a substantial and potent alcoholic content, through fermentation. United States v. Dodson (D. C.) 208 F. 397, 403; Monroe Cider Vinegar &

HARD OF HEARING. A relative term, applied to one that cannot hear as well as one possessing normal faculties of hearing or does not hear as well as the average person. Sharpes v. Jones, 100 W. Va. 662, 131 S. E. 463, 464.

HARDHEIDS. In old Scotch law. Lions; coins formerly of the value of three halfpence. 1 Pitt. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 64, note.

HARDPAN. Any earth not popularly recognized as rock through which it is hard to dig or to make excavation of any sort. It may be: (1) Semiduramated clay, with or without admixture of stony matter; (2) cemented gravel; or (3) clay, with or without admixture of stony matter, which is very tough because of its strong cohesion. Baker v. Multnomah County, 118 Or. 143, 246 P. 352, 355. See, also, Sweeney v. Jackson County, 95 Or. 96, 178 P. 365, 376.

HARDSHIP. The severity with which a proposed construction of the law would bear upon a particular case, founding, sometimes, an argument against such construction, which is otherwise termed the "argument ab inconvenienti." See Hard Cases.

HARIOT. The same as heriot (q. v.) Cowell; Terminis de la Ley. Sometimes spelled Harriot. Wms. Sels. 203.

HARMFUL or HARMLESS ERROR. See Error.

HARMONIC PLANE. The zero adopted by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce upon which its tidal tables, charts, and maps are based. It is an arbitrary plane, and, in Puget Sound, is the lowest plane of the tide recognized by that department. State v. Scott, 89 Wash. 63, 154 P. 165, 168.

HARMONIZE. Though not strictly synonymous with the word "reconcile," it is not improperly used by a court in instructing the jury that it is their duty to "harmonize" conflicting evidence if possible. Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

HARMONY. The phrase "in harmony with" is synonymous with "in agreement, conformity, or accordance with." Brown Real Estate Co. v. Lancaster County, 110 Neb. 665, 194 N. W. 897, 898.

HARNASCA. In old European law. The defensive armor of a man; harness. Spelman.

HARNESS. The defensive armor of a soldier or knight. All warlike instruments. In modern poetical sense, a suit of armor. Sometimes, the trappings of a war-horse.

The tackle or furniture of a ship.

HARO, HARRON. Fr. In Norman and early English law. An outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors. Cowell. The original of the clamour de haro comes from the Normans. Moz. & W.

HARIOTT. The old form of "heriot" (q. v.) Williams, Sels. 206.

HART. A stag or male deer of the forest five years old complete.

HARTER ACT. A name commonly applied to the act of congress of February 13, 1893, c. 105. It provides (§ 1) that agreements in a bill of lading relieving the owner, etc., of a vessel sailing between the United States and foreign ports, from liability for negligence or fault in proper loading, stowage, custody, care, or delivery of merchandise, are void (46 USCA § 190); (§ 2) that no bill of lading shall contain any agreement whereby the obligations of the owner to exercise due diligence, properly equip, man, provision and outfit a vessel and make it seaworthy, and whereby the obligations of the master, etc., carefully to handle, store, care for and deliver the cargo, are in any way lessened, weakened or avoided (46 USCA § 191); (§ 3) that if the owner shall exercise due diligence to make such vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped and supplied, neither the vessel nor her owners, etc., shall be liable for loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or management, nor for losses arising from dangers of the sea, acts of God, or public enemies, or the inherent defect of the thing carried, or insufficiency of package, or seizure under legal process, or any act or omission of the shipper of the goods, or from saving or attempting to save life at sea, or deviation in rendering such service (46 USCA § 192).

HARVESTING EXPENSES. As used in a note given in payment of the purchase price of an interest in a growing crop, containing a condition that the payee should look for payment solely to the proceeds of the crop after all harvesting expenses shall have been fully paid, the term "harvesting expenses" is not limited to expenses incurred in the cutting and threshing of the crop, but includes expenses for repairs of machinery used in harvesting the crop, the rent of live stock, implements, and the cost of labor. Botta v. Orton, 31 Cal. App. 397, 167 P. 1147, 1148.

HASP AND STAPLE. In old Scotch law. The form of entering an heir in a subject situated within a royal borough. It consisted of the heir’s taking hold of the hasp and staple of the door, (which was the symbol of possession,) with other formalities. Bell: Burrell. A mode of entry in Scotland by which a bailee declared a person heir on evidence brought before himself, at the same time delivering the property over to him by the hasp and staple of the door. Bell; Ersk. Pr. 433.

HASPA. In old English law. The hasp of a door; by which livery of selshin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

HASTA. Lat. A spear. In the Roman law, a spear was the sign of a public sale of goods or sale by auction. Hence the phrase “hasta subjicere” (to put under the spear) meant to put up at auction. Calvin.

In Feudal Law
A spear. The symbol used in making investiture of a fief. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 2.

HAT MONEY. In maritime law. Primage; a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HATCHWAY. Specifically, an opening in the deck of a boat; hence any similar opening, as in a floor or sidewalk; a trapdoor. Kelly v. Theo. Homm Brewing Co., 140 Minn. 371, 158 N. W. 131, 132. The term is inapplicable to the head of a stairway; Peterson v. Shapiro, 171 Minn. 468, 214 N. W. 299, 270; or to basement ways; State v. Armstrong, 97 Neb. 343, 149 N. W. 786, 788, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 554.

HAUBER. O. Fr. A high lord; a great baron. Spelman.

HAUGH, HOUGH, or HOWGH. Low-lying rich lands, lands which are occasionally overflowed. Encyc. Dict. A green plot in a valley.

HAUL. The use of this word, instead of the statutory word “carry,” in an indictment charging that the defendant “old feloniously steal, take, and haul away” certain personally, will not render the indictment bad, the words being in one sense equivalent. Spitter v. State, 108 Ind. 171, 8 N. E. 911.

HAUR. In old English law. Hatred. Used in the laws of William the Conqueror. Toml.; Leg. Wm. I. c. 16; Blount.

HAUSTUS. Lat. In the civil law. A species of servitude, consisting in the right to draw water from another’s well or spring, in which the iter (right of way to the well or spring,) so far as it is necessary, is tacitly included. Dig. 8, 3, 1; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 318; Fleta, l. 4, c. 27, § 9.

AUTHONER. In old English law. A man armed with a coat of mail. Jacob.

HAVE. Lat. A form of the salutatory expression “Are,” used in the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. See Cod. 7, 62, 9; Id. 9, 2, 11.

“No one, at common law, was said to have or to be in possession of land, unless it were conveyed to him by the livery of selshin, which gave him the corporal investiture and bodily occupation thereof.” Bl. Law Tracta, 13.

HAVE AND HOLD. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See Habendum et Tenendum.

HAVEN. A place of a large receipt and safe riding of ships, so situate and secured by the land circumjacent that the vessels thereby ride and anchor safely, and are protected by the adjacent land from dangerous or violent winds; as Milford Haven, Plymouth Haven, and the like. Hale de Jure Mar. par. 2, c. 2: The Cuzco (D. C.) 225 F. 169, 176; 15 East 304, 305. And see Lowndes v. Board of Trustees, 163 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 758, 38 L. Ed. 615; De Longuemere v. New York Ins. Co., 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 125(a); De Lovio v. Bolt, 7 Fed. Cas. 426.

HAW. A small parcel of land so called in Kent; houses. Co. Litt. 5; Cowell.

HAWBERK, or HAWBERT. A coat or shirt of mail; hence, derivatively (in feudal law) one who held a fief on the duty or service of providing himself with such armor and standing ready, thus equipped, for military service.
HAUGH, HOWGH. In old English law. A valley. Co. Litt. 5b.

HAWKER. A trader who goes from place to place, or along the streets of a town, selling the goods which he carries with him. See Hawking.

It is perhaps not essential to the idea, but is generally understood from the word, that a hawker is to be one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them, by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish. Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 495. And see Graffy v. Rushville, 107 Ind. 603, 8 N. B. 608, 57 Am. Rep. 128; Clements v. Casper, 4 Wyo. 494, 35 P. 472; Hall v. State, 29 Fla. 527, 23 South. 119; Pevey v. Greenberg, 101 N. J. Law, 435, 128 A. 655, 886.

One who goes about a village carrying supplies and giving orders for a non-resident farm is not a hawker or peddler. Village of Cerro Gordo v. Rawlings, 235 Ill. 36, 35 N. E. 1096.

HAWKING. The act of offering goods for sale on the streets by outcry or by attracting the attention of persons by exposing goods in a public place, or by placards, labels, or signals. Pastorino v. City of Detroit, 152 Mich. 231, 235, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 768.

The business of peddling is distinct from that of a manufacturer selling his own products, and those who raise or produce what they sell, such as farmers and butchers, are not peddlers. Ex parte Hogg, 70 Tex. Cr. R. 151, 156 S. W. 931, 932. The occupation of a dairyman, going about delivering the milk from his farm to his regular customers according to their previous orders, is not, within the ordinary meaning of the term, peddling or hawking. State ex rel. Brittain v. Hayes, 143 La. 38, 78 So. 143, 144.

HAY. This term, as used in a statute, does not apply to the stalks, stems, and other residue, left after bean plants have been threshed and the bean kernel or seeds removed. State v. Choate, 41 Idaho, 251, 228 P. 538, 540.

HAY IN STACK. A stack of hay, grain, straw, or the like is a large quantity thereof collected and usually built up in layers in conical, oblong, or rectangular form to a point or ridge at the top so that it will be preserved against the inclemencies of the weather, and a policy covering "hay in stack" does not cover hay in the mow of a barn. Murphy v. Continental Ins. Co., 175 Iowa, 375, 157 N. W. 855, 856, L. R. A. 1917B, 934.

HAY-BOTE. Another name for "hedge-bote," being one of the estovers allowed to a tenant for life or years, namely, material for repairing the necessary hedges or fences of his grounds, or for making necessary farming utensils. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 129.

HAUYARD. In old English law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town; so called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed ground. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound-breaches. Kitch. 46; Cowell. Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aikens (Vt.) 319.

HAZAR-ZAMIN. A bail or surety for the personal attendance of another. Moz. & W.

HAZARD. In Old English Law

An unlawful game at dice, those who play at it being called "hazardors." Jacob.

In Modern Law

Any game of chance or wagering. Cheek v. Com., 100 Ky. 1, 37 S. W. 152; Graves v. Ford, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 115; Somers v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 498.

In Insurance Law

The risk, danger, or probability that the event insured against may happen, varying with the circumstances of the particular case. See State Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 14 Colo. 499, 24 P. 333, 20 Am. St. Rep. 281.

In General

—Moral hazard. In fire insurance. The risk or danger of the destruction of the insured property by fire, as measured by the character and interest of the insured owner, his habits as a prudent and careful man or the reverse, his known integrity or his bad reputation, and the amount of loss he would suffer by the destruction of the property or the gain he would make by suffering it to burn and collecting the insurance. See Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 F. 170, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 L. R. A. 614; Davenport v. Firemen's Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J., 47 S. D. 426, 109 N. W. 203, 205.

HAZARDOR. In old English law. One who played at a hazard, i. e., an unlawful game of dice. Jacob.

HAZARDOUS. Exposed to or involving danger; perilous; risky.

The terms "hazardous," "extra-hazardous," "specially hazardous," and "not hazardous" are well-understood technical terms in the business of insurance, having distinct and separate meanings. Although what goods are included in each designation may not be so known as to dispense with actual proof, the terms themselves are distinct and known to be so. Russell v. Insurance Co., 50 Minn.
HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. See Contract.

HAZARDOUS INSURANCE. Insurance effected on property which is in unusual or peculiar danger of destruction by fire, or on the life of a man whose occupation exposes him to special or unusual perils.

HAZARDOUS NEGLIGENCE. See Negligence.

He. Properly a pronoun of the masculine gender, but commonly construed in statutes to include both sexes as well as corporations. Dickson v. Strickland, 114 Tex. 176, 265 S. W. 1012, 1021. The use of this pronoun in a written instrument, in referring to a person whose Christian name is designated therein by a mere initial, is not conclusive that the person referred to is a male; Hightower v. State, 14 Ga. App. 246, 80 S. E. 684, 685; it may be shown by parol that the person intended to be a female; Bernhard v. Beecher, 11 P. 802, 71 Cal. 38. Its use in an indictment, referring to a named individual, was held to obviate any necessity for averring that such individual was a human being. Woods v. Commonwealth, 140 Va. 491, 124 S. E. 465, 469.

He who comes into a court of equity must come with clean hands.

He who has committed iniquity shall not have equity. Francis, Max.

He who is silent when conscience requires him to speak shall be debarred from speaking when conscience requires him to be silent.

He who seeks equity must do equity. It is in pursuance of this maxim that equity enforces the right of the wife's equity to a settlement. Snell, Eq. (5th Ed.) 374. See Drake v. Sherman, 67 Ill. App. 449.

He who will have equity done to him must do equity to the same person. 4 Bouv. Inst. 3723.

HEAD. Chief; leading, principal; the upper part or principal source of a stream.

The principal person or chief of any organization, corporation, or firm.

HEAD MONEY. A sum of money reckoned at a fixed amount for each head (person) in a designated class. Particularly (1) a capital or poll tax. (2) A bounty offered by the laws of the United States for each person on board an enemy's ship or vessel, at the commencement of a naval engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by a ship or vessel of the United States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money. In re Farragut, 7 D. C. 97. A similar reward is offered by the British statutes. (3) The tax or duty imposed by act of congress of Aug. 5, 1822, on owners of steamships and sailing vessels for every immigrant brought into the United States. Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 520, 5 Sup. Ct. 247, 28 L. Ed. 798. (4) A bounty or reward paid to one who pursues and kills a bandit or outlaw and produces his head as evidence; the offer of such a reward being popularly called "putting a price on his head."

To constitute a "head of a family" there must be at least two persons who live together in the relation of one family, and one of them must be the "head" of that "family." Johns v. Bowden, 68 Ga. 38, 46 So. 155, 156.

To be the head of a family, one must either have a responsibility (i.e., at least a natural or moral obligation) to support, or have parental authority over, another member of the family. Whyte v. Grant, 142 La. 82, 77 So. 443.

To constitute one the "head of a family" so as to be entitled to a homestead exemption, there must be others than himself, who with him form the family and are legally dependent upon him, and whom he is legally obliged to care for. Union Trust Co. v. Cox, 55 Okl. 296, 155 P. 206, 209, L. R. A. 1917C, 256; In re Stearns (D. C.) 284 F. 578; Peerless Pacific Co. v. Burckhard, 99 Wash. 221, 155 P. 1037, 1038, L. R. A. 1917C, 353, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 247; John E. Morrison & Co. v. Murf (Tex. Civ. App.) 212 S. W. 212, 214; In re Bordelon (D. C.) 2 F. (2d) 164; Appeal of Brookland Bank, 112 S. C. 409, 180 S. E. 460 (but see In re Taylor (D. C.) 222 F. 315, 316).

HEAD OF CREEK. This term means the source of the longest branch, unless general reputation has given the appellation to another. Davis v. Bryant, 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 110.
HEAD OF DEPARTMENT. In the constitution and laws of the United States, the heads of departments are the officers at the head of the great executive departments of government (commonly called "the cabinet") such as the secretary of state, secretary of the interior, attorney general, postmaster general, and so on, not including heads of bureaus.

HEAD OF STREAM. The highest point on the stream which furnishes a continuous stream of water, not necessarily the longest fork or prong. Uhl v. Reynolds, 64 S. W. 498, 23 Ky. Law Rep. 759; State v. Coleman, 13 N. J. Law, 104.

HEAD OF WATER. In hydraulic engineering, mining, etc., the effective force of a body or volume of water, expressed in terms of the vertical distance from the level of the water in the pond, reservoir, dam, or other source of supply, to the point where it is to be mechanically applied, or expressed in terms of the pressure of the water per square inch at the latter point. See Shearer v. Middleton, 88 Mich. 521, 50 N. W. 737; Cargill v. Thompson, 57 Minn. 534, 59 N. W. 635.

HEADBOROUGH. In Saxon law. The head or chief officer of a borough; chief of the frankpledge tithing or decennary. This office was afterwards, when the petty constableship was created, united with that office.

HEAD-COURTS. Certain tribunals in Scotland, abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Ersk. 1, 4, 5.

HEADERS. In mining, a "cap" is a square piece of plank or block wedged between the top of posts and the roof to better hold the roof, and "headers" are longer pieces of plank supported by a prop at each end and supporting a larger area of the roof with fewer posts. Big Branch Coal Co. v. Wrenchle, 160 Ky. 668, 170 S. W. 14, 16.

HEADLAND. In old English law. A narrow piece of unplowed land left at the end of a plowed field for the turning of the plow. Called, also, "bult." 2 Leoni. 70, case 93; 1 Litt. 15.

HEAD-NOTE. A syllabus to a reported case; a summary of the points decided in the case, which is placed at the head or beginning of the report.

HEAD-PENCE. An exaction of 40d. or more, collected by the sheriff of Northumberland from the people of that county twice in every seven years, without account to the king. Abolished by 23 Hen. VI. c. 6, in 1444. Cowell.

HEADRIGHT CERTIFICATE. In the laws of the republic of Texas, a certificate issued under authority of an act of 1839, which provided that every person immigrating to the republic between October 1, 1837, and January 1, 1840, who was the head of a family and actually resided within the government with his or her family should be entitled to a grant of 410 acres of land, to be held under such a certificate for three years, and then conveyed by absolute deed to the settler, if in the mean time he had resided permanently within the republic and performed all the duties required of citizens. Cannon v. Vaughan, 12 Tex. 401; Turner v. Hart, 10 Tex. 441.

HEAD-SILVER. A name sometimes given to a Common Fine (q. v.). By a payment of a certain sum of money to the lord, litigants might try their suits nearer home. Blount.

HEAFODWEARD. In old English law. One of the services to be rendered by a thane, or a geneath or villain, the precise nature of which is unknown. Anc. Eng. Inst.

HEALER. One who heals or cures; specifically, one who professes to cure bodily diseases without medicine or any material means, according to the tenets and practices of so-called "Christian Science," whose beliefs and practices, being founded on their religious convictions, are not per se proof of insanity. In re Brush's Will, 35 Misc. 680, 72 N. Y. S. 425.

HEALGEMOTE. In Saxon law. A court-baron; an ecclesiastical court; Haligemot (q. v.).

HEALING ACT. Another name for a curative act or statute. See Lockhart v. Troy, 48 Ala. 384.

HEALSFANG. In Saxon law. A sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks. Cowell. It was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon kings. Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng. Gloss.; Spelman, Gloss.

HEALTH. Freedom from pain or sickness; the most perfect state of animal life. The natural agreement and concordant disposition of the parts of the living body. Not synonymous with "sanitation." Black v. Lambert (Tex. Civ. App.) 235 S. W. 704, 706. The right to the enjoyment of health is a subdivision of the right of personal security, one of the absolute rights of persons. 1 Bl. Comm. 120, 124. As to injuries affecting health, see 3 Bl. Comm. 122.

Bill of Health
See Bill. Board of Health
See Board.
Health Laws

Laws prescribing sanitary measures, and designed to promote or preserve the health of the community.

Health Officer

The officer charged with the execution and enforcement of health laws. The powers and duties of health officers are regulated by local laws.

Public Health

As one of the objects of the police power of the state, the "public health" means the prevailing healthful or sanitary condition of the general body of people or the community in mass, and the absence of any general or wide-spread disease or cause of mortality. The wholesome sanitary condition of the community at large. State ex rel. Pollock v. Becker, 289 Mo. 660, 233 S. W. 641, 649.

Sound Health

See "Sound."

HEALTHY. Free from disease or bodily ailment, or any state of the system peculiarly susceptible or liable to disease or bodily ailment. Bell v. Jeffreys, 35 N. C. 356.

HEARING.

In Equity Practice

The hearing of the arguments of the counsel for the parties upon the pleadings, or pleadings and proofs; corresponding to the trial of an action at law.

The word has an established meaning as applicable to equity cases. It means the same thing in those cases that the word "trial" does in cases at law. And the words "final hearing" have long been used to designate the trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed "interlocutory." Albery v. Villas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am. Rep. 166.

A "hearing" is technically the trial of the case, including the introduction of the evidence, the argument of the solicitors, and the decree of the chancellor. State ex rel. Case v. Sehorn, 283 Mo. 558, 223 S. W. 564, 690; State v. State Road Commission, 100 W. Va. 331, 131 S. E. 7, 8; Chicago Ry. Equipment Co. v. Blair (C. C. A.) 20 F.(2d) 10, 11; McClintock v. Lankford, 145 Ark. 554, 224 S. W. 458, 490; American Grain Separator Co. v. Twin City Separator Co. (C. C. A.) 202 F. 262, 265.

The word contemplates not only the privilege to be present when the matter is being considered, but the right to present one's contentions, and to support the same by proof and argument. State v. Milbollan, 50 N. D. 184, 195 N. W. 232, 235; Crucla v. Behrman, 147 La. 137, 84 So. 523, 525; Hanson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 32 Wyo. 337, 232 P. 1104, 1104.

The word is broad enough to include judicial examination of issue between the parties whether of law or of fact. Keown v. Keown, 231 Mass. 404, 121 N. E. 153, 154.

In Criminal Law

The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused.

Final Hearing

See Final.

Preliminary Hearing

The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the person accused. See Bish. New Cr. L. §§ 32, 225.

A "preliminary examination" is in no sense a trial for the determination of accused's guilt or innocence, but simply a course of procedure whereby a possible abuse of power may be prevented, and accused discharged or held to answer, as the facts warrant. State v. Langford, 240 S. W. 156, 158, 233 Mo. 456.

HEARSAY. A term applied to that species of testimony given by a witness who relates, not what he knows personally, but what others have told him, or what he has heard said by others. Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 28 L. Ed. 262; Morell v. Morell, 167 Ind. 179, 60 N. E. 1092; Stockton v. Williams, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 570; People v. Kraft, 91 Hun. 474, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1084.

Hearsay evidence is that which does not derive its value solely from the credit of the witness, but rests mainly on the veracity and competency of other persons. The very nature of the evidence shows its weakness, and it is admitted only in specified cases from necessity. Code Ga. 1852, § 3770 (Civ. Code 1910, § 5762); 1 Phil. Ev. 185.

Hearsay evidence is second-hand evidence, as distinguished from original evidence; it is the repetition at second-hand of what would be original evidence if given by the person who originally made the statement.

HEARTH MONEY. A tax levied in England by St. 14 Car. II. c. 10, consisting of two shillings on every hearth or stove in the kingdom. It was extremely unpopular, and was abolished by 1 W. & M. St. 1, c. 10. This tax was otherwise called "chimney money."

HEARTH SILVER. In English law. A species of modus or composition for tithes; Anstr. 323, 326; viz.: a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. In criminal law. A state of violent and uncontrollable rage engendered by a blow or certain other provocation given, which will reduce a homicide from the grade of murder to that of manslaughter. State v. Wiener, 66 Mo. 23; State v. Andrew, B.L. LAW DICT. (30 Ed.)
76 Mo. 101; State v. Bulling, 105 Mo. 204, 15 S. W. 367; State v. Johnson, 250 Mo. 250, 157 S. W. 348, 352; Disney v. State, 72 Fla. 492, 73 So. 598, 601.

It does not mean passion or anger which comes from an old grudge, or no immediate cause or provocation; but passion or anger suddenly aroused at the time by some immediate and reasonable provocation, by words or acts of one at the time. State v. Sexton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 189.

The phrase indicates no more than a state of mind different from that of a cool state of the blood. State v. Carlou, 206 Mo. 82, 199 S. W. 332, 334.

HEATSTROKE. Sunstroke; a sudden prostration resulting from exposure to excessive heat, regardless of the source from which the heat emanates. Mather v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 125 Minn. 186, 145 N. W. 963. A condition of the body produced by great heat. Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Moore (Tex. Civ. App.) 279 S. W. 516, 518. A depression of the vital powers, due to exposure to excessive heat, and manifesting itself as prostration with syncope, etc. (heat exhaustion), as prostration with insensibility, fever, etc. (true sunstroke), or rarely as acute meningitis; sunstroke or insolation (in the wider sense). Smith v. Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co., 211 Ky. 451, 277 S. W. 806, 807.

HEAVE TO. In maritime parlance and admiralty law. To stop a sailing vessel's headway by bringing her head "into the wind," that is, in the direction from which the wind blows. A steamer is said to be "hove to" when held in such a position that she takes the heaviest seas upon her quarter. The Hugo (D. C.) 57 Fed. 411.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the Thames below London bridge; so called because they generally fished at ebbing tide or water. 4 Hen. VII. c. 15; Jacob.

HEBBERTHEF. In Saxon law. The privilege of having the goods of a thief, and the trial of him, within a certain liberty. Cowell.

HEBBING-WEARS. A device for catching fish in ebbing water. St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

HEBDOMAD. A week; a space of seven days.

HEBDOMADIUS. A week's man; the canon or prebendary in a cathedral church, who had the peculiar care of the choir and the offices of it for his own week. Cowell.

HEBOTE. The king's edict commanding his subjects into the field.

HEBREW. Not the same as Yiddish, so that an alien, who claimed to be able to read Hebrew, but was examined as to his ability to read Yiddish, was not given a fair hearing, to determine whether he was within the class excluded under Act Feb. 5, 1917, § 2 (S US CA § 190), providing for a literacy test. U. S. v. Tod (C. O. A.) 294 F. 820, 822. See Yiddish.

HECCAGIUM. In feudal law. Rent paid to a lord of the fee for a liberty to use the engines called "hecks."

HECK. An engine to take fish in the river Ouse. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 18.

HEDA. A small haven, wharf, or landing place.

HEDAGIUM. Toll or customary dues at the hith or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which exemption was granted by the crown to some particular persons and societies. Wharton; Cowell.

HEDGE. See Hedging.

HEDGE-BOTE. An allowance of wood for repairing hedges or fences, which a tenant or lessee has a right to take off the land let or demised to him. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 15, 8 Am. Dec. 287.

HEDGE-PRIEST. A vagabond priest in olden time.

A hedge-parson: specifically, in Ireland, formerly, a priest who has been admitted to orders directly from a hedge-school, without preparation in theological studies at a regular college. Cent. Dict.

The term "hedge," as used in the milling business, means when the miller enters into a contract for the delivery of flour at a future date, he buys wheat on the stock exchange for future delivery, and when he purchases wheat for actual delivery from the grain elevator to fulfill the contract which he had previously made to furnish flour, he sells the wheat which he has bought on the stock exchange. Bluefield Milling Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 194 W. Va. 190, 129 S. E. 635, 55 A. L. R. 635.
HEEL BLANK. In the nomenclature of the art of building heels, the term "heel blank" or heel base is applied to several heel lifts cemented together, forming the heel of the heel minus the rand and a bottom or finishing lift. Brockton Heel Co. v. International Shoe Co. (D. C.) 19 F. (2d) 145.

HEEL LOG. In the nomenclature of the art of building heels, the term "heel log" is applied to a succession of heel lifts coated with an adhesive, piled one upon the other, to which pressure has been applied, making a log of some indeterminate length. Brockton Heel Co. v. International Shoe Co. (D. C.) 19 F. (2d) 145.

HEEL LOG SECTION. In the nomenclature of the art of building heels, a portion of a heel log of any convenient length. Brockton Heel Co. v. International Shoe Co. (D. C.) 19 F. (2d) 145.

HEELEER. An opprobrious term, meaning in common acceptation a person who is the lackey or hangener of another, and in a political sense an unscrupulous and disreputable person. Winnisboro Cotton Oil Co. v. Carson (Tex. Civ. App.) 135 S. W. 1002, 1008.

HEGEMONY. The leadership of one among several independent confederate states.

HEGIRA. The epoch or account of time used by the Arabsians and the Turks, who begin the Mohammedan era and computation from the day that Mohammed was compelled to escape from Mecca to Medina which happened on the night of Thursday, July 15, A. D. 622, under the reign of the Emperor Heraclius. Townsend, Dict. Dates; Wilson, Gloss. The era begins July 16. The word is sometimes spelled hejira but the former is the ordinary usage. It is derived from kijrah, in one form or another, an oriental term denoting flight, departure.

The flight of Mohammed from Mecca. Webster, Dict.

HEGUMENOS. The leader of the monks in the Greek Church.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf. State v. Papillon, 139 La. 791, 72 So. 249; 2 East, P. C. 616. And see State v. McMinn, 34 Ark. 162; Mundell v. Hammond, 40 Vt. 645.

HEIR. At Common Law

An heir is primarily a person related to another by blood, who would take the latter's real estate if he died intestate. Morse v. Ballou, 132 Me. 124, 90 A. 1091. This meaning of the word, however, is now largely affected by statute. Newby v. Anderson, 106 Kan. 47, 138 P. 483.

A gift of personality to "heirs" or "lawful heirs" or "heirs at law," whether to one's own heirs or to heirs of another, is to those who would be entitled to take under the statute of distribution. In re Carter's Will, 99 Vt. 480, 134 A. 551, 553, 61 A. L. R. 1095; Shannon v. Shannon, 101 N. J. Eq. 835, 139 A. 173; Everett v. Griffin, 174 N. C. 105, 93 S. E. 474, 475.

As applied to a gift of personal estate, the word "heirs" is not a term of art, and its office as a word of limitation is by waving and dubious analogy only. In re Evans' Will, 234 N. Y. 42, 138 N. E. 233, 234.

Moreover, the term is frequently used in a popular sense to designate a successor to property either by will or by law. Wallace v. Privett, 198 Cal. 746, 247 P. 905, 907. See also. Union Trust Co. v. Shoemaker, 172 Ill. App. 305, decree affirmed 285 Ill. 564, 101 N. E. 1050; Nickerson v. Hoover, 70 Ind. App. 330, 115 N. E. 588, 590.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomem collectivem, as well as a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word heirs. 1 Rolbe, Abr. 233; Ambl. 453; Oro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burr. 38. But see 2 Prent. Est. 9, 10. See also, Heirs.

In the Civil Law

A universal successor in the event of death. He who actively or passively succeeds to the entire property or estate, rights and obligations, of a decedent, and occupies his place.
The term "heir" has a very different significance at common law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term is indiscriminately applied to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the "testamentary heir;" and the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy, called the "heir at law;" or "heir by intestacy." The executor of the common law in many respects corresponds to the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 57, 598; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 344.

The term "heir" has several significations. Sometimes it refers to one who has formally accepted a succession and taken possession thereof; sometimes to one who is called to succeed, but still retains the faculty of accepting or renouncing, and it is frequently used as applied to one who has formally renounced. Mumford v. Bowman, 25 La. Ann. 417.

In Scotch Law

The person who succeeds to the heritage or heritable rights of one deceased. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 75. The word has a more extended significance than in English law, comprehending not only those who succeed to lands, but successors to personal property also. Wharton.

In General

—Heir apparent. An heir whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided he outlive the ancestor: as in England the eldest son, or his issue, who must, by the course of the common law, be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. 2 Bl. Comm. 208; 1 Steph. Comm. 358; Jones v. Fleming, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 230. One who, before the death of the ancestor, is next in the line of succession, provided he be heir to the ancestor whenever he happens to die. Reese v. Stires, 57 N. J. Eq. 32, 103 A. 679. See, also, Apparent Heir.

—Heir at law. He who, after his ancestor dies intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seized. The same as "heir general." Forrest v. Porch, 100 Tenn. 301, 45 S. W. 676; In re Aspden's Estate, 2 Fed. Cas. 42; McKinley v. Stewart, 5 Kan. 394; Tevis v. Tevis, 250 Mo. 19, 167 S. W. 1003, 1006, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 865. The heir; at common law, that person who succeeds to the real estate in case of intestacy. Walker v. Walker, 283 Ill. 11, 118 N. E. 1014, 1019; Wilde v. Bell, 86 Conn. 610, 87 A. 8, 9. In its strict sense and technical import, the person or persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. Albright v. Albright, 116 Ohio St. 668, 157 N. E. 760, 762; Black v. Jones, 264 Ill. 548, 106 N. E. 462, 465, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1173. In a comprehensive and popular sense, one who inherits either real or personal property; Gris v. Hartford-Connecticut Trust Co., 100 Conn. 322, 213 A. 907, 908; Yelverton v. Yelverton, 192 N. C. 614, 135 S. E. 632, 635; next of kin: Meeker v. Forbes, 95 A. 887, 888, 84 N. J. Eq. 271; In re Phraher, 109 Misc. 257, 178 N. Y. S. 768, 772.

—Heir beneficiary. In the civil law. One who has accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Heirs are divided into two classes, according to the manner in which they accept the successions left to them, to-wit, unconditional and beneficiary heirs. Unconditional heirs are those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Beneficiary heirs are those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ. Code La. art. 883. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

—Heir by adoption. An adopted child, "who is in a limited sense made an heir, not by the law, but by the contract evidenced by the deed of adoption." In re Sessions' Estate, 70 Mich. 297, 38 N. W. 249, 14 Am. St. Rep. 500.

—Heir by custom. In English law. One whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English. Co. Litt. 140.

—Heir by devise. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the heres factus (q. v.) of the civil law.

—Heir collateral. One who is not lineally related to the decedent, but is of collateral kin; e. g., his uncle, cousin, brother, nephew.

—Heir conventional. In the civil law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract or settlement enabling him thereto.

—Heir, forced. One who cannot be disinherited. See Forced Heirs.
Heir general. An heir at law. The ordinary heir by blood, succeeding to all the lands. Forrest v. Porch, 106 Tenn. 391, 45 S. W. 676.

Heir institute. In Scotch law. One to whom the right of succession is ascertained by disposition or express deed of the deceased. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

Heir, irregular. In Louisiana. Irregular heirs are those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ. Code La. art. 878. When there are no direct or collateral relatives surviving the decedent, and the succession consequently devolves upon the surviving husband or wife, or illegitimate children, or the state, it is called an "Irregular succession."

Heir, legal. In the civil law. A legal heir is one who takes the succession by relationship to the decedent and by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ. Code La. arts. 877, 879. The term is also used in Anglo-American law in substantially the same sense, that is, the person to whom the law would give the decedent's property, real and personal, if he should die intestate. Kaiser v. Kaiser, 3 How. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 105; Waller v. Martin, 106 Tenn. 341, 61 S. W. 73, 82 Am. St. Rep. 882. In legal strictness, the term signifies one who would inherit real estate, but it is also used to indicate one who would take under the statute of distribution. Morse v. Ward, 92 Conn. 408, 103 A. 119, 120; Thompson v. Waits (Tex. Civ. App.) 159 S. W. 82, 83; New York Life Insurance & Trust Co. v. Winthrop, 237 N. Y. 93, 142 N. E. 451, 453, 61 A. L. R. 791.

Heir, male. In Scotch law. An heir institute, who, though not next in blood to the deceased, is his nearest male relation that can succeed to him. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 76. In English law, the nearest male blood-relation of the decedent, unless further limited by the words "of his body," which restrict the inheritance to sons, grandsons, and other male descendants in the right line. See Jordan v. Adams, 6 C. B. (N. S.) 764; Goodtitle v. Herrington, 1 East. 275; Ewan v. Cox, 9 N. J. Law, 14.

Heir of conquest. In Scotch law. One who succeeds to the deceased in conquest, i.e., lands or other heritable rights to which the deceased neither did nor could succeed as heir to his predecessor.

Heir of line. In Scotch law. One who succeeds lineally by right of blood; one who succeeds to the deceased in his heritage; i.e., lands and other heritable rights derived to him by succession as heir to his predecessor. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 8, p. 77.

Heir of provision. In Scotch law. One who succeeds as heir by virtue of a particular provision in a deed or instrument.

Heir of tailzie. In Scotch law. He on whom an estate is settled that would not have fallen to him by legal succession. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

Heir of the body. An heir begotten or borne by the person referred to, or a child of such heir; any lineal descendant of the decedent, excluding a surviving husband or wife, adopted children, and collateral relations; bodily heir. Ratliff v. Ratliffe, 152 Ky. 250, 206 S. W. 478, 479; Black v. Cartmell, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 103; Smith v. Pendell, 19 Conn. 112, 48 Am. Dec. 146; Bales v. Johnson, 106 Tenn. 249, 61 S. W. 289; Clarkson v. Hatton, 143 Mo. 47, 44 S. W. 761, 35 L. R. A. 748, 65 Am. St. Rep. 635; Houghton v. Kendall, 7 Allen (Mass.) 72; Roberts v. Ogbourne, 37 Ala. 178. The words "heirs of the body" may be used in either of two senses: In their unrestricted sense, as meaning the persons who from generation to generation become entitled by descent under the entail; and in the sense of heirs at law, or those persons who are descendants of him whom the statute of descent appoints to take intestate estate. Bunn v. Butler, 300 Ill. 289, 133 N. E. 246, 247. Unless the will discloses an intention to the contrary, the term "heirs of the body" is not synonymous with children. Clark v. Cammack, 216 Ala. 346, 113 So. 270, 271; Scruggs v. Mayberry, 135 Tenn. 556, 188 S. W. 207, 211. And ordinarily, such words are words of limitation and not of purchase. Kirby v. Hulett, 171 Ky. 257, 192 S. W. 63, 65; Mylln v. Hurst, 239 Pa. 77, 102 A. 429, 430; Allen v. South Penn Oil Co., 72 W. Va. 155, 77 S. E. 905, 906; contra: Owen v. Trail, 302 Mo. 292, 293 S. W. 690, 701. The words are sometimes deemed equivalent to "issue" or "descendants; Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. v. Bridgham, 42 R. I. 101, 106 A. 149, 152, 5 A. L. R. 185; Hickox v. Klaholt, 291 Ill. 544, 126 N. E. 106, 108; Turner v. Monteiro, 127 Va. 537, 103 S. E. 572, 575, 13 A. L. R. 383; Parrish v. Hodge, 178 N. C. 133, 100 S. E. 256; and sometimes not; in re English's Estate, 270 Pa. 1, 112 A. 913, 914; Harrington v. Freeman, 201 Ky. 135, 255 S. W. 1084.

Heir presumptive. The person who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, in the present circumstances of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child. 2 Bl. Comm. 208; 1 Steph. Comm. 358; Jones v. Fleming, 37 Hun. (N. Y.) 230; Reese v. Stires, 57 N. J. Eq. 32, 103 A. 679, 681. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relative of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the death of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, when he has accepted or renounced it. La. Civ. Code, art. 880.

—Heir special. In English law. The issue in tail, who claims per formam doni; by the form of the gift.

—Heir substitute, in a bond. In Scotch law. He to whom a bond is payable expressly in case of the creditor’s decease, or after his death. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

—Heir testamentary. In the civil law. One who is named and appointed heir in the testament of the decedent. This name distinguishes him from a legal heir, (one upon whom the law casts the succession,) and from a conventional heir, (one who takes it by virtue of a previous contract or settlement.)

—Heir unconditional. In the civil law and in Louisiana. One who inherits without any reservation, or without making an inquesty, whether his acceptance be express or tacit. Distinguished from heir beneficiary. La. Civ. Code, art. 882.

—Heirs and assigns. Ordinarily, words of limitation and not of purchase;—the technical expression necessary at common law to express a fee-simple gift, which still has that meaning whenever used, though its use is not necessary. In re Tamargo, 220 N. Y. 225, 115 N. E. 402, 463.

—Joint heirs. Co-heirs. The term is also applied to those who are or will be heirs to both of two designated persons at the death of the survivor of them, the word “joint” being here applied to the ancestors rather than the heirs. See Gardiner v. Fay, 182 Mass. 492, 65 N. E. 825.

—Living heirs. Technically words of description instead of purchase. Johnson v. Coler, 187 Iowa, 734, 174 N. W. 654, 655. Under a will giving the testator’s wife an estate for life, at her death all the property to be equally divided between “our living children or to their living heirs,” the words “living heirs” should be given their technical meaning as including all the legal heirs of the deceased children of testator that died after the death of testator. Potter v. Potter, 306 Ill. 37, 35 N. E. 425, 427.

—Right heir. This term was formerly used, in the case of estates tail, to distinguish the preferred heir, to whom the estate was limited, from the heirs in general, to whom, on the failure of the preferred heir and his line, the remainder over was usually finally limited. With the abolition of estates tail, the term has fallen into disuse, but when still used, in modern law, it has no other meaning than “heir at law.” Brown v. Wadsworth, 108 N. Y. 225, 61 N. E. 250; Ballentine v. Wood, 42 N. J. Eq. 502, 9 A. 582; McCrea’s Estate, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 449.

HEIRDOM. Succession by inheritance.

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called “co-heiresses,” or “co-heirs.”

HEIRLOOMS. Such goods and chattels as, contrary to the nature of chattels, shall go by special custom to the heir along with the inheritance, and not to the executor. The termination “loom” (Sax.) signifies a limb or member; so that an heirloom is nothing else but a limb or member of the inheritance. They are generally such things as cannot be taken away without damaging or dismembering the freehold; such as deer in a park, doves in a cote, deeds and charters, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 427.

This word seems to be compounded of heir, and loom, that is, a frame, viz. to weave in. Some derive the word loom from the Saxon loma, or ge-loma, which signifies utensils or vessels generally. However, this may be, the word loom, by time, is HEIRS. Technically, those persons designated by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. Potter v. Potter, 306 Ill. 37, 137 N. E. 425, 426. A word used in deeds of conveyance, (either solely, or in connection with others,) where it is intended to pass a fee. It is generally a word of limitation, and is not to be construed as a word of purchase unless there are other controlling words showing such intention by the person using it. Peacock v. McClusky, 296 Ill. 87, 129 N. E. 561, 563; Blue v. Travis, 132 Ky. 700, 154 S. W. 15, 16; McMahon v. Schowengerdt (Mo.) 137 S. W. 605, 606; Ryan v. Ryan, 188 Ark. 369, 211 S. W. 576, 1930; 34 Chitty's Est., 245 Pa. 529, 91 A. 939; Hunting v. Jones (Tex. Civ. App.) 133 S. W. 528, 590; In re Barker, 230 N. Y. 364, 130 N. E. 579, 582. See also, Heir.

In the word "heirs" is comprehended the value of heirs in infinitum. Co. Litt. 70, 71; Larue v. La- rew, 146 Va. 134, 135 S. E. 529, 539; Peacock v. Mc- Clusky, 296 Ill. 87, 129 N. E. 561, 563.

In Illinois, and in the United States generally, the word "heirs" may have different meanings, just as under the English law the singular form, "heir," might have different meanings, but, if there is no context, the word "heirs" must be held to indicate the indefinite succession by inheritance. Etta Life Ins. Co. v. Hoppin (C. C. A.) 214 F. 928, 932. Under the terms of particular wills, however, Old Colony Trust Co. v. Jackson, 243 Mass. 543, 137 N. E. 874, 875; Branch v. De Wolf, 38 R. I. 395, 54 A. 887, 889; or under statutes abolishing the rule in Shelley's Case, 138 Mich. 383, 147 N. W. 550, 555, Ann. Cas. 1906A, 802; it may be a word of purchase, and is frequently deemed synonymous with "children." Cuticute v. Mills, 97 Ohio St. 132, 119 N. E. 200, 201; Van Duunen v. Sharrar, 156 Iowa, 1082, 157 N. W. 97, 98; Guy v. Pruitt, 231 Ala. 422, 104 So. 856, 857; Texas Co. v. Maeder (Tex. Civ. App.) 243 S. W. 391, 395; Conover v. Cade, 184 Ind. 504, 142 N. E. 7, 12; Davenport v. Hickey (C. C. A.) 263 F. 833, 834; Gillilant v. Gilliland, 278 Mo. 99, 223 S. W. 346, 351; Walcot v. Robinson, 214 Mass. 172, 100 N. E. 119; Bryd v. Henderson, 139 Miss. 143, 104 So. 100, 102; Driskill v. Carwile, 145 Va. 116, 123 S. E. 773, 774; Slack v. Leberman, 154 N. Y. S. 459, 491, 129 App. Div. 92; Williams v. J. C. Armiger & Bro., 129 Md. 222, 98 A. 542, 544.

A devise or bequest to "heirs" primarily means those who are heirs at the testator's death, and it is only when a contrary intention appears that this presumption fails. In re Bump's Will, 254 N. Y. 61, 136 N. E. 295, 296; Brian v. Taylor, 129 Md. 164, 98 A. 532, 533; In re Frohlem's Estate, 156 Minn. 335, 219 N. W. 788, 789; Schlaifer v. Lee, 117 Miss. 701, 78 So. 700, 702; Dorrance v. Green, 41 R. I. 444, 104 A. 12, 14; Simeon v. Ward, 78 N. E. 533, 103 A. 310, 311.

Heirs at law shall not be disinherited by conjecture, but only by express words or necessary implication. Schoull, Wills § 479.

HEIRSHIP. The quality or condition of being heir, or the relation between the heir and his ancestor. It is a legal right, regulated by law, to be enjoyed subject to the provisions of the statute. Winke v. Olson, 164 Wis. 427, 160 N. W. 104, 109.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Bell; Hope, Minor Pr. 538; Erskine, Inst. 3, 8, 13-17.

HELD. In reference to the decision of a court, decided. Also see Hold.

HELL. The name formerly given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich. Dict.

HELM. Thatch or straw; a covering for the head in war; a coat of arms bearing a crest; the tilter or handle of the rudder of a ship.

HELOWE-WALL. The end-wall covering and defending the rest of the building. Porch. Antiq. 573.

Helsing. A Saxon brass coin, of the value of a half-penny.

Hemiplegia. In medical jurisprudence. Unilateral paralysis; paralysis of one side of the body, commonly due to a lesion in the brain, but sometimes originating from the spinal cord, as in "Brown-Squard's paralysis," unilateral paralysis with crossed anes- thesia. In the cerebral form, the hemiplegia is sometimes "alternate" or crossed, that is, occurring on the opposite side of the body from the initial lesion.

If the disease comes on rapidly or suddenly, it is called "quick" hemiplegia; if slowly or gradually, "chronic." The former variety is more apt to affect the mental faculties than the latter; but, where hemiplegia is complete, the operations of the mind are generally much impaired. See Baughman v. Baughman, 23 Kan. 438, 4 P. 1063.

Hemoldborn, or Helmelborn. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo-Saxon law extant. Wharton.

Henceforth. A word of futurity, which, as employed in legal documents, statutes, and the like, always imports a continuity of action or condition from the present time forward, but excludes all the past. Thomson v. American Surety Co., 170 N. Y. 168, 62 N. E. 1073; Opinion of Chief Justice, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 235, note.

Henchman. A page; an attendant; a herald. See Barnes v. State, 88 Md. 347, 41 A. 781. A footman; one who holds himself at the bidding of another. It has come to mean here a political follower; used in a rather bad sense.

HENEDPENNY. A customary payment of money instead of hens at Christmas; a composition for eggs. Cowell.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday Book.

HENGHEN. In Saxon law. A prison, a goal, or house of correction.

HENGWYTE. Sax. In old English law. An acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I. is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HEORDFETE, or HUDFEST. In Saxon law. A master of a family, keeping house, distinguished from a lower class of freemen, viz., folceras, (folgaris,) who had no habitations of their own, but were house-retainers of their lords.

HEORDPENNY. Peter-pence (q. v.).

HEORDWERCH. In Saxon law. The service of herdsmen, done at the will of their lord.

HEPBURN ACT. The name commonly given to an act of Congress, June 29, 1906, amending §§ 1, 6, 14, 15, 16 and 20 of the Interstate Commerce Act, Feb. 4, 1887, and adding §§ 16a and 24 thereto (49 USCA §§ 1, 6, 11, 14, 15, 16, 16a, 16b).

HEPTARCHY. A government exercised by seven persons, or a nation divided into seven governments. In the year 560, seven different monarchies had been formed in England by the German tribes, namely, that of Kent by the Jutes; those of Sussex, Wessex, and Essex by the Saxons; and those of East Anglia, Bernicia, and Deira by the Angles. To these were added, about the year 586, an eighth, called the "Kingdom of Mercia," also founded by the Angles, and comprehending nearly the whole of the heart of the kingdom. These states formed what has been designated the "Anglo-Saxon Octarchy," or more commonly, though not so correctly, the "Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy," from the custom of speaking of Deira and Bernicia under the single appellation of the "Kingdom of Northumberland." Wharton.

HERALD. In ancient law, a herald was a diplomatic messenger who carried messages between kings or states, and especially proclamations of war, peace, or truce. In English law, a herald is an officer whose duty is to keep genealogical lists and tables, adjust armorial bearings, and regulate the ceremonies at royal coronations and funerals.

HERALDRY. The art, office, or science of heralds. Also an old and obsolete abuse of buying and selling precedence in the paper of causes for hearing.

HERALDS' COLLEGE. In England. An ancient royal corporation, first instituted by Richard III. in 1485. It comprises three kings of arms, six heralds, and four marshals or pursuivants of arms, together with the earl marshal and a secretary. The heralds' books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. The heralds' office is still allowed to make grants of arms and to permit change of names. 3 Starkie, Ev. 843; Wharton.

HERBAGE. In English law. An easement or liberty, which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground. Feed for cattle in fields and pastures. Bract. fol. 222; Co. Litt. 48; Shep. Touch. 67. A right to herbage does not include a right to cut grass, or dig potatoes, or pick apples. Simpson v. Coe, 4 N. H. 393.

HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS. The first crop of grass or hay, in opposition to aftermath or second cutting. Paroch. Antig. 459.

HERBENER, or HARBINGER. An officer in the royal house, who goes before and allot the noblemen and those of the household their lodgings; also an innkeeper.

HERBERGAIUM. Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERGARE. To harbor; to entertain.

HERBERGATUS. Harbored or entertained in an inn. Cowell.

HERBERY, or HERBURY. An inn. Cowell.

HERCIA. A harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 77.

HERCIARE. To harrow. 4 Inst. 270.

HERCIATURA. In old English law. Harrowing; work with a harrow. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 2.

HERCISCUNDA. In the civil law. To be divided. Familia heriscunnda, an inheritance to be divided. Actio familia heriscunnda, an action for dividing an inheritance. Erosicunda is more commonly used in the civil law. Dig. 10, 2; Inst. 3, 28, 4; 1d. 4, 6, 20.

HERD, n. An indefinite number, more than a few, of cattle, sheep, horses, or other animals of the larger sorts, assembled and kept together as one drove and under one care and management. Brim v. Jones, 13 Utah, 440, 45 P. 352.

HERD, v. To tend, take care of, manage, and control a herd of cattle or other animals, implying something more than merely driving them from place to place. Phipps v. Grover, 9 Idaho, 415, 75 P. 65; Fry v. Hubner, 35 Or. 194, 57 P. 420.

HERDER. One who herds or has charge of a herd of cattle, in the senses above defined. See Hooker v. McAllister, 12 Wash. 46, 40 P. 617; Underwood v. Birdsell, 6 Mont. 142, 9 P. 922; Rev. Codes N. D. 1889, § 1544a (Comp. Laws 1913, § 2306).

HERDEWICH. A grange or place for cattle or husbandry. Mon. Angl. pt. 3.

HERDWERCH, HEORDWERCH. Herdsmen’s work, or customary labor, done by shepherds and inferior tenants, at the will of the lord. Cowell.

HEREBANNUM. In old English law. A proclamation summoning the army into the field.

A mulct or fine for not joining the army when summoned. Spelman.

A tax or tribute for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREBOTE. The royal edict summoning the people to the field. Cowell.

HEREAD. In Spanish law. A piece of land under cultivation; a cultivated farm, real estate; an inheritance or heirship.

HEREDERO. In Spanish law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. “Heres censeatur cum defuncto una cademque persona.” Las Partidas, 7, 9, 13. See Emerle v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 2 P. 433.

HEREEDITAGIUM. In Sicilian and Neapolitan law. That which is held by hereditary right; the same with hereditamentum (hereditament) in English law. Spelman.

At common law corporeal hereditaments were physical objects, comprehended under the term land, and were said to lie in livery, while incorporeal hereditaments existed only in contemplation of law, were said to lie in grant and were affiliated with chattel interests. National Supply Co. v. McLeod, 116 Kan. 477, 227 P. 350.

The term includes a few rights unconnected with land, but it is generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, and is therefore employed in conveyances after the words “lands” and “tenements,” to include everything of the nature of reality which they do not cover. Sweet.

Corporal Hereditaments

Substantial permanent objects which may be inherited. The term “land” will include all such. 2 Bl. Comm. 17; Sox v. Miracle, 35 N. D. 458, 160 N. W. 716, 719; Whitlock v. Greacen, 48 N. J. Eq. 356, 21 A. 944; Cary v. Daniels, 5 Mete. (Mass.) 298; Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 700.

Incorporeal Hereditaments

Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable and not tangible or visible. 2 Wood. Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Bl. Comm. 20; 1 Wash. Real Prop. 10; Hegem v. Pendennis Club (Ky.) 64 S. W. 465; Whitlock v. Greacen, 48 N. J. Eq. 356, 21 A. 944; Stone v. Stone, 1 N. Y. I. 428. A right growing out of, or concerning, or annexed to, a corporeal thing, but not the substance of the thing itself. Houston v. Cox, 105 Kan. 73, 172 P. 992.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREDITARY DISEASE. Physical ailment transmitted or transmissible from parent to child in consequence of the infection of the former or the presence of the disease in his system, and without exposure of the latter to any fresh source of infection or contagion. South Atlantic Life Ins. Co. v. Hurt’s Adm’x, 115 Va. 398, 79 S. E. 401, 404.

HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN. The crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been descendent; and so continues, in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by parliament; but, notwithstanding such limitation, the crown retains its descendent quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited. 1 Bl. Comm. 191.

HEREDITARY SUCCESSION. Inheritance by law; title by descent; the title whereby a person, on the death of his ancestor, acquires his estate as his heir at law. Barclay v. Cameron, 25 Tex. 241; In re Donahue's Estate, 36 Cal. 332; Moffett v. Conley, 63 Okl. 3, 163 P. 118, 120.

HEREDITARY. That biological law by which all living beings tend to repeat themselves in their descendants. Previtt v. State, 106 Miss. 82, 63 So. 390, 391, 6 A. L. R. 1476.

HEREFARE. Sax. A going into or with an army; a going out to war, (profecto martialis) an expedition. Spelman.

HEREGEAT. A heriot, (q. v.)

HEREGELD. Sax. In old English law. A tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Spelman.

HEREMONES. Followers of an army.

HERENACH. An archdeacon. Cowell.

HERES. Heir; an heir. A form of heres, very common in the civil law. See Hieres.

HERESCHIP. In old Scotch law. Theft or robbery. 1 Pite. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, pp. 26, 89.

HERESLITA, HERESSA, HERESSIZ. A hired soldier who departs without license. 4 Inst. 125.

HEResy. In English law. An offense against religion, consisting not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. 4 Bl. Comm. 44, 45. An opinion on divine subjects devised by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. 1 Hale, P. C. 384. This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, and is no longer punishable by the secular law. 4 Steph. Comm. 233.

HERETOCH. A general, leader, or commander; also a baron of the realm. Du Fresne.

HERE TOFORE. This word simply denotes time past, in distinction from time present or time future, and has no definite and precise signification beyond this. Andrews v. Thayer, 40 Conn. 157; Miller v. Feather, 176 Ky. 268, 196 S. W. 448, 451; Miller's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. City of Austin (Tex. Civ. App.) 210 S. W. 825, 827.

HERE TUM. In old records. A court or yard for drawing up guards or military retinue. Cowell.

HERE ZELD. In Scotch law. A gift or present made or left by a tenant to his lord as a token of reverence. Skene.

HERE GE. In Saxo n law. Offenders who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit depredations.

HERIGALDS. In old English law. A sort of garment. Cowell.

HERIOT. In English law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land.

Heriots are divided into heriot service and heriot custom. The former expression denotes such as are due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, and therefore amount to little more than a mere rent; the latter arises upon no special reservation whatever, but depend solely upon immemorial usage and custom. 2 Bl. Comm. 422. See Adams v. Morse, 51 Me. 502.

HERISCHLULD. In old English law. A species of military service, or knight's fee. Cowell.

HERISCHULDA. In old Scotch law. A fine or penalty for not obeying the proclamation made for warfare. Skene.

HERISCINDIUM. A division of household goods. Blount.

HERISTAL. The station of an army; the place where a camp is pitched. Spelman.

HERE TACLE. Capable of being taken by descent. A term chiefly used in Scotch law, where it enters into several phrases.

HERE TABL E BOND. A bond for a sum of money to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge. 1 Ross, Conv. 76; 2 Ross, Conv. 324.

HERE TABL E JURIS DICTI ONS. Grants of criminal jurisdiction formerly bestowed on great families in Scotland, to facilitate the administration of justice. Whishaw. Abolished in effect by St. 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Tolmins.

HERE TABL E OBLIGATION. In Louisiana. An obligation is heritable when the heirs and assigns of one party may enforce the performance against the heirs of the other. Civ. Code La. art. 1907.

HERE TABL E RIGHTS. In Scotch law. Rights of the heir; all rights to land or whatever is connected with land, as mills, fishings, tithes, etc.

HERITAGE. In the Civil Law

Every species of immovable which can be the subject of property; such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier, No. 472.
In Scotch Law

Land, and all property connected with land; real estate, as distinguished from movables, or personal estate. Bell.

HERITOR. In Scotch law. A proprietor of land. 1 Kames, Eq. Pref.

HERMANDAD. In Spanish law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power. Bouyer.

HERMAPHRODITE. In medical jurisprudence. A person of doubtful or double sex; one possessing, really or apparently, and in more or less developed form, some or all of the genital organs of both sexes.

Hermaproditus tam masculo quam feminam comparatur, secundum praeventalem sexus incalculos. An hermaphrodit is to be considered male or female according to the predominance of the exciting sex. Co. Litt. 8; Bract. fol. 6.

HERMENEUPTICS. The science or art of construction and interpretation. By the phrase "legal hermeneutics" is understood the systematic body of rules which are recognized as applicable to the construction and interpretation of legal writings.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERUS. Lat. A master. Servus factit ut herus det, the servant does [the work] in order that the master may give [him the wages agreed on.] Herus dat ut servus faciat, the master gives [or agrees to give, the wages] in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing [the work.] 2 Bl. Comm. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HEST CORN. In old records. Corn or grain given or devoted to religious persons or purposes. 2 Mon. Angl. 367b; Cowell.

HESTA, or HESTHA. A little loaf of bread. A capon or young cockerel.

HETÆRARCHA. The head of a religious house; the head of a college; the warden of a corporation.

HETÆRIA. In Roman law. A company, society, or college.

HEUVELBORCH. Sax. In old English law. A surety, (warrentus.)

HEYLODE. In old records. A customary burden upon inferior tenants, for mending or repairing hays or hedges.

HEYMECTUS. A hay-net; a net for catching conies. Cowell.

HIBERNAGIUM. The season for sowing winter corn. Cowell.

HIDAGE. An extraordinary tax formerly payable to the crown for every hide of land. This taxation was levied, not in money, but provision of armor, etc. Cowell.

HIDALGO. In Spanish law. A noble; a person entitled to the rights of nobility. By hidalgos are understood men chosen from good situations in life, (de buenos lugares,) and possessed of property, (alga.) White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 5, c. 1.

HIDE. In old English law. A measure of land, being as much as could be worked with one plow. It is variously estimated at from 60 to 100 acres, but was probably determined by local usage. Another meaning was as much land as would support one family or the dwellers in a mansion-house. Also a house; a dwelling-house. A hide was also employed as a unit of taxation. 1 Poll. & Mal. 347, such tax being called hidegild.

HIDE LANDS. In Saxon law. Lands belonging to a hide; that is, a house or mansion. Spelman.

HIDEL. In old English law. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIERARCHY. Originally, government by a body of priests. Now, the body of officers in any church or ecclesiastical institution, considered as forming an ascending series of ranks or degrees of power and authority, with the correlative subjection, each to the one next above. Derivatively, any body of men, taken in their public capacity, and considered as forming a chain of power, as above described.

HIGH. This term, as used in various compound legal phrases, is sometimes merely an addition of dignity, not importing a comparison; but more generally it means exalted, either in rank or location, or occupying a position of superiority, and in a few instances it implies superiority in respect to importance, size, or frequency or publicity of use, e.g., “high seas,” “highway.”

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. See Court of High Commission.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See Court of Admiralty.

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. See Court of Delegates.

HIGH COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. See Court of Errors and Appeals.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. See Supreme Court of Judicature.

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. See Parliament.

HIGH DEGREE OF CARE AND DILIGENCE. See Care.

HIGHER AND LOWER SCALE. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature there are two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. The lower scale applies (unless the court otherwise orders) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the king’s bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation is under £1,000. The higher scale applies in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained is an injunction. Sweet.

HIGHEST PROVED VALUE. In an action of trover the amount which the jury from a consideration of all the evidence, may find to be the highest value of the property during the period between the conversion and the trial. Elder v. Woodruff Hardware & Mfg. Co., 16 Ga. App. 255, 85 S. E. 268.

HIGHNESS. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I, were not usually saluted with the title of “Majesty,” but with that of “Highness.” The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of “Highness.” Wharton.

Highway refers to roadway or street which can be used for travel, as distinguished from way upon which road can be or is being constructed. Allen v. Jones, 47 S. D. 565, 201 N. W. 352; Town of Kenwood Park v. Leonard, 177 Iowa, 327, 168 N. W. 656, 659.

There is a difference in the shade of meaning conveyed by two uses of the word. Sometimes it signifies right of free passage, in the abstract, not importing anything about the character or construction of the way. Thus, a river is called a "highway," and it has been not unusual for congress, in granting a privilege of building a bridge, to declare that it shall be a public highway. Again, it has reference to some system of law authorizing the taking a strip of land, and preparing and devoting it to the use of travelers. In this use it imports a roadway upon the soil, constructed under the authority of these laws. Abbott.

Commissioners of Highways

Public officers appointed in the several counties and municipalities, in many states, to take charge of the opening, altering, repair, and vacating of highways within their respective jurisdictions.

Common Highway

A road to be used by the community at large for any purpose of transit or traffic. Ham. N. P. 239; Railway Co. v. State, 23 Fla. 546, 8 So. 158, 11 Am. St. Rep. 395.

Highway Acts, or Laws

The body or system of laws governing the laying out, repair, and use of highways.

Highway Crossing

A place where the track of a railroad crosses the line of a highway.

Highway-rate

In English law. A tax for the maintenance and repair of highways, chargeable upon the same property that is liable to the poor-rate.

Highway Robbery

See Robbery.

Highway Tax

A tax for and applicable to the making and repair of highways. Stone v. Bean, 15 Gray (Mass.) 44.

Public Highway

One under the control of and kept by the public, established by regular proceedings for the purpose, or generally used by the public for twenty years, or dedicated by the owner of the soil and accepted by the proper authorities and for the maintenance of which they are responsible. State v. Gross, 119 N. C. 568, 26 S. E. 91. It includes roads, streets, alleys, lanes, courts, places, trails, and bridges, laid out or erected as such by the public, or, if laid out and erected by others, dedicated or abandoned to the public, or made such in actions for the partition of real property. Pol. Code Cal. § 2618; Patterson v. Munyan, 53 Cal. 128, 29 P. 250.

Royal Highways

There were four royal highways in Yorkshire, three by land and one by water, where the king claimed all forfeitures. Mattl. Donned. Book and Beyond 87.

HIGLER. In English law. A hawkier or peddler. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish law. A receipt given by an heir of a decedent, settling forth what property he has received from the estate.

HIIS TESTIBUS. Words formerly used in deeds, signifying these being witness. They have been disused since Henry VIII. Co. Litt.; Cowell.

HIKENILD STREET. One of the four great Roman roads of Britain. More commonly called "Tkenilid Street."

HILARY RULES. A collection of orders and forms extensively modifying the pleading and practice in the English superior courts of common law, established in Hilary term, 1834, Stimson.

HILARY TERM. In English law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st of January in each year. Superseded (1678) by Hilary sitting, which begin January 11th, and end on the Wednesday before Easter.

HINDENI HOMINES. A society of men. The Saxons ranked men into three classes, and valued them, as to satisfaction for injuries, etc., according to their class. The highest class were valued at 1,200s., and were called "twelf hindmen;" the middle class at 600s., and called "sevındmen;" the lowest at 200s., called "twynhindmen." Their wives were termed "hindas." Brompt. Leg. Alfred. c. 12.

HINDER AND DELAY. To hinder and delay is to do something which is an attempt to defraud, rather than a successful fraud; to put some obstacle in the path, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before the creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. See Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 582; Burdick v. Post, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 186; Crow v. Beardsley, 68 Mo. 439; Burnham v. Brennan, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 83.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.
It is not the law of India or of any defined region. It is the law of castes, class, orders and even families which the Hindus carry about with them. 17 L. Q. R. 209. See Bryces, Extension of Law in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-American Leg. Hist. 597; Tbert, Government of India; Sir W. Markby (1869); Mulla, Principles of Hindu Law.

HINE, or HIND. In old English law. A husbandry servant.

HINEFARE. In old English law. The loss or departure of a servant from his master. Domesday.

HINEGELD. A ransom for an offense committed by a servant. Cowell.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish law. A mortgage of real property.

HIRCISCUNDA. See Herciscunda.

HIRE, v. To purchase the temporary use of a thing, or to stipulate for the labor or services of another. See Hiring.

To engage in service for a stipulated reward, as to hire a servant for a year, or laborers by the day or month; to engage a man to temporary service for wages. To "employ" is a word of more enlarged signification. A man hired to labor is employed, but a man may be employed in a work who is not hired. McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y. 605; Carter-Mullaly Transfer Co. v. Angell (Tex. Civ. App.) 181 S. W. 237, 238; United States v. Blair-Murdock Co. (D. C.) 228 F. 77, 84.

For definitions of the various species of this class of contracts, under their Latin names, see Locutio and following titles.

HIRE, n. Compensation for the use of a thing, or for labor or services. Carr v. State, 50 Ind. 180; Learned-Lether Lumber Co. v. Fowler, 100 Ala. 169, 19 So. 396.

A bailment in compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

HIREMAN. A subject. Du Cange.

HIRER. One who hires a thing, or the labor or services of another person. Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 573, 15 L. R. A. 262.

HIRING. A contract by which one person grants to another either the enjoyment of a thing or the use of the labor and industry, either of himself or his servant, during a certain time, for a stipulated compensation, or by which one contracts for the labor or services of another about a thing bailed to him for a specified purpose. Code Ga. 1882, § 2085 (Civ. Code 1910, § 3476).

Hiring is a contract by which one gives to another the temporary possession and use of property, other than money, for reward, and the latter agrees to return the same to the former at a future time. Civ. Code Cal. § 1923; Comp. Laws N. D. 1913, § 6079; Comp. Laws S. D. 1929, § 1040.

Synonyms

"Hiring" and "borrowing" are both contracts by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer or borrower, and they differ only in this, that hiring is always for a price, stipend, or recompense, while borrowing is merely gratuitous. 2 Bl. Comm. 463; Neel v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 408, 26 S. W. 726.

HIRST, HURST. In old English law. A wood. Co. Litt. 4b.

HIS. This pronoun, generically used, may refer to a person of either sex. Danforth v. Emmons, 124 Me. 156, 128 A. 821, 823; Wilmette v. Brachic, 110 Ill. App. 356, affirmed 209 Ill. 621, 71 N. E. 41. Its use in a written instrument, in referring to a person whose Christian name is designated therein by a mere initial, is not conclusive that the person referred to is a male; it may be shown by parol that the person intended is a female. Bernlaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 P. 502.

HIS EXCELLENCY.

In English Law

The title of a viceroy, governor general, ambassador, or commander in chief.

In American Law

This title is given to the governor of Massachusetts by the constitution of that state; and it is commonly given, as a title of honor and courtesy, to the governors of the other states and to the president of the United States. It is also customarily used by foreign ministers in addressing the secretary of state in written communications.

HIS HONOR. A title given by the constitution of Massachusetts to the lieutenant governor of that commonwealth. Mass. Const. part 2, c. 2, § 2, art. 1. It is also customarily given to some inferior magistrates, as the mayor of a city.

HIS TESTIBUS. Lat. These being witnesses. The attestation clause in old deeds and charters.

HISSA. A lot or portion; a share of revenue or rent. Wilson's Gloss. Ind.

HITHERTO. In legal use, this term always restricts the matter in connection with which it is employed to a period of time already passed. Mason v. Jones, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 473.

HOLY ORDERS. In ecclesiastical law. The orders of bishops, (including archbishops,) priests, and deacons in the Church of England. The Roman canonists had the orders of bishop, (in which the pope and archbishops were included,) priest, deacon, subdeacon, psalmist, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius. 3 Steph. Comm. 55, and note a.

HOMAGE. In feudal law. A service (or the ceremony of rendering it) which a tenant was bound to perform to his lord on receiving investiture of a fee, or succeeding to it as heir, in acknowledgment of the tenure. It is described by Littleton as the most honorable service of reverence that a free tenant might do to his lord. The ceremony was as follows: The tenant, being ungirt and with bare head, knelt before the lord, the latter sitting, and held his hands extended and joined between the hands of the lord, and said: "I become your man (homo) from this day forward, of life and limb and earthly honor, and to you will be faithful and loyal, and bear you faith, for the tenements that I claim to hold of you, saving the faith that I owe unto our sovereign lord the king, so help me God." The tenant then received a kiss from the lord. Homage could be done only to the lord himself. Litt. § 85; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 1; Bract. fols. 77b, 78-80; Wharton.

"Homage" is to be distinguished from "fealty," another incident of feudalism, and which consisted in the solemn oath of fidelity made by the vassal to the lord, whereas homage was merely an acknowledgment of tenure. If the homage was intended to include fealty, it was called "liege homage," but otherwise it was called "simple homage." Brown.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. In feudal law. Homage was called by this name where a man and his ancestors had immemorially held of another and his ancestors by the service of homage, which bound the lord to warrant the title, and also to hold the tenant clear of all services to superior lords. If the tenant alienated in fee, his alienee was a tenant by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Litt. § 145; 2 Bl. Comm. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. A jury in a court-baron, consisting of tenants that do homage, who are to inquire and make presentments of the death of tenants, surrenders, admittances, and the like.

HOMAGE LIEGE. That kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman.

HOMAGER. One who does or is bound to do homage. Cowell.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO. A writ to the escheator commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the king's tenant, notwithstanding his homage not done. Fitzh. New. 269.

HOMAGIUM. L. Lat. Homage (q. v.).

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. Liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman. So called from ligando, (binding,) because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

Homagium, non per procuratores nec per litteras fieri potuit, sed in propria persona tam domini quam tenentis capi debet et fieri. Co. Litt. 68. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. In feudal law. Plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior. 1 Robertson's Car. V., Appendix, note 8.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE. To renounce homage. This was when a vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord; for which there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws. Bract. l. 2, c. 35, § 35.

HOMAGIUM SIMPLEX. In feudal law. Simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords. Harg. Co. Litt. note 55, lib. 2.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish law. The judge of a district. Also an arbitrator chosen by the parties to a suit. Also a man in good standing; one who is competent to testify in a suit.

HOME. That place in which one in fact resides with the intention of residence, or in which he has so resided, and with regard to which he retains residence or to which he intends to return. Dieley, Cond. L. 81. See Langhammer v. Munter, 80 Md. 518, 31 A. 300, 27 L. R. A. 330; King v. King, 155 Mo. 406, 56 S. W. 594; Dean v. Cannon, 37 W. Va. BL.LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)

HOME OFFICE. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries. As applied to a corporation, its principal office within the state or country where it was incorporated or formed. Vernon's Ann. Civ. St. art. 4716.

HOME PORT. In maritime law, the home port of a vessel is either the port where she is registered or enrolled, or the port at or nearest to which her owner usually resides, or, if there be more than one owner, the port at or nearest to which the husband, or acting and managing owner resides. White's Bank v. Smith, 7 Wall. 651, 19 L. Ed. 211; The Ellen Hoigate (D. C.) 30 F. 125; The Albany, 1 Fed. Cas. 285; Com. v. Ayer & Lord Tie Co., 77 S. W. 688, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 1068. But for some purposes any port where the owner happens at the time to be with his vessel is its home port. Case v. Woolley, 6 Dana (Ky.) 27, 32 Am. Dec. 54; Lever Transp. Co. v. Olinger, 205 Ala. 22, 87 So. 597, 598.

HOME RULE. In constitutional and statutory law, local self-government, or the right thereof. Attorney General v. Lowrey, 151 Mich. 639, 92 N. W. 298. In British politics, a programme or plan (or a more or less definitely formulated demand) for the right of local self-government for Ireland under the lead of an Irish national parliament. Lemaire v. Crockett, 116 Me. 263, 101 A. 302, 303.

HOME, or HOMME. L. Fr. Man; a man.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong. 2 Inst. 228.

HOMESOKEN, HOMSOKEN. See Hamesecken.

Business Homestead

In Texas, a place or property (distinct from the home of a family) used and occupied by the head of a family as a place to exercise his calling or business, which is exempt by law. Alexander v. Lovitt (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. 686; Ford v. Foegard (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 448; Spence v. State Nat. Bank of El Paso (Tex. Civ. App.) 294 S. W. 613, 623. A curious misnomer, the word "homestead" in this phrase having lost entirely its original meaning, and being retained apparently only for the sake of its remote and derivative association with the idea of an exemption.

Homestead Corporations

Corporations organized for the purpose of acquiring lands in large tracts, paying off incumbrances thereon, improving and subdividing them into homestead lots or parcels, and distributing them among the shareholders, and for the accumulation of a fund for such purposes. Civ. Code Cal. § 557.

Homestead Entry

See Entry.

Homestead Exemption Laws

Laws passed in most of the states allowing a householder or head of a family to designate a house and land as his homestead, and exempting the same homestead from execution for his general debts.
HOMICIDAL. Pertainning to homicide; relating to homicide, impelling to homicide; as a homicidal mania. (See Insanity.)

Homicide is not necessarily a crime. It is a necessary ingredient of the crimes of murder and manslaughter, but there are other cases in which homicide may be committed without criminal intent and without criminal consequences, as, where it is done in the lawful execution of a judicial sentence, in self-defense, or as the only possible means of arresting an escaping felon. The term “homicide” is neutral; while it describes the act, it pronounces no judgment on its moral or legal quality. See People v. Connors, 35 N. Y. S. 473, 13 Misc. 682.

Classification
Homicide is ordinarily classified as “justifiable,” “excusable,” and “felonious.” For the definitions of these terms, and of some other compound terms, see infra.

Culpable homicide
Described as a crime varying from the very lowest culpability, up to the very verge of murder. Lord Moncrieff, Arkley, 72.

Excusable homicide

The name itself imports some fault, error, or omission, so trivial, however, that the law excuses it from guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. 4 Bl. Comm. 123. It is of two sorts,—either per infortunium, by misadventure, or as defendendo, upon a sudden affray. Homicide per infortunium is where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; but, if death ensue from any unlawful act, the offense is manslaughter, and not misadventure. Homicide as defendendo is where a man kills another upon a sudden affray, merely in his own defense, or in defense of his wife, child, parent, or servant, and not from any vindictive feeling. 4 Bl. Comm. 123.

Felonious homicide
The wrongful killing of a human being, of any age or either sex, without justification or excuse in law; of which offense there are two degrees, manslaughter and murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 190; 4 Steph. Comm. 111.

Homicide by misadventure
The accidental killing of another, where the slayer is doing a lawful act, unaccompanied by any criminally careless or reckless conduct. State v. Miller, 9 Howst. (Del.) 664, 22 Atl. 137; U. S. v. Mesgher (C. C.) 37 F. 879. The same as “homicide per infortunium.” State v. McVor, 111 A. 615, 617, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 123; State v. Disalvo, 121 A. 651, 663, 2 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 222.

Homicide per infortunium
Homicide by misfortune, or accidental homicide; as where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another; a species of excusable homicide. 4 Bl. Comm. 182; 4 Steph. Comm. 101.

Homicide as defendendo
Homicide in self-defense; the killing of a person in self-defense upon a sudden affray, where the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant. 4 Bl. Comm. 183-186; 4 Steph. Comm. 103-105. A species of excusable homicide. Id.; 1 Russ. Crimes, 660.

Justifiable homicide
Such as is committed intentionally, but without any evil design, and under such circumstances of necessity or defense that one would be bound to relieve the party from any shadow of blame; as where a sheriff lawfully executes a sentence of death upon a malefactor, or where the killing takes place in the endeavor to prevent the commission of felony which could not be otherwise avoided. Moran v.
People, 183 Ill. 382, 66 N. E. 330; Kilpatrick v. Com., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 238; State v. Miller, 9 Houst. (Del.) 564, 22 Atl. 137; Richardson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 465. "Justifiable homicide" is the taking of a human being by commandament of the law in execution of public justice; by permission of the law in advance of public justice; in self-defense; or in defense of habitation, property or person, against one who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony on either. Paramore v. State, 161 Ga. 165, 129 S. E. 775, 778.

Negligent homicide.

HOMICIDUM. Lat. Homicide (q. v.).

Homicidium ex justitia, homicide in the administration of justice, or in the execution of the sentence of the law.

Homicidium ex necessitate, homicide from inevitable necessity, as for the protection of one's person or property.

Homicidium ex casu, homicide by accident.

Homicidium ex voluntate, voluntary or willful homicide. Bract. fols. 1209, 121.

HOMINATIO. The mustering of men; the doing of homage.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAMMUM. A writ to take him that had taken any bond man or woman, and led him or her out of the country, so that he or she could not be reprieved according to law. Reg. Orig. 79.

HOMINE ELIGENDO. In old English law. A writ directed to a corporation, requiring them to make choice of a man to keep one part of the seal appointed for statutes merchant, when a former is dead, according to the statute of Acton Burnell. Reg. Orig. 178; Wharton.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. In English law. A writ which lay to reprieve a man out of prison, or out of the custody of any private person, in the same manner that chattels taken in distress may be reprieved. Brown.

HOMINES. Lat. In feudal law. Men; feudatory tenants who claimed a privilege of having their causes, etc., tried only in their lord's court. Paroch. Antiq. 15.

HOMINES LIGII. Liege men; feudal tenants or vassals, especially those who held immediately of the sovereign. 3 Bl. Comm. 367.

Hominum causa jus constitutum est. Law is established for the benefit of man.

HOMIPLAGIUM. In old English law. The maining of a man. Blount.

HOMME. Fr. Man; a man. The term "man" as sometimes used may include a woman or women. This is expressly stated in Civ. Code La. art. 3556, No. 1.

HOMMES DE FIEF. Fr. In feudal law. Men of the fief; feudal tenants; the peers in the lords' courts. Montesq., Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 27.

HOMMES FEODAUX. Fr. In feudal law. Feudal tenants; the same with hommes de fief (q. v.). Montesq., Esprit des Lois, liv. 28, c. 36.

HOMO. Lat. A man; a human being, male or female; a vassal, or feudal tenant; a retainer, dependent, or servant.

HOMO CHARTULARIUS. A slave unmanned by charter.

HOMO COMMENDATUS. In feudal law. One who surrendered himself into the power of another for the sake of protection or support. See Commendation.

HOMO ECCLESIASTICUS. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spelman.

HOMO EXERCITALIS. A man of the army, (exercitus;) a soldier.

HOMO FEODALIS. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee, (feodum,) or part of a fee. Spelman.

HOMO NOVUS. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spelman. Also one who, after conviction of a crime, had been pardoned, thus "making a new man of him."

HOMO PERTINENS. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal; one who belonged to the soil, (qui giese ad ecorbitur.)

Homo postes esse habilis et inhabitis diversi temporibus. 5 Coke, 38. A man may be capable and incapable at different times.

HOMO REGIUS. A king's vassal.

HOMO ROMANUS. 'A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations. Spelman.
HOMO TRIUM LITTERARUM. A man of the three letters; that is, the three letters, "m," "n," "r," the Latin word furus meaning "thief."

Homo vocabulum est nature; persona juris civilis. Man (homo) is a term of nature; person (persona) of civil law. Calvin.

HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish law. The tacit consent and approval inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and exentutory. Escriche.

HOMOLOGARE. In the civil law. To confirm or approve; to consent or assent; to confess. Calvin.

HOMOLOGATE. In modern civil law. To approve; to confirm; as a court homologates a proceeding. See Homologation. Literally, to use the same words with another; to say the like. Viales v. Gardenier, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 324. To assent to what another says or writes.

HOMOLOGATION.

In the Civil Law

Approval; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act. Merl. Répert. The term is also used in Louisiana. Hecker v. Brown, 104 La. 324, 29 So. 232.

In English Law

An estoppel in pais. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1026.

In Scotch Law

An act by which a person approves of a deed, the effect of which is to render that deed, though in itself defective, binding upon the person by whom it is homologated. Bell. Confirmation of a voidable deed.

HOMONYMIE. A term applied in the civil law to cases where a law was repealed, or laid down in the same terms or to the same effect, more than once. Cases of iteration and repetition. 2 Kent, Comm. 459, note.

HONDBABEND. Sax. Having in hand. See Handhabend.

HONESTE VIVERE. Lat. To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts to which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law, (Inst. 1, 1, 3; Bract. fols. 3, 3, b.) the others being *alterum non lacerare, (not to injure others,) and suum cuique tribuere, (to render to every man his due.)

HONESTUS. Lat. Of good character or standing. *Coram duobus vel pluribus virtus legalibus et honestiis, before two or more lawful and good men. Bract. fol. 61.

HONOR, n. To accept a bill of exchange, or to pay a note, check, or accepted bill, at maturity and according to its tenor. Peterson v. Hubbard, 28 Mich. 199; Clarke v. Cock, 4 East, 72; Lucas v. Groning, 7 Taunt. 168.

Act of honor

When a bill has been protested, and a third person wishes to take it up, or accept it, for the "honor" (credit) of one or more of the parties, the notary draws up an instrument, evidencing the transaction, which is called by this name.

HONOR, n.

In English Law

A seigniory of several manors held under one baron or lord paramount. Also those dignities or privileges, degrees of nobility, knighthood, and other titles, which flow from the crown as the fountain of honor. Wharton.

In American Law

The customary title of courtesy given to judges of the higher courts, and occasionally to some other officers; as "his honor," "your honor."

In General

—Honor courts. Tribunals held within honors or seigniories.

—Office of honor. As used in constitutional and statutory provisions, this term denotes a public office of considerable dignity and importance, to which important public trusts or interests are confided, but which is not compensated by any salary or fees, being thus contrasted with an "office of profit." See Dickson v. People, 17 Ill. 193.

HONORABLE. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons; and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for various classes of officials, but without any clear lines of distinction.

HONORARIUM. In the civil law. An honorary or free gift; a gratuitous payment, as distinguished from hire or compensation for service; a lawyer's or counselor's fee. Dig. 50, 13, 1, 10-12.

An honorarium is a voluntary donation, in consideration of services which admit of no compensation in money; in particular, to advocates at law, deemed to practice for honor or influence, and not for fees. McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 69.

HONORARIUM JUS. Lat. In Roman law. The law of the praetors and the edicts of the ediles.

HONORARY. As applied to public offices and other positions of responsibility or trust, this term means either that the office or title is bestowed upon the incumbent as a mark of honor or compliment, without intending to charge him with the active discharge of the duties of the place, or else that he is to receive no salary or other compensation in money, the honor conferred by the incumbency of the office being his only reward. See Haswell v. New York, 81 N. Y. 258. In other connections, it means attached to or growing out of some honor or dignity or honorable office, or else it imports an obligation or duty growing out of honor or trust only, as distinguished from legal accountability.

HONORARY CANONS. Those without emolument. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, § 23.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility, descendent to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest. 2 Bl. Comm. 56.

HONORARY SERVICES. In feudal law. Special services to be rendered to the king in person, characteristic of the tenure by grand serjeanty; such as to carry his banner, his sword, or the like, or to be his butler, champion, or other officer, at his coronation. Litt. § 153; 2 Bl. Comm. 73.

HONORARY TRUSTEES. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders, so called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course. Lewin, Trusts, 408.

HONORIS RESPECTUM. By reason of honor or privilege. See Challenge.

HONTFONGENETHEF. In Saxon law. A thief taken with hondhabend; i.e., having the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell.

HONY. L. Fr. Shame; evil; disgrace. Hony soit qui mal y pense, evil be to him who evil thinks.

HORDERA. In old English law. A treasurer. Du Cange.

HORDERIUM. In old English law. A hoard; a treasure, or repository. Cowell.

HORDEUM. In old records. Barley. Hordeum palmate, beer barley, as distinguished from common barley, which was called "hordeum quadragesimale." Blount.

HORN. In old Scotch practice. A kind of trumpet used in denouncing contumacious persons rebels and outlaws, which was done with three blasts of the horn by the king's sargeant. This was called "putting to the horn;" and the party so denounced was said to be "at the horn." Bell. See Horned.

HORN—BOOK. A primer; a book explaining the rudiments of any science or branch of knowledge. The phrase "horn-book law" is a colloquial designation of the rudiments or most familiar principles of law.

HORN TENURE. In old English law. Tenure by cornage; that is, by the service of winding a horn when the Scots or other enemies entered the land, in order to warn the king's subjects. This was a species of grand serjeanty. Litt. § 156; 2 Bl. Comm. 74.

HORN WITH HORN, or HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows or all horned beasts that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Spelman.

HORNGELD. Sax. In old English law. A tax within a forest, paid for horned beasts. Cowell; Blount.

HORNING. In Scotch law. "Letters of hornning" is the name given to a judicial process issuing on the decree of a court, by which the debtor is summoned to perform his obligation in terms of the decree, the consequence of his failure to do so being liability to arrest and imprisonment. It was the ancient custom to proclaim a debtor who had failed to obey such process a rebel or outlaw, which was done by three blasts of the horn by the king's sergeant in a public place. This was called "putting to the horn," whence the name.

HORNSWOGGLE. To triumph over; overcome; beat; bedevil. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Rochester (Tex. Civ. App.) 281 S. W. 909, 914.

HORS. L. Fr. Out; out of; without.

HORS DE SON FEE. Out of his fee. In old pleading, this was the name of a plea in an action for rent or services, by which the defendant alleged that the land in question was out of the compass of the plaintiff's fee. Mather v. Wood, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 4.

HORS PRIS. Except. Literally translated by the Scotch "out taken."

HORS WEALTH. In old English law. The wealth, or Briton who had care of the king's horses.

HORS WEARD. In old English law. A service or corvée, consisting in watching the horses of the lord. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HORSE. An animal of the genus equus and species caballus. In a narrow and strict sense, the term is applied only to the male, and only to males of four years old or thereabouts, younger horses being called "colts." But even in this sense the term includes both stallions and geldings. In a wider sense, and as generally used in statutes, the word is taken as nomen generalissimum, and includes not only horses strictly so called, but also colts, mares and fillies, and males and asses. See Owens v. State, 38 Tex. 557; Ashworth v. Mounsey, L. R. 9 Exch. 187; Pullem v. State, 11 Tex. App. 91; Allison v. Brookshire, 38 Tex. 201; State v. Ingram, 16 Kan. 19; State v. Dunnavant, 3 Brew. (S. C.) 10, 5 Am. Dec. 530; State v. Gooch, 60 Ark. 218, 29 S. W. 640; Davis v. Collier, 13 Ga. 491. Compare Richardson v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 149 Mo. 311, 50 S. W. 782; In re Greer, 129 Minn. 520, 152 N. W. 886; State v. Collins, 53 Mont. 213, 163 P. 102, 103; McCarver v. Griffin, 194 Ala. 634, 64 So. 920, 921, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1172; Hale v. Commonwealth, 151 Ky. 639, 152 S. W. 773.

HORSE GUARDS. The directing power of the military forces of the kingdom of Great Britain. The commander in chief, or general commanding the forces, is at the head of this department. It is subordinate to the war office, but the relations between them are complicated. Wharton.

HOSPODAR. A Turkish governor in Moldavia or Wallachia.

HOSTAGE. A person who is given into the possession of the enemy, in a public war, his freedom (or life) to stand as security for the performance of some contract or promise made by the belligerent power giving the hostage with the other.

HOSTELAGIUM. In old records. A right to receive lodging and entertainment, anciently reserved by lords in the houses of their tenants. Cowell.

HOSTELEA. See Hostler.

HOSTES. Lat. Enemies. Hostes humani generis, enemies of the human race; i. e., pirates.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; certi pridiores vel praedones sunt. 7 Coke, 24. Enemies are those with whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates.

HOSTIA. In old records. The hostbread, or consecrated wafer, in the eucharist. Cowell.

HOSTICIDE. One who kills an enemy.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA. A place or room in religious houses used for the reception of guests and strangers.

HOSTILE. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. See 1 Kent, Comm. c. 4.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. One laid upon the vessels of an actual or prospective enemy.

HOSTILE POSSESSION. This term, as applied to an occupant of real estate holding adversely, is not construed as implying actual enmity or ill will, but merely means that he claims to hold the possession in the character of an owner, and therefore denies all validity to claims set up by any and all other persons. Ballard v. Hansen, 53 Neb. 561, 51 N. W. 286; Griffin v. Mulley, 137 Pa. 336, 31 A. 664.

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i. e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Wharton.

HOSTILITY. In the law of nations. A state of open war. “At the breaking out of hostility.” 1 Kent, Comm. 60.

An act of open war. “When hostilities have commenced.” Id. 56.

A hostile character. “Hostility may attach only to the person.” Id.

HOSTLIER. In Norman and old English law, this was the title of the officer in a monastery charged with the entertainment of guests. It was also applied (until about the time of Queen Elizabeth) to an innkeeper, and afterwards, when the keeping of horses at livery became a distinct occupation, to the keeper of a livery stable, and then (under the modern form “ostler”) to the groom in charge of the stables of an inn. Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 20. In the language of railroad ing, an “ostler” or “hostler” at a roundhouse is one whose duty it is to receive locomotives as they come in from the road, care for them in the roundhouse, and have them cleaned and ready for departure when wanted. Railroad Co. v. Massig, 50 Ill. App. 666; Railroad Co. v. Ashling, 34 Ill. App. 105; Grannis v. Railroad Co., 81 Iowa, 444, 46 N. W. 1067; Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., v. Scott (Tex. Civ. App.) 246 S. W. 1107, 1108.

HOT-WATER ORDEAL. In old English law. This was a test, in cases of accusation, by hot water; the party accused and suspected being appointed by the judge to put his arms up to the elbows in seething hot water, which, after sundry prayers and invocations, he did, and was, by the effect which followed, judged guilty or innocent. Wharton.

HOTCHPOT. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Anciently applied to the mixing and blending of lands given to one daughter in frank marriage, with those descending to her and her sisters in fee-simple, for the purpose of dividing the whole equally among them; without which the daughter who held in frank marriage could have no share in the lands in fee-simple. Litt. §§ 267, 268; Co. Litt. 177a; 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

Hotchpot, or the putting in hotchpot, is applied in modern law to the throwing the amount of an advancement made to a particular child, in real or personal estate, into the common stock, for the purpose of a more equal division, or of equalizing the shares of all the children. 2 Kent, Comm. 421, 422. This answers to or resembles the collatio bonorum, or collation of the civil law. See Law v. Smith, 2 R. I. 249; Ray v. Loper, 65 Mo. 472; Jackson v. Jackson, 28 Miss. 650, 64 Am. Dec. 114; Thompson v. Carmichael, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 120; Page v. Elwell, 2d Colo. 73, 253 P. 1059, 1061; In re Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 185 N. Y. 951, 959, 59 Misc. 420; In re Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 185 N. Y. 952, 959, 181 App. Div. 642.

HOTEL. An inn; a public house or tavern; a house for entertaining strangers or travelers. St. Louis v. Siegrist, 46 Mo. 594; People v. Jones, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 316; Cromwell v. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 19.

Synonyms

In law, there is no difference whatever between the terms “hotel,” “inn,” and “tavern,” except that in some states a statutory definition has been given to the word “hotel,” especially with reference to the grant of licenses to sell liquor, as, that it shall contain a certain number of separate rooms.
for the entertainment of guests, or the like. But none of the three terms mentioned will include a boarding house (because that is a place kept for the entertainment of permanent boarders, while a hotel or inn is for travelers and transient guests), nor a lodging house (because the keeper thereof does not furnish food for guests, which is one of the requisites of a hotel or inn), nor a restaurant or eating-house, which furnishes food only and not lodging. See Martin v. State Ins. Co., 44 N. J. Law, 453, 43 Am. Rep. 397; In re Liquor Licenses, 4 Montg. Co. Law Rep'r (Pa.) 78; Kelly v. Eichle Con'r's, 64 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 331; Carpenter v. Tipton, 1 Hill. (N. Y.) 333; Cornwall v. Stephens, 2 Dally (N. Y.) 23; City of Independence v. Richardson, 177 Kan. 655, 223 P. 1044, 1046; Kieffer v. Keough (Tex. Civ. App.) 188 S. W. 44, 46; Stephens v. State, 164 Ark. 90, 261 S. W. 37, 38; Belvedere Hotel Co. v. Williams, 137 Md. 665, 133 A. 335, 337, 18 A. L. R. 622; Cole v. State, 160 Ark. 151, 254 S. App.) 139 S. W. 1147; City of Ft. Smith v. Gunter, 106 Ark. 371, 154 S. W. 181, 183; McClaugherty v. Cline, 128 Tenn. 605, 163 S. W. 501.

HOUGH. A valley. Co. Litt. 5b.

HOUR. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; sixty minutes of time.

—Hour of cause. In Scotch practice. The hour when a court is met. 3 How. State Tr. 603.

—Office hours. See Office.

"House" means, presumptively, a dwelling house; a building divided into floors and apartments, with four walls, a roof, and doors and chimneys; but it does not necessarily mean precisely this. Daniel v. Coulston, 7 Man. & G. 125; Surman v. Darley, 14 Mee's. & W. 183.

It may mean any sort of structure or part thereof, whether used for human habitation or not. Dennis v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 122, 158 S. W. 1006; Earl v. United States (C. C. A.) 4 F.(2d) 522, 523; Davis v. State, 191 Tex. Cr. R. 362, 275 S. W. 1055, 1056; People v. Coffee, 32 Cal. App. 113, 188 P. 213, 214; Tchomac v. State, 11 Tex. Cr. R. 123, 293 S. W. 2062; Walker v. Terrell (Tex. Civ. App.) 169 S. W. 75, 76. "House," is not synonymous with "dwelling house;" while the former is used in a broader and more comprehensive sense than the latter, it has a narrower and more restricted meaning than the word "building." State v. Carley, 46 N. H. 61.

In the devise of a house, the word "house" is synonymous with "messuage," and conveys all that comes within the curtilage. Rogers v. Smith, 4 Pa. 22.

The name "house" is also given to some collections of men other than legislative bodies, to some public institutions, and (colloquially) to mercantile firms or joint-stock companies.

HUMAGIUM. A moist place. Mon. Angl.

HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE. Another name for the doctrine of the last clear chance. See Last.
HUNDRED. Under the Saxon organization of England, each county or shire comprised an indefinite number of hundreds, each hundred containing ten tithings, or groups of ten families of freeholders or frankpledges. The hundred was governed by a high constable, and had its own court; but its most remarkable feature was the corporate responsibility of the whole for the crimes or defaults of the individual members. The introduction of this plan of organization into England is commonly ascribed to Alfred, but the idea, as well as the collective liability as of the division, was probably known to the ancient German peoples, as we find the same thing established in the Frankish kingdom under Clothaire, and in Denmark. See 1 Bl. Comm. 115; 4 Bl. Comm. 411.

HUNDRED COURT. In English law. A larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred, instead of a manor. The free suitors are the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a court of record, and resembles a court-baron in all respects except that in point of territory it is of greater jurisdiction. These courts have long since fallen into desuetude. 3 Bl. Comm. 34, 35; 3 Steph. Comm. 394, 395.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. Among the Saxons, a meeting or court of the freeholders of a hundred, which assembled, originally, twelve times a year, and possessed civil and criminal jurisdiction and ecclesiastical powers. 1 Reeve, Eng. Law, 7.

HUNDRED LÁGH. The law of the hundred, or hundred court; liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman.

HUNDRED PENNY. In old English law. A tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred.

HUNDRED ROLLS. Rolls embodying the result of investigations made by the commissioners in 1274 as to usurpations of the royal rights. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 48.

HUNDRED SECTA. The performance of suit and service at the hundred court.

HUNDRED SETENA. In Saxon law. The dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred. Cowell; Blount. Spelman suggests the meaning of secutena from Sax. secut, a tax.

HUNDRED-WEIGHT. A denomination of weight containing, according to the English system, 112 pounds; but in this country, generally, it consists of 100 pounds avoirdupois.

HUNDREDARIUS. In old English law. A hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it. Spel. voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDREDARY. The chief or presiding officer of a hundred.

HUNREDGES EARLDOR, or HUNREDedes MAN. The presiding officer in the hundred court. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HUNREDORS. In English law. The inhabitants or freeholders of a hundred, anciently the suitors or judges of the hundred court. Persons impaneled or fit to be impaneled upon juries, dwelling within the hundred where the cause of action arose. Comp. Jur. 217. It was formerly necessary to have some of these upon every panel of jurors. 3 Bl. Comm. 339, 340; 4 Steph. Comm. 370.

The term "hundredor" was also used to signify the officer who had the jurisdiction of a hundred, and held the hundred court, and sometimes the bailiff of a hundred. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

HUNG JURY. A jury so irreconcilably divided in opinion that they cannot agree upon any verdict.

HUNGER. The desire to eat. Hunger is no excuse for larceny; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; 4 Bla. Com. 31. As to death from hunger, see Death.

HURDEREVERST. A domestic; one of a family.

HURDLE. In English criminal law. A kind of sledge, on which convicted felons were drawn to the place of execution.

HURRICANE. A storm of great violence or intensity, of which the particular characteristic is the high velocity of the wind. There is naturally no exact measure to distinguish between an ordinary storm and a hurricane, but the wind should reach a velocity of at least 50 or 60 miles an hour to be called by the latter name, or, as expressed in some of the cases, it should be sufficient to "throw down buildings." A hurricane is properly a circular storm in the nature of a cyclone. See Pelican Ins. Co. v. Troy Co-op. Ass'n, 77 Tex. 225, 13 S. W. 960; Queen Ins. Co. v. Hudnut Co., 8 Ind. App. 22, 35 N. E. 397; Tyson v. Union Mut. Fire & Storm Co., 2 Montg. Co. Law Reg'r (Pa.) 17.

HURST, HYRST, HERST, or HIRST. A wood or grove of trees. Co. Litt. 4b.

HURT. In such phrases as "to the hurt of annoyance of another," or "hurt, molested, or restrained in his person or estate," this word is not restricted to physical injuries, HURTARDUS, or HURTUS. A ram or wether.

HUSBAND. A married man; one who has a lawful wife living. The correlative of "wife." Etymologically, the word signified the "house bond," the man who, according to Saxon ideas and institutions, held around him the family, for whom he was in law responsible.

HUSBAND AND WIFE. One of the great domestic relationships: being that of a man and woman lawfully joined in marriage, by which, at common law, the legal existence of a wife is incorporated with that of her husband.

HUSBAND LAND. In old Scotch law. A quantity of land containing commonly six acres. Skene.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See Ship's Husband.

HUSBANDMAN. A farmer; a cultivator or tiller of the ground. The word "farmer" is colloquially used as synonymous with "husbandman," but originally meant a tenant who cultivates leased ground.

HUSBANDRY. Agriculture; cultivation of the soil for food; farming, in the sense of operating land to raise provisions. Simons v. Lovell, 7 Helsk. (Tenn.) 626; McCue v. Tunstead, 65 Cal. 506, 4 Pac. 510.

HUSBREC. In Saxon law. The crime of housebreaking or burglary. Crabb, Eng. Law, 59, 308.

HUSCARLE. In old English law. A house servant or domestic; a man of the household. Spelman.

A king's vassal, thane, or baron; an earl's man or vassal. A term of frequent occurrence in Domesday Book.

HUSFASTNE. He who holds house and land. Bract. l. 8. t. 2. c. 10.

HUSGABLUM. In old records. House rent; or a tax or tribute laid upon a house. Cowell; Blount.

HUSH-MONEY. A colloquial expression to designate a bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

HUSTINGS. Council; court; tribunal. Apparently so called from being held within a building, at a time when other courts were held in the open air. It was a local court. The county court in the city of London bore this name. There were hustings at York, Winchester, Lincoln, and in other places similar to the London hustings. Also the raised place from which candidates for seats in parliament address the constituency, on the occasion of their nomination. Wharton.

In Virginia, some of the local courts are called "hustings," as in the city of Richmond. Smith v. Com., 6 Grat. (Va.) 606. The municipal courts established (in Virginia) in any city of over 5,000 inhabitants were at one time called hustings courts. Cent. Dict.

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR. Hue and cry. See Hue and Cry.

HWATA, HWATUNG. In old English law. Augury; divination.

HYBERNACIUM. In old English law. The season for sowing winter grain, between Michaelmas and Christmas. The land on which such grain was sown. The grain itself; winter grain or winter corn. Cowell.

HYBRID. A mongrel; an animal formed of the union of different species, or different genera; also (metaphorically) a human being born of the union of persons of different races.

HYD. In old English law. Hide; skin. A measure of land, containing according to some, a hundred acres, which quantity is also assigned to it in the Dialogus de Secacario. It seems, however, that the hide varied in different parts of the kingdom.

HYDAGE. See Hidade.

HYDROMETER. An instrument for measuring the density of fluids. Being immersed in fluids, as in water, brine, beer, brandy, etc., it determines the proportion of their density, or their specific gravity, and thence their quality. See Rev. St. U. S. § 2918 (19 USCA § 300).

HYDROSTATIC TEST. A method of determining whether or not a deceased infant was born alive, involving the removal of the lungs and the placing of them in a vessel of water; if the infant had breathed, the air in the lungs will cause them to float, though they may also float if decomposition has set in and gas has formed in the body. Morgan v. State, 226 S. W. 332, 148 Tenn. 417. Called, also, "docimasia pulmonum."
HYMNS,HIEMS. Lat. In the civil law. Winter. Dig. 43, 20, 4, 34. Written, in some of the old books, "yems." Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, §§ 16, 18.

HYGIENE. A system of principles or rules designed for the promotion of health. Lunn v. City of Auburn, 85 A. 893, 894, 110 Me. 241.

HYPNOTISM. In medical jurisprudence. A psychic or mental state rendering the patient susceptible to suggestion at the will of another.

The hypnotic state is an abnormal condition of the mind and senses, in the nature of trance, artificial catalepsy, or somnambulism, induced in one person by another, by concentration of the attention, a strong effort of volition, and perhaps the exercise of a telepathic power not as yet fully understood, or by mental suggestion, in which certain mental processes of the subject and to a great extent his will are subjugated and directed by those of the operator.

HYPOBOLUM. In the civil law. The name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry.

HYPOCHONDRIA; HYPMANIA. See Insanity.

HYPOSTASIS. In medical jurisprudence. (1) The morbid deposition of a sediment of any kind in the body. (2) A congestion or flushing of the blood vessels, as in varicose veins. Post-mortem hypostasis, a peculiar lividity of the cadaver.

HYPOTHEC. In Scotland, the term "hypothec" is used to signify the landlord's right which, independently of any stipulation, he has over the crop and stocking of his tenant. It gives a security to the landlord over the crop of each year for the rent of that year, and over the cattle and stocking on the farm for the current year's rent, which lasts for three months after the last conventional term for the payment of the rent. Bell.

HYPOTHECA. "Hypotheca" was a term of the Roman law, and denoted a pledge or mortgage. As distinguished from the term "pignus," in the same law, it denoted a mortgage, whether of lands or of goods, in which the subject in pledge remained in the possession of the mortgagor or debtor; whereas in the pignus the mortgagee or creditor was in the possession. Such an hypotheca might be either express or implied; express, where the parties upon the occasion of a loan entered into express agreement to that effect; or implied, as, e. g., in the case of the stock and utensils of a farmer, which were subject to the landlord's right as a creditor for rent; whence the Scotch law of hypothec.

The word has suggested the term "hypothecate," as used in the mercantile and maritime law of England. Thus, under the factor's act, goods are frequently said to be "hypothecated;" and a captain is said to have a right to hypothecate his vessel for necessary repairs. Brown. See Mackeld. Rom. Law, §§ 334–359.

HYPOTHECARIA ACTIO. Lat. In the civil law. An hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged. Inst. 4, 6, 7; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 356. Adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana, under the name of "Action hypothecarie," (translated, "action of mortgagor.") See Civ. Code La. arts. 1433–1443; Code Prac. La. art. 61.

HYPOTHECARII CREDITORES. Lat. In the civil law. Hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca, (q. e.) Calvin.

HYPOTHECARY ACTION. The name of an action allowed under the civil law for the enforcement of the claims of a creditor by the contract of hypotheca. Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U. S. 130, 10 Sup. Ct. 1024, 34 L. Ed. 372.

An hypothecary action is a real action, which the creditor brings against the property which has been hypothecated to him by his debtor, in order to have it seized and sold for the payment of his debt. Code Prac. La. art. 61. In the hypothecary action proper, there is no pursuit of the person; the thing mortgaged is the debtor, and the action is directed against it. In this sense, the action is real. Wisdom v. Parker, 31 La. Ann. 52.

HYPOTHECATE. To pledge a thing without delivering the possession of it to the pledgee. "The master, when abroad, and in the absence of the owner, may hypothecate the ship, freight, and cargo, to raise money requisite for the completion of the voyage." 3 Kent, Comm. 171. See Spect v. Spect, 58 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314; Ogden v. Lathrop, 31 N. Y. Super. Ct. 651.

HYPOTHECATION. A term borrowed from the civil law. In so far as it is naturalized in English and American law, it means a contract of mortgage or pledge in which the subject-matter is not delivered into the possession of the pledgee or pawnee; or, conversely, a conventional right existing in one person over specific property of another, which consists in the power to cause a sale of the same, though it be not in his possession, in order that a specific claim of the creditor may be satisfied out of the proceeds.

The term is frequently used in our textbooks and reports, particularly upon the law of bottomry and maritime liens; thus a vessel is said to be hypothecated for the demand of one who has advanced money for supplies.

In the common law, there are but few, if any, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the HYPOTHESIS. A supposition, assumption, or theory; a theory set up by the prosecution, on a criminal trial, or by the defense, as an explanation of the facts in evidence, and a ground for inferring guilt or innocence, as the case may be, or as indicating a probable or possible motive for the crime.

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION. A combination of assumed or proved facts and circumstances, stated in such form as to constitute a coherent and specific situation or state of facts, upon which the opinion of an expert is asked, by way of evidence on a trial. Howard v. People, 185 Ill. 552, 57 N. E. 441; People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 216, 49 P. 88; Cowley v. People, 53 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 494; Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 941.

HYPOTHETICAL YEARLY TENANCY. The basis, in England, of rating lands and hereditaments to the poor-rate, and to other rates and taxes that are expressed to be leviable or assessable in like manner as the poor-rate.

HYRNES. In old English law. A parish.

HYSTERIA. A paroxysmal disease or disorder of the nervous system, more common in females than males, not originating in any anatomical lesion, due to psychic rather than physical causes, and attended, in the acute or convulsive form, by extraordinary manifestations of secondary effects of extreme nervousness.

Hysteria is a state in which ideas control the body and produce morbid changes in its functions. Mebius. A special psychic state, characterized by symptoms which can also be produced or reproduced by suggestion, and which can be treated by psychotherapy or persuasion, hysteria and hypnotic states being practically equivalent to each other. Babinski. A purely psychic or mental disorder due to hereditary predisposition. Charcot. A state resulting from a psychic lesion or nervous shock, leading to repression or aberration of the sexual instinct. Freud. Hysteria is much more common in women than in men, and was formerly thought to be due to some disorder of the uterus or sexual system; but it is now known that it may occur in men, in children, and in very aged persons of either sex.

In the convulsive form of hysteria, commonly called “hysterics” or “a fit of hysteria,” there is a nervous storm characterized by loss or abandonment of self-control in the expression of the emotions, particularly grief, by paroxysms of tears or laughter or both together, sensations of constriction as of a ball rising in the throat (globus hystericus), convulsive movements in the chest, pelvis, and abdomen, sometimes leading to a fall with apparent unconsciousness, followed by a relapse into semi-unconsciousness or catalepsy. In the non-convulsive forms, all kinds of organic paralyses may be simulated, as well as muscular contractions and spasms, tremor, loss of sensation (anesthesia) or exaggerated sensation (hyperesthesia), disturbances of respiration, disordered appetite, accelerated pulse, hemorrhages in the skin (stigmato), pain, swelling, or even dislocation of the joints, and great amenable to suggestion.

HYSTERO-EPILEPSY. See Epilepsy.

HYSTEROPOTMOI. Those who, having been thought dead, had, after a long absence in foreign countries, returned safely home; or those who, having been thought dead in battle, had afterwards unexpectedly escaped from their enemies and returned home. These, among the Romans, were not permitted to enter their own houses at the door, but were received at a passage opened in the roof. Enc. Lond.

HYSTEROTOMY. The Cesarcan operation. See Cesarcan Section.

HYTHE. In English law. A port, wharf, or small haven to embark or land merchandise at. Cowell; Blount.
I.

I—CTUS. An abbreviation for "jurisconsultus," one learned in the law; a jurisconsult.

I. E. An abbreviation for "id est," that is; that is to say.

I O U. A memorandum of debt, consisting of these letters, ("I owe you,") a sum of money, and the debtor's signature, is termed an "I O U." Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 329.

IBERNAGIUM. In old English law. The season for sowing winter corn. Also spelled "hibernagium" and "hybernagium."

IBI semper debet fieri triatio ubi juratores meliorum possunt habere notitiam. 7 Coke, 19. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed.

IBIDEM. Lat. In the same place; in the same book; on the same page, etc. Abbreviated to "ibid." or "ib."

ICENI. The ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire, in England.

ICONA. An image, figure, or representation of a thing. Du Cange.

ICTUS. In old English law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, concussion, or swelling produced by a blow from a club or stone, as distinguished from "plaga," (a wound.) Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3.

ICTUS ORBIS. In medical jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin. When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound." Bract. lib. 2, tr. 2, cc. 5, 24.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which can be made certain. 2 Bl. Comm. 143; 1 Bl. Comm. 78; 4 Kent, Comm. 462; Broom, Max. 624.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself. 9 Coke, 47a.

ID EST. Lat. That is. Commonly abbreviated "k. e."

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat. That is perfect which consists of all its parts. 9 Coke, 8.

IDEA. Lat. The same. According to Lord Coke, "ideam" has two significations, sc., idem syllabus seu verba, (the same in syllabus or words,) and idem re et sensu, (the same in substance and in sense.) 10 Coke, 124a.

In Old Practice

The said, or aforesaid; said, aforesaid. Distinguished from "predicatus" in old entries, though having the same general significance. Townsh. Pl. 15, 16.

Idem agentis et patientis esse non potest. Jenk. Cent. 40. The same person cannot be both agent and patient; i. e., the doer and person to whom the thing is done.

Idem est facere, et non prohibere cum possit; et qui non prohibit, cum prohibere possit, in culpae est, (aut jubeat.) 3 Inst. 158. To commit, and not to prohibit when in your power, is the same thing; and he who does not prohibit when he can prohibit is in fault, or does the same as ordering it to be done.

Idem est nihil dicere, et insufficienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing, and to say a thing insufficiently. 2 Inst. 178. To say a thing in an insufficient manner is the same as not to say it at all. Applied to the plea of a prisoner. Id.

Idem est non esse, et non apprare. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Jenk. Cent. 207. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be. Broom, Max. 165.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus, sed probatio. What is not proved and what does not exist are the same; it is not a defect of the law, but of proof.

Idem est soire aut soire debere aut potuisse. To be bound to know or to be able to know is the same as to know.
IDENTATE NOMINIS. In English law. An alicant writ (now obsolete) which lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison, by mistake for another man of the same name. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 267.

IDENTITY.

In the Law of Evidence

Sameness; the fact that a subject, person, or thing before a court is the same as it is represented, claimed, or charged to be. See Burrill, Circ. Ev. 382, 463, 631, 644.

In Patent Law

Such sameness between two designs, inventions, combinations, etc., as will constitute the one an infringement of the patent granted for the other.

To constitute "identity of invention," and therefore infringement, not only must the result obtained be the same, but, in case the means used for its attainment is a combination of known elements, the elements combined in both cases must be the same, and combined in the same way, so that each shall perform the same function; provided that the differences alleged are not merely colorable according to the rule forbidding the use of known equivalents. Electric Railroad Signal Co. v. Hall Railroad Signal Co., 114 U. S. 87, 5 Sup. Cl. 1099, 59 L. Ed. 96; Latna v. Shaw, 14 Fed. Cas. 1183. "Identity of design" means sameness of appearance, or, in other words, sameness of effect upon the eye.—not the eye of an expert, but of an ordinary intelligent observer. Smith v. Whitman Saddle Co., 148 U. S. 674, 13 Sup. Cl. 708, 37 L. Ed. 608.

IDEO. Lat. Therefore. Calvin.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST. Lat. Therefore it is considered. These were the words used at the beginning of the entry of judgment in an action, when the forms were in Latin. They are also used as a name for that portion of the record.

IDEOAT. An old form for idiot (q. v.).

IDES. A division of time among the Romans. In March, May, July, and October, the Ides were on the 15th of the month; in the remaining months, on the 13th. This method of reckoning is still retained in the chancery of Rome, and in the calendar of the breviary. Wharton.

IDICHIRA. Graeco-Lat. In the civil law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from such as were executed before a public officer. Cod. 8, 18, 11; Calvin.

IDIODY, IDIOPATHIC INSANITY. See Insanity.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2. See Insanity. State.

IE. BL. LAW Dict. (3d Ed.)
IGNORANCE. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem. Wolff, § 145. See Brown v. Kingsley, 38 Iowa, 220.

IGNORAMUS. Lat. “We are ignorant;” “We ignore it.” Formerly the grand jury used to write this word on bills of indictment when, after having heard the evidence, they thought the accusation against the prisoner was groundless, intimating that, though the facts might possibly be true, the truth did not appear to them; but now they usually write in English the words “Not a true bill,” or “Not found,” if that is their verdict; but they are still said to ignore the bill. Brown.

IGNORANCE. The want or absence of knowledge.

Ignorance of law is want of knowledge or acquaintance with the laws of the land in so far as they apply to the act, relation, duty, or matter under consideration. Ignorance of fact is want of knowledge of some fact or facts constituting or relating to the subject-matter in hand. Marshall v. Coleman, 187 Ill. 556, 58 N. E. 628; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 130, 19 Am. Dec. 533.

Ignorance is not a state of the mind in the sense in which sanity and insanity are. When the mind is ignorant of a fact, its condition still remains sound; the power of thinking, of judging, of willing, is just as complete before communication of the fact as after; the essence or texture, so to speak, of the mind, is not, as in the case of insanity, affected or impaired. Ignorance of a particular fact consists in this: that the mind, although sound and capable of healthy action, has never acted upon the fact in question, because the subject has never been brought to the notice of the perceptive faculties. Moorer v. Boylan, 23 N. J. Law, 274.

Synonyms

“Ignorance” and “error” or “mistake” are not convertible terms. The former is a lack of information or absence of knowledge; the latter, a misapprehension or confusion of information, or a mistaken supposition of the possession of knowledge. Error as to a fact may imply ignorance of the truth; but ignorance does not necessarily imply error. Hutton v. Edgerton, 6 Rich. (S. C.) 489; Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 70, 50 Am. Dec. 375; Langston v. Langston, 147 Ga. 318, 93 S. E. 892, 893.

In General

—Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business. Poth. Vente, no. 3, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. 367.

—Non-essential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract.

IGNOMINY. In old English law. The finest white bread, formerly called “cocked bread.” Blount.

IGNIS JUDICUM. Lat. The old judicial trial by fire. Blount.

IGNITEGIUM. In old English law. The curfew, or evening bell. Cowell. See Curfew.
IGNORANCE

—Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which cannot be overcome by the use of any means of knowledge known to a person and within his power; as the ignorance of a law which has not yet been promulgated.

—Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. Doct. & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

IGNORANTIA. Lat. Ignorance; want of knowledge. Distinguished from mistake, (error,) or wrong conception. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 178; Dlg. 22, 6. Divided by Lord Coke into ignorantia facti (ignorance of fact) and ignorantia juris (ignorance of law). And the former, he adds, is twofold,—lectionis et linguae (ignorance of reading and ignorance of language). 2 Coke, 3b.

Ignorantia eorum quae quis scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things which one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42; Broom, Max. 267.

Ignorantia facti excusat. Ignorance of fact excuses or is a ground of relief. 2 Coke, 3a. Acts done and contracts made under mistake or ignorance of a material fact are voidable and receivable in law and equity. 2 Kent, Comm. 491, and notes.

Ignorantia facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of the fact excuses; ignorance of the law excuses not. Every man must be taken to be cognizant of the law; otherwise there is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance may not be carried. 1 Coke, 177; Broom, Max. 253.

Ignorantia juris quod quisque tenetur seire, seminem excusat. Ignorance of the for a law, which every one is bound to know, excuses no man. A mistake in point of law is, in criminal cases, no sort of defense. 4 Bl. Comm. 27; 4 Steph. Comm. 81; Broom, Max. 253; 7 Car. & P. 456. And, in civil cases, ignorance of the law, with a full knowledge of the facts, furnishes no ground, either in law or equity, to rescind agreements, or reclaim money paid, or set aside solemn acts of the parties. 2 Kent, Comm. 491, and note.

Ignorantia juris sui non prejudicat juris. Ignorance of one’s right does not prejudice the right. Loft, 552.

Ignorantia legis seminem excusat. Ignorance of law excuses no one. 4 Bouv. Inst. no. 3528; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 111; 7 Watts, 374.

IGNORATIO ELENCI. Lat. A term of logic, sometimes applied to pleadings and to arguments on appeal, which signifies a mistake of the question, that is, the mistake of one who, failing to discern the real question which he is to meet and answer, addresses his allegations or arguments to a collateral matter or something beside the point. See Case upon the Statute for Distribution, Wythe (Va.) 309.

Ignoratissimus artis, ignorantur et ars. Where the terms of an art are unknown, the art itself is unknown also. Co. Litt. 2a.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of, or unacquainted with.

To disregard willfully; to refuse to recognize; to decline to take notice of. See Cleburne County v. Morton, 69 Ark. 48, 60 S. W. 307.

To reject as groundless, false or unsupported by evidence; as when a grand jury ignores a bill of indictment.

Ignoscit ut ei sanguinem suum qualiter re-dequant voluit. The law holds him excused from obligation who chose to redeem his blood (or life) upon any terms. Whatever a man may do under the fear of losing his life or limbs will not be held binding upon him in law. 1 Bl. Comm. 131.

IKBAL. Acceptance (of a bond, etc.). Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKENILD STREET. One of the four great Roman roads in Britain; supposed to be so called from the Icen.

IKRAH. Compulsion; especially constraint exercised by one person over another to do an illegal act, or to act contrary to his inclination. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR. Agreement, assent, or ratification. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

IKRAR NAMA. A deed of assent and acknowledgment. Wilson’s Gloss. Ind.

ILL. In old pleading. Bad; defective in law; null; naught; the opposite of good or valid.

ILL FAME. Evil repute; notorious bad character. Houses of prostitution, gaming houses, and other such disorderly places are called “houses of ill fame,” and a person who frequents them is a person of ill fame. See Boles v. State, 46 Ala. 296.

ILLATA ET INVICTA. Lat. Things brought into the house for use by the tenant were so called, and were liable to the jus hypothecae of Roman law, just as they are to the landlord’s right of distress at common law.

ILLEGAL. Not authorized by law; illicit; unlawful; contrary to law.
Sometimes this term means merely that which lacks authority of or support from law; but more frequently it imports a violation. Etymologically, the word seems to convey the negative meaning only. But in ordinary use it has a stronger, stronger or significant; the idea of censure or condemnation for breaking law is usually presented. But the law implied in illegal is not necessarily an express statute. Things are called "illegal" for a violation of common-law principles. And the term does not apply to acts spoken of as immoral or wicked; it implies only a breach of the law. See State v. Haynorth, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 65; Tiedt v. Carstensen, 61 Iowa, 334, 16 N. W. 214; Chadbourn v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 199; People v. Kolly, 1 Abb. Proc. N. Y. (N. Y.) 457; Ex parte Sewart, 2 Tex. App. 80; State v. American Surety Co. of New York, 25 Idaho, 632, 345 P. 1097, 1344, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 209; Grahl v. United States (C. C. A.) 194 F. 487, 489; United States v. Koopmans (D. C.) 290 F. 545, 546; Ryan v. Hutchinson, 151 Iowa, 575, 145 N. W. 433; Brez v. El Reno State Bank, 73 Okl. 383, 177 P. 362, 383; Uhlmann v. King, 37 Or. 681, 58 P. 437; Dawson v. Hamilton, 264 Mo. 103, 174 S. W. 425, 438; United States v. Mulvey (C. C. A.) 232 F. 513, 519; Staake v. Routledge, 111 Tex. 484, 241 S. W. 994, 998; Meridian Life Ins. Co. v. Dean, 132 Ala. 127, 52 So. 90, 92; United States v. Shanahan (D. C.) 232 F. 108, 117; United States v. All (D. C.) 7 F. (2d) 728, 730; Lazardowitz v. Kanan, 205 N. Y. S. 510, 612, 122 Misc. 202.

ILLEGAL CONDITIONS. All those that are impossible, or contrary to law, immoral, or repugnant to the nature of the transaction.

ILLEGAL CONTRACT. An agreement to do any act forbidden by the law, or to omit to do any act enjoined by the law. Billingsley v. Clelland, 41 W. Va. 243, 23 S. E. 816.

ILLEGAL INTEREST. Usury; interest at a higher rate than the law allows. Farrons v. Babcock, 40 Neb. 119, 85 N. W. 725.

ILLEGAL TRADE. Such traffic or commerce as is carried on in violation of the municipal law, or contrary to the law of nations. See Illicit.

ILLEGITIMACY. The condition before the law, or the social status, of a bastard; the state or condition of one whose parents were not intermarried at the time of his birth. Miller v. Miller, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 509; Brown v. Belmonte, 3 Kan. 52.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to law; it is usually applied to bastards, or children born out of lawful wedlock.

The Louisiana Code divided illegitimate children into two classes: (1) Those born from two persons who, at the moment when such children were conceived, could have lawfully intermarried; and (2) those who are born from persons to whose marriage there existed at the time some legal impediment. Both classes, however, could be acknowledged and take by devise. Compton v. Prescott, 12 Rob. (La.) 56.

ILLEVABLE. Not leuable; that cannot or ought not to be levied. Cowell.

ILLICENTIATUS. In old English law. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 5, § 12.

ILLICIT. Not permitted or allowed; prohibited; unlawful; as an illicit trade; illicit intercourse. State v. Miller, 60 VT. 90, 12 A. 526; City of Shreveport v. Manron, 134 La. 490, 64 So. 383, 392; State v. Williams, 135 La. 692, 65 So. 598, 599; Hewitt v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. R. 243, 158 S. W. 1120, 1124.

ILLICIT CONNECTION. Unlawful sexual intercourse. State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046.

ILLICIT COHABITATION. The living together as man and wife of two persons who are not lawfully married, with the implication that they habitually practice cohabitation. See Rex v. Kalasota, 4 Hawall, 41; Thomas v. United States (D. C.) 14 F. (2d) 228, 229.

ILLICIT DISTILLERY. One carried on without a compliance with the provisions of the laws of the United States relating to the taxation of spirituous liquors. U. S. v. Johnson (C. C.) 26 F. 684.

ILLICIT TRAFFIC. Policies of marine insurance usually contain a covenant of warranty against "illicit trade," meaning thereby trade which is forbidden, or declared unlawful, by the laws of the country where the cargo is to be delivered. "It is not the same with 'contraband trade,' although the words are sometimes used as synonymous. Illicit or prohibited trade is one which cannot be carried on without a distinct violation of some positive law of the country where the transaction is to take place." 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 614.

ILLICITE. Lat. Unlawfully. This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful; as in the case of a riot. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 96.

ILLICITUM COLLEGIUM. Lat. An illegal corporation.

ILLITERATE. Unlettered; ignorant; unlearned. Generally used of one who cannot read and write. See In re Succession of Carrol, 28 La. Ann. 388.

ILLOCABLE. Incapable of being placed out or hired.

ILLUD. Lat. That.

Illud, quod alias licetum non est, necessitas facit licenum; et necessitas inducit privilegium quodjura privata. Bac. Max. That which is otherwise not permitted, necessity permits; and necessity makes a privilege as to private rights.

Illud, quod alteri usitur, exungitur, neque amplius per sa vacare illet. Godol. Ecc. Law. 169. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

ILLUSION. In medical jurisprudence. An image or impression in the mind, excited by some external object addressing itself to one or more of the senses, but which, instead of corresponding with the reality, is perverted, distorted, or wholly mistaken, the error being attributable to the imagination of the observer, not to any defect in the organs of sense. See Hallucination, and see "Delusion," under Insanity.

ILLUSORY. Decieving by false appearances; nominal, as distinguished from substantial.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Formerly the appointment of a merely nominal share of the property to one of the objects of a power, in order to escape the rule that an exclusive appointment could not be made unless it was authorized by the instrument creating the power, was considered illusory and void in equity. But this rule has been abolished in England. (1 Wm. IV. c. 46; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37.) Sweet. See Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 32, 13 Fed. Cas. 50.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT ACT. The statute 1 Wm. IV. c. 46. This statute enacts that no appointment made after its passing, (July 16, 1830,) in exercise of a power to appoint property, real or personal, among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in equity, on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in equity, as at law. See, too, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37. Wharton.

ILLUSTRIOUS. The prefix to the title of a prince of the blood in England.

IMAGINE. In English law. In cases of treason the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. But, in order to complete the crime, this act of the mind must be demonstrated by some overt act. The terms "imagining" and "compassing" are in this connection synonymous. 4 Bl. Comm. 78.

IMAN, IMAM, or IMAUM. A Mohammedan prince having supreme spiritual as well as temporal power; a regular priest of the mosque.

IMBARGO. An old form of "embargo," (q. v.) St. 18 Car. II. c. 5.

IMBASING OF MONEY. The act of mixing the specie with an alloy below the standard of sterling. 1 Hale, P. C. 102.

IMBECILITY. See Insanity.

IMBEZZLE. An occasional or obsolete form of "embezzle" (q. v.).

IMBLADARE. In old English law. To plant or sow grain. Bract. fol. 1769.

IMBRAVERY. See Bravery.

IMBROCU. A brook, gutter, or water-passage. Cowell.

IMITATION. The making of one thing in the similitude or likeness of another; as, counterfeit coin is said to be made "in imitation" of the genuine. An imitation of a trademark is that which so far resembles the genuine trade-mark as to be likely to induce the belief that it is genuine, whether by the use of words or letters similar in appearance or in sound, or by any sign, device, or other means. Pen. Code N. Y. § 598; Wagner v. Duly, 67 Hun. 477, 22 N. Y. S. 403; State v. Harris, 27 N. C. 294. The test of "colorable imitation" is, not whether a difference may be recognized between the names of two competing articles when placed side by side, but whether the difference will be recognized by the purchaser with no opportunity for comparison. The Best Foods v. Hemphill Packing Co. (D. C.) 5 F.(2d) 355, 357.

IMMATERIAL. Not material, essential, or necessary; not important or pertinent; not decisive.

IMMATERIAL AVERTMENT. An averment alleging with needless particularity or unnecessary circumstances what is material and necessary, and which might properly have been stated more generally, and without such circumstances and particulars; or, in other words, a statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with and as descriptive of what IMMEMORIAL.
Beyond human memory; time out of mind.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ. Code La. art. 766.

IMMEMORIAL USAGE. A practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription. Miller v. Garlock, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 154.

IMMEUBLES. Fr. These are, in French law, the immovables of English law. Things are immeubles from any one of three causes: (1) From their own nature, e. g., lands and houses; (2) from their destination, e. g., animals and instruments of agriculture when supplied by the landlord; or (3) by the object to which they are annexed, e. g., easements. Brown.

IMMIGRATION. The coming into a country of foreigners for purposes of permanent residence. The correlative term “emigration” denotes the act of such persons in leaving their former country.

IMMEDIATE DANGER. In relation to homicide in self-defense, this term means immediate danger, such as must be instantly met, such as cannot be guarded against by calling for the assistance of others or the protection of the law. U. S. v. Outerbridge, 27 Fed. Cas. 890; State v. West, 45 La. Ann. 14, 12 So. 7; State v. Smith, 43 Or. 109, 71 P. 973. Or, as otherwise defined, such an appearance of threatened and impending injury as would put a reasonable and prudent man to his instant defense. State v. Fontenot, 50 La. Ann. 537, 28 So. 634, 69 Am. St. Rep. 455; Shorter v. People, 2 N. Y. 201, 51 Am. Dec. 288; Owen v. State, 17 Ala. App. 29, 81 So. 365.

Such danger as must be instantly met—which cannot be guarded against by calling on others for assistance. Palmer v. Midland Valley R. Co., 118 Kan. 597, 235 P. 853, 854.

IMMINENTLY DANGEROUS ARTICLE. One that is reasonably certain to place life or limb in peril. Employers’ Liability Assur. Corporation v. Columbus McKinnon Chain Co. (D. C.) 18 F.(2d) 123.

IMMISCERE. Lat. In the civil law. To mix or mingle with; to meddle with; to join with. Calvin.

IMMITTERE. Lat.

In the Civil Law
To put or let into, as a beam into a wall. Calvin; Dig. 50, 17, 242, 1.

In Old English Law
To put cattle on a common. Fleta, Lib. 4, c. 29, § 7.

IMMOBILIA SITUM SEQUUNTUR. Immoveable things follow their site or position; are governed by the law of the place where they are fixed. 2 Kent, Comm. 67.

IMMOBILIS. Lat. Immovable. Immobilia or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 160.

IMMODERATE. Exceeding just, usual, or suitable bounds. United States v. Oglesby Grocery Co. (D. C.) 264 F. 691, 695.

IMMORAL. Contrary to good morals; inconsistent with the rules and principles of morality; imitable to public welfare according to the standards of a given community, as expressed in law or otherwise. Exchange Nat. Bank of Fitzgerald v. Henderson, 139 Ga. 290, 77 S. E. 36, 37, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549; State v. Reed, 53 Mont. 292, 163 P. 477, 479, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 783.

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. Contracts based upon an immoral consideration are generally void.

IMMORAL CONTRACTS. Contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores are void.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores. See Immoral.

IMMOVABLES. In the civil law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself, or be removed.

Immoveable things are, in general, such as cannot either move themselves or be removed from one place to another. But this definition, strictly speaking, is applicable only to such things as are immovable by their own nature, and not to such as are so only by the disposition of the law. Civ. Code La. art. 462; Mt. Carmel Fruit Co. v. Webster, 140 Cal. 183, 75 P. 226; Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fl. 1, 14 So. 692; Simmons v. Tremont Lumber Co., 51 So. 263, 264, 144 La. 719; Jones v. Conrad, 154 La. 890, 95 So. 397, 388; Breaux v. Guancheau, 3 La. App. 451, 452; Scott v. Brennan, 3 La. App. 452, 453.

IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. A law which impairs the obligation of a contract is one which renders the contract in itself less valuable or less enforceable, whether by changing its terms and stipulations, its legal qualities and conditions, or by regulating the remedy for its enforcement. Rutland v. Copes, 15 Rich. Law, 54, 105; Edwards v. Kearney, 96 U. S. 595, 600, 24 L. Ed. 738; City of Indianapolis v. Robison, 186 Ind. 669, 117 N. E. 861; Union Gas & Oil Co. v. Diles, 200 Ky. 188, 254 S. W. 205, 207.

To “impare the obligation of a contract” within Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, is to weaken it, lessen its value, or make it worse in any respect or in any degree, and any law which changes the intention and legal effect of the parties, giving to one a greater and to the other a less interest or benefit, or which imposes conditions not included in the contract or dispenses with the performance of those included, impairs the obligation of the contract. O’Connor v. Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co., 97 Conn. 5, 115 A. 484, 486.

A statute “impairs the obligation of a contract” when by its terms it nullifies or materially changes existing contract obligations. Oil Fork Development Co. v. Huddleston, 202 Ky. 261, 259 S. W. 334, 335; Adams v. Greene, 182 Ky. 504, 256 S. W. 758, 762.

The word “impair” means, according to the standard writers in our language, simply “to diminish; to injure; to make worse,” etc. It is remarkable that in framing the provision of the federal Constitution providing that no law should be passed, “impairing the obligation of any contract,” the convention did not use the term “lessen” or “decrease” or “destroy,” but one more comprehensive, which prohibited making worse in any respect a contract legitimate in its creation. The object, then, of its provision, may have been to establish an important principle, and that was the entire invalidity of contracts. Blair v. Williams, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 34, 35; Lepage v. Brashears, 14 Ky. (4 Litt.) 47, 66.

See 2 Story, Const. §§ 1374-1399; 1 Kent, Comm. 413-422; Pom. Const. Law; Black, Const. Law (3d Ed.) p. 720 et seq.

IMPALAR. To impound. Du Cange.

IM PANEL. In English Practice

To impanel a jury signifies the entering by the sheriff upon a piece of parchment, termed a “panel,” the names of the jurors who have been summoned to appear in court on a certain day to form a jury of the country to hear such matters as may be brought before them. Brown.

In American Practice

Besides the meaning above given, “impanel” signifies the act of the clerk of the court in making up a list of the jurors who have been selected for the trial of a particular cause. All the steps of ascertaining who shall be the proper jurors to sit in the trial of a particular case up to the final formation. People v. Poole, 284 Ill. 39, 119 N. E. 916; State v. Superior Court of Whatcom County, 52 Wash. 284, 144 P. 32, 33; Karnes v. Commonwealth, 125 Va. 758, 109 S. E. 562, 563, 4 A. L. R. 1509.

Imp paneling has nothing to do with drawing, selecting, or swearing jurors, but means simply making the list of those who have been selected. Porter v. People, 7 How. Frat. (N. Y.) 441.

IMPARGARE. In old English law. To impound. Reg. Orig. 92b.

To shut up, or confine in prison. Indacti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up. Bract. fol. 124.

IMPARGEMENTUM. The right of impounding cattle.

IMPARL. To have license to settle a litigation amicably; to obtain delay for adjustment.

IMPARLANCE. In early practice, imparlance meant time given to either of the parties to an action to answer the pleading of the other. It thus amounted to a continuance of the action to a further day. Literally the term signified leave given to the parties to talk together; i. e., with a view to settling their differences amicably. But in modern practice it denotes a time given to the defendant to plead.

A general importance is the entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception; so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another. Cohy v. Knapp, 13 N. H. 157; Mack v. Lewis, 67 Vt. 383, 31 Atl. 888.

A general special imparlance contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time, he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea.

A special impediment reserves to the defendant all exceptions to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court. 1 Tidd, Pr. 463, 465.

IMPARLANCE. I. Fr. In ecclesiastical law. One who is inducted and in possession of a benefice. Parson imparsonee, (persona impersonata.) Cowell; Dyer, 40.

IMPARTIAL. Favoring neither; disinterested; treating all alike; unbiased; equitable, fair, and just. Tegeler v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 138, 130 P. 1164, 1165; Sunderland v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 19 F.(2d) 202, 216. The provision of the Bill of Rights requiring that the accused shall have a fair trial by an impartial jury, means that the jury must be not partial, not favoring one party more than another, unprejudiced, disinterested, equitable, and just, and that the merits of the case shall not be prejudged. Duncan v. State, 79 Tex. Cr. R. 206, 154 S. W. 105, 106.

IMPATRONIZATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of putting into full possession of a benefice.

IMPEACH. To accuse; to charge a liability upon; to sue. To dispute, disparage, deny, or contradict; as, to impeach a judgment or decree; or as used in the rule that a jury cannot "impeach their verdict." See Wolfgang v. Schoepke, 123 Wls. 19, 100 N. W. 1096.

To proceed against a public officer for crime or misfeasance, before a previous trial, by the presentation of a written accusation called "articles of impeachment."

In the Law of Evidence

To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for that purpose.

IMPEACHMENT. A criminal proceeding against a public officer, before a quasi political court, instituted by a written accusation called "articles of impeachment," for example, a written accusation by the house of representatives of the United States to the senate of the United States against an officer.

"Impeachment" of the Governor, under the meaning of section 16, art. 6, of the Constitution, is the adoption of articles of impeachment by the House of Representatives, and the presentation thereof to the Senate, and the indication by that body that the same are accepted for the purpose of permitting prosecution thereof, and the impeachment of the Governor operates to suspend him; the duties and emoluments of the office automatically devolving upon the Lieutenant Governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability is removed by the acquittal of the Governor of the charges preferred against him.

In England, a prosecution by the house of commons before the house of lords of a commoner for treason, or other high crimes and misdemeanors, or of a peer for any crime.

In Evidence

The adducing of proof that a witness is unworthy of belief.

In General

Articles of impeachment. The formal written allegation of the causes for an impeachment, answering the same purpose as an indictment in an ordinary criminal proceeding.

Collateral impeachment. The collateral impeachment of a judgment or decree is an attempt made to destroy or evade its effect as an estoppel, by reopening the merits of the cause or showing reasons why the judgment should not have been given or should not have a conclusive effect, in any collateral proceeding, that is, in any action or proceeding other than that in which the judgment was given, or other than an appeal, certiorari, or other, direct proceeding to review it.

Impeachment of annuity. A term sometimes used in English law to denote anything that operates as a hindrance, impediment or obstruction of the making of the profits out of which the annuity is to arise. Pitt v. Williams, 4 Adol. & El. 583.

Impeachment of waste. Liability for waste committed; or a demand or suit for compensation for waste committed upon lands or tenements by a tenant thereof who, having only a leasehold or particular estate, had no right to commit waste. See 2 Bl. Comm. 283; Sanderson v. Jones, 6 Fla. 450, 63 Am. Dec. 217.

IMPECHIARE. To impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

IMPEDE. To obstruct; hinder; check; delay. Erie R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Com'rs, 80 N. J. Law, 57, 98 A. 13, 19.

IMPEDIATUS. Disabled from mischief by expeditation (q. v.). Cowell.
IMPEDIENS. In old practice. One who hinders; an impedient. The defendant or defendant in a fine was sometimes so called. Cowell; Blount.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

IMPEDEMENTS. Disabilities, or hindrances to the making of contracts, such as coverture, infancy, want of reason, etc.

In the Civil Law,

Bars to marriage.

Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable. Diriment impediments are those which render a marriage void; as where one of the contracting parties is unable to marry by reason of a prior undissolved marriage. Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment. Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with respect to each other; as between two particular persons who are related within the prohibited degrees. Bowyer, Mod. Civil Law, 44, 45.

IMPENSE. Lat. In the civil law. Expenses; outlays. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 163; Calvin. Divided into necessary, (necessarie,) useful, (utiles,) and tasteful or ornamental, (voluptuarior.) Dig. 50, 16, 70. See Id. 25, 1.

IMPETRARE

IMPETURE. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws. This is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, no. 58.

IMPERSONALITAS. Lat. Impersonality. A mode of expression where no reference is made to any person, such as the expression "ut distur," (as is said.) Co. Litt. 332b.

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat. Co. Litt. 332b. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.

IMPERTINENCE. Irrelevancy; the fault of not properly pertaining to the issue or proceeding. The introduction of any matters into a bill, answer, or other pleading or proceeding in a suit, which are not properly before the court for decision, at any particular stage of the suit. Story, Eq. Pl. § 266; Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 18 Sup. Ct. 129, 42 L. Ed. 478.

In Practice

A question propounded to a witness, or evidence offered or sought to be elicited, is called "impertinent" when it has no logical bearing upon the issue, is not necessarily connected with it, or does not belong to the matter in hand. On the distinction between pertinency and relevancy, we may quote the following remark of Dr. Wharton: "Relevancy is that which conduces to the proof of a pertinent hypothesis; a pertinent hypothesis being one which, if sustained, would logically influence the issue." 1 Whart. Ev. § 20.

IMPERTINENT.

In Equity Pleading

That which does not belong to a pleading, interrogatory, or other proceeding; out of place; superfluous; irrelevant. Chew v. Eagan, 87 N. J. Eq. 80, 99 A. 611; Huffman v. State, 183 Ind. 698, 109 N. E. 401, 402.

At Law

A term applied to matter not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defense. Cwmp. 689; 5 East, 275; Tucker v. Randall, 2 Mass. 283. It constitutes surplusage, (which see.)

IMPESCARE. In old records. To impeach or accuse. Impescatus, impeached. Blount.

IMPETITIO VASTI. Impeachment of waste, (q. v.)

IMPETRARE. In old English practice. To obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. Bract. fols. 57, 172b. This application of the IMPETRATION. In old English law. The obtaining anything by petition or entreaty. Particularly, the obtaining of a benefice from Rome by solicitation, which benefited belonged to the disposal of the king or other lay patron. Webster; Cowell.

IMPIER. Umpire, (q. v.)

IMPIERMENT. Impairing or prejudicing. Jacob.

IMPIGNORATION. The act of pawning or putting to pledge.

Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati non favet. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty. Co. Litt. 124.

IMPLICATARE. Lat. To impale; to sue.

IMPLEAD. In practice. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. People v. Clarke, 9 N. Y. 368.

IMPLEADED. Sued or prosecuted; used particularly in the titles of causes where there are several defendants; as "A. B., implicated with C. D."

IMPLEMENTS. Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. Cooledge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 82.

IMPLICATA. A term used in mercantile law, derived from the Italian. In order to avoid the risk of making fruitless voyages, merchants have been in the habit of receiving small adventures, on freight, at so much per cent., to which they are entitled at all events, even if the adventure be lost; and this is called "implicata." Wharton.

IMPLICATION. Intendment or inference, as distinguished from the actual expression of a thing in words. In a will, an estate may pass by mere implication, without any express words to direct its course. 2 Bl. Comm. 331.

An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. In construing a will conjecture must not be taken for implication; but necessary implication means, not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. 1 Ves. & B. 466.

"Implication" is also used in the sense of "inference;" i. e., where the existence of an intention is inferred from acts not done for the sole purpose of communicating it, but for some other purpose. Sweet.

Necessary implication

In construing a will, necessary implication means not natural necessity, but so strong a probability of intention that an intention contrary to that which is imputed to the testator cannot be supposed. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 466; Gilchrist v. Craddock, 67 Kan. 348, 62 P. 897; Whitefield v. Garra, 194 N. C. 24, 45 S. E. 954.

IMPLIED. This word is used in law as contrasted with "express;" i. e., where the intention in regard to the subject-matter is not manifested by explicit and direct words, but is gathered by implication or necessary deduction from the circumstances, the general language, or the conduct of the parties.

IMPORTED. This word, in general, has the same meaning in the tariff laws that its etymology shows, in porto, to carry in. To "import" is to bear or carry into. An "imported" article is one brought or carried into a country from abroad. The Conqueror, 49 Fed. 86. See Imports.

IMPORTS. Importations; goods or other property imported or brought into the country from a foreign country.

IMPORTUNITY. Pressing solicitation; urgent request; application for a claim or favor which is urged with troublesome frequency or pertinacity. Webster.

IMPOSE. To levy or exact as by authority; to lay as a burden, tax, duty or charge. State v. Nickerson, 97 Neb. 837, 151 N. W. 981, 982; National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis v. Allen (C. C. A.) 228 F. 472, 477.

IMPOSITION. An impost; tax; contribution. Paterson v. Society, 24 N. J. Law, 400;
IMPOSSIBILITY. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform. See Klauber v. San Diego Street-Car. Co., 95 Cal. 353, 30 Pac. 555; Reid v. Alaska Packing Co., 43 Or. 429, 73 Pac. 337.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i.e., impossible in any case, (e. g., for A. to reach the moon,) or relative, (sometimes called "impossibility in fact," i.e., arising from the circumstances of the case, (e. g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person.)

To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or judiciously impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it: e. g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. Sweet.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est. There is no obligation to do impossible things. Dig. 50, 17, 185; Broom, Max. 249.

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS. An impossible contract is one which the law will not hold binding upon the parties, because of the natural or legal impossibility of the performance by one party of that which is the consideration for the promise of the other. 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 124.

Impossible contracts, which will be deemed void in the eye of the law, or of which the performance will be excused, are such contracts as cannot be performed, either because of the nature of the obligation undertaken, or because of some supervening event which renders the performance of the obligation either physically or legally impossible. 10 Amer. & Eng. Enc. Law, 176.

Impost is a tax received by the prince for such merchandises as are brought into any havens within his dominions from foreign nations. It may in some sort be distinguished from customs, because customs are rather that profit the prince maketh of wares shipped out; yet they are frequently confounded. Cowell.

IMPOTENCE. In medical jurisprudence, inability to copulate. Properly used of the male; but it has also been used synonymously with "sterility." Griffeth v. Griffeth, 162 Ill. 368, 44 N. E. 820; Payne v. Payne, 46 Minn. 467, 49 N. W. 230, 24 Am. St. Rep. 249; Kempf v. Kempf, 34 Mo. 213; Turney v. Avery, 92 N. J. Eq. 473, 113 A. 710; Kirschbaum v. Kirschbaum, 32 N. J. Eq. 7, 111 A. 697, 699; Carmichael v. Carmichael, 106 Or. 198, 211 P. 916, 918; Smith v. Smith, 206 Mo. App. 646, 229 S. W. 398; Hehnemann v. Hehnemann, 245 P. 1082, 1083, 118 Or. 178.

Impotentia excusat legem. Co. Litt. 29. The impossibility of doing what is required by the law excuses from the performance.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER. A qualified property, which may subsist in animals ferae naturae on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds build in a person's trees, or conies, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 8.

To take into the custody of the law or of a court. Thus, a court will sometimes impound a suspicious document produced at a trial.

IMPRESRIPTIBILITY. The state or quality of being incapable of prescription; not of such a character that a right to it can be gained by prescription.

IMPRESRIPTIBLE RIGHTS. Such rights as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

IMPRESSION, CASE OF FIRST. One without a precedent; one presenting a wholly new state of facts; one involving a question never before determined.

IMPRESSMENT. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the royal ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels, (1 Bl. Comm. 429; Maud & P. Shipp. 123;) but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impression in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings (e.g., persons employed in the Greenland fisheries) or voluntarily. Sweet.

IMPREST MONEY. Money paid on enlisting or impressing soldiers or sailors.

IMPRETIALIS. Lat. Beyond price; invaluable.

IMPRIMATUR. Lat. Let it be printed. A license or allowance, granted by the constituted authorities, giving permission to print and publish a book. This allowance was formerly necessary, in England, before any book could lawfully be printed, and in some other countries is still required.

IMPRIMERE. To press upon; to impress or press; to imprint or print.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes this word is used to signify a printing-office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS. Lat. In the first place; first of all.

IMPRISON. To put in a prison; to put in a place of confinement.

To confine a person, or restrain his liberty, in any way.

IMPRISONMENT. The act of putting or confining a man in prison; the restraint of a man's personal liberty; coercion exercised upon a person to prevent the free exercise of his powers of locomotion. State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 A. 506; In re Langslow, 167 N. Y. 314, 60 N. E. 550; In re Langan (C. C.) 123 F. 134; Steere v. Field, 22 Fed. Cas. 1221.

It is not a necessary part of the definition that the confinement should be in a place usually appropriated to that purpose; it may be in a locality used only for the specific occasion; or it may take place without the actual application of any physical agencies of restraint, (such as locks or bars,) but by verbal compulsion and the display of available force. See Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491.

Any forcible detention of a man's person, or control over his movements, is imprisonment. Lawson v. Business, 3 Har. (Del.) 419.

False imprisonment.

The term is also used as the name of the action which lies for this species of injury. 3 Bl. Comm. 138; Butrey v. Wilbrite, 208 Ala. 572, 94 So. 585.

IMPRISTI. Adherents; followers. Those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defense or otherwise.

IMPROBABLE. Unlikely to be true, or to occur, not to be readily believed. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Holick, 59 Colo. 416, 151 P. 916, 923.

IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. An action brought for the purpose of having some instrument declared false and forged. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 4, p. 161. The verb "improve" (q. v.) was used in the same sense.

IMPROPER FEUDS. These were derivative feuds; as, for instance, those that were originally bartered and sold to the feodary for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service or were themselves inalienable, without mutual license, or descended indifferently to males or females. Wharton.

IMPROPER INFLUENCE. Undue influence, (q. v.) And see Millican v. Milliance, 24 Tex. 446.

IMPROPER NAVIGATION. Anything improperly done with the ship or part of the ship in the course of the voyage. L. R. S C. P. 503. See, also, 53 Law J. P. D. 65.

IMPROPRIATION. In ecclesiastical law. The annexing an ecclesiastical benefice to the use of a lay person, whether individual or corporate, in the same way as appropriation is the annexing of any such benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some spiritual corporation, whether sole or aggregate, to enjoy forever. Brown.

IMPROPRIATE RECTOR. In ecclesiastical law. Commonly signifies a lay rector as opposed to a spiritual rector; just as impropriate tithes are tithes in the hands of a lay owner, as opposed to appropriate tithes, which are tithes in the hands of a spiritual owner. Brown.

IMPROVE. In Scotch law. To disprove; to invalidate or impeach; to prove false or forged. 1 Forb. Inst. pt. 4, p. 162.

To improve a lease means to grant a lease of unusual duration to encourage a tenant, when the soil is exhausted, etc. Bell; Stair, Inst. p. 676, § 23.

To mollerorate, make better, mend, repair, as to "improve" a street by grading, parking, curbing, paving, etc. Des Moines City Ry. v. City of Des Moines, 205 Iowa, 405, 216 N. W. 254, 257; Woods v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 205 Ala. 256, 87 So. 651, 654, 27 A. L. R. 834; Royal v. City of Des Moines, 105 Iowa, 23, 101 N. W. 377, 383.

IMPROVED. Improved land is such as has been reclaimed, is used for the purpose of husbandry, and is cultivated as such, whether the appropriation is for tillage, meadow, or pasture. "Improve" is synonymous with "cultivate." Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 190.

IMPROVEMENT. A valuable addition made to property (usually real estate) or an amelioration in its condition, amounting to more than mere repairs or replacement of waste, costing labor or capital, and intended to enhance its value, beauty or utility or to adapt it for new or further purposes. Spencer v. Tobey, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 269; Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 322, 52 P. 828; Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 132; Lanier v. Lovett, 22 Ark. 54, 213 P. 391, 394; O'Neill v. Lyric Amusement Co., 119 Ark. 454, 178 S. W. 406, 408; Realty Dock & Improvement Corp. v. Anderson, 174 Cal. 672, 164 P. 4, 7; Behrens v. Kruse, 121 Minn. 479, 140 N. W. 114, 117; Gale v. Hopkins, 165 Minn. 177, 206 N. W. 164, 165; Anderson v. Sutton, 301 Mo. 50, 254 S. W. 854, 857; People v. Clark, 296 Ill. 46, 129 N. E. 553, 558; McCormick v. Allegheny County, 263 Pa. 146, 106 A. 203; Meyer v. City St. Improvement Co., 164 Cal. 645, 130 P. 215, 216; Kohn v. City of Missoula, 50 Mont. 75, 144 P. 1087, 1090; South Park Comrs v. Wood, 270 Ill. 263, 110 N. E. 349, 354; McGovern v. Inhabitants of City of Trenton, 34 N. J. Law. 297, 80 A. 538, 540; City of Oswego v. Batemen, 20 N. M. 77, 146 P. 590, 594; L. R. A. 1917D, 365, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 426.

In American Law Land

An act by which a locator or settler expresses his intention to cultivate or clear certain land; an act expressive of the actual possession of land; as by erecting a cabin, planting a corn-field, deadening trees in a forest; or by merely marking trees, or even by piling up a brush-heap. Burrrl. And see

An "improvement," under our land system, does not mean a general enhancement of the value of the tract from the occupant's operations. It has a more limited meaning, which has in view the population of our forests, and the increase of agricultural products. All works which are directed to the creation of homes for families, or are substantial steps towards bringing lands into cultivation, have in their results the special character of "improvements," and, under the land laws of the United States and of the several states, are encouraged. Sometimes their minimum extent is defined as requisite to convey rights. In other cases not. But the test which runs through all the cases is always this: Are they real, and made bona fide, in accordance with the policy of the law, or are they only colorable, and made for the purpose of fraud and speculation? Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 137.

In the Law of Patents

An addition to, or modification of, a previous invention or discovery, intended or claimed to increase its utility or value. See 2 Kent, Comm. 366-372. And see Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Frick Co. (C. C.) 92 F. 191; Joliet Mfg. Co. v. Dice, 105 Ill. 650; Schwarzwelder v. Detroit (C. C.) 77 F. 891; Reese's Appeal, 132 Pa. 392, 15 A. 807; Rheem v. Holliday, 16 Pa. 352; Allison Bros. Co. v. Allison, 144 N. Y. 21, 38 N. E. 850; Volk v. Volk Mfg. Co., 101 Conn. 594, 128 A. 547, 549. It includes two necessary ideas: the idea of a complete and practical operative art or instrument and the idea of some change in such art or instrument not affecting its essential character but enabling it to produce its appropriate results in a more perfect or economical manner. Rob. Pat. § 210.

In General

—Local improvement. By common usage, especially as evidenced by the practice of courts and text-writers, the term "local improvements" is employed as signifying improvements made in a particular locality, by which the real property adjoining or near such locality is specially benefited, such as the improvement of highways, grading, paving, curbing, laying sewers, etc. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 164 Ill. 173, 38 N. E. 626; Rogers v. St. Paul, 22 Minn. 507; Crane v. Silkoom Springs, 67 Ark. 30, 55 S. W. 965; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Prest (C. C.) 71 F. 816; In re Western Ave., 33 Wash. 472, 101 P. 381, 394; Ewart v. Village of Western Springs, 150 Ill. 315, 34 N. E. 475; Ryder's Estate v. City of Alton, 175 Ill. 94, 51 N. E. 821; Smith v. City of Seattle, 25 Wash. 390, 65 P. 612; Cook v. Slocum, 27 Minn. 599, 8 N. W. 755; Walters v. City of Tampa, 88 Fla. 177, 101 So. 227, 228.

IMPROVEMENTS. A term used in leases, of doubtful meaning. It would seem to apply principally to buildings, though generally it extends to the amelioration of every description of property, whether real or personal; but, when contained in any document, its meaning is generally explained by other words. 1 Chit. Gen. Pr. 174.

IMPROVIDENCE, as used in a statute excluding one found incompetent to execute the duties of an administrator by reason of improvidence, means that want of care and foresight in the management of property which would be likely to render the estate and effects of the intestate unsafe, and liable to be lost or diminished in value, in case the administration should be committed to the improvident person. Coope v. Lowerre, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 45; In re Flood's Will, 236 N. Y. 408, 140 N. E. 936, 937; Nichols v. Smith, 186 Ala. 557, 65 So. 30, 31; In re Brinckmann's Estate, 152 N. Y. S. 542, 543, 89 Misc. 41; In re Fulper's Estate, 99 N. J. Eq. 293, 132 A. 834, 843.

IMPROVIDENTLY. A judgment, decree, rule, injunction, etc., when given or rendered without adequate consideration by the court or without proper information as to all the circumstances affecting it, or based upon a mistaken assumption or misleading information or advice, is sometimes said to have been "improvidently" given or issued.

IMPRUIARE. In old records. To Improve land. Improvisamentum, the improvement so made of it. Cowell.

IMPUBES. Lat. In the civil law. A minor under the age of puberty; a male under fourteen years of age; a female under twelve. Calvin; Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 138.

IMPULSE. As to "irresistible" or "uncontrollable" impulse, see Insanity.

Impunitas continum affectum tribuit delinquendi. 4 Coke, 45. Impunity confirms the disposition to commit crime.

Impunities semper ad deteriorem invitata. 5 Coke, 100. Impunity always invites to greater crimes.

IMPURITY. Exemption or protection from penalty or punishment. Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 153.

IMPUTATIO. Lat. In the civil law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In the civil law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

IMPUTED. As used in legal phrases, this words means attributed vicariously; that is, an act, fact, or quality is said to be "imputed" to a person when it is ascribed or charged to him, not because he is personally cognizant or it or responsible for it, but because another person is, over whom he has control or for whose acts or knowledge he is responsible.

IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE. This phrase is sometimes used as equivalent to "implied notice," i.e., knowledge attributed or charged to a person (often contrary to the fact) because the facts in question were open to his discovery and it was his duty to inform himself as to them. See Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 146 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. Negligence which is not directly attributable to the person himself, but which is the negligence of a person who is in privity with him, and with whose fault he is chargeable. Smith v. Railroad Co., 4 App. Div. 493, 38 N. Y. S. 666.

IMPUTED NOTICE. Information as to a given fact or circumstance charged or attributed to a person, and affecting his rights or conduct, on the ground that actual notice was given to some person whose duty was to report it to the person to be affected, as, his agent or his attorney of record.

IN. In the law of real estate, this preposition has always been used to denote the fact of seisin, title, or possession, and apparently serves as an elliptical expression for some such phrase as "in possession," or as an abbreviation for "entitled" or "invested with title." Thus, in the old books, a tenant is said to be "in by lease of his lessor." Litt. § 82.

An elastic preposition in other cases, expressing relation of presence, existence, situation, inclusion, action, etc.; also meaning for, in and about, on, within, etc., according to context. Hill v. Wilson, 108 Or. 621, 216 P. 751, 756; Grainger & Co. v. Johnson (C. C. A.) 286 F. 833, 834, 33 A. L. R. 315; Schaefer v. Houck, 163 App. Div. 283, 171 N. Y. S. 147; Schmohl v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Mo. App.) 189 S. W. 597, 609; Turner v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 274 Mo. 200, 202 S. W. 1075, 1080, L. R. A. 1915E, 381; Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Peco, 109 Miss. 667, 68 So. 926, 927; Ex parte Perry, 71 Fla. 250, 71 So. 174, 176; City of Blytheville v. Webb, 172 Ark. 874, 290 S. W. 589, 590.

IN ACTION. Attainable or recoverable by action; not in possession. A term applied to property of which a party has not the possession, but only a right to recover it by action. Things in action are rights of personal things, which nevertheless are not in possession. See Choise in Action.

IN ADVERSUM. Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum." 3 Story, 318.

In adiecu lapis male positus non est renovandus. 11 Coke, 69. A stone badly placed in buildings is not to be removed.

IN AEQUALI MANU. In equal hand. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 2.

IN AEQUALI JURE. In equal right; on an equality in point of right.
IN EQUALI MANU. In equal hand; held equally or indifferently between two parties. Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it in the hands of a third person, to keep on certain conditions, it was said to be held in _aequali manu_. Reg. Orig. 28.

IN ALIENO SOLO. In another's land. 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

IN ALIO LOCO. In another place.

IN ALTA PRODITIO NULUS POTEST OSE SESSUM SED PRINCIPALIS SOLOMmodo. 3 Inst. 128. In high treason no one can be an accessory but only principal.

IN ALTERNATIVIS ELECTIO EST DEBITORIS. In alternatives the debtor has the election.

IN AMBIGUA Voca legis ex potius accipienda est significatio quam vitio cariet, prassi nem conetiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligil possit. In an ambiguous expression of law, that signification is to be preferred which is consonant with equity, especially when the spirit of the law can be collected from that. Dig. 1, 3, 19; Broom, Max. 576.

In _ambiguis casibus semper praesumitur pro rege_. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king.

In _ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eam prolatilisset_. In ambiguous expressions, the intention of the person using them is chiefly to be regarded. Dig. 50, 17, 96; Broom, Max. 567.

IN AMBIGUO. In doubt.

In _ambiguo sermone non utrumque dicimus sed id duxtaxat quod volumus_. When the language we use is ambiguous, we do not use it in a double sense, but in the sense in which we mean it. Dig. 34. 5, 3; 2 De G. M. & G. 313.

In _Anglia non est interregnum_. In England there is no interregnum. Jenk. Cent. 205; Broom, Max. 50.

IN APERTA LUCE. In open daylight; in the day-time. 9 Coke, 65b.

IN APICIBUS JURIS. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law. 1 Kames, Eq. 190. See Apex Juris.

IN ARBITRIUM JUDICIS. At the pleasure of the judge.

IN ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA. In close and safe custody. 3 Bl. Comm. 415.

IN ARTICULO. In a moment; immediately. Cod. 1, 34, 2.

BL. LAW DICT. (3d Ed.)—59

IN ARTICULO MORTIS. In the article of death; at the point of death. Jackson v. Vredenbergh, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 159.

In _atrocellurus delictis punitur affectus locet non sequatur effectus_. 2 Rolle R. 82. In more atrocious crimes the intent is punished, though an effect does not follow.

IN AUTRE DROIT. L. Fr. In another's right. As representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in _autre droit_.

IN BANCO. In bank; in the bench. A term applied to proceedings in the court in bank, as distinguished from the proceedings at _nisi prius_. Also, in the English court of common bench.

IN BEING. In existence or life at a given moment of time, as, in the phrase "life or living in being" in the rule against perpetuities. An unborn child may, in some circumstances be considered as "in being." Phillips v. Herron, 55 Ohio St. 478, 43 N. E. 729; Hone v. Van Schalck, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 503.

IN BLANK. A term applied to the indorsement of a bill or note where it consists merely of the indorser's name, without restriction to any particular indorsee. 2 Steph. Comm. 164.

IN BONIS. Among the goods or property; in actual possession. Inst. 4, 2, 2. In _bonis defuncti_, among the goods of the deceased.

IN BULK. As a whole; as an entirety, without division into items or physical separation in packages or parcels. Standard Oil Co. v. Conn., 119 Ky. 75, 22 S. W. 1022; Fitz-Henry v. Munter, 33 Wash. 629, 74 P. 1008; State v. Smith, 114 Mo. 150, 21 S. W. 498; Feldstein v. Fusco, 205 App. Div. 806, 201 N. Y. S. 4, 5; Marlow v. Ringer, 70 Wn. 568, 91 S. E. 386, 388, L. R. A. 1917D, 619; Mott v. Reeves, 125 Misc. 511, 211 N. Y. S. 375, 380; Flise Rubber Co. v. Hayes Motor Car Co., 131 Ark. 248, 199 S. W. 96; In re Lipman (D. C.) 201 F. 169, 173.

IN CAMARA. In chambers; in private. A cause is said to be heard in _camera_ either when the hearing is had before the judge in his private room or when all spectators are excluded from the court-room.

IN CAPITA. To the heads; by heads or polls. Persons succeed to an inheritance in _capita_ when they individually take equal shares. So challenges to individual jurors are challenges in _capita_, as distinguished from challenges to the array.

IN CAPITE. In chief. 2 Bl. Comm. 60. Tenure in _capite_ was a holding directly from the king.

In casu extremae necessitatis omnia sunt communia. Hale, P. C. 54. In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common.

IN CASU PROVISO. In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et proviso, in such case made and provided. Townsh. Pl. 164, 165.

IN CAUSA. In the cause, as distinguished from in initialibus (a. r.). A term in Scotch practice. 1 Brown, Ch. 252.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him. Tenure in chief, or in capite, is a holding directly of the king or chief lord.

IN CONJUNCTION WITH. In association with. Blaisdell v. Inhabitants of Town of York, 110 Me. 500, 87 A. 361, 370.

In conjunctivis, opertot utramque partem esse veram. In conjunctives It is necessary that each part be true. Wing, Max. 13, max. 8. In a condition consisting of divers parts in the copulative, both parts must be performed.

IN CONSIDERATIONE INDE. In consideration thereof. 3 Salk. 64, pl. 5.

IN CONSIDERATIONE LEGIS. In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance. Dyer, 1022.

IN CONSIDERATIONE PRÆMISSORUM. In consideration of the premises. 1 Strange, 335.

IN CONSIMILI CASU. See Consimili Casu.

In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium. Hardr. 65. In similar cases the remedy should be similar.

IN CONSPECTU EJUS. In his sight or view. 12 Mod. 95.

In consuetudinis, non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not length of time, but solidity of reason, is to be considered. Co. Litt. 141a. The antiquity of a custom is to be less regarded than its reasonableness.

IN CONTINENTI. Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Calvin. Sometimes written as one word "incontinenti."

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. Co. Litt. 112. In contracts, the interpretation is to be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.

In contractibus, rei vertitas potius quam scriptura perspicui debet. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded rather than the writing. Cod. 4, 22, 1.

In contractibus, tacite insuet [veniant] quae sunt moris et consuetudinis. In contracts, matters of custom and usage are tacitly implied. A contract is understood to contain the customary clauses, although they are not expressed. Story, Bills, § 143; 3 Kent, Comm. 260, note; Broom, Max. 842.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In the contract of sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller. Dig. 50, 11, 172. See id. 18, 1, 21.

In conventio inibus, contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectati placuit. In agreements, the intention of the contracting parties, rather than the words used, should be regarded. Broom, Max. 551; Jackson v. Wilkinson, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 150.

IN CORPORE. In body or substance; in a material thing or object.

IN CRASSINO. On the morrow. In crassino Animarum, on the morrow of All Souls. 1 Bl. Comm. 802.

In criminalibus, sufficit generalis malitia intentionis, cum facto parts gradus. In criminal matters or cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient, [if united] with an act of equal or corresponding degree. Buc. Max. p. 63, reg. 15; Broom, Max. 323.

BL. LAW DICT. (3D ED.)

IN CRIMINALIBUS, voluntas reputabitur pro facto. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed. 3 Inst. 106.

IN CUIJUS REI TESTIMONIUM. In testimony whereof. The initial words of the concluding clause of ancient deeds in Latin, literally translated in the English forms.

IN CUSTODIA LEGIS. In the custody or keeping of the law. 2 Steph. Comm. 74.

IN DELICTO. In fault. See in Pari Delicto, etc.

IN DIEM. For a day; for the space of a day. Calvin.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. In disjunctives it is sufficient that either part be true. Where a condition is in the disjunctive, it is sufficient if either part be performed. Wing. Max. 13, max. 9; Broom, Max. 582; 7 East. 272.

IN DOMINICO. In demesne. In domino suo ut de feodo, in his demesne as of fee.

IN DORSO. On the back. 2 Bl. Comm. 488; 2 Steph. Comm. 164. In doro recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Coke, 43. Hence the English indorse, indorsement, etc.

In dubiis, benigniora preferenda sunt. In doubtful cases, the more favorable views are to be preferred; the more liberal interpretation is to be followed. Dig. 50, 17, 56; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

In dubiis, magis dignum est acclamandum. Branch, Princ. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be accepted.

In dubiis, non prae sumitur pro teste. In cases of doubt, the presumption is not in favor of a will. Branch, Princ. See Cro. Car. 51.

IN DUBIO. In doubt; in a state of uncertainty, or in a doubtful case.

In dubio, hae legis constructio quam verba ostendant. In a case of doubt, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate. Branch, Princ.

In dubio, pars minor est sequenda. In doubt, the milder course is to be followed.

In dubio, pro lege fori. In a doubtful case, the law of the forum is to be preferred. "A false maxim." Meili, Int. L. 151.

IN DUBIO, sequendum quod tutius est. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

IN DUPLO. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 1.

IN EADEM CAUSA. In the same state or condition. Calvin.

IN EMULATIONEM VICINI. In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicinii. 1 Kames, Eq. 58.

In eo quod plus sit, semper inest et minus. In the greater is always included the less also. Dig. 50, 17, 110.

IN EQUITY. In a court of equity, as distinguished from a court of law; in the purview, consideration, or contemplation of equity; according to the doctrines of equity.

IN ESSE. In being. Actually existing. Distinguished from in posse, which means "that which is not, but may be." A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

IN EST DE JURE. (Lat.) It is implied of right or by law.

IN EVIDENCE. Included in the evidence already adduced. The "facts in evidence" are such as have already been proved in the cause.

IN EXCABMIO. In exchange. Formal words in old deeds of exchange.

IN EXECUTION AND PURSUANCE OF. Words used to express the fact that the instrument is intended to carry into effect some other instrument, as in case of a deed in execution of a power. They are said to be synonymous with "to effect the object of;" U. S. v. Nunemacher, 7 Biss. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,903.

IN EXITU. In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue. 12 Mod. 372.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible. 6 Coke, 39; 2 Pars. Cont. 26.

IN EXTENSIO. In extension; at full length; from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

IN FACIE CURÆ. In the face of the court. Dyer, 28.

IN FACIE ECCLESIAE. In the face of the church. A term applied in the law of England to marriages, which are required to be solemnized in a parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation or license. 1 Bl. Comm. 459; 2 Steph. Comm. 288, 289. Applied in Bracton to the old mode of conferring dower. Bract. fol. 92; 2 Bl. Comm. 133.

IN FACIENDO. In doing; in feasance; in the performance of an act. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1308.

IN FACT. Actual, real; as distinguished from implied or inferred. Resulting from the acts of parties, instead of from the act or intention of law.

IN FACTO. In fact; in deed. In factu dicit, in fact says. 1 Salk. 22, pl. 1.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum, magis de bene quam de male lex intendit. In an act or deed which admits of being considered as both good and bad, the law intends more from the good than from the bad; the law makes the more favorable construction. Co. Litt. 786.

IN FAVOREM LIBERTATIS. In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITÆ. In favor of life.

In favorum vitae, libertatis, et innocentia, omnia presumuntur. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, every presumption is made. Lofft. 125.

IN FEODO. In fee. Bract. fol. 207; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 15. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

In fictione juris semper aequitas existit. In the fiction of law there is always equity; a legal fiction is always consistent with equity. 11 Coke, 51a; Broom, Max. 127, 130.

IN FIERI. In being made; in process of formation or development; hence, incomplete or inchoate. Legal proceedings are described as in fieri until judgment is entered.

IN FINE. Lat. At the end. Used, in references, to indicate that the passage cited is at the end of a book, chapter, section, etc.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS. In the character or manner of a pauper. Describes permission given to a poor person to sue without liability for costs.

IN FORO. In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIAE. In the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously; considered from a moral, rather than a legal, point of view.

IN FORO CONTENTIOSO. In the forum of contention or litigation.

IN FORO ECCLESIASTICO. In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 13.

IN FULL. Relating to the whole or full amount; as a receipt in full. Complete; giving all details. Bard v. Wood, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 75.

IN FULL LIFE. Continuing in both physical and civil existence; that is, neither actually dead nor civiliter mortuis.

IN FUTURO. In future; at a future time; the opposite of in praesenti. 2 Bl. Comm. 166, 175.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO. In the general passage; that is, on the journey to Palestine with the general company or body of Crusaders. This term was of frequent occurrence in the old law of essoins, as a means of accounting for the absence of the party, and was distinguished from simplex passagium, which meant that he was performing a pilgrimage to the Holy Land alone.

IN GENERE. In kind; in the same genus or class; the same in quantity and quality, but not individually the same. In the Roman law, things which may be given or restored in genere are distinguished from such as must be given or restored in specie; that is, identically. Mackeld. Rom. Law, § 161.

IN GREMIO LEGIS. In the bosom of the law; in the protection of the law; in aberrance. 1 Coke, 131a; T. Raym. 319; Hooper v. Farmers' Union Warehouse Co., 21 Ala. App. 91, 105 So. 723, 726.
IN GROSS. In a large quantity or sum; without division or particulars; by wholesale. Green v. Taylor, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 1.126.

At large; not annexed to or dependent upon another thing. Common in gross is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant to land, but is annexed to a man’s person. 2 Bl. Comm. 34.

IN HAC PARTE. In this behalf; on this side.

IN HOC VERBA. In these words; in the same words.

In his enim quae sunt favorabilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosus rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should sometimes be made. 10 Coke, 101.

In his qua de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo aliqua patris vel loci non est allegenda. 11 Coke, 83. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.

IN IOC. In this; in respect to this.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS. In the same terms. 9 East, 487.

IN INDIVIDUO. In the distinct, identical, or individual form; in specie. Story, Bailm. § 97.

IN INFINITUM. Infinitely; indefinitely. Imports indefinite succession or continuance.

IN INITIALIBUS. In the preliminaries. A term in Scotch practice, applied to the preliminary examination of a witness as to the following points: Whether he knows the parties, or bears ill will to either of them, or has received any reward or promise of reward for what he may say, or can lose or gain by the cause, or has been told by any person what to say. If the witness answer these questions satisfactorily, he is then examined in causa, in the cause. Bell, Dict. “Evidence.”

IN INITIO. In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit. Bract. fol. 490.

IN INTEGRUM. To the original or former state. Calvin.

IN INVIDIA. To excite a prejudice.

IN INVITUM. Against an unwilling party; against one not assenting. A term applied to proceedings against an adverse party, to which he does not consent.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS. In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis faucibus of a port, actually entering a port. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 233, 234.

IN ITINERE. In eyre; on a journey or circuit. In old English law, the justices in itinere (or in eyre) were those who made a circuit through the kingdom once in seven years for the purposes of trying causes. 3 Bl. Comm. 58.

In course of transportation; on the way; not delivered to the vendee. In this sense the phrase is equivalent to “in transitu.”

IN JUDGMENT. In a court of justice; in a seat of judgment. Lord Hale is called “one of the greatest and best men who ever sat in judgment.” 1 East, 306.

In judiciis, minori aetate succurratur. In courts or judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored. Jenk. Cent. 46, case 89.

IN JUDICIO. In Roman law. In the course of an actual trial; before a judge, (judec.) A cause, during its preparatory stages, conducted before the praetor, was said to be in jure; in its second stage, after it had been sent to a judec for trial, it was said to be in judicio.

In judicio non ereditur nisi juris. Cro. Car. 64. In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.

IN JURE. In law; according to law. In the Roman practice, the procedure in an action was divided into two stages. The first was said to be in jure; it took place before the praetor, and included the formal and introductory part and the settlement of questions of law. The second stage was committed to the judec, and comprised the investigation and trial of the facts; this was said to be in judicio.

IN JURE ALTERIUS. In another's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

In jure, non remota causa sed proxima spectatur. Bac. Max. reg. 1. In law, the proximate, and not the remote, cause is regarded.

IN JURE PROPRIO. In one's own right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE. To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4, 16, 3; Calvin. In jus vocando, summoning to court. 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

IN KIND. In the same kind, class, or genus. A loan is returned “in kind” when not the identical article, but one corresponding and equivalent to it, is given to the lender. See In Genere.

IN LAW. In the intendment, contemplation, or inference of the law; implied or inferred by law; existing in law or by force of law. See In Fact.

IN LECTO MORTALI. On the deathbed.
Fleta, lib. 5, c. 28, § 12.

IN LIBERAR ELEMOSINA. In free alms. Land given for a charitable motive was said to be so given. See Franklalmi.

IN LIMINE. On or at the threshold; at the very beginning; preliminarily.

IN LITEM. For a suit; to the suit. Greenl. Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO. In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead. Townsh. Pl. 38.

In majore summa continentur minor. 5 Coke, 115. In the greater sum is contained the less.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM. For greater security. 1 Strange, 165, arg.

IN MALAM PARTEM. In a bad sense, so as to wear an evil appearance.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur, non exitus. In evil deeds regard must be had to the intention, and not to the result. Dig. 48, S. 14; Broom, Max. 324.

In maleficio, ratihabitio mandate comparatur. In a case of malefeasance, ratification is equivalent to command. Dig. 50, 17, 152, 2.

In maxima potentia minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least freedom. Hob. 159.

IN MEDIAS RES. Into the heart of the subject, without preface or introduction.

IN MEDIO. Intermediate. A term applied, in Scotch practice, to a fund held between parties litigant.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium. There should be no commerce in illicit or prohibited goods. 3 Kent, Comm. 262, note.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in respect to the imposition of a fine or other punishment.

IN MISERICORDIA. The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, "Idea in misericordia," etc. Sometimes "misericordia" means the being quit of all amercements.

IN MITIORI SENSI. In the milder sense; in the less aggravated acceptance. In actions of slander, it was formerly the rule that, if the words alleged would admit of two constructions, they should be taken in the less injurious and defamatory sense, or in mitiori sensu.

IN MODUM ASSISE. In the manner or form of an assize. Bract. fol. 182b. In modum furatae, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181b.

IN MORA. In default; literally, in delay. In the civil law, a borrower who omits or refuses to return the thing loaned at the proper time is said to be in mora. Story, Bailm. §§ 254, 259.

In Scotch Law
A creditor who has begun without completing diligence necessary for attaching the property of his debtor is said to be in mora. Bell.

IN MORTUA MANU. Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were mortuari mortui. 1 Bl. Comm. 479; Tayl. Gloss.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN. In the name of God, Amen. A solemn introduction, accidently used in wills and many other instruments. The translation is often used in wills at the present day.

IN NOTIS. In the notes.

In novo caso, novum remedium apponendum est. 2 Inst. 3. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.

IN NUBISUS. In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in morre, in terrae, vel in custodia legis, in the air, sea, or earth, or in the custody of the law. Tayl. Gloss. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in premio legie.

IN NULLIUS BONIS. Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure-trove and wreck were anciently considered.

IN Nullo EST ERRATUM. In nothing is there error. The name of the common plea or fulsader in error, denying the existence of error in the record or proceedings; which is in the nature of a demurrer, and at once refers the matter of law arising thereon to the judgment of the court. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1173; Booth v. Com., 7 Metc. (Mass.) 285, 287.

In obscura voluntate manumittentis, favendum est libertati. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored. Dig. 50, 17, 170.

In obscuris, inspici solere quod verisimilior est, aut quod plurumque fieri solet. In obscure cases, we usually look at what is most probable, or what most commonly happens. Dig. 50, 17, 114.

In obscuris, quod minimum est sequitur. In obscure or doubtful cases, we follow that which is the least. Dig. 50, 17, 9; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

In odium spoliatoris omnia prae summaritur. To the prejudice (in condemnation) of a despoiler all things are presumed; every presumption is made against a wrong-doer. 1 Vern. 452.

In omni actione ubi duo concurrent distri- tiones, videolect, in rem et in personam, illa distrietio tenenda est quae magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, that is, in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bract. fol. 372; Fleta, l. 6, c. 14, § 28.
